In 1924 Congress enacted the national origins provision of the Immigration Act of that year, which became effective July 1, 1929. The national origins provision was adopted primarily as a basis for determining quotas, but in its broader sense, it represented the will of Congress to preserve the traditions and political system of the United States by preferable admittance of those who would be, because of their own characteristics and history, more readily assimilated into our own national life, customs, and views of government.

The national origins distribution of the population was arrived at through a study of records of the 1920 census. The study showed that 43.5 percent of the population in 1920 was of colonial stock, those whose ancestors were enumerated in the first census of 1790, and that 56.5 percent of the population was of post-colonial stock, immigrants and their descendents who came to the United States after 1790.

An effort was made to trace the national origins of these two groups and the estimates, when completed, indicated that practically all colonial stock originated in northern and western Europe, 77 percent being of British origin. Of the postcolonial stock, 65 percent originated in northern and western Europe and 27 percent in southern and eastern Europe.

Based on this distribution, the first proclamation, establishing quotas on a national origins basis, was made on March 22, 1929, and put into effect July 1, 1929.

The national origins provision was an item of the legislative program of the Republican Party in the 1920's. It was enacted by a Republican Congress and put into effect by the proclamation of a Republican President. It is essentially a landmark of Republican achievement and has helped to preserve some homogeneity in our population, so necessary to harmony among people dwelling together under one government and as one nation.

OPPOSITION TO THE NATIONAL ORIGINS PROVISION

The national origins provision was opposed in some quarters, at the time of its adoption, on the ground that it discriminated against certain nationals who desired to enter the United States. Our immigration laws have long discriminated against Orientals, not because of racial prejudice but because it was recognized that if Orientals were not restricted they would inundate the country by sheer force of numbers. The national origins provision applied the same principle, though less severely, to southern and eastern Europe.

We have been able, until recent times, to assimilate among us those who came to us because the majority of them were akin to us in traditions and willingly undertook to fit themselves into our life here.

Due to distortions and dislocations caused by the recent war, the view is now being advanced that the United States should revalue its policy on immigration and national origins to the end that persons who have been dislocated or displaced in Europe may enter this country in excess of established quotas. The persons who would be affected by the plan are principally from eastern and southern Europe.

The appeal for such a change is based upon the plight of those not enemies who have been driven from, or who have voluntarily left, their native countries. Apparently little consideration is given by these advocates to the effect upon the well-being of this country of admitting large groups here at this time.

An outstanding statement on that basis came from Hon. Fiorello H. LaGuardia, Director of UNRRA, in an address made by him at New York, November 2, 1946.

There is quoted herewith the text of Mr. LaGuardia's speech as reported by the New York Herald Tribune:

"The most pathetic and difficult problem facing the world today is that of displaced persons. There are about 830,000 men, women, and children homeless, hopeless, and confused in UNRRA camps today.

"The United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, known as UNRRA, is the official international agency of 48 nations. It is really one of the beautiful things that has come out of this terrifying war period. It has carried on its work in the spirit of the brotherhood of man. I can, with all propriety, talk of the good work of UNRRA, for I had nothing to do with its organization and the work in the early difficult period. Credit for that is due entirely to Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, its first director general, who served up to a few months ago.

"Displaced persons are persons who were displaced from their homes by reason of the war and who were nationals of the United Nations or persecuted by the enemy. This last group consists of all those, regardless of their nationality, who were obliged to leave their homes or were deported therefrom by action of the enemy by reason of their race, religion, or activities in favor of the United Nations.

"LIVING SPACE INADEQUATE

"Shelter for the displaced persons is provided by the military and on an emergency basis. This has been sufficient to prevent disease and exposure, but living space and sleeping quarters are inadequate and below a proper level for habitation over the prolonged period that the displaced persons must remain in them. The food is provided by the armies of occupation—the United States, United Kingdom, and France.

"In addition to displaced persons, there were men and women who were forcibly taken from their homes and brought to Germany for slave labor. When hostilities ceased, 6,000,000 men, women, and children from other countries were in Germany. Over 5,000,000 were repatriated to their own countries by the armies of occupation. This was a gigantic undertaking, and the armies deserve credit for the humane and expeditious way in which it was carried out.

"The residue of some 830,000 in UNRRA camps and perhaps another 100,000 scattered presents a world problem. Some of the people do not want to return to their own homes because of the horrifying memories of having seen members of their own family and friends deliberately murdered in cold blood by the Nazis—others because their homes have been destroyed and all family ties lost, and still others who do not like the new governments in their old homelands.

"COERCION FORBIDDEN

"Many were themselves politically active. In some instances where there was civil war, many of them had participated on the losing side. This is particularly true of Yugoslavs and the former residents of the Baltic states, as well as Poles. Many of them have been subjected to constant propaganda against returning to their own home. This condition is now being corrected and accurate information is made available. No one is forced to return to their country of origin. There have been a great many misstatements concerning this policy, but I can assure you that I have issued orders that no one should be coerced if he has any personal objection to returning to his country, as well as that no one should be coerced under threat or otherwise not to return.

"I have had splendid cooperation from the United States, United Kingdom, and French Governments. Only recently I presented a plan which was approved by all three governments, and now 60 days' rations are given to all Polish citizens on their return home. Within the first 3 weeks of this month 32,000 Poles are reported to have returned to Poland. In the case of the Yugoslavs I have encountered some difficulty in getting new liaison officers into Austria. This, I feel, is because of some misunderstanding which I hope soon to have cleared. While repatriation has increased, the sum total population of the displaced persons is not decreasing appreciably, because of the large number of infiltrees now coming from Poland.

"The Jewish people from eastern Europe who are infiltrating into the western zones of Germany and Austria, I have ruled, are entitled to the UNRRA care as displaced persons.

"The British military authorities in Germany deny them D. P. status and refuse them shelter and food. We have protested this treatment, pointing out that the British agreed at international conferences to the inclusion of these Jews in the definition of refugees in the proposed I. R. O. constitution and to UNRRA's assumption of care for them.

"I personally took up the matter with the Prime Minister of Great Britain, Mr. Clement Attlee, and sought to prevail upon him to accept our interpretation of the agreement. The United States and French Governments did. The British Government refused to change its policy. Therefore these infiltrees coming from Poland are all crowding into the American zone, making living conditions in the camps even more congested, more uncomfortable than before.

"UNRRA carries on, with the assistance of the voluntary agencies working with it, programs to prevent the mental and physical deterioration of displaced persons and to provide knowledge and skills helpful in adjustments after repatriation.

"Ninety percent of all children between the ages of 5 and 16 in assembly centers in Germany are estimated to be attending school.

"Vocational instruction courses are adapted to accelerate repatriation by providing quickly taught skills or by refreshing technical knowledge.

"DATA ON SKILLS COMPILED

"A compilation of data concerning the skills, previous experience, and other qualifications for employment of the displaced persons was called for by the UNRRA Council. This survey has been completed in the United States, British, and French zones in Germany. UNRRA now has a compilation by occupation and by major nationalities of 345,281 persons. These people are classified under more than 100 different specific trades.

"Measures have been instituted to encourage repatriation by increased dissemination of information about the home countries. UNRRA has called on the governments of origin and the occupying armies for better and greater cooperation.

"UNRRA shall continue its various operations with respect to displaced persons only until June 30, 1947, unless prior to that time they are undertaken by the International Refugee Organization or by any interim commission or by any other appropriate body designated by the United Nations.

"There are now pending for approval before the General Assembly of the United Nations a constitution for the IRO and an arrangement for a Preparatory Commission. Both these instruments were approved by the Economic and Social Council and referred to the General Assembly. UNRRA has been assisting in the deliberations of that council and its various committees in a consultative capacity.

"BUDGET OF $160,851,000

"The Economic and Social Council has approved a provisional budget for the first financial year totaling $160,851,000. It is not enough, but a good start.

"The largest group of displaced persons are the Poles, numbering 319,680. The second group in size are the Balts—that is, Lithuanians, Estonians, and Latvians—with a total of 177,200. Then the Yugoslavs, with about 30,000. There are about 110,000 displaced persons of the Jewish faith. There are 299 camps operated by UNRRA in addition to 16 centers operated by voluntary agencies.

"The plight of the little children is heartrending. The children who were kidnaped from their homes or had their parents murdered is another example of the Nazi brutality and degradation.

"UNRRA has found in Germany approximately 10,000 unaccompanied children out of the unknown thousands of children who were kidnaped by the Germans from the neighboring countries and brought to Germany to be nazified or used for slave labor. They are called hidden children, as they were found not with other displaced persons, but as a part of the German population, in institutions in private homes. They were found by search teams who began to look for them in January 1946, as a result of rumors of the existence of these United Nations children, of requests from the national governments, and of reports by camp inmates.

"GERMAN RECORDS USED

"Information leading to their discovery was largely obtained as a result of military regulations requiring German local officials to report on United Nations nationals in their localities. In addition, records from German sources, particularly from various ex-Nazi organizations, have been utilized. Countries are unable to estimate how many children have been removed but they are making every effort to secure a census of their cities and towns and obtain lists of their lost children. We will never know the accurate figure.

"There is now sufficient evidence, both from Nazi sources and from national governments, to establish the fact that organized raids were made on the countries adjacent to Germany for the purpose of removing large groups of children. The children were taken from their towns and villages and brought into Germany by truck or train load. After a period of 'Germanization,' during which the children were carefully screened for intelligence and physical superiority, some were placed in German families, particularly those of high Nazi standing, or in German institutions. Those best equipped were sent to special schools where potential SS men were being educated.

"Others considered inferior were designated for use as guinea pigs in Nazi eugenics laboratories. Many were deliberately and cruelly destroyed.

"The problem of the displaced persons is one that must be intelligently, constructively, and humanely met. It cannot be delayed. Human beings cannot be placed in a deep freezer of indifference awaiting debates of diplomats and decisions of politicians. This stock pile of human misery cannot be left abandoned after UNRRA ceases its activities on June 30, 1947. The work of repatriation will continue, and yet the best we can hope for is to repatriate perhaps 150,000 more. That will still leave several hundred thousands that must be placed.

"And there is only one way to do it, and that is for every country to do its share. By doing its share I do not mean contributing money to feed them and keep them in continued confinement in camps. There is a great deal of salvageable usefulness and happiness in these people. No country has done as much in expressing sympathy and understanding than our own. Yet to date we have not done much really constructive. We must set the example.

"If every country would take its proportionate share of these people it would not only save hundreds of thousands of souls but would benefit the country. Why, here in New York City alone we could employ 20,000 housemaids, and the same is true of the rest of our country. Our classification shows 77,000 farmhands. They are needed not only in this country but in many others. In a new land these people will be useful citizens. Kept in camps they will deteriorate and become useless. Turned loose in the economy of Germany they will create a political problem.

"PRESIDENT HELPFUL

"President Harry Truman has been most understanding.

"I have submitted a plan that would permit the allocation of unused immigration quotas for a short period in order to provide a haven for these people. I am confidently hopeful that if the United States would take 150,000 or 175,000, the United Kingdom would then relent and would change its present restrictive policy on immigration to Palestine. Nothing will be done by Great Britain until the United States does something. Brazil has already presented a plan. Canada and Australia will surely follow our example as soon as we take our share of the unfortunate but promising people. Bolivia and Venezuela, Peru and Chile are interested. Yes; all countries will follow our lead.

"In this, like many other problems, the United States must set the example. This, as in other cases, is because of our fortunate position and the leadership which has come to us. This job should be completed in 1947. The morale and physical resistance of these unfortunate people cannot hold out much longer. They have a right to live. These are the mourners and must be comforted. These are the meek. These are the hungry. These are the thirsty. These are the strangers. These are the sick. These are the imprisoned.

"APPEAL TO CHRISTIANITY

"We have a responsibility. Yes; we have a mandate from the Highest. Here is the opportunity of practicing that which we have preached for nearly 2,000 years. Here we have an opportunity to demonstrate that finally a wicked world has learned the lesson of the Son of God, Prince of Peace.

"'When the Son of man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him, then shall he sit upon the throne of his glory.

"'And before him shall be gathered all nations.

"'Then shall the King say unto them, come, ye blessed of my Father, inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world.

"'Then shall the righteous answer him, saying, Lord, when saw we Thee an hungered, and fed Thee, or thirsty, and gave Thee drink?

"'When saw we Thee a stranger, and took Thee in? Or naked, and clothed Thee?

"'Or when saw we Thee sick, or in prison, and came unto Thee?

"'And the King shall answer and say unto them, Verily I say unto you, inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me.'" (Matthew xxv: 31–40.)

REPORT OF MR. GEORGE MEADER, CHIEF COUNSEL TO THE SPECIAL SENATE COMMITTEE INVESTIGATING THE NATIONAL DEFENSE PROGRAM

On September 12, 1946, Senator Mead, then chairman of the Special Committee Investigating the National Defense Program, announced through the press that the committee would investigate military government in Germany. Afterward Mr. George Meader, chief counsel to the committee, was sent to Europe to make the investigation, and Mr. Meader's findings were made public on December 4, 1946.

Much of Meader's report is foreign to matters within the scope of this inquiry, but his observations on displaced persons are timely and informative. That portion of Mr. Meader's report is submitted herewith. Particular attention is directed to the statement that this Government has agreed to accept 2,250,000 expelees in its zone in Germany.

"There are at the present time approximately 150,000 Jewish displaced persons in United States zone of Germany, of whom less than one-quarter were in Germany during the war. Their number has increased by 120,000 since January 1, 1946, and they are continuing to come. It is estimated that there are 100,000 Jews left in Poland, of whom the United States will eventually have to care for well over half. There are 180,000 Jews in Hungary whom the Russians are at present not permitting to leave. The United States continues to accept into its zone the Jews, as well as any other eastern European people who can present a plausible claim that they are persecuted for racial or religious reasons or for political beliefs favorable to the Allies.

"At Babenhausen there were 3,000 newly arrived Jews who had come from Poland. The Babenhausen camp had been opened for only about 2 weeks prior to my visit. It was at that camp where a trainload of Jews had refused to get off the train because the camp was not good enough. When the Army authorities threatened to turn the train around and send them back where they came from they still did not get off the train. The Army authorities did turn the train around, but instead of taking them back took them to another camp.

"These persons are, for the most part, penniless and do not desire to work, but expect to be cared for, and complain when things are not as well done as they think they should be. Mr. Goldman, the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Director of the camp, said that he had not been able to get more than 400 of the 3,000 to do any work, even fixing up their own dwelling space. When he did get any work out of them, it was because of offering special inducements, such as extra cigarettes.

"It is very doubtful that any country would desire these people as immigrants. I spoke with a Jewish girl at Babenhausen, who said she was a block leader, and asked her who had paid for the transportation of these persecutees through Poland and Czechoslovakia. She said it was the Jewish organization. I spoke with representatives of the American Joint Distribution Committee, both in Vienna and Paris, and they denied that their organization defrayed transportation costs for these people, and insisted that this mass migration was a spontaneous movement generated because of pogroms and persecution in Poland. These representatives observed that the best way to solve the problem of what to do with these 150,000 Jews was to permit them to migrate to Palestine.

"The Army authorities were unable to state the source of the financial support for transporting these trainloads of Jews, who all seem to be coming into our zone. They suspect strongly, however, that the American Joint Distribution Committee is doing it in spite of their protestations to the contrary. General McNarney stated that he believed Mr. Schwartz, who is head of the Paris office, would admit they were furnishing the transportation.

"It would be important to know two things: First, whether there is, in fact, persecution in Poland, or whether it is simply alleged without any basis; second, it would be important to know whether these mass migrations are spontaneous or are encouraged by paying train fare and otherwise for the purpose of building up a pressure in the United States zone in Germany to further Zionist objectives. There is a very serious question of policy involved as to whether or not the United States taxpayers, without formally passing upon the question, should be compelled to finance a minority political program. Whatever the policy may be, and it may very well be that the Congress would desire to appropriate funds for this specific purpose, the facts should be known and the policy should be formulated with the full knowledge of those facts.

"The War Department sought to close the camps of displaced persons, other than the Jews, and treat the occupants merely as Germans. It is said that considerable pressure developed from various racial and religious groups within the United States sufficient to cause a reversal of this War Department policy on a very high level. Programs have been initiated to arrange with South American countries, particularly, to accept some of these displaced persons as immigrants. Little progress has been made because the South American countries want to accept only the cream, leaving the least desirable persons still in our care.

"This problem is a difficult one. Because it forms the basis for a large proportion of the appropriations made for military government, the Congress should be fully and accurately informed as to all the facts with regard to it.

"Upward of five and one-half million displaced persons have been repatriated or resettled. The repatriation of the 'hard core' of one-half million is difficult for a variety of reasons, ranging from inertia or a preference to stay where they are and be cared for to a fear that if they return home they will be either killed or abused.

"Many of them are cared for in encampments, the German Army barracks being used for this purpose in many places.

"Of the 535,000 displaced persons in the United States zone, 410,000 are in camps and 125,000 are living with the German population.

"Displaced persons are presently requiring the attention of some 800 United States Army officers and men, of whom approximately 500 are devoting full time to this duty. An estimated 10 percent of the effort of military service troops in the American zone is also devoted to displaced persons. Approximately 1,400 United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration personnel aided by some 600 personnel of various voluntary agencies, are also caring for displaced persons. United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration furnishes no food, clothing or 'amenity supplies,' such as soap and cigarettes. It provides supervision only.

"United Nations displaced persons are accorded a basic ration of 2,000 calories per day, and persecutees, including Jews, receive an extra 200 calories. Statistics show all age groups and both sexes of these displaced persons to be overweight. However, an explanation of this condition has been offered in that the ration contains a substantial proportion of starchy foods which tend to create fat.

"The finding of employment for displaced persons presents an additional problem which appears to have no satisfactory solution. It has already been pointed out that a number of displaced persons have thus far been able to support themselves outside centers. However, among the estimated 275,000 employables only about 40–50 percent are employed, and such employment includes a substantial number engaged in vocational training within the centers. Approximately 53,000 are employed by the United States forces, and a certain number are engaged in their own center administration. The basic difficulties of employment for displaced persons are that their centers are often located distant from centers of employment; the German reichsmarks which they earn have no foreign-exchange value; they may not buy in the rationed German economy; and finally they must compete with indigenous labor. Certain of them—notably the Balts—show a willingness and desire for work; others, including the Jews, do not want to work. The entire problem is rendered more acute in the light of the unavoidable moral and physical deterioration resulting from long periods of idleness and dependence on outside charitable support.

"The lack of employment opportunities for displaced persons may contribute in part to the general security problem which they have created for the occupying forces. Black-market activities have offered a convenient substitute for regular employment, and certain criminal elements have committed numerous crimes of violence. This is an aspect of the displaced persons problem which has received little publicity but has been a source of constant worry to those responsible for the maintenance of order. Accurate statistics can probably never be obtained; however, those furnished are worthy of note in passing.

"G–5 Division, United States Forces, European Theater, reports that incidents involving displaced persons dropped from a weekly average of 225 during the winter to a low of 163 in July. More revealing, perhaps, are the figures taken from the Weekly Intelligence Summary of G–2 Division of the same headquarters. Examination of these figures over a period of 23 weeks in the first half of the current year discloses reports of 4,116 thefts, 219 homicides, and 890 assaults, and available figures indicate that better than 50 percent of those reported may be considered verified.

"Unfortunately the shortage of clothing in the earlier stages of displaced persons' care necessitated the issuance of items of United States Army uniform to them; accordingly, a substantial number of these depredations must have been charged up by the Germans to United States soldiers. (Uniforms for displaced persons have since been dyed.)

"The security situation is not eased by the fact that United States forces are strictly limited in the extent to which German police may be used in Jewish and Soviet centers. This policy was largely the outcome of an incident which occurred last March in a Jewish center near Stuttgart, when German police, partially supported by United States troops, were used to conduct a justified raid, during which a near riot occurred and one Jewish displaced person was shot and killed. The matter was immediately taken up by Jewish groups in the United States, with the result that a new procedure for the use of German police in displaced persons centers was established, whereby German police might only enter such centers in numbers limited to one or two essential individuals, unarmed, accompanied by adequate United States military personnel, and then only for the purpose of identifying persons or evidence connected with a crime committed outside the center—this although in the Stuttgart case the official findings were to the effect that the actions of the German police were not unwarranted.

"In summing up the security aspect of the displaced persons question, it must not be overlooked that the Germans must gaze with some bewilderment upon the conditions the United States permits to exist, and the behavior of the displaced persons themselves appears to be a strange expression of gratitude for the hospitality which they are receiving from the Americans.

"The cost of caring for displaced persons has been estimated at $12 per month per person for food ($13.20 for persecutees) and $49 for an initial outfit of clothing, with a $5 monthly maintenance cost. The estimated cost of caring for displaced persons plus 15,000 civilian internees (the costs are computed together) for fiscal year 1947 comes to $108,500,000 and for fiscal year 1948 to $109,400,000. These figures come under the appropriations, actual and proposed, for government and relief in occupied areas. They do not take into account the cost of United States military and civilian personnel required to handle displaced persons matters, the share of the cost of tactical and service troops so required, the use of military vehicles and fuel therefor for displaced persons' transportation, nor the items paid by the German economy such as telephone, housing, medical supplies and equipment, medical services, or housekeeping personnel.

"No solution for the problem is presently in sight. Originally the matter was in the hands of the Intergovernmental Committee on Refugees. However, late in 1945, Headquarters, United States Forces, European Theater, realized that this committee was not going to solve the problem. In December a plan was submitted to the War Department for repatriation of certain groups, the closing of centers, and the turning over to the German economy of those persons not desiring repatriation. This plan followed a distressing course of delay for policy coordination in Washington, for consultation with the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, and eventually on April 24, 1946, the War Department notified Headquarters, United States Forces, European Theater, that the Secretary of State had announced the decision to defer closing of the centers until after the United Nations Assembly should have an opportunity to consider the matter in September (later delayed to October) and that the War Department had no prior knowledge that such an announcement would be made. Plans are now being considered in Frankfurt for eventually turning over certain displaced persons to the German economy with safeguards set up through voluntary organizations; however, these plans are not yet definite.

"The position of the other zones with respect to displaced persons offer a sharp contrast. The British zone has some 300,000 displaced persons in centers. However, as of July 1 the British ceased to accept displaced persons into their centers and, in addition, the British classify Jews according to their nationality rather than merely as Jews. The displaced-persons problem in the French zone is negligible, and it is estimated that the French have approximately 33,000. The Soviets have chosen the other possible alternative in handling their displaced persons; namely, they ignore them. When asked for information on this matter the Soviets have merely replied, "We have no displaced-persons problem," and at a recent meeting at Geneva the Soviets admitted the presence of 69 displaced persons.

"The position of the United States with respect to displaced persons is one of continuing to accept all Jews and all "persecutees" into a zone which is already beset with serious housing and food shortages and thus to place an additional burden on the United States occupation authorities in Germany.

"A decision must ultimately be reached as to whether the United States desires to continue indefinitely its largesse at the cost of over $110,000,000 per year and untold problems.

"There are over 1,000,000 German refugees in the United States zone. They are a primary responsibility of the Germans themselves, but each gets his 1,550 calories a day, at United States expense. "Expellees" are ethnic Germans expelled from Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Austria, and Poland pursuant to the Potsdam Agreement. The United States has agreed to accept 2,250,000 expellees in its zone. Although the British and Russians have also accepted large numbers of expellees, the French, claiming that they were not a party to the Potsdam Agreement, agreed to the acceptance of only 150,000 expellees of a special category. It turns out that there are not that many, but only a few thousand, in that category."

REGISTERED ALIENS

After the opening of hostilities in Europe in 1940, our Government, in the interest of national defense, required registration of all aliens. The statistics on registered aliens are pertinent to this inquiry because they indicate what nationals acquire citizenship and the rate of assimilation. I have therefore obtained and submit herewith three statistical tables concerning registered aliens:

DISPLACED PERSONS IN THE UNITED STATES

During the war years there were references in the press to groups of displaced persons who reached the shores of this country. I have been unable to obtain sufficient information to make a complete report upon the subject of displaced persons who, to this date, have entered the United States. This should be the subject of careful inquiry upon consideration of any legislation upon the subject.

I am advised by the Attorney General that during the war there came into this country 953 persons without visas, and that approximately 200 of these have been returned to their native countries. The others were issued visas after reaching here and charged against the quotas of their respective countries.

I have received information that American vessels have been used, and are being used, for the transport of refugees from Bremerhaven and Mediterranean ports, and that such vessels are transporting 940 persons per vessel to this country. This situation should be made the subject of inquiry.

In addition, reports from the American zone in Germany indicate that large numbers of persons are infiltrating into that sector.

In view of the position taken by some to change our immigration policies and the observations of Mr. George Meader on the conduct and quality of displaced persons infiltrating into the American zones of occupation, I thought it advisable to obtain specific and detailed information concerning such persons both in this country and abroad. In particular I sought the following data:

(1) Who are they? (2) Where are they? (3) How did they get where they are? (4) How many are coming to this country? (5) Under what authority are they here?

I asked the Department of Justice for the following information:

A. Total number of persons entering this country in 1938, the total broken down (1) according to countries from which immigrants came, (2) according to nationality, (3) according to race.

B. Same information for 1939, 1940, 1941, 1942, 1943, 1944, 1945, 1946.

C. How many displaced persons are there in this country?

D. Who are the displaced persons—the figures broken down (1) according to countries from which they came, (2) nationality, (3) race.

E. Where are they now?

F. How are displaced persons in this country being provided for and under what authority are they here?

G. Total number of legal entries into the United States under quotas for the years 1939 to 1946, the total being broken down (1) according to countries from which the immigrants came, (2) according to nationality, (3) according to race.

In answer to item A, the Department of Justice furnished me with the following statistical table set out on pages 28 and 29; and in answer to item B, the Department of Justice furnished me with the following statistical tables set out on pages 30 to 39, inclusive:

In answer to item C, the Department of Justice furnished me with the following statement (Note: It will be noted that the following statement does not fully answer the question in item C):

"Displaced persons: The President's directive of December 22, 1945, concerning immigration from the American occupation zones in Europe provided that 90 percent of the quotas for central and eastern Europe should be used for persons who could not or would not be returned to their prewar homes. The Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization was a member of the committee that went to Europe to survey the problem and set up a plan of operations. The plan effected was a joint one, in which a number of agencies cooperated. Military authorities determined that applicants for admission would not be detrimental to the security of the United States and also furnished transportation to the port of embarkation. The Public Health Service made physical examinations. Applicants for visas were examined and visas approved by consuls of the Foreign Service of the United States. UNRRA had the care and custody of refugees until they embarked, and the War Shipping Administration furnished the ships on which they traveled. All expenses, such as visa fees, transportation costs and head tax were privately paid by individuals or welfare agencies.

"Displaced persons were considered for admission in the following order: American citizens, orphaned children, close relatives of American citizens, then other refugees. Upon arrival at New York, officers of the Immigration and Naturalization Service made sure that all requirements of the immigration laws were met.

"Persons who qualified for admission as immigrants could be sponsored by an individual or by approved welfare organizations guaranteeing financial support. The first ship bringing displaced persons arrived May 20, 1946. From then until June 30, 1946, there were 2,534 such persons admitted as quota immigrants and 17 admitted nonquota. Almost half of those admitted—1,215—were charged to the quota of Poland; the next largest group—718—were charged to the German quota.

"The President specified that special attention be given to orphan children. By June 30, 1946, the United States Committee for the Care of European Children, Inc. (the only sponsoring agency authorized to be responsible for unaccompanied children) had received 122 children from Europe. Another group—190 Polish children who had been housed in Mexico—were admitted to the United States under the Polish quota. These children were assigned quota numbers in March, which was prior to the beginning of the displaced persons program in Europe.

"For a year or more, there had been some concern about approximately 1,000 refugees who were transported from the war zone of Italy and detained at Fort Ontario, Oswego, N. Y. This group of persons was granted the privilege of preexamination, and most of them were readmitted as quota immigrants."

In answer to item D, the Department of Justice furnished me with a copy of President Truman's plan for refugees taken from the January 1946 Monthly Review of the Immigration and Naturalization Service, as follows:

"On December 22, 1945, President Truman announced a far-reaching program to facilitate the admission into the United States, within the framework of existing immigration laws and regulations, of displaced persons and refugees from Europe. The President's plan encompasses two principal groups. The first of these is the group of refugees now in the relocation camp at Oswego, N. Y. Almost 1,000 persons were originally housed in this camp, after having been brought to the United States on an emergency basis by order of President Roosevelt. Some 900 refugees still at Oswego may now become permanent residents of the United States through appropriate statutory and administrative processes. Officers of the Department of State and the Immigration and Naturalization Service are presently processing the cases of those of the internees who desire to become permanent residents of the United States, and, if found eligible, they will be granted preexamination or other appropriate relief to enable them to establish legal residence.

"The major group affected by President Truman's directive of December 22, 1945, are displaced persons and refugees who are natives of central and eastern Europe and the Balkans. The annual immigration quotas for these countries total approximately 39,000. Statutory restrictions preclude the allocation of more than 10 percent of the annual quota in any single month. Consequently, no more than 3,900 visas may be issued in any one month to natives of the affected countries.

"The President declared that 'common decency and the fundamental comradeship of all human beings require us to do what lies within our power to see that our established immigration quotas are used in order to reduce human suffering.' Therefore, he directed that the following procedure be followed 'to facilitate full immigration to the United States under existing quota laws':

" 'The Secretary of State is directed to establish with the utmost dispatch consular facilities at or near displaced person and refugee assembly center areas in the American zones of occupation. It shall be the responsibility of these consular officers, in conjunction with the immigration inspectors, to determine as quickly as possible the eligibility of the applicants for visas and admission to the United States.

" 'For this purpose the Secretary will, if necessary, divert the personnel and funds of his Department from other functions in order to insure the most expeditious handling of this operation.

" 'Within the limits of administrative discretion, the officers of the Department of State assigned to this program shall make every effort to simplify and to hasten the process of issuing visas. If necessary, blocs of visa numbers may be assigned to each of the emergency consular establishments. Each such bloc may be used to meet the applications filed at the consular establishment to which the bloc is assigned. It is not intended, however, entirely to exclude the issuance of visas in other parts of the world.

" 'Visas should be distributed fairly among persons of all faiths, creeds, and nationalities. I desire that special attention be devoted to orphaned children to whom it is hoped the majority of visas will be issued.

" 'With respect to the requirement of law that visas may not be issued to applicants likely to become public charges after admission to the United States, the Secretary of State shall cooperate with the Immigration and Naturalization Service in perfecting appropriate arrangements with welfare organizations in the United States which may be prepared to guarantee financial support to successful applicants. This may be accomplished by corporate affidavit or by any means deemed appropriate and practicable.

" 'The Secretary of war, subject to limitation imposed by the Congress on War Department appropriations, will give such help as is practicable in:

" '(A) Furnishing information to appropriate consular officers and immigrant inspectors to facilitate in the selection of applicants for visas; and

" '(B) Assisting until other facilities suffice in:

" '(1) Transporting immigrants to a European port;

" '(2) Feeding, housing and providing medical care to such immigrants until embarked; and

" '(C) Making available office facilities, billets, messes and transportation for Department of State, Department of Justice and United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration personnel connected with this work, where practicable and requiring no out-of-pocket expenditure by the War Department and when other suitable facilities are not available.

" 'The Attorney General, through the Immigration and Naturalization Service, will assign personnel on duty in the American zones of operation to make the immigration inspections, to assist consular officers of the Department of State in connection with the issuance of visas and to take the necessary steps to settle the cases of those Allies presently interned at Oswego through appropriate statutory and administrative processes.

" 'The administration of the War Shipping Administration will make the necessary arrangements for water transportation from the port of embarkation in Europe to the United States, subject to the provision that the movement of immigrants will in no way interfere with the scheduled return of service personnel and their spouses and children from the European theater.

" 'The Surgeon General of the Public Health Service will assign to duty in the American zones of occupation the necessary personnel to conduct the mental and physical examinations of prospective immigrants prescribed in the immigration laws.'

"Ugo Carusi, Commissioner of Immigration and Naturalization, was designated by the President to serve as chairman of an interdepartmental committee, which includes representatives of the Department of State, War, and Justice, the War Shipping Administration, and the Public Health Service, to supervise the execution of President Truman's directive. Commissioner Carusi, accompanied by Howard K. Travers, Chief of the Visa Division of the State Department, and Dr. Ralph C. Williams, Assistant Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, has left for Europe to make arrangements for the speedy inauguration of the President's program.

"It is anticipated that officers of the State Department, the Public Health Service and the Immigration and Naturalization Service will be stationed in the American zone of occupation in Germany, to which immigration activities under the President's directive will be confined for the time being, in order to pass on the qualifications of prospective immigrants before they embark for the United States."

In connection with President Truman's plan for refugees, the Department of Justice furnished me with the following statistical table covering persons admitted under that plan:

In answer to items E and F, the Department of Justice furnished me with no information.

The question asked under item E was: "Where are they now?" i. e., where are the displaced persons who entered this country illegally?

The question asked under item F was: "How are displaced persons in this country being provided for and under what authority are they here?"

In answer to item G, the Department of Justice furnished me with the following statistical table:

In an effort to discover exactly what had been done under the President's directive of December 22, 1945, giving preference to displaced persons in immigration quotas, I asked the State Department to furnish me with a statistical table of immigration visas issued under the directive broken down according to the country of birth of the immigrant and his race.

I also asked the State Department to advise me concerning the scope and the operation of the program.

In reply I received a letter from Mr. G. J. Haering, Chief, Visa Division, under date of December 18, 1946, which letter is submitted herewith.

"MY DEAR SENATOR REVERCOMB: In reply to your request of December 12, 1946, for certain information on visa issuances to displaced persons, I take pleasure in transmitting the following information and accompanying statistics.

"1. Under date of December 22, 1945, the President issued a directive in regard to the immigration into the United States of displaced persons resident in the American zones of occupation in Germany and Austria. A copy of that directive with its covering press release is enclosed.

"There is also enclosed a copy of the President's communication of May 25, 1946, to the Secretary of State in regard to the extension of the program for the issuance of visas to displaced persons. The President's approval of October 31, 1946, of the prospective admission of a small group of Estonians who arrived in the United States during the current year in small boats may likewise be mentioned in this connection.

"2. Upon the issuance of the President's directive of December 22, 1945, the Department arranged for the establishing of emergency consular offices in the American zones of occupation in Germany to issue immigration visas to displaced persons in those zones. A committee consisting of representatives of the Department of State, War Department, Public Health Service, and Immigration and Naturalization Service proceeded to Germany and Austria in January to coordinate these consular facilities with arrangements by the Army, War Shipping Administration, and United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration for assembling, screening, and the transportation of displaced persons. Arrangements were also made for the use of corporate affidavits of support of certain voluntary welfare agencies to meet the public charge provisions of the immigration laws and regulations in the cases of displaced persons. The President's directive of December 22, 1945, provided for the use of such corporate affidavits as were approved by the Attorney General.

"Actual visa issuances to displaced persons commenced in the American zones of occupation of Germany and Austria at the end of March. Owing to the necessity of dealing simultaneously with the repatriation of American citizens and as a consequence of other limitations, difficulties were encountered in maintaining consular staffs at sufficient strength to deal with visa activities. In the distribution of visas among displaced persons of the various faiths and creeds, as provided for in the President's directive, the consulates have been confronted by the following circumstances:

"(a) All displaced persons must be qualified for admission into the United States under the immigration laws and regulations, including the so-called public charge provisions of the law. The slowness of most non-Jewish welfare agencies in providing any considerable number of affidavits and of establishing adequate staffs of their representatives in the field to deal with cases requiring evidence to meet the provisions of the law naturally affected the number of non-Jewish cases which could qualify in early months of the distribution of visas to displaced persons. In contrast, Jewish organizations had large staffs and thousands of affidavits of support available at the very beginning of the program and they were therefore in a position to take up any balance of monthly quotas for which non-Jewish applicants were not available by virtue of a lack of adequate documentation concerning support.

"(b) A large proportion of some non-Jewish groups had a Volksdeutsch status under the Nazi regime and their Army security screening was thereby affected.

"(c) For obvious reasons, the majority of the persons qualifying under the German and Austrian quotas would be Jewish persecutees.

"In combination, these circumstances have resulted in creating a majority of Jewish immigrants among the displaced persons covered by consular reports on visas issued thus far. However, an increase in the volume of affidavits of support for non-Jewish immigrants is bringing about a continually rising percentage of visa issuances to displaced persons of non-Jewish faiths.

"3. The attached statistics are a summary of data contained in consular reports covering the issuance of immigration visas in 1946 through the month of October. Included in these figures are visa issuances to 504 persons in the Santa Rosa camp.

"It may be added by way of explanation that not more than 10 percent of the annual quota for a country may be issued monthly except in quotas of less than 300. The principal quotas involved have been those of Germany and Central European countries totaling approximately 39,000 numbers per fiscal year inclusive of the German quota of 25,957. The number of persons qualified for displaced persons status under the German quota has been far less than the supply of German quota number, and of course, this has resulted in a proportional reduction of the possible maximum of displaced persons who could receive quota visas under the President's directive. This maximum has been further reduced by the legal requirement that quota numbers must be allotted to aliens entitled to preference under section 6 of the act of 1924, as amended, regardless of whether they are displaced, and to aliens to whom the provisions of section 19 (c) of the 1917 act are applied.

"The quotas shown in the enclosed statistics represent the countries of birth of the aliens with few exceptions applicable chiefly to minor children accompanying their parents.

"I hope that the material contained in this letter and its enclosures will prove to be of service to you.

"Sincerely yours,

"G. J. HAERING,
"Chief, Visa Division."

The State Department has also provided me with a copy of Mr. Truman's letter to Mr. Byrnes, Secretary of State, under date of May 25, 1946, in regard to the extension of the program for the issuance of visas to displaced persons, which letter follows:

"MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I have been advised that the State Department has requested, and the Bureau of the Budget has approved for inclusion in the third deficiency appropriation bill, an item of approximately $1,600,000,000 for use in connection with immigration to the United States of displaced persons and refugees in Europe. I have approved the appropriation requested and trust that it will be enacted by the Congress.

"You will recall that on December 22, 1945, I issued a directive on the subject of immigration, in which I stated, among other things:

" 'The decision has been made, therefore, to concentrate our immediate efforts in the American zones of occupation in Europe. This is not intended, however, entirely to exclude issuance of visas in other parts of the world.

" 'In our zones in Europe there are citizens of every major European country. Visas issued to displaced persons and refugees will be charged, according to law, to the countries of their origin. They will be distributed fairly among persons of all faiths, creeds, and nationality.'

"I have been informed that 90 percent of the nonpreference quotas are now being allocated to displaced persons in American zones of occupation in Europe, which means that many persons in other countries are denied the opportunity to emigrate to the United States, even though eligible to enter.

"It is my view that the State Department should now give serious consideration to lessening the allocation to the American occupied zones, thus enabling displaced persons in other areas, as well as eligible persons residing in their native countries, to enter the United States under the nonpreference quotas.

"Very sincerely yours,

"HARRY TRUMAN."

The State Department likewise furnished me with the following statistical table concerning immigration visas issued to displaced persons through October 31, 1946, under the President's directive:

UNITED NATIONS' ACTION ON DISPLACED PERSONS

The United Nations Assembly at the recent meeting in New York adopted a resolution on December 15, 1946, to bring into being a constitution under which the International Refugee Organization is to be created to deal with displaced persons. The terms of the resolution provide that the organization is to become effective on signature by the delegates in the United Nations Assembly either with or without reservation as to subsequent legislative acceptance.

I am advised by Mr. Philip Burnett, of the Division of International Affairs of the State Department, that this constitution has been signed by the Honorable Warren R. Austin, our representative, with reservation as to subsequent legislative acceptance.

This means that the resolution will be submitted to the Congress of the United States for approval or rejection.

When the representatives of 15 member nations have signed the constitution it then becomes effective subject to its adoption by the governments of the respective countries.

The constitution creating this United Nations authority on displaced persons would empower that organization, in summary, to deal with displaced persons as to (1) feeding and clothing them; (2) repatriation, that is, return of them to their countries of origin; and (3) resettlement of them.

Resettlement means placing them in other lands. Therefore this question of settlement or entry into this country of displaced persons will be brought before the Congress whenever the plan is submitted for legislative acceptance.

Whether or not the United Nations (or its agent International Refugee Organization) will be given authority to override the immigration laws of this country will depend upon the authority granted the International Refugee Organization when the Congress acts upon the plan which must be submitted to it.

Mr. Burnett, of the Division of International Affairs of the State Department, advises me that it is the position of the State Department that there is not any provision in the United Nations' general constitutional powers that would permit that organization to override the immigration laws of this country without the specific authorization and consent of the Congress.

I am filing with the original copy of this report a copy of the resolution creating the International Refugee Organization and a copy of the Financial and Budgetary Questions Relating to the International Refugee Organization.

These two documents are too lengthy to write into this report with convenience.

Thus, we see that the United Nations Organization is proceeding to take over control of displaced persons. But the extent of its power to place and settle such persons in this country will depend upon the authority given it by Congress on the subject.

The policy upon immigration is still for the Congress.

AMERICAN LEGION'S POSITION

I am advised by the National Headquarters of the American Legion at Washington, D. C., that at its national convention this year that organization passed a resolution dealing with the subject of our immigration laws. The position taken in that resolution may be summarized as follows: The American Legion is opposed to any change in the quota as now provided under our immigration laws, and also opposes admitting persons of other countries under any unused quotas.

The American Legion is composed of veterans of the armed services who saw service in the First and Second World Wars and has a membership of approximately four million.

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS POSITION

I am advised by the Washington Office of the Veterans of Foreign Wars that that organization passed a resolution at its national convention this year urging that all immigration into the United States for all quotas be stopped completely for a period of 10 years.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars has a membership of approximately two million veterans.

SUMMARY

From the data contained herein the following summary facts appear:

1. In 1940 there were 5,009,857 registered aliens in this country, that is 5,009,857 persons who had not become citizens. Note: Under our present immigration laws 153,912 persons may legally enter the United States annually under complete filling of all quotas.

2. There are approximately 1,250,000 displaced persons including ex-enemies, but not German refugees, in the American, British, and French occupied zones in Europe.

3. The number of such persons in the Russian zone is not known.

4. It has long been State Department procedure to establish priorities for nonpreference immigrants on a first-come first-served basis.

On December 22, 1945, however, President Truman, by direction, abolished this procedure and gave priority of admittance to displaced persons in the American zones in Europe.

Under date of May 25, 1946, the President advised the Secretary of State that serious consideration should be given to lessening the allocation to American occupied zones, that displaced persons in other areas and eligible persons residing in their native countries could be taken into the United States under nonpreference quotas.

(NOTE.—The effect of the Presidential directive was, naturally, to cut off those on the waiting lists in their native countries from receiving visas, and also to cause a great rush into the American occupied zones of those who desired to come to America.)

Nine thousand one hundred and seventy-four visas were issued displaced persons in the American zones in Germany and Austria between January 1, 1946, and October 31, 1946.

The number of aliens admitted on visas from everywhere in 1946 to October 31 was 44,154, plus 4,903 under section 19 (c) of the 1917 act.

5. A number of persons who have reached this country illegally during the war have been admitted as quota immigrants, visas being issued to them after they entered here. This, of course, has excluded some who could have entered legally. Note: The number of these persons has not been furnished to date, although requested of the Department of Justice. This point should be made the subject of inquiry.

6. The United States Army has accepted into its occupied zones all persons who can present a plausible claim that they are persecuted for racial or religious reasons, or have political beliefs favorable to the allies.

7. Displaced persons are furnished a basic ration of 2,000 calories per day, and persecutees receive an extra 200 calories. By comparison the German population receives 1,550 calories daily. According to the Meader report all age groups in both sexes of displaced persons are overweight.

8. The United Nations has moved to take over the feeding, clothing, repatriation, and resettlement of all displaced persons. The representative of the United States, Hon. Warren A. Austin, has signed approval of such power subject to legislative action of his Government. Therefore, the Congress will determine to what extent the United Nations Organization known as International Refugee Organization may resettle displaced persons in this country.

CONCLUSION

The question squarely confronts this Government as to whether it will retain its present policy on the admission of persons to this country expressed in existing statutes, or whether it will change that policy so as to permit increased immigration or further restrict immigration.

This subject may come before the Congress upon a bill dealing directly with a change in the immigration laws or it may be presented when the Congress is asked to act upon the resolution of the United Nations Assembly setting up an organization to deal with displaced persons and to define the powers of that organization.

There are many phases to the problem.

During the war years none of the immigration quotas were filled. Some of those who advocate the entry of larger numbers of displaced persons suggest that we cumulate these past unused quotas and permit entry under them now. This would require a change in the present statutes under which quota entry is based upon yearly periods and even upon monthly limitations—as not more than 10 percent of the annual quota can be admitted in any 1 month.

It is doubtful that a number of countries will use their quotas for entry here this year and during subsequent years, notably the United Kingdom and some north European countries. It has been suggested that these current unused quotas be filled with displaced persons regardless of nationality. To follow such a suggestion would of course break down the whole quota system and completely do away with the present plan of allotments by countries and the policy of national origins. Any such plan would require amendment of the present law.

One of the most important considerations is that of economic result to this country. With today's starved market and need for replacements, there is full opportunity of employment. The time may come, however, when this market has been satisfied and production will be lessened and unemployment becomes a critical question. The addition to this population of any considerable number of persons would naturally add to the problem of unemployment whenever it may arise.

The political aspect of the situation cannot be overlooked. Many of those who seek entrance into this country have little concept of our form of government. Many of them come from lands where communism has had its first growth and dominates the political thought and philosophy of the people. Certainly it would be a tragic blunder to bring into our midst those imbued with a communistic line of thought when one of the most important tasks of this Government today is to combat and eradicate communism from this country.

The point of whether these displaced persons who are undesired in their own country, and who for some reason have made themselves undesirable, or who from their own choice are not willing to attempt to get along with their own governments, should be brought into this country to dwell among our people, is worthy of study.

Another point to be given consideration is whether we should accept people who are unwilling to accept the now dominant political policies of their own countries, and take the chance of dealing with them here among us. In other words, will we take the position that they should work out with their own peoples and their own governments their own situations in Europe until such time as they may come here under our present immigration laws, or shall we bring them here to work out their problems in this land.

We cannot ignore the distressing plight of many of these people who suffer as a result of the ravages of war. But, in helping them, should aid be given to them in Europe to reestablish themselves there, in or near to their native lands, or should we permit them to come into this country in large numbers and have our people assume the burden of caring for and directing them here?

No step should be taken at the price of probable economic or political turmoil in our own midst.

Our position should be taken squarely upon what is best for this country.

This does not mean that we ignore the plight of distressed people anywhere. Their needs should be met with great liberality. But it does mean that we cannot ignore our paramount duty to the people of this country to do what is best for them within the bounds of right and to keep secure the strength and progress of the Nation.

Respectfully submitted.

CHAPMAN REVERCOMB.

DECEMBER 30, 1946.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I deeply appreciate the patience of those who have heard me upon this subject. I feel that indeed at this time it was well to discuss and review the subject of immigration. I hope that the amendment which has been offered will be adopted, because I believe that it closes the door to any attempt to take from Congress its powers over the immigration laws. That is the purpose of it; that is the intent of it, and if it is made a part of this resolution I believe that then we may safely proceed knowing that any step taken must first receive the prior approval of the Congress of the United States.

I was glad indeed to hear the proponent of the resolution, the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] say that it was what he wanted, that he wanted this power left in the Congress.

I now ask that this amendment be adopted and made a part of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALDWIN in the chair). The question is upon agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB] for himself and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN].

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. Is an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia in order at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is not. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia and the Senator from Nevada in the nature of a substitute for the first committee amendment, on page 1, beginning in line 9.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I renew my parliamentary inquiry. Is an amendment to the Revercomb amendment in order at this time?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that an amendment to other parts of the joint resolution would be in order, but not an amendment to the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. DONNELL. May I inquire of the Chair if he is able to state at this time at what period in the proceedings such an amendment will be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As soon as the committee amendment is agreed to the joint resolution will be subject to further amendment.

Mr. DONNELL. I thank the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the committee amendment as amended is agreed to.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. REVERCOMB. As I understand, the substitute which I offered on behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and myself has been adopted and made a part of the joint resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I do not know of any other committee amendments.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, there is one other committee amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next committee amendment.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 3, after line 3, it is proposed to strike out:

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated annually to the Department of State such sums as may be necessary.

And insert:

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of State such sums not to exceed $75,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning June 30, 1947, as may be necessary.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, am I correct in my understanding that amendments are now in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair so rules.

Mr. DONNELL. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk. It is an amendment to the amendment previously offered by the Senator from West Virginia, and I should like to be heard briefly upon it. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, line 2, of the Revercomb amendment, after the words "other person", it is proposed to insert "an acceptance of the constitution of the Organization by or on behalf of the Government of the United States shall not constitute or authorize action."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the amendment is not in order, unless it is an amendment directed to the joint resolution as it now stands amended.

Mr. DONNELL. I offer it in that form, Mr. President. May I address myself to the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri is out of order. The only circumstances under which his amendment could be in order would be if the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB] were voted down. The amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia was an amendment in the second degree.

Mr. DONNELL. Now that the amendment offered by the Senator from West Virginia has been adopted it becomes a part of the bill, does it not?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I think I may be able to help the Senator.

Mr. DONNELL. I am very happy to do so.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If I correctly understand the amendment, I have no objection to it; and in order to facilitate action I ask unanimous consent that the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia be perfected by the acceptance of the amendment proposed by the Senator from Missouri.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there is no objection, the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] will be agreed to by unanimous consent.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I have no objection, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB] is perfected by the amendment offered by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL].

Mr. DONNELL. I very much appreciate the courtesy of the senior Senator from Michigan and that of the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may we have a final vote on the joint resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 77) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The joint resolution, as passed, is as follows:

Joint resolution providing for membership and participation by the United States in the International Refugee Organization and authorizing an appropriation therefor

Resolved, etc., That the President is hereby authorized to accept membership for the United States in the International Refugee Organization (hereinafter referred to as the "Organization"), the constitution of which was approved in New York on December 15, 1946, by the General Assembly of the United Nations, and deposited in the archives of the United Nations: Provided, however, That this authority is granted and the approval of the Congress of the acceptance of membership of the United States in the International Refugee Organization is given upon condition and with the reservation that no agreement shall be concluded on behalf of the United States and no action shall be taken by any officer, agency, or any other person and acceptance of the constitution of the Organization by or on behalf of the Government of the United States shall not constitute or authorize action (1) whereby any person shall be admitted to or settled or resettled in the United States or any of its Territories or possessions without prior approval thereof by the Congress, and this joint resolution shall not be construed as such prior approval, or (2) which will have the effect of abrogating, suspending, modifying, adding to, or superseding any of the immigration laws or any other laws of the United States.

SEC. 2. The President shall designate from time to time a representative of the United States and not to exceed two alternates to attend a specified session or specified sessions of the general council of the Organization. Whenever the United States is elected to membership on the executive committee, the President shall designate from time to time, either from among the aforesaid representative and alternates or otherwise, a representative of the United States and not to exceed one alternate to attend sessions of the executive committee. Such representative or representatives shall each be entitled to receive compensation at a rate not to exceed $12,000 per annum for such period or periods as the President may specify, except that no member of the Senate or House of Representatives or officer of the United States who is designated as such a representative shall be entitled to receive such compensation.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Department of State such sums not to exceed $75,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning June 30, 1947, as may be necessary—

(a) for the payment of United States contributions to the Organization (consisting of supplies, services, or funds and all necessary expenses related thereto) as determined in accordance with article 10 of the constitution of the Organization; and

(b) for additional expenses incident to participation by the United States in the activities of the Organization, including: (1) Salaries of the representative or representatives and alternates provided for in section 2 hereof, and appropriate staff, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; (2) travel expenses without regard to the Standardized Government Travel Regulations, as amended, the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended, and section 10 of the act of March 3, 1933, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 5, sec. 118a), and similar allowances for persons temporarily stationed abroad; (4) cost-of-living allowances under such rules and regulations as the Secretary of State may prescribe, including allowances to persons temporarily stationed abroad; (5) services as authorized by section 15 of Public Law 600, Seventy-ninth Congress; (6) official entertainment; (7) local transportation; and (8) printing and binding without regard to section 11 of the act of March 1, 1919 (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 44, sec. 111), or section 3709 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 41, sec. 5).

SEC. 4. (a) Sums from the appropriations made pursuant to paragraph (a) of section 3 may be transferred to any department, agency, or independent establishment of the Government to carry out the purposes of such paragraph, and such sums shall be available for obligation and expenditure in accordance with the laws governing obligations and expenditures of the department, agency, independent establishment, or organizational unit thereof concerned, and without regard to sections 3709 and 3648 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 41, sec. 5, and title 31, sec. 529).

(b) Upon request of the Organization, any department, agency, or independent establishment of the Government (upon receipt of advancements or reimbursements for the cost and necessary expenses) may furnish supplies, or if advancements are made may procure and furnish supplies, and may furnish or procure and furnish services, to the Organization. When reimbursement is made it shall be credited, at the option of the department, agency, or independent establishment concerned, either to the appropriation, fund, or account utilized in incurring the obligation, or to an appropriate appropriation, fund, or account which is current at the time of such reimbursement.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

DONATIONS BY NAVY DEPARTMENT TO NONPROFIT INSTITUTIONS AND ORGANIZATIONS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, reporting, pursuant to law, a list of institutions and organizations, all nonprofit and eligible, which have requested donations from the Navy Department, which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah; to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare:

"House Joint Memorial 7

"Joint memorial to the Military Affairs Committees of the Congress of the United States of America urging the transfer of certain land and buildings on the Military Reservation of Fort Douglas, Utah, to the Federal Administrator of the Veterans' Administration

"Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah:

"Whereas the ending of hostilities has brought to an end the greatest war of all times and more than sixty-five thousand sons and daughters of the great State of Utah have returned to their loved ones and to take up their citizenry in this State; and

"Whereas these veteran citizens have, in their efforts to become rehabilitated and use the service of the Veterans' Administration, confronted many delays and much unnecessary travel to get the benefits to which they are entitled, because the regional Veterans' Administration offices are so isolated from the city and so separated as to cause much delay and hardships; and

"Whereas the present location of the regional manager's office of the Veterans' Administration is in temporary quarters, provided by semipermanent office buildings located some 6½ miles from the business section of Salt Lake City at the emergency war industry of Remington Small-Arms Ammunition Plant; and

"Whereas said buildings, facilities, communications and transportation are insufficient and inadequate to provide proper service to our veterans, and the structures do not have sufficient space to provide for present requirements, are not properly arranged for economic or efficient operation, are not of permanent construction, are not safe from fire hazards, and are too far isolated from other related operating agencies of both Federal and State units; and

"Whereas the cost to rearrange space, construct required addition, furnish necessary facilities and correct fire hazards and to provide permanent quarters is not within economic justification; and

"Whereas the present arrangement of splitting the administration's personnel, having four sections in the business section of Salt Lake City, with approximately 150 employees of the training division separated from the chief of the division and managers of other various departments, places a great burden of delay and confusion upon the many functions of the administrative and operating units of the managers' responsibilities; and

"Whereas the manner of conducting the affairs of the many units by present communication system and transportation is entirely unsatisfactory, and the handling of mail, communications, and files between these units results in serious delay to final action and service to our veterans; and

"Whereas the inadequacies of the present arrangements seriously impair the operations, supervision, and training of personnel required of the regional manager and further deprives the veterans of services they expect and are entitled to; and

"Whereas the United States Army military post at Fort Douglas, Utah, provides sufficient space for all present forces and for any reasonable expansion; building and facilities are much more adequate and suitable and may be rearranged to provide satisfactory facilities for all the manager's personnel at a minimum cost; the communications trunk system is of sufficient capacity to provide suitable services; there is ample building space available to furnish suitable offices for other State and Federal agencies having relations with the Veterans' Administration that could be moved to this location and further the economic operation of such agencies; and

"Whereas the post is now operated on a standby status and the military personnel assigned there is not of a number to economically justify the use of the many buildings, quarters, and other facilities at their disposal; and

"Whereas a plot of ground in the southwest corner of said reservation has been transferred to the Veterans' Administration and there will be constructed thereon a 500-bed veterans' hospital during the year 1947; and

"Whereas having this hospital on said reservation will further enhance the value and economy of having the Veterans' Administration administrative and operating units consolidated in one area; and

"Whereas the present veterans' hospital has always had and does now have a waiting list of general medical and surgical cases and this unsatisfactory condition could be alleviated by the use of the present Fort Douglas post hospital and facilities not now being used; and

"Whereas it is most desirable to bring all medical activities as near the Utah State Medical School as possible, to assure that the best talent is accessible and available for our disabled veterans. This could be accomplished if the Veterans' Administration was permitted to occupy the post hospital facilities previously requested from the War Department: Be it therefore

"Resolved by the Twenty-seventh Legislature of the State of Utah in session assembled, being fully mindful of the manifold problems confronting your honorable body, That necessary action will be taken immediately to transfer from the jurisdiction and custody of the United States Army to the jurisdiction and custody of the United States Veterans' Administration agency, administrator of all the property, land, and buildings, with their operating equipment, all situated within the boundaries of the United States military reservation known as Fort Douglas, Utah, as set forth in the Veterans' Administration request to the War Department Commanding General of the Sixth Army at Presidio, Calif., dated approximately August 1, 1946; Be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Utah forward copies of this memorial to the congressional delegation from the State of Utah, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, and to members of the Military Affairs Committee of the United States Congress."

By Mr. MURRAY:

A joint memorial of the legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Joint Memorial 6

"Joint memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting legislation to grant certain servicemen and veterans who have been prisoners of war the benefits of section 251 of the Internal Revenue Code

"To the honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"Whereas section 251 of the Internal Revenue Code exempts military personnel who served in possessions of the United States from payment of income tax; and

"Whereas no exemption is made in the case of military personnel who were made prisoners of war while in a possession of the United States and who were removed therefrom by the enemy;

"Now, therefore, we petition you, that legislation be enacted such as H. R. 6541 and S. 1958 of the second session of the Seventy-ninth Congress, or other legislation, making section 251 of the Internal Revenue Code applicable to servicemen and veterans who were made prisoners of war while in a possession of the United States and who were removed therefrom by the enemy.

"It is hereby directed that copies of this joint memorial be sent to the Honorable Harry Truman, President of the United States, to the President of the Senate, and the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States and to each of the Members of the Senate and House of Representatives from Montana."

(The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the legislature of the State of Montana, identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.)

A joint memorial of the legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"Senate Joint Memorial 10

"Joint memorial of the Senate and the House of Representatives, of the State of Montana, to the Congress of the United States, requesting the continuation of the present Commodity Credit Corporation wool-purchase program and requesting price support for wool

"To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress Assembled:

"Whereas the State Department is now giving consideration to a further reduction of duties on apparel wool; and

"Whereas probably no agricultural commodity has been so adversely affected by war as the domestic wool-growing industry; and

"Whereas there was a carry-over of apparel wool in this country on January 1, 1947, of about a billion pounds regardless of the fact that consumption of wool in the United States during the past 5 years has been maintained on a plane about 35 percent greater than prewar averages; and

"Whereas about 75 percent of all apparel wool consumed in the United States in 1945 and 1946 was of foreign origin; and

"Whereas the operation of present duties and national administration policy has resulted in every apparel-wool-producing country of the world using our markets as a dumping ground; and

"Whereas this national policy will, if continued, inevitably liquidate the domestic wool-growing industry as evidenced by the 33-percent loss in sheep numbers nationally and the over 50-percent loss in sheep numbers in Montana in the last 5 years: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Thirtieth Session of the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana (the senate and house of representatives concurring), that Congress request the Secretary of Agriculture to immediately announce the continuation of the present Commodity Credit Corporation wool-purchase program for the 1947 wool clip on the basis of not less than 90 percent of comparable price of January 15, 1947.

"That, pending an increase in tariff, enactment of legislation to establish a comparable price for wool and lambs, to declare wool a Steagall commodity for price support of not less than 90 percent of the comparable price, for 2 years following January 1, 1947; and "That, Congress grant permission to the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell domestic wool under their jurisdiction at a price competitive with foreign duty-paid wool; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of the senate to the Presiding Officer of the United States Senate, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Secretary of Agriculture, to the Secretary of State, and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from this State."

(The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana, identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.)

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry:

"House Joint Memorial 11

"Joint memorial addressed to each member of the Montana delegation in Congress of the United States and to the Honorable J. A. Krug, Secretary of the Interior, relating to predatory animals and urging that the Federal Government allocate more money to assist in bringing said predatory animals under control

"Whereas in the State of Montana there is approximately 35 percent of our land area which is held by the Federal Government in proprietary or trustee capacity for Indian reservations, forest reserves, wild animal refuges, grazing lands, military reservations, and for other governmental purposes and objects; and

"Whereas the livestock industry of the State of Montana is suffering large losses each year because of the large number of predatory animals which attack and kill livestock upon the public ranges in the State; and

"Whereas the numbers of said predatory animals have increased to a considerable extent in recent years, due partially to the fact that said animals are protected in national parks and in game refuges, and that by reason thereof said livestock growers are facing a serious situation; and

"Whereas the State, counties, grazing organizations and stockmen of the State of Montana are spending between $200,000 and $300,000 annually for the purpose of bringing said predatory animals under control, and the Federal Government expends or contributes approximately $40,000 annually to assist in the control of said predatory animals: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the House of Representatives of the State of Montana (the senate concurring), That we respectfully urge that the Department of the Interior increase the allocation of moneys to be expended for the control of predatory animals in the State of Montana to the sum of $100,000 per annum, and that the necessary steps be taken to decrease the number of predatory animals in the national parks and the game refuges where said predatory animals are now protected; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY and ZALES N. ECTON, Senators from the State of Montana, and to the Honorable MIKE MANSFIELD, Congressman from the First Congressional District, and to the Honorable WESLEY A. D'EWART, Congressman from the Second Congressional District, and to the Honorable J. A. Krug, Secretary of the Interior of the United States of America, with the urgent request that each use every effort to accomplish the object and purpose herein set forth."

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Senate Joint Memorial No. 12

"Joint Memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting the appropriation of funds for the completion of construction of that portion of the Broadus-Crow Agency Highway known as State Route No. 8, lying within the northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation between Ashland and Lame Deer, Mont.

"To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress assembled:

"Whereas the Broadus-Crow Agency Highway running from Broadus, Powder River County, Mont., to Crow Agency, Big Horn County, Mont., known as State Route No. 8, was long ago accepted by the Montana State Highway Commission and the United States Department of Agriculture as a part of the 7 percent Federal highway system; and

"Whereas this highway runs approximately 88 miles through Federal lands, namely: the northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation, the Crow Indian Reservation and the Custer National Forest and the remainder of 22 miles is Federal-aid highway outside of any reservation; and

"Whereas, the Indian Department and the United States Forestry Service have asked for the construction of the highway as a necessity for the proper administration of their work and the development of the Indian lands and the preservation of the forests; and

"Whereas, this highway will open up and cause to be developed a large territory of rich agricultural, stock-raising, lumber, and mineral lands which has remained largely dormant because of inadequate transportation facilities, and thus will add much to the State's wealth, and help the Indians of this section to be more nearly self-supporting; and

"Whereas the territory to be traversed is of wonderful natural scenic beauty, and historical interest and especially attractive to tourists; and

"Whereas this highway shortens the distance from the Black Hills and the central West to our National Parks by more than 100 miles and will prove a great feeder highway, bringing in tourists in great numbers to our State; and

"Whereas said highway has not been constructed except about 20 miles between Ashland and Lame Deer, Mont., which stretch of proposed highway lies within the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation and for which no money has as yet been appropriated by the United States; and

"Whereas the portion of this highway already constructed will have been hard-surfaced when contracts already let or about to be let have been completed, leaving only the 20 miles above described as yet unbuilt and unfit for travel; and

"Whereas said highway is considered by the State of Montana to be of such importance that the Montana Highway Commission has spent $100,000 thereon which is unmatched by Federal funds; and

"Whereas the unconstructed portion makes the use of the entire highway difficult or impossible; therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the house of representatives concurring), That the Congress of the United States be requested to appropriate funds for the construction of the portion of the Broadus-Crow Agency highway, known as State Route No. 8, lying between Ashland and Lame Deer, Mont., within the Northern Cheyenne Indian Reservation; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this Memorial be forwarded to each of the Senators and Members of the House of Representatives from Montana in the Congress, to Thomas H. MacDonald, Commissioner, United States Bureau of Public Roads, and to the State Highway Commission of the State of Montana and that all of them be hereby requested to use their best efforts to obtain the necessary funds to complete said highway in the manner aforesaid."

Two joint memorials of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce:

"Senate Joint Memorial 9

"Joint memorial to the Congress of the United States of America and to the Interstate Commerce Commission, requesting an investigation of the railroad boxcar shortage, appropriate legislation to relieve such shortage and appropriate action by the Interstate Commerce Commission to correct the present inequitable distribution of cars.

"To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in Congress Assembled and to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States:

"Whereas there is now pending in the Senate of the United States, Senate Resolution No. 47, introduced by Senator REED, providing that the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee or any duly constituted subcommittee thereof, of the United States Senate be authorized and directed to make an early and thorough investigation on the following points and to make prompt report to the Senate together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation as it may deem desirable:

"A. Whether the boxcar supply of the railroads has been and is now adequate;

"B. Whether there has been an avoidable failure to make necessary material available for the building of new cars;

"C. Whether material for building of freight cars for export from the United States of America has been provided and such cars exported to the detriment of business in this country;

"D. Whether the Interstate Commerce Commission has fully carried out the duties and obligations imposed upon that agency of the Congress by the Interstate Commerce Act, with respect to the control of the freight-car supply of the country and the prevention and correction of dislocation as among railroads and as among sections of the country; and

"Whereas, there has been and now is a shortage of boxcars in the State of Montana and it appears that the present holdings of cars by Eastern roads are in many cases considerably in excess of the holdings of cars by Western roads, proportionately, as is evidenced by the on-line ratio of cars as currently published: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the house of representatives concurring), That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, in regular session, respectfully urges the Congress of the United States, or the appropriate committees thereof, to conduct an early and thorough investigation of the boxcar shortage pursuant to S. 47 introduced by Senator REED and to enact such legislation as may be deemed necessary as a result of such investigation to relieve the present boxcar shortage; be it further

"Resolved, That the Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana respectfully urge the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States to take whatever action may be necessary to correct any inequities now existing in the distribution of boxcars, to the end that on-line car ratio of Western roads serving Montana be increased to and maintained at an amount equal to the on-line car ratio of the principal Eastern roads; be it further

"Resolved, That a copy of this memorial be sent to each of the following: To the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY, and the Honorable ZALES N. ECTON, United States Senators from Montana; to the Honorable WESLEY A. D'EWART and the Honorable MIKE MANSFIELD, Congressmen from Montana; to the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committees of the United States Senate and the United States House of Representatives and to the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States."

"Senate Joint Memorial 11

"Joint memorial requesting the United States Civil Aeronautics Board to give early consideration to providing that northern area of the United States as the crow flies from Duluth, Minn., to Seattle, Wash., with regular air transportation serving Chicago via the Twin Cities and Duluth and the intermediate points of Grand Forks, Devils Lake, Minot, Williston, Wolf Point, Glasgow, Malta, Havre, Great Falls, Shelby, Cut Bank, Kalispell, and Spokane

"To the Honorable United States Civil Aeronautics Board:

"Whereas there is no transcontinental air service between Lake Superior and Seattle along the northern part of the United States; and

"Whereas said territory can well support such service and is in fact operating one of the most successful railroad operations in the Nation; and

"Whereas applications are pending on the part of air-transport companies for such authority; and

"Whereas all of the cities and trade areas affected are desirous of having such service; and

"Whereas said service appears to be both economically feasible and necessary in the best interests of the country; and

"Whereas no through service is available from the intermediate territory to important commercial and industrial centers of the country East or West: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of Montana (the house of representatives concurring therein), That the Members of Congress from this State be requested to lend every effort toward the establishment of such service by presenting this memorial to the Civil Aeronautics Board and in person reporting to said Board the lack of transportation by air above set forth; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be sent by the secretary of state to the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY and the Honorable ZALES N. Two joint memorials of the Legislature of the State of Montana; to the Committee on Public Works:

"House Joint Memorial 10

"Joint memorial to the Secretary of Interior of the United States, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, the Secretary of War of the United States, Hon. James E. Murray, Senator from Montana; Hon. Zales N. Ecton, Senator from Montana; Hon. Mike Mansfield, Representative from Montana; and Hon. Wesley A. D'Ewart, Representative from Montana, requesting that funds be made available from Federal public-land funds, Indian Department funds, and War Department funds for assisting in the location and construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Poplar and Brockton, Mont.

"Whereas the State Highway Commission of the State of Montana at the direction of the Twenty-ninth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana has made an examination and survey preliminary to the location for the construction of highway bridges over the Missouri River in the State of Montana; and

"Whereas the State Highway Commission of the State of Montana reports a favorable location for a bridge over the Missouri River near Brockton, Mont.; and

"Whereas the people in Richland County, Mont., south of the towns of Brockton and Poplar are now forced to travel a great distance to market by reason of a lack of a bridge over the river, and because of the impossibility of maintaining a ferry crossing over the Missouri River due to the great and continuing fluctuation of the water level in the Missouri River resulting from the opening and closing of the head gates at Fort Peck Dam; and

"Whereas the Bureau of Reclamation plans the construction of the Charlie Creek and Redwater irrigation pumping units in Richland County, and a bridge over the Missouri River would substantially decrease transportation costs during construction of these irrigation projects and would serve the projects after completion; and

"Whereas if a bridge were constructed across the Missouri River between Poplar and Brockton, Mont., approximately 500,000 bushels of wheat and 1,000 head of cattle would annually be hauled over the bridge to market resulting in a higher price for the weight of cattle because of decreased transportation and freight rates to market; and

"Whereas a very large area of the State of Montana which now depends upon ferry crossings and rowboats for postal service would receive far better service over a bridge than having to depend upon ferries and rowboats; and

"Whereas the north end of the bridge would be located on tribal lands of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation; and

"Whereas it would be an unreasonable burden upon the State of Montana and the Public Roads Administration for them to pay the entire cost of such a bridge when the bridge would be serving the Indian Department of the United States, the Bureau of Reclamation of the United States, and the War Department of the United States; and

"Whereas funds from Federal public lands, the Indian Department of the United States, and the War Department of the United States are available but not allocated for assisting in the construction of such a bridge: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the House of Representatives of the Thirtieth Legislative Assembly of the State of Montana, the senate concurring, does hereby respectfully request the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, the Bureau of Indian Affairs, and the Secretary of War of the United States to make funds available to assist the State of Montana and the Public Roads Administration of the United States in the construction of a bridge across the Missouri River between Poplar and Brockton, Mont.; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this memorial be forwarded by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Secretary of War of the United States, and also to the Secretary of the Interior of the United States, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and the Honorable JAMES E. MURRAY and the Honorable ZALES N. ECTON, Senators from Montana; and the Honorable MIKE MANSFIELD and the Honorable WESLEY A. D'EWART, Representatives in Congress from Montana."

"Senate Joint Memorial 16

"Joint memorial to the Congress of the United States requesting allocation of funds for construction and maintenance of farm-to-market roads by States and political subdivisions thereof

"To the Honorable Senate and House of Representatives of the United States Congress:

"Whereas we acknowledge that America needs thousands of miles of farm-to-market roads at a cost that will enable the American taxpayers to finance the construction of the necessary farm-to-market roads; and

"Whereas good practical farm-to-market roads can in many areas be designed and constructed by State local political subdivisions at a cost of a few hundred dollars per mile as against the present cost of several thousands of dollars per mile for farm-to-market roads; and

"Whereas the State and the local political subdivisions are in the best position to design and construct farm-to-market roads at the lowest cost: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, by the Senate of the State of Montana (the house of representatives concurring), That we do hereby respectfully petition the Congress of the United States to pass necessary legislation to provide adequate funds to build and maintain farm-to-market roads, and to allocate such funds directly to such States, counties, and other political subdivisions thereof, that are qualified to receive them, for the purpose of building and maintaining farm-to-market roads in their respective areas; be it further

"Resolved, That copies of the memorial be transmitted by the secretary of state of the State of Montana to the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States, to the Senators and Representaives in Congress from the State of Montana, and to the Montana Highway Commission.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

ADMINISTRATION OF GRECIAN RELIEF FUND BY UNITED NATIONS

Mr. HICKENLOOPER obtained the floor.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. For what purpose?

Mr. PEPPER. I should like to introduce a joint resolution and make a statement of about 10 minutes.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from Florida for that purpose.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, on behalf of the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR] and myself I ask unanimous consent, as in legislative session, to introduce a joint resolution. The joint resolution relates to the extension of aid to Greece, but the proposals it contains differ in four vital particulars from the administrative proposals pending in the Congress at the present time.

They are as follows: (a) Relief is provided to Greece and Turkey is excluded; (b) the relief is administered by the United Nations; (c) military supplies and aid are excluded; (d) a full-scale investigation of the whole Near East and Middle East problem by the General Assembly is called for.

Since the Greek situation is inextricably bound up with the political and economic crisis in the Near East and Middle East, the United States representatives to the United Nations are directed to initiate a request for an emergency meeting of the United Nations General Assembly to consider and take action on the peace-threatening situations in that area, with a view to resolving not only the Greek crisis but the problems of Palestine, Dardanelles, and Middle East oil.

The joint resolution provides that United States representatives at the United Nations shall initiate proposals for the establishment of an international fund for the relief and rehabilitation of Greece. Contributions by member nations will be voluntary, but the United Nations may recommend equitable quotas. A United States contribution of $250,000,000 is authorized. The international fund will be subject to the following conditions: (a) United Nations control; (b) relief to the civilian economy only; (c) the Greek Government must give assurances that supplies will be distributed without discrimination as to race, creed, or political belief; (d) United Nations observers and representatives of press and radio of countries contributing to the fund must have full access to observe and report on the distribution of supplies; (e) the Greek Government must furnish pertinent information promptly; (f) the United Nations must make quarterly reports on the administration of the fund.

Pending the establishment of the international fund, the joint resolution provides for an immediate advance of $100,000,000 by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation for the relief and rehabilitation of Greece, under the control and administration of the United Nations.

Mr. President, there are no people in the world whom the people of the United States are more anxious to help in their distress than the heroic people of Greece. But there is no reason why, in order to help the Greek people, we have to destroy the United Nations—for the United Nations is the only hope mankind has against the unspeakable destruction of World War III.

The United Nations, if we lend it our full support, can do every appropriate thing we propose to do to help Greece. But it is said the United Nations has no relief organization. It had the United Nations Relief and Rehabilitation Administration, but we killed it, effective March 31 of this year. The United Nations tried to set up an international relief fund at its last assembly meeting, after former Mayor LaGuardia, as head of UNRRA, had personally appealed to Generalissimo Stalin and had gotten his agreement that Russia would participate in that international fund. But we prevented that.

But we can now by congressional resolution authorize the President to make available to the United Nations, through the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, funds up to, say, $100,000,000 to be expended through a United Nations Commission, on which we shall be prominently represented, along with other nations. We are sure many other nations will add their contributions to that fund, according to their ability. The United Nations would not have to recruit new personnel for the task, for it has the veteran personnel of UNRRA which is on the ground in Greece, which knows the problem, and which could be absorbed into the United Nations relief program. That trained UNRRA personnel could effectively do the work under direction of the United Nations.

Meanwhile we can secure by our request, in about 45 days, a special meeting of the United Nations General Assembly. The United Nations would then take up immediately the Greece-Turkey situation and the whole question of relief and security for the nations and the peoples in that area.

The Food and Agricultural Organization, through a mission which was in Greece for months, has just recommended a $100,000,000 loan for Greece from the World Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Upon the basis of the FAO report, the Greek Government could, in a matter of days, file an application for this $100,000,000 loan for building railroads, bridges, power plants, hydroelectric dams, docks, highways, and for purchase of railroad rolling stock and the like. We, being the principal stockholder in the World Bank, and having the President of the bank, could get this loan approved in short order after its filing. The United Nations could and would, we are sure, work out with our help an adequate relief program for Greece, short-term and long-term.

A United Nations mission is already in Greece, investigating alleged aid to Greek insurgents from outside sources. The Acting Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, has testified that that problem was being handled by the United Nations, and certainly there has been no failure on the part of the United Nations yet to handle it satisfactorily.

If the security of Greece or Turkey is impaired by threatened aggression from a foreign power, is it the duty of the United States to try to stop it without consulting with a single other member of the United Nations, and without calling on the United Nations to tackle the task?

Yet Mr. Acheson testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that before this proposal was made by the President to provide economic aid to Greece and to put $150,000,000 into the training and maintaining of a Greek Army and another $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 into the support of the Turkish Army, we had not consulted with a single other nation, and had not taken the matter up with the United Nations.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. PEPPER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. HATCH. While the Senator is referring to the Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Acheson, I wish to ask whether it would be fair to say that the Assistant Secretary of State did testify before the committee to the effect that until this Government by its own constitutional processes—that is, by action of Congress giving the necessary authority—had a definite proposal to make to the United Nations, there was no proposal to be made; but that when those constitutional processes had been followed, it was the intention to take it up with the United Nations, when we knew definitely what this country could be authorized to do.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his comment, but I may say that the entire purport and character of the proposal indicates that it was contemplated as unilateral action on the part of our country.

The failure to which I have referred is all the more regrettable in view of the fact that in the only two cases of armed intervention brought to the attention of the Security Council, namely Iran and Syria and Lebanon, the Security Council secured a successful peaceful disposition of the dispute, a result which greatly heartened the people of the world and increased their confidence in the United Nations. It should be noted that the United Nations achieved that result without our having to furnish armies in any of those countries. Yet we now propose to send military missions to Greece and Turkey, the limit of which the resolution does not prescribe. Our Government has not, in the past, had authority to send military missions outside the Western Hemisphere. Here, too, is a departure from our traditions of the past.

The truth—which the State Department has not been willing fully to disclose to the Congress and the country—is that we and the British are engaging in a power struggle in the Balkans, in Turkey, and in the Middle East against the Russians and against communism. We are told that the Communists will come to dominate the Government of Greece if we do not put up the money to prevent it.

We are told that if Greece goes communistic she will undermine Turkey, which might also become communistic. In addition, we are told that the Turks cannot maintain their present Army of nearly a million if we do not bear a part of the cost, and that an exceptionally large Army is said to be necessary against Russia, which might use force to back up her demand for a larger voice in the control of the Dardanelles. As against these "iffy" contingencies, we do know definitely that in both Greece and Turkey there are governments strongly opposed by many of their own people, who allege that they are being ruthlessly deprived of their democratic rights. In the case of Greece, the Government of a discredited and Fascist-minded King leads a pitiful persecution of the republican elements in the population. And we should know that in Greece our money will be used, as our surplus war goods have been used, to kill off a large number, if not all, of these people, whose only offense is that they have the classic Greek passion for democracy, the ancient Greek hatred for tyranny. We should know this, because our State Department has some pretty good figures showing how many Greek democrats have been assassinated, exiled, and imprisoned.

We do know that Turkey, with all her excellent progress toward democracy, was allied with Germany in World War I, and that she gave some assistance to Germany in World War II. She did not declare herself on the Allied side until the end of the war.

The $300,000,000 we are to put up to maintain the Turkish and Greek Armies will last only until June 30, 1948. That $300,000,000 will be spent to maintain foreign armies to fight for a discredited imperialism, or as part of global policy of power politics. Are we hiring foreign soldiers to fight our battles?

The British have poured hundreds of millions into the maintenance of armed forces in Greece. Now they are getting out and we are getting in. Are we trying to bolster up a collapsing empire or laying the foundations of a new? For more than half of the money going into Greece and all of the money going into Turkey is to maintain armed forces.

Boiled down to the dregs, the President's proposal is this. American corporations have big oil interests in Saudi Arabia in the Middle East. The British have oil interests and other interests in many Middle Eastern countries; and the British life line, so-called, leads through the Mediterranean and the Suez Canal on toward India and other British possessions in the Far East. The British for centuries have been fighting to keep the Russians out of the Dardanelles and out of influence in the Eastern Mediterranean, Greece, Turkey, and the Middle East. The British are still carrying on that fight, but they are so embarrassed financially that they are having to retreat. They put it up to us to take over their load in this battle. We have stepped in and now we are going to defend, as strategic areas, Greece, Turkey, the Dardanelles and the Middle East, not only against possible Russian aggression, but against becoming communistic in their domestic politics. So we support the Greek and Turkish armies; we maintain a fleet in the Mediterranean; we put up enough money to keep the present Government headed by King George, in power in Greece by enabling it to kill off its opposition by the gun and the bomb; we make it clear that we are committed to the same policy at least in every area of the world which we deem to be of strategic significance. By this logic, tomorrow it may be France or Italy or Iran or India or China, and we know not where else.

We may have to come to such a decision, but let us know it will be the most momentous decision we have ever made. It means, first, incalculable cost to this country; it means the death of the United Nations; and it means that this power struggle between us and Russia is rendered hopeless of peaceful solution, and commits us both to a conflict which will engulf all mankind.

Mr. President, we humbly submit that we do not have to commit ourselves to such a dangerous doctrine. We can help Greece through the United Nations in every humanitarian and appropriate way. We are trying to provide such help through the proposed resolution. If the integrity of Turkey is in danger, the way to meet that is through the United Nations as we met the danger to the integrity of Iran and Syria and Lebanon. If forces are needed, let us put up our share through the United Nations.

Mr. President, when those forces go forth, let it be said they have the United States on the one side and the United Nations on the other side, and that they fight with the other forces of the world trying to maintain democracy, and they shall not be suspected as being but the emissaries of a new imperialism raising its head above the nations and the peoples of the earth.

If we follow this course of international cooperation, we will get the material and moral help of many other nations. If the United States takes a strong leadership in meeting this crisis through the organization of the United Nations, we will strengthen, instead of weakening, the United Nations to meet future crises. We must not sacrifice the United Nations upon the altar of haste and condemn it to death for inaction before we give it a chance to act.

The handling of this crucial matter through the United Nations is, therefore, of the sternest necessity to the future of the United Nations and the peace of the United States and the world.

For that reason, the Senator from Idaho and I have felt it necessary to introduce this joint resolution, which will provide effective peaceful aid to Greece through the United Nations. Thus, not only will Greece be safe, but the fair escutcheon of American democracy will be saved from the taint of imperialism and power politics.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 93) favoring the establishment of a relief and rehabilitation fund for Greece to be administered through the United Nations Organization, introduced by Mr. PEPPER (for himself and Mr. TAYLOR), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. J. Res. 93) was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the postwar adjustment in the Near East and Middle East areas has given rise to a number of interrelated situations which endanger the peace and foster suspicion and distrust among members of the United Nations, including armed conflicts in Greece and Palestine, disputes over the control of the Dardanelles, and problems of access by the various nations of the world to the critical oil resources of these areas on an equitable basis; and

Whereas the people of the United States have renounced war and the use of armed force in the solution of international disputes and have joined with other peace-loving nations in the United Nations in order to promote and secure the peace through international cooperation; and

Whereas there is and will be hunger, privation, and suffering in Greece if assistance is not promptly provided, and the Government of the United States desires to assist in the furnishing of such assistance to Greece for humanitarian reasons and in order to promote international well-being; and

Whereas administration of such assistance by the United Nations will promote international confidence and minimize suspicion and conflict among the nations, and will foster that spirit of unity of the great powers that brought us victory in war and laid the foundations of a United Nations Organization to preserve the peace: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That it is the sense of Congress that (a) the United States shall initiate a request for an emergency meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations to consider, investigate, and take appropriate action looking toward the resolution of those situations in the Near East and Middle East areas which are endangering the peace, and (b) United States representatives at the several constituent organizations of the United Nations now in session request such organizations as have jurisdiction over any of the aforesaid situations to expedite consideration and action upon such situations pending the convening of the emergency meeting of the General Assembly.

SEC. 2. The United States representatives at the appropriate constituent organizations of the United Nations are hereby authorized and directed to initiate proposals looking toward the establishment of a fund for the relief and rehabilitation of Greece in accordance with the following terms and provisions:

(a) The said fund shall be subscribed by voluntary contributions of the member nations (but the United Nations may recommend to the member nations quotas based on equitable considerations).

(b) The said fund shall be controlled and administered by appropriate organizations and officials of the United Nations.

(c) The said fund shall be used only for the provision of supplies for the relief and rehabilitation of the civilian economy of Greece (including incidental administrative, transportation, technical, and other necessary services); but no part of said fund shall be used for the provision of military material, supplies, or services.

(d) No assistance shall be provided through this fund unless the Greek Government has given assurance satisfactory to the Secretary-General of the United Nations that: (1) the supplies made available under this fund as well as similar supplies made available locally will be distributed among the people of Greece without discrimination as to race, creed, or political belief; (2) representatives of the United Nations and of the governments which have contributed to the said fund and representatives of the press and radio of the countries which have contributed to said fund will be permitted to observe freely and report fully regarding the distribution and use of said supplies; and (3) upon request of the Secretary-General of the United Nations the Greek Government will furnish promptly information concerning the production, distribution, importation, and exportation of any supplies which affect the relief and rehabilitation needs of Greece.

(e) The Secretary-General of the United Nations or the appropriate organizations of the United Nations shall submit quarterly to the nations contributing to the said fund reports of expenditures and activities pursuant to said fund.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the President upon the establishment of the fund described in section 2, a sum of not exceeding $250,000,000 to provide the United States contribution to such fund. Any advances made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation pursuant to section 4 shall be charged against any appropriation made under this authorization and shall be repaid to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

SEC. 4. Pending the establishment of the fund described in section 2, and notwithstanding the provision of any other law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed until such time as an appropriation is made pursuant to section 3 to make an advance of $100,000,000 to the President for the purpose of providing supplies for the relief and rehabilitation of Greece. The administration of such relief and rehabilitation shall be carried out by appropriate organizations of the United Nations. For this purpose the President shall transfer the aforesaid advance to the Secretary-General of the United Nations or to such constituent organizations as the Secretary-General may direct, in such amounts as the President shall determine to be appropriate, upon the receipt of assurance satisfactory to the President that the terms and conditions specified in subsections (c), (d), and (e) of section 2 will be complied with.

SEC. 5. The authority of the President under sections 3 and 4 may, to the extent the President so directs, be exercised by the Secretary of State.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Iowa yield to the Senator from Texas?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I have listened to the words of the Senator from Florida with a great deal of disappointment and regret that the Senator from Florida should lend his brilliant talents to a cause which I feel should not be permitted to control the action of the Senate.

I have not had opportunity to study the resolution introduced by the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Idaho, but I shall take pleasure in doing so in a little while. However, from the remarks of the Senator from Florida, I assume that he is now approaching the subject of relief to Greece and Turkey from the standpoint that it should be administered by the United Nations, and not by ourselves. May I inquire if I am accurate in that assumption?

Mr. PEPPER. With our participation, of course, as a leading member of the United Nations.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, if the Senator from Texas will permit, I think he was not in the Chamber when the Senator from Florida took the floor, and perhaps should understand just what the proposal of the Senator from Florida is. As I heard it read, it was that we should authorize the payment of $250,000,000 to the United Nations, to be used for relief purposes. Other nations might voluntarily contribute if they so desired. We would also authorize the payment of $100,000,000 directly, or through the World Bank. How was that payment to be made?

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will allow me, the gist of it is that the Congress by resolution should authorize the President to make $100,000,000 of RFC funds immediately available to the United Nations Organization, to be used by that organization through an appropriate committee in meeting the distress current at the present time in Greece. It contemplates that the UN would call upon other member States to contribute according to their ability, or all they would contribute, along with the funds we made available for the initial emergency program. Furthermore, it suggests that the personnel of UNRRA which is already in Greece and is now functioning there could be immediately availed of by the parent organization, the United Nations, in the carrying out of the program. That would be the temporary program for relief only for Greece.

There would be initiated by the United States representative a request for a special session of the Assembly, which I contemplate could be achieved in 45 days. Within about 45 days after the initial request, it would be possible to have a special meeting of the UN Assembly. Then at that time the resolution contemplates that the UN shall take up the problem in Greece, and proceed toward a solution of it through the agencies and through the ordinary processes of the UN. The resolution contemplates that we shall, of course, take a leading part in not only helping to formulate the program that the UN might devise, but that we shall, of course, have a leading part in carrying it out, and that we shall be a prominent part of the committee that will be charged with the execution of the program. Then, the resolution contemplates that there shall be——

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit——

Mr. PEPPER. Just 1 minute, and I will finish.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. May I have a moment, please?

Mr. PEPPER. Yes.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I think I have yielded a great deal of time in the Lilienthal matter.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator has been more than courteous, Mr. President.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I desire to say, Mr. President, that I wish to be entirely courteous, but, having the floor to discuss the Lilienthal matter, I cannot yield in my time for an extended discussion of a matter which will be fully explored on this floor at a later date. I still want to be courteous to the Senator from Texas and to the Senator from Florida, but I feel that it is an imposition—I do not use the word in any harsh way, but it is an imposition on the business before the Senate to go over the details of the program of the Senator from Florida, or to discuss the Greek loan at this time.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator. I did not intend to trespass upon his time. I shall immediately desist; but I hope he will allow the Senator from Texas to make any comment he desires.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yielded to the Senator from Texas for that purpose, but I did not want a round-robin discussion to ensue.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the Senator from Florida proposes a very unique approach to this problem. From the explanation I have had, I assume that he wants the United States to furnish the money, but to let somebody else handle it and spend it.

Those who suggest that this is a problem of the United Nations must not have read the Charter of the United Nations. I challenge them to put a finger on any clause in the Charter which authorizes that organization to do the things relative to Greece and Turkey that are proposed in the joint resolution.

In the first place, UN has no funds. In the second place, if it had funds, it has no authority to loan them. It has no authority to make grants of public funds to which we are contributors.

We hear discussion of the troubles of Greece and Turkey. If there are troubles there of military nature, the United Nations does not have one dime of funds with which to meet such expenses, and no military forces, not one soldier, can it summon. It is well known that the Military Staff Committee of the United Nations has for more than a year undertaken to formulate plans for the allocation of quotas to the various member nations as to the troops which they will supply and place at the command of the United Nations, to resist or to prevent aggression; but, Mr. President, they have never agreed, and, if they did agree, they would then have to submit the agreements to all the participating nations, numbering, as I recall, 51, at the present time. Such agreements would have to be ratified as treaties are ratified. That process would require so much time that it would not be of material benefit to Greece or Turkey to meet the existing emergency. The situation in Greece particularly is of a desperately emergent character; so that what we do we must do quickly and well.

What is the objection to the United States handling this matter directly? We handled the British loan directly, and there was no fervent elocutionary appeal that it should be handled by the United Nations. We made a loan to Italy in her distress. No one asked that it be done through the United Nations. We made a loan to France. Nobody complained that that ought to come under the jurisdiction of the United Nations. Implicit in every one of those loans was the motivating thought which is embodied in the loan resolution now pending, that by reason of the war and chaos and confusion which were created in Italy, for instance, unless we went to her economic relief she would be submerged by communism. We all know that. It was not written into the bill, but we all know that that was one of the motivating causes for extending aid to Italy. The same thing was true of France; we did not want communism to grow any more rapidly than it was already growing in France, and we made a generous loan to that Nation. We did not call on the United Nations to perform that task.

Even in the case of Great Britain, when we loaned her three and three-quarter billion dollars, as I remember the amount, we were concerned with her economic condition. We did not want Great Britain to be thrust into chaos and confusion as an aftermath of the dislocations of the war, because we did not desire that staid old England, which for a thousand years has stood as the exemplar of democracy and free government, should become engulfed by the sweeping surges of communism, which might overcome, to a limited extent, at least, her ancient democratic government.

Mr. President, suppose this matter were sent to the United Nations. What has happened to the Military Staff Committee of the United Nations? It has been delayed and practically vetoed because there are on the Security Council representatives who do not view these questions as we do. Suppose the Senate listened to the Senator from Florida and the Senator from Idaho and sent this case to the United Nations; it would go to the Security Council, would it not? The Senators know who sits in the Security Council. They know who in the recent past has, not merely once, not twice, not thrice, but 10 times registered a veto of the solemn decisions and actions of the Security Council.

If it be true—and the Senator from Florida says it is true—that the proposal to provide relief for Greece and Turkey is designed to resist the efforts of Russia—I dislike to use the term, but in order to be frank and honest, I am compelled to use it, and my excuse is that the Senator from Florida used it; for he says that the proposal is designed to resist the encroachments of Russia—if that be true, does anyone suppose that Russia as a member of the Security Council would hestitate to veto the proposal?

No, Mr. President; we are seeking, it is true, to arrest the ravages of communism which might submerge Greece and destroy a civilization which had its roots in antiquity.

Mr. President, Greece, among the ancient nations, was foremost in the practice of democracy. The annals of the classical days of Greece, and the glorious days of her greatest orators, are filled with stories of democracy and free government. That ancient land has at the present moment, by reason of the ravages of war, become devastated, its industries have been destroyed, its railways and communications have been almost obliterated. With cruel savagery the war swept over that country and killed thousands upon thousands of Greek citizens. I would recall to the Senator from Florida that in the early days of the war, when Italy invaded Greece, the Greeks stood with heroic valor and attracted the admiration of the world as they resisted the invaders of Greek soil and sought to maintain the integrity of their nation. The measure now pending providing relief for Greece is designed to maintain the integrity of the Greek Government. It is designed to give assistance to Greece. It is not an aggressive measure. Even the military aid proposed is limited, as Senators will find if they read the measure, to a small group which shall act in advisory capacities only. The word "only" is used in it. We are not proposing to send a combat force to Greece. We are proposing to send a small military group to aid the Greeks in utilizing and learning the use of the military weapons which we shall furnish them in order to reequip their army, not for aggressive purposes, but to restore order in their own territory, to maintain the functions of democracy, and to resist, if need be, the invasions from foreign lands on the north.

Mr. President, everyone knows that in large part the troubles of Greece grew out of conditions on her northern border. She is bordered on the north by Albania, by Yugoslavia, by Bulgaria. Everyone who is at all familiar with the situation in Europe knows under what influences those three countries operate. He knows what the influences are which dominate and motivate them.

If they can smother Greece, if they can muzzle her activities, if they can override her Government by the substitution of a communistic government, their purposes will be served according to the voice and the command of their commander in chief.

Mr. President, I do not want to take up more of the Senate's time. The Senator from Iowa has been very generous. But I should like to say to the Senate that the proposal to hand over the matter of aid to Greece to the United Nations in the first place is a delaying movement. It is a flanking movement. It is not a frontal attack. It is not resistance in the open, but is an effort to create in the minds of the people of the United States the idea that we have bungled this matter and that we ought to entrust it to the United Nations.

Mr. President, if it were a problem that the United Nations was authorized to handle under its charter I would say yes. If the situation were not emergent and did not demand quick action, yes, perhaps. But, Mr. President, one cannot go to a well and draw water when there is no water in it. The United Nations could not have done anything in the world about this matter if it wanted to. Everyone knows that under its charter—and that is all the authority it has—the United Nations could do neither of the things proposed in the joint resolution introduced by the Senator from Florida. The United Nations can neither make a loan, because it does not have any money to loan, nor can it make a grant or a gift, because it has no funds with which to make a grant or a gift. It cannot afford military advice and direction, because it does not have a single soldier, not a single one. The reason why it does not have a single soldier is known to all who keep informed of current events.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator says the United Nations is utterly helpless to provide relief, how does the Senator account for UNRRA? Was not UNRRA set up for the United Nations, and was not UNRRA given a grant of funds, and not a loan of funds?

Mr. CONNALLY. That was done by special act of Congress providing the funds.

Mr. PEPPER. All we did was to participate in the organization that was proposed by the United Nations.

Mr. CONNALLY. That is true. Mr. President, UNRRA is going out of business quite shortly, and the only reason it had existence was that Congress by a separate act specifically provided the authority and the funds. UNRRA was not created under the general charter of the United Nations. I challenge the Senator to find anything in the charter of the United Nations that gives it primary authority to do the things that UNRRA did. UNRRA received a grant of funds through an act of the Congress.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. CONNALLY. Yes, indeed.

Mr. PEPPER. My information is that at the last meeting of the assembly in New York it was proposed formally that there be set up an international relief fund. Ex-Mayor LaGuardia, former head of UNRRA, made the proposal, and my information also is that the United States took the lead in preventing the establishment of that fund, and no one raised the question that the United Nations did not have authority, if its member states subscribed, to set up an international relief fund.

Mr. CONNALLY. I cannot go into all the details because I do not know what was done at that particular meeting. The Senator says that the creation of a relief fund was proposed in the UNO, but the fund was not established, it was not created. What does that prove except that it proves that UNO was not very greatly interested in this proposition even if it had the authority to do it, which it does not have.

Mr. President, there are many terms, many ideals, many concepts of fancy, but we are faced here with realities, not with dreams. Our old friend Greece, with whom we have maintained cordial relations for more than 100 years since she threw off the Turkish yoke and achieved her independence along in the 1820's—Greece is in dire distress. Her industries are destroyed. Her people are in want. She is threatened with communism internally, inspired, we think, from abroad. It is necessary that we do one of two things—either grant this relief as provided in the joint resolution heretofore introduced or refuse it. I shall not refuse it by my vote. I want to see preserved the free governments of the world, the free democracies of the world. I want to see their independence maintained.

In the UNO we profess to adopt the principle of the equal sovereignty of all nations, great and small, and the small nations have an equal vote, except on the Security Council. In the United Nations the smallest republic, the smallest nation on earth, has the same vote as the great ones. Greece is a small country, but she has a glorious past. She has contributed perhaps more than any other nation of ancient times to the culture and to the advancement of civilization. Her history is a glorious one, filled with examples of all the arts, many of the sciences, literature, and oratory.

Mr. President, I want Greece to be able to stand before the world in her own dignity, in her own integrity, in her own freedom, and in her own independence, and if the greatest and most powerful Republic on the globe cannot render this slight service to one of the smallest republics on the globe, then all of our Fourth of July speeches during which we beat our breasts and talk about democracy and freedom go for little

Mr. President, we face a reality. Shall we face it with courage, with patience, with determination, or shall we face it by beginning to trim and hedge and say, "Oh, no; wait a minute, this is not our obligation. This is the obligation of the UNO." The UNO what? [Laughter.]

How can it be said that it is the obligation of an organization which knows it cannot perform it, which we know cannot perform it, which Greece knows cannot perform it, which Russia knows cannot perform it, which Great Britain knows cannot perform it? But, thank God, we propose to do that which no nation except ourselves can do. We can do it. Standing on our own dignity, with our own resources, with courage and with a high conception of preserving the peace of the world, we propose to take this step in aid to Greece. I believe our aid will contribute to the preservation of the peace of the world. We propose to aid this free government, this great republic in the ancient world, to maintain her dignity. We are taking this course not because someone tells us to but we are taking it because of our own strength, our own resources, and our own courage.

AMENDMENT OF ATOMIC ENERGY ACT OF 1946

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. For what purpose?

Mr. ECTON. For the purpose of introducing a bill.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. ECTON. I thank the distinguished Senator.

Mr. President, in view of what has transpired in world affairs during the past couple of weeks I think it is safe to state that we are facing some of the most serious questions which this Nation has ever confronted. President Truman called the two Houses of Congress together in joint session and asked that we support a measure which would provide a loan of $400,000,000 to Greece and Turkey. In connection with that request he also asked that he be permitted to send civilian and military personnel. It has made some of us wonder just how far our national policy is to be extended by our State Department. We necessarily must trust the State Department, and especially General Marshall, who is to direct the future of that great Department and our foreign policy. Many of us have felt that perhaps a little more than American dollars would be required to stop the totalitarianism against which we have been waging a world war, and especially to uproot totalitarianism in Europe as we find it today.

We think that General Marshall's hand should be strengthened in other ways than merely putting up American dollars. I do not know whether or not this is the psychological time for this country to extend the Monroe Doctrine, as it applies to this hemisphere, literally to the entire world. Perhaps it is. However, it seems that that is what we are doing, when the President asks us to make a loan to Greece and Turkey.

Possibly other countries may respect us for what we have done or tried to do for human liberty in the world; but I for one suspect that some of the nations in the world respect this country of ours because we hold the atomic bomb.

Therefore, Mr. President, a few of us believe that we can strengthen General Marshall's hand, and that of our State Department, by introducing a bill proposing an amendment to the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, which was passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress.

On behalf of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE], the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], and myself, I ask unanimous consent, as in legislative session, to introduce a bill to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1946. With the indulgence of the able Senator from Iowa, I should like to read the first paragraph as an explanation. It reads as follows:

(1) There is hereby established an Atomic Energy Control Board (herein called the Board), which shall be composed of the Secretary of State, who shall be Chairman of the Board, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and two additional members to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. In submitting the nomination of any appointive member to the Senate, the President shall set forth the experience and the qualifications of the nominee. Three members shall constitute a quorum of the Board.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ECTON. I yield with the consent of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER].

Mr. PEPPER. I wish merely to get the purport of the bill. Is it proposed to displace the present Atomic Energy Commission, and to establish instead a board consisting of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy?

Mr. ECTON. That is correct. The board would consist of the Secretary of State, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and two members appointed by the President.

Mr. PEPPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ECTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as in legislative session, to introduce the bill and have it appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 979) to amend the Atomic Energy Act of 1946, introduced by Mr. ECTON (for himself, Mr. MALONE, Mr. MCCARTHY, Mr. OVERTON, and Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield to me?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. For what purpose?

Mr. MALONE. For the purpose of commenting on the bill just introduced.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I hope the comment will not be extensive.

Mr. MALONE. I thank the Senator. I shall be brief.

Mr. President, times have changed since the enactment of the 1946 Atomic Energy Act. Times have changed since Mr. Lilienthal and other members of a committee recommended that the atomic energy secret be shared with all other countries, including Russia, without adequate inspection for security.

The President of the United States has sounded the warning note. He has said that the time has come for a show-down.

It is well known that there are two great world powers in the world today—not five—and they are Russia and the United States.

The other three—England, France, and China—we are simply leading by the hand. They have neither the money nor the national stamina successfully to oppose the continuous unrelenting pressure of communism.

Mr. President, our own President of the United States has made this decision—we here have only the right to accept or reject.

Our own generation has experienced two devastating world wars. Our people were never properly informed of the approach of either of them, or of the great principle and policy upon which the decision to enter them was made.

This time they have a right to know. They have a right to be fully and completely informed of not only the great over-all plan of which our entry into Greece and Turkey is a part, but they have a right to know what the alternative to such a plan might be, what would be the consequences of our refusal to enter into the European and Asiatic internal conflicts which have continued periodically throughout all recorded history.

According to the President of the United States this is clearly a conflict between two philosophies of government—an attempt to establish spheres of influence.

Communism is a religion as well as a socioeconomic system. For this reason the spreading of it around the world is a holy purpose to the Russians. This explains why they can be expected to die for it right here in this country and to deny, when confronted by the evidence, that they are members. This also explains why we have not been able to reach them with any argument to stop the expansion of their doctrine by subterfuge, trick, deceit, propaganda, and every other means.

This has led to the "containment" plan which brought out the Greece-Turkey military-economic backing program now under consideration. The immediate proposal is to give $400,000,000 to Greece and Turkey to organize their armed services and to vitalize their industries in defense against the totalitarians.

It has already been announced that Korea will be the next country to be helped in the same way. It is understood China will follow Korea, and that we intend to build a great naval base at Singapore, probably also at other points along the China coast or the Asiatic waterfront.

The plan of containment also includes dominance in Iran, Arabia, Italy, Syria, and to attain as much control in Europe at key points as is essential for the purpose.

Last week we made a treaty with the Philippines which gives us the right to build harbors, military bases, air bases, fortifications, and many other kinds of offensive and defensive works in all parts of the islands in approximately 20 areas. By the terms of the treaty we may put in the installations under our own laws in our own way virtually without any control by the Philippine Government. About half of these installations whose building has begun are in absolutely new locations.

The theory involved in this containment program includes the purpose of establishing industries wherever we come to the aid of a country. Even Germany, it is hoped, may be launched on a light industrial-production program. This, obviously, will be done with our money collected from our own taxpayers, and will be guided by our technicians, business executives, trained administrators, and financiers.

All these countries have an extremely low living standard. It is obvious that the plan has been launched to make this country the principal market for their products. This part of the program, if successful, will tend to lower our wage living standards when dumping begins.

The problem involved in this entire program is whether our 140,000,000 people and their equipment, military forces, and resources—which are not illimitable—can be scattered around the globe to contain and control 2,000,000,000 people—which is roughly estimated to be the populations who might eventually follow totalitarian leadership.

It also is wise to emphasize that, while the President through his Cabinet members is continually emphasizing that our resources are running short, and that through their preachments of becoming a have-not nation and current operating policies, they have practically stopped the investment of venture development capital in our mines, forests, and fuels.

An argument used against the containment program is that it will drain us of human resources, mental energies, and most of our physical resources of mine, forest and field, and that we are playing into the hands of the Russians by exhausting ourselves. When a certain point of exhaustion is reached, not only our physical resources will be depleted but we will be so terribly taxed that people will reach the discouraged conclusion, "what is the use to work purely for the tax collector who gathers in his money to support Government's enterprises?"

The theory on which this program as well as others are based is that Russia is weak and still unorganized and poorly equipped and therefore is not able at the present to fight. The thought seems to be that she can get ready within 5 or 10 years, the military here says 5 years, and the people abroad say 10 years.

Those who have faith in the containment program think Russia can be so well bottled up within 5 years that she will not want to fight. The practical immediate effect of the program obviously means the expenditure of billions of dollars which must come from our people.

It will, and is already, recreating a war economy.

The foreign demand will take United States goods abroad which we need at home. Replenishment industrially and by the consumer inevitably will be delayed. Machinery and materials we need here for our capital plant and equipment will go into foreign countries.

Britain already has restored practically all its wartime controls. It is inevitable that we will restore wartime controls with a war economy. It is immediately apparent that we must have controls under this program to speed production of goods needed abroad.

That the Government must have controls to make the necessary allocations between foreign and domestic needs and the Government must place controls on prices, marketing, storage and transportation. It is inevitable that the armed services will buy enormous quantities of many materials and equipment. This means new United States industrial mobilization.

What are alternatives to this program?

Some people are very candid who hate the thought of war and who have confronted the present situation with Russia in bewilderment, have reached the conclusion since some form of war is apparently inevitable that now is the time to deliberately offer Russia the alternative of fighting, or confining her communistic activities to their own sphere of influence as layed down by your plan of occupation.

These thoughts are somewhat like the philosophy of the surgeon, but it is the surgeon's philosophy in reverse. The surgeon tries to operate while the patient is still strong. In this case we would operate while the patient is still weak. The springboard for this particular trend of thought is downright realism without any of the higher or spiritual phases of life.

Another alternative that is often discussed is that we shall keep out of the rest of the world—draw our people back wherever they are and devote ourselves to making ourselves completely ready in our own hemisphere. This would include integration into the hemispheric plan of everything from Baffin Bay to the Straits of Magellan. It would involve the English-speaking, Spanish-speaking, and Portuguese-speaking people of the Western Hemisphere. It would also involve the possibility sometime in the future that we would be attacked by the totalitarians on our own hemisphere. They would be under the necessity of bringing troops many thousands of miles over practically all the oceans of the world. The same of course is true of our problem if we seek to join the issues with them in Asia and Europe. And all military thought still holds that masses of infantry are the deciding weight that wins and occupies countries.

Another alternative that should have some force and which probably appeals to the greatest number of Americans, Although they cannot see how it can be accomplished, is what you might call the spiritual phase or program.

This is not a religious feeling. It is a feeling that there must be some better way to decide issues than by conflicts that destroy civilization. There is not the remotest doubt that the next conflict will leave most of the globe in ruins. It is impossible to imagine what will be the state of this world when the next conflict has been terminated and only one social and political form is left sitting on top of the world on a heap of skulls as it were. No thinking man or woman can imagine that the next war will leave anything but vast, monstrous, demolition and annihilation.

We want peace and we are ready to sacrifice for peace. The trouble seems to be that the Russians, truly Asiatics, are fired with a fanatic zealousness for communism which to them is religion. They think it is their destiny to convert the future world to the system of cooperative living and eliminate competition. We do not appear to have that same spiritual conviction that possesses those people.

If we had some tremendous and inspiring conviction it is possible that with our will to peace and our conviction we might be able to sell the Russians the idea that the globe is big enough for their system and for the nontotalitarian system, and that it is perfectly feasible for both systems to compete for the good will and following of the peoples of the globe in peace rather than in an annihilating conflict.

There is no reason why such an appeal might not register. The trouble is, apparently we on our side of the fence have inadequate leadership and are still riddled with too obvious selfishness.

Bear in mind that in the minds of practically every mother and father and in those of us who have had to do with the last two World Wars will be the desperate question, Why cannot they do something about avoiding war? And that particularly is the problem of the people in the Congress. It is up to them some way to find the method by which the Russians can be stopped and contained without recourse to those processes which will destroy the globe.

Now, Mr. President, since it is well understood that the atomic energy is purely a national security asset and that it will have no civilian application for a considerable time, it seems the sensible thing to place the control where it is so obviously needed.

This morning's papers carry headlines announcing the Korean emergency, estimating the cost at $600,000,000. This, together with the crisis in Greece and Turkey, adds up to $1,000,000,000 with more to come.

The purpose, then, of introducing the amendment to the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 at this time is to put into the hands of the one man holding the absolute confidence of the American people at this time, the greatest national security and peace-enforcement weapon of all time. That man is Hon. George C. Marshall, Secretary of State.

CONTROL AND ERADICATION OF FOOT-AND-MOUTH DISEASE AND RINDERPEST

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I understand that the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] wants to ask unanimous consent, as in legislative session, for the consideration of a bill referring to the prevention, control, and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as in legislative session, for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 154, Calendar No. 63.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 154) making an appropriation for expenses incident to the control and eradication of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the question is on the third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I wish to thank the Senator from Iowa for his courtesy in permitting me to have the joint resolution considered at this time. I know how he feels; for at one time when I had the floor, for 45 minutes continuously I was kept from saying a word because of the interruptions of other Senators.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I have been pleased to yield to the Senator from Kansas. He is a delightful gentleman from the Midwest, and I am glad he has been able to secure action on the measure so quickly.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION—NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of David E. Lilienthal to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I have just one or two other things to say in order to complete the statement I wish to make at this point. I have referred to the qualifications of Mr. Lilienthal and the reasons why I have decided to vote for the confirmation of his nomination. I referred briefly, yesterday, to Mr. Lewis L. Strauss and his background as a layman in science.

At this time I desire to refer briefly, for the information of the Senate, to Mr. Robert F. Bacher, another proposed member of the Commission. I call attention to the fact that Dr. Bacher is a nuclear scientist of highest degree. He is the one scientific, professional man nominated to be a member of this Commission. He has had extensive experience in the Manhattan project. He began in 1941, with the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, in radar work; and in the spring of 1943 he went to the Los Alamos Laboratory, as head of the experimental physics division. Later he was head of the bomb physics division of the Los Alamos Laboratory, which is the laboratory of the Manhattan District which put the bomb together in its final stages.

Again I call attention to the fact that in the printed hearings we find, prior to the testimony of each of the nominees, a résumé of his experience.

One of the other gentlemen nominated to be a member of the Commission is Mr. Sumner T. Pike, of Maine. He has had broad governmental and business experience. It will be found, from reading the references to his background and experience, as shown in the hearings, that he has had military service in the past; he has been purchasing agent and assistant manager of an electric company in Texas; he was vice president of the Service Station Equipment Co., in Texas; he was assistant to the president of G. Ansinck & Co., of New York, a firm in the general South American import and export business. He was later a member of the financial department and financial secretary for the Continental Insurance Co. and affiliated companies; and he has been vice president and director of Case Pomeroy & Co., a firm engaged in mining exploration and investment and also in oil production and exploration. He was later business adviser to the Secretary of Commerce and a member of the Temporary National Economic Committee for the Department of Commerce. Thereafter he was a member of the United States Securities and Exchange Commission. He has been a Director of Fuel Prices, in the Office of Price Administration; and now he has been nominated for appointment as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The other gentleman nominated to be a member of the Commission is Mr. William W. Waymack. His home is in Des Moines, Iowa, and he would come to the Atomic Energy Commission from the position of editor of the Des Moines Register. To indicate Mr. Waymack's background, I suggest that Senators read in the hearings the résumé of his experience. He has had world-wide experience during the past 20 or 30 years. He has had unusual opportunity to learn about the rest of the world. He is a Pulitzer prize winner as an editor. He has received many honors for the excellence and high quality of his editorial ability. I have know Mr. Waymack personally for a great many years. He is an intensive worker, a man with a highly qualified mind, and one who, as a layman, in my judgment cannot only secure a completely adequate grasp of his duties in this field, but also will bring to it a zeal and an integrity which will be of great benefit to the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me? I wish to ask a question about Mr. Waymack.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I simply wish to say that I judge that the Senator from Iowa is a little more enthusiastic about Mr. Waymack than he has been about some of the other gentlemen he has described; is he not?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I did not intend to be, Mr. President. I merely felt that because I have known Mr. Waymack for some years, perhaps I might enlarge a little upon the statement of his qualifications.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think that when the Senator from Iowa knows a man and has known him for years, he is correct in enlarging a little on his qualifications. I can excuse the Senator for not doing so as to others. Probably he does not know Mr. Lilienthal as well as I do and is not as well acquainted with him as I am. I have known Mr. Lilienthal for 16 years, and I can understand very well why the Senator from Iowa would be a little reticent in speaking in detail about him.

So I am glad to see that when the Senator from Iowa does know a man like Mr. Waymack, he enthuses over him a little more.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I may say that while the acquaintance of the Senator from New Hampshire with Mr. Lilienthal has actually extended over 16 years, I will bet him a new hat that the 16 years have not seemed as long to him as the 6 weeks I have known him have seemed to me. [Laughter.]

Mr. President, let me say a word about the nominee for General Manager of the Commission, who, under the law, must be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. The President appointed Carroll L. Wilson to be General Manager of the Commission, after recommendation by the Commission. Mr. Wilson is a young man, 36 years old, I believe. However, the record shows, as do the recommendations of those who know him, that during that time he has reached an enviable standing in scientific-production fields. He bears the unqualified and enthusiastic endorsement of such men as Dr. Vannevar Bush, to whom he was assistant at one time; Dr. Karl Compton; and a number of other scientific men who know well the atomic-energy field, and who not only speak of him in the highest terms, but were instrumental in recommending him to the Commission and to the President for appointment as General Manager of the Commission.

Now, Mr. President, I have concluded what I wanted to say, at least in a preliminary way.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator does not think that as General Manager Wilson would be of much account with Lilienthal as Chairman, does he?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Yes; I think he would be.

Mr. BRIDGES. Why does the Senator think that the General Manager would have much to say with Mr. Lilienthal as Chairman?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. If the Senator is suggesting that Mr. Lilienthal overrides the provinces of employees or those under him, I do not believe Mr. Lilienthal is of that disposition. I think Mr. Lilienthal is a forceful executive; I do not think anyone can deny that he is a successful executive. But I believe that, as a successful administrator, he will cooperate with his associates on the Commission, and will certainly confine his activities to the establishment of a general policy, and that the General Manager will be fully authorized and permitted to perform his functions as such.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator said yesterday that Mr. Lilienthal is impatient of legislative processes. Of course, that is how all dictators start; they begin to oppose or become impatient with legislative processes. So they take the law into their own hands. That is how Hitler started; that is how Mussolini started; that is the way many men in countries overseas started to become dictators.

If Mr. Lilienthal has that characteristic—and the Senator from Iowa said yesterday he has—if he is impatient with legislative processes of the Congress, which created his Commission—and the Senator from Iowa said yesterday that he is—it is reasonable to suppose that he would be intolerant of a manager who exercised any of the real duties of management, particularly when the manager is a subordinate? In other words, instead of being a resolute executive, as the Senator indicates, would it not be better to say that he is a ruthless executive, who demands complete obedience from his subordinates, and will brook no interference?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, when I said yesterday, in effect, that he may be a man who is restless at certain legislative restraints or legislative procedure, I was speaking, perhaps, forensically, or admitting forensically, for the sake of the argument, taking the assumption that he might be. I am not in a position to say that he is not. There are those who accuse him of being restless, and, as I have said, he may be; I do not know. I have not any evidence that he wishes to override legislative authority. If he does accentuate that feeling, if he is strongly of the opinion that he wants to disregard all legislative restraints upon a public body, I would say he probably would be ruthless, but I am not convinced that he is that kind of a man.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. I ask the Senator from Iowa if it is not a fact that all the witnesses who appeared and testified about Lilienthal—that is, all those who were asked about this specific point and this charge—united in their expression? I can refer the Senator from New Hampshire to the record, and I would ask him to read the testimony of Mr. Charles A. Thomas, the vice president of the Monsanto Chemical Co., in charge of the gas-diffusion project at Oak Ridge.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McMAHON. Just a moment, please. He was one of the collaborators and one of the writers and signers of the Acheson-Lilienthal report. I would ask the Senator from New Hampshire to read the testimony of Harry A. Winne, of Mr. Chester I. Barnard, and of Lilienthal's other associates. Every one of them made the point that he knew how to cooperate, that he listened carefully to the suggestions which were made by them, was quite willing to compromise and to adjust his viewpoint if he believed intellectually that that was the thing to do.

I must say to the Senator that the picture contained in the thousand or twelve hundred pages of testimony does not convey to me, or to any one else who will read the record, I believe, the kind of a picture the Senator is attempting to draw of this man. I think it is a figment of the Senator's own imagination, based upon the fact that Mr. Lilienthal has committed the terrible crime of making the TVA project a success.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Connecticut knows that is not true.

Mr. McMAHON. If I knew it was not true, I would not say it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Why did the Senator not mention Dr. Arthur Morgan? There is a man who knows Lilienthal better than the Senator from Connecticut does, or perhaps I know him better than the Senator does. So why quote the heads of great corporations who have projects that may come under Mr. Lilienthal, who do not dare to say anything else?

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President——

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield for an answer.

Mr. McMAHON. I propose to discuss Dr. Arthur E. Morgan at some length. I propose at the proper time in the debate to read the characterization of Dr. Arthur E. Morgan by the senior Senator from Tennessee. I read one of the characterizations of Dr. Morgan yesterday. I have three or four more, in which the Senator described Dr. Morgan back in 1935.

I listened to Dr. Morgan, as did the other members of the committee, for, I believe, 2 days. I think that all the members of the committee—well, shall I reserve one?—were of the opinion that the doctor completely and entirely failed to make out his case, as he did when previously a joint committee took 6,158 pages of testimony, wrote a report of 275 pages, and denominated every charge which was made by Dr. Morgan, every charge, incidentally, remade in this hearing, as entirely unsubstantiated and without merit.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. OVERTON. I should like to make a slight contribution to the statements which are now being made with reference to Mr. Lilienthal. I should like to quote from Mr. Bernard M. Baruch, testifying before the committee, who stated, speaking of Mr. Lilienthal, as appears on page 100:

> He is a man of prodigious energy, of driving force. I think sometimes that in his conception of his duty he drives exceedingly hard; and sometimes perhaps makes enemies or creates misunderstandings.

I thank the Senator.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. It is significant that the Senator stopped at just that point in the record. Mr. Baruch proceeded to say:

> He never had any with me, but I understand, that at some time or other, he has had some with my good friend, Senator McKELLAR—whom I have known for 31 years, and for whom my affection and admiration have grown each year in the time that I have known him, since the great days of Woodrow Wilson, when he was particularly active and up until now.
> Those differences I have never discussed with either one of them. I have had a closer and more affectionate relationship with Mr. McKELLAR than I have with Mr. Lilienthal. But Mr. Lilienthal is thoroughly qualified, a good manager—knows his subject.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Iowa yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. How does that detract from or add to the information I conveyed to the Senate, when Mr. Baruch stated, along the line the Senator from Iowa was discussing, that Mr. Lilienthal "is a man of prodigious energy and of driving force"? That is the point I wanted to bring out:

> I think sometimes that in his conception of his duty perhaps he drives exceedingly hard, sometimes perhaps makes enemies or creates misunderstandings.

There is no necessity for my proceeding to read the eulogy he pronounced on my good friend, the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. The Senator from Tennessee needs no eulogy from anyone on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I am trying to yield the floor, but I will yield to the Senator from Connecticut, if he wants to make a comment.

Mr. McMAHON. I think it is only fair to say that the Senator from Connecticut completed the reading, because he did not want the inference to be in the RECORD that Mr. Baruch had done anything else but completely and finally and totally endorse this nominee. "He is a man of driving force." What were the adjectives? "A man of prodigious energy." That he is a man of "prodigious energy" and of "driving force" makes him, to me, very much the man for the job. That is what we need.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield once more?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I want to ask the Senator from Connecticut whether Mr. Baruch said that Mr. Lilienthal was the best qualified man in the United States. Did he make that statement?

Mr. McMAHON. I do not know that he was asked that question.

Mr. BRIDGES. Did he make that statement?

Mr. McMAHON. No, as I remember, he did not make that statement. But Mr. Baruch is not the President of the United States; Mr. Truman is the President of the United States. He sent the nomination of this man to the Senate for our consent and advice as to whether we should confirm him.

Mr. BRIDGES. Does the Senator think that we should get the best man in the United States for such an important office as this?

Mr. McMAHON. I certainly do. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I believe after listening to the hearings and after giving the matter considerable thought and reflection, that is exactly what we have done. I stand on that.

Mr. BRIDGES. I merely want to say to the Senator from Connecticut, in that connection, that he and all others who agreed with him that Lilienthal is the best man in the United States will have my deepest sympathy in the years to come. I have nothing but sympathy for the Senator, because I believe he is certainly terribly misled.

Mr. McMAHON. I accept the Senator's expression of sympathy, and at the same time I congratulate the President and the people of the United States, and the Senate, which will have a chance to confirm the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. SMITH. For my own information, and for the RECORD, I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa a few questions. Is it true that on January 7, 1946, the then Secretary of State, Mr. Byrnes, appointed a committee on atomic energy, of which Mr. Dean Acheson, Under Secretary of State, was chairman, and on which committee were the following members:

Mr. Vannevar Bush, who has been head of the OSRD;

Mr. James B. Conant, who was president of Harvard University;

Maj. Gen. Leslie R. Groves, United States Army, who was in charge of the Manhattan project, as I understand it; and

Mr. John J. McCloy, who has recently been appointed President of the International Bank.

Is it also a fact, if I may ask the distinguished Senator from Iowa, that that committee set up a board of consultants, in order to make the study they had been asked to make by the Secretary of State, and on that board were the following gentlemen:

Mr. David E. Lilienthal, Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority;

Mr. Chester I. Barnard, president of the New Jersey Bell Telephone Co., who, I am glad to interject, is a warm personal friend of mine, one of my constituents, and he is also one of the leading businessmen in my State;

Dr. J. Robert Oppenheimer, of California Institute of Technology, and the University of California;

Dr. Charles Allen Thomas, vice president and technical director, Monsanto Chemical Co.; and

Mr. Harry A. Winne, vice president in charge of engineering policy, General Electric Co.

Is it not true that that group, working with the Acheson committee, prepared what was called the Acheson-Lilienthal report, which was released to the press, as I understand, on the 16th day of March 1946?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I am unable, without the book or the records, to verify the dates the Senator has mentioned, but with reference to the committee to which the Senator has referred, which was appointed, with the personnel he has stated, there was the main committee, the Secretary of State's committee, I believe, and the other committee, headed by Mr. Lilienthal, was a panel or group to do, I think, the detailed work in the preparation of a report.

Mr. SMITH. Is it a fact also, I will ask the Senator, that these gentlemen, other than Mr. Lilienthal, worked with Mr. Lilienthal during the period of time in which this report was made; and also, that they were in consultation with Mr. Baruch, at the time of the preparation of the material that Mr. Baruch used in preparing our case before the United Nations? Is it not also true that the gentlemen whose names I have read testified at the hearings conducted by the Senator's committee, and certified to the ability of Mr. Lilienthal to carry on this job?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, generally speaking, the Senator is correct. I think he has asked a three-barreled question.

Mr. SMITH. I merely recited for the RECORD this material from the report of the committee, which gave the names of both the original committee appointed by the Secretary of State and also the Board of Consultants.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The Secretary of State's committee was appointed, as the Senator has stated, and that committee in turn appointed a panel headed by Mr. Lilienthal to make a survey of the subject and help with the report. The panel, headed by Mr. Lilienthal, as I understand, made two or three reports to the main committee, headed by the Secretary of State, or the Secretary of State's committee, and after several meetings, and after canvassing the situation, a report was adopted for the international control of atomic energy, or a recommendation, called the Acheson-Lilienthal Report.

In our hearings Mr. Bernard, Mr. Thomas, and Mr. Winne testified for Mr. Lilienthal. Dr. Oppenheimer did not appear. Mr. Acheson, Under Secretary of State, Vannevar Bush, and Dr. Conant appeared. I cannot recall at the moment whether Mr. John J. McCloy appeared or not. I am informed that he did not. Does that answer the question?

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Replying to another part of the Senator's question, as to whether or not they were in consultation with Mr. Baruch, when he became our representative to the United Nations for the composition of the Atomic Energy International Control Plan, I think there was a consultation by Mr. Baruch and his assistants with this group, all of them, or some of them at least, and that some of the details of the so-called Acheson-Lilienthal Report were used as a basis for certain proposals on the international control of atomic energy. I think it was helpful in that way.

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Senator. I simply wanted to get the relationship of this work with which Mr. Lilienthal was connected to our program before the United Nations.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. It was interrelated.

Mr. SMITH. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The distinguished Senator from New Jersey did not ask the Senator whether or not he knew if Mr. Lilienthal requested any of these gentlemen to appear and to testify personally, did he?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. No; as a matter of fact, I do not know whether he requested them; but if I had been in Mr. Lilienthal's place, in one way or another, I might have tried to see whether they would testify in my behalf, or against me.

Mr. BRIDGES. Did the Senator from New Jersey also ask the Senator why, before they prepared this report and turned it over to Mr. Baruch, they left out one very fundamental thing—the safeguards to the United States of America on the disposal of the atomic bomb; why this commission, which endorsed Mr. Lilienthal, in preparing this report, forgot that very fundamental phase, which is of interest to some 140,000,000 people in this country.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I take a much different view of that report than the connotation raised by the Senator from New Hampshire. The so-called Acheson-Lilienthal report, as I read it—and I have read it a number of times, and I can take no other interpretation from it—only consisted of the broadest generalization of principles.

The Baruch report, which went further, specified in more meticulous detail the step-by-step proposals under which we would turn over the last secrets of atomic energy. The Acheson-Lilienthal report never intended and did not in fact give the details of the implementation of the plan. It consisted of broad generalities. That is the only interpretation I could make of it. I know there is some disagreement on that point, but I think that a reading of the plan fairly discloses that fact.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator answers my question, and the answer is "Yes," that they did forget to include any safeguards for the United States of America in the disposal of the atomic bomb.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In answer to my distinguished friend, the Senator from New Hampshire, to the question he now asks, I propounded to the Under Secretary of State during the hearings on Monday, February 10, as appears on page 287, the very same question the Senator raises. Mr. Acheson said this in reply:

That is correct.

In other words, that the veto had not been gone into.

Now, what I have said several times is that the Attorney General's committee—

Which was a misstatement. He meant the Secretary of State's committee—and the Board of Consultants undertook to limit what they were doing. In my judgment it is a wise court that limits its own jurisdiction. We undertook to deal with the basic physical problems; what had to be done if you are going to control it. We did not undertake to go into the questions of international law, international finance, the use of international armaments to repress aggression.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I think it would be well to place in the RECORD at this point the very eloquent statement which was made by the distinguished President pro tempore, the senior Senator from Michigan, and comment which he made, as follows:

Mr. Chairman, I think I would like to make a brief observation at this point, to help clear the record. I happened to have been with the Secretary of State "at the front and in the trenches" at the particular time this commission (the Board of Consultants) was launched. We had been rather glibly discussing international inspection and control, with the constant question in the back of our heads as to: Just how do you do it when you get around to it? And it is my opinion that the Commission to which you refer was created for the specific purpose, and the purpose only, of answering the physical question: "How do you do this thing if you get a chance to do it?"

It did not occur to me, I must say, that the absence of a discussion of the veto in your particular report—

Referring to the Lilienthal-Acheson report—was any reflection on the report. I quite agree with Senator KNOWLAND, as I know you do, that in the final showdown the veto becomes perhaps exhibit A in connection with the entire affair. But I think I would have to testify from my own association with the development of the enterprise that the problem presented you was purely an answer to the question: "Can you physically, factually, mechanically, actually control atomic energy?"

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator from Iowa yield for one more question, please?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Did Mr. Lilienthal ever explain to the chairman or his committee why he was reluctant or why he refused to allow the military to participate in the work of the Commission? This question has been raised here very definitely, and I say it is a very interesting coincidence. It is peculiarly significant that we laid down the broad basic principles on atomic energy, but we forgot one which I thought paramount to all, the safeguarding of our Nation and her 140,000,000 people in what is probably their most vital possession, the atomic bomb. I am just wondering if it is true, as the hearings indicate, that Mr. Lilienthal refused to have the military participate in the discussions of this committee after he took over, and, if so, if that is significant to the Senator?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, in the first place, the Senator assumes that Mr. Lilienthal has refused to let the military participate. That assumption is not correct. In the second place the protection of the atomic bomb is completely assured under the law. The law created a military liaison committee to be appointed by the Secretaries of War and Navy, six men. That committee has the right to be informed as to whatever goes on in the atomic energy field that has anything whatsoever to do with the military applications. That committee has the right if it feels that anything the Commission is doing or is not doing is inimical to the security of this country, to appeal to the Secretaries of War and Navy, who, if they think or if they agree that there is a serious question involved, can carry the matter to the President, who has the authority, and the duty, and the right, and the responsibility to order the Commission either to do or to refrain from doing that which is going on which is considered to be inimical to the safety of the United States. And in the Commission itself there is a department of military application which is devoted to the military application of atomic energy. I think the question of the security of our military application is safeguarded.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. Is it not true that Mr. Lilienthal testified that he had not from the time that the Commission took over the project conferred with General Groves, who had previously headed it, until the time the hearings began?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I would prefer, Mr. President, to quote that testimony accurately, and I cannot do it from memory. I will give the Senator my best judgment respecting what was said. On the first or second or third day of the hearing—perhaps a few days later, I do not recall—a question was asked Mr. Lilienthal as to whether or not he had consulted with General Groves. I think he said that he had seen him a time or two. I think a day or so later he came back with a list of specific dates upon which he had consulted General Groves and had talked with him about this matter. It was a much more extensive list, I will say, of dates and times, than I had been led to believe from his first statement. I cannot be more specific.

Mr. BRICKER. I think his first testimony was that he had not conferred with General Groves, and then a couple of days later he came back and said he had.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The Senator may have the exact pages of the record at which the testimony occurred. I do not have the time now to leaf through the hearings.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I was impressed by the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire that Mr. Lilienthal had shown a reluctance to consult with or utilize the military in connection with atomic energy. I do not know whether that is true or not. I know nothing about Mr. Lilienthal. But I recall quite well that millions of people in the United States were terribly afraid that atomic energy would fall into the exclusive control of the military, and that this great force would be used only for destruction and not for any constructive purpose. I remember that when the bill creating the Atomic Energy Commission was first presented on the floor of the Senate I and other Senators raised the question whether the measure should go to the Military Affairs Committee because many of us were reluctant to turn this vast force over to the military. As a result of the objections and of the fears that some of us entertained, a special committee was established, headed by the distinguished Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON]. I do not think it is a just criticism of Mr. Lilienthal to say that he hesitated to turn this force over to the military.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I have before me at least a portion of the record referred to by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] a moment ago, on the point as to whether or not there had been consultation between Mr. Lilienthal and General Groves.

Mr. MCKELLAR. What page?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Page 11 of the record of the hearings.

The first question was asked by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], as follows:

Senator VANDENBERG. Has your Commission ever consulted with General Groves since the Commission was organized?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes; that was one of the very first things we did, and all during this period we have had the benefit of a good many consultations with General Groves and some of his associates on a great variety of matters. And Colonel Nichols, his deputy, has been of invaluable service to the Commission, as well.

Senator VANDENBERG. You did consult with General Groves? Your answer was "yes"?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Yes. On many occasions; yes, sir. And on many subjects.

Senator KNOWLAND. Was that individually, or did the Commission call General Groves in?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. It was chiefly between the Commission and General Groves, although I perhaps did see the general at times in addition to that.

Senator JOHNSON. Was that since December 31 at midnight, or prior to December at midnight?

I interpolate that the Commission took over complete control of all phases of the Manhattan project at midnight on the 31st of December.

Mr. LILIENTHAL. Most of the consultations were prior to that. I am not sure whether there have been consultations with General Groves since the transfer or not.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Just a moment. I continue to read from the record.

Senator JOHNSON. You have not had any since December 31 at midnight with General Groves, have you?

Mr. LILIENTHAL. I don't recall that there have been any; I think perhaps not.

The testimony continues on the question of the military.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator from Iowa has, I think, very fairly revealed the record; and it proves the point that since David Lilienthal came into control at midnight on December 31, 1946, when the military relinquished control and he took over, he has not consulted General Groves. Of course, he probably consulted him while General Groves was in charge. That would be very natural. But since he assumed the supreme power, since he became our atomic dictator, he has not consulted General Groves. I thank the Senator from Iowa for his contribution to the cause, which clearly demonstrates that my point was correct.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that it is my recollection—although I cannot find it in the record at this time—that Mr. Lilienthal later brought in a memorandum of dates and times when he had in fact later consulted with General Groves, after the 31st of December.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. On that point I think an explanation of Mr. Lilienthal's position is appropriate. I quote from page 16 of the record, in his answer to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], a member of the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy:

Mr. LILIENTHAL. We had a great many before the take-over, and I may be in error about after that date. It is quite possible I am. But as problems arise in which we feel the need for General Groves' judgment—when we get to those problems, and his experience becomes relevant, then either he or his aides have been consulted. As an example, I might cite this change in operation, which I referred to hypothetically, which actually took place. There, Colonel Nichols, General Groves' deputy in charge of that sort of thing, was the man who presented the matter to the Commission; very ably, giving us the whole background. In that sort of situation, of course, General Groves and his aides' experience will be invaluable.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. There is nothing in that statement by Mr. Lilienthal to the effect that he had conferred with General Groves at any time after taking over control. If the Senator will read carefully, he will note that there is no positive statement to that effect. The statement by Mr. Lilienthal was in reply to a question by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], who said:

Well, it continues to seem strange to me. Here is the most valuable single source of information in this whole business; and from the time you took over, you have not had a single consultation with him.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. In reply to the point raised by the distinguished junior Senator from Ohio, in the first place, the testimony being given by Mr. Lilienthal before the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy was given on the 27th day of January. Mr. Lilienthal, the designated chairman of the Commission, had testified that there had been many consultations. The point at issue was whether there had been any consultations from midnight on the 31st of December until the 27th day of January, when he appeared before the committee The testimony shows—and I think there is no dispute about it—that he had testified to the effect that there had been many consultations prior to that time. The Commission had been busy getting itself established under the law, which it was required to do; and as matters came up affecting the military applications of this subject there had been consultations with Colonel Nichols, an able soldier, the righthand man of General Groves, and the man who was primarily responsible for the Manhattan project at the Oak Ridge plant.

Mr. BRICKER. But the fact stands out that before the Commission took over on the 31st of December, they were in touch with the organization of the military, which was then in control of the project; and during the time when they ought to have been organized, and after they got started and should have been in touch with the military organization, they were talking to subordinates and not to the man who was best informed.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. I should like to ask the Senator from Iowa whether General Groves was summoned to appear before the committee and testify on this point or any other point?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. He was not.

Mr. OVERTON. Why not?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. General Groves is a major general and a Regular Army officer. So far as I am concerned, the summoning of Regular Army or Navy personnel in a matter of this kind by the committee is an ineffectual medium of testimony, because I have the feeling that military personnel are bound to express only the administrative policy of the Government, and are not free to express their own opinions. I say that with no discredit to anyone. It follows from the nature of the service in the Regular Establishment. I will say to the Senator that if an officer or official of the Government volunteers to testify under circumstances when opinions and policies are involved, that is a different matter. In this case the committee did not feel that it was justified, by subpena or otherwise, in compelling the attendance of a member of the Regular Establishment in either the Army or Navy, unless the testimony arose naturally in connection with some specialized field. This was a matter of policy, a matter of Presidential discretion. General Groves was not summoned, and he did not volunteer to testify.

Mr. OVERTON. I take occasion to differ with the able Senator as to his duties as chairman of the committee. I think it is very proper to summon an officer of the Government, whether he be a civilian officer or a military officer. I have had occasion to summon them before committees of which I have been in charge and have them testify. I have requested them to be present, and they have come and have testified. They did not volunteer to testify, and at times they did not care to testify. But we are searching for the truth in these investigations. We want to know the facts. Certainly General Groves would have been in a position to testify exactly what contact, if any, Lilienthal had had with him. I think General Groves would have given a very accurate statement in that respect.

I attended the first session and one or two other sessions of the committee at the time when Lilienthal was under examination, and the impression created on my mind was that in his early testimony, in response to questions by the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND], the Senator from Colorado [Mr. MILLIKIN], and the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON], Mr. Lilienthal indicated that he was not desirous of having any contact with the military liaison at the meetings of the Atomic Energy Commission; and it was only after it was evident that the Senator from California and the Senators from Colorado did not agree with him that, later on in his testimony, he changed his attitude in that regard and stated something to the effect that he would welcome such conferences. But in the beginning he stated very clearly, I think, to the contrary.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The Senator will have to make his own interpretation of the evidence. The testimony on one day and the testimony on the second day, at least in my mind, made it clear that there was a willingness on the part of the Commission and on the part of Mr. Lilienthal to meet with and work with the military.

Mr. OVERTON. If the Senator will pardon me, and he is always courteous in yielding to others, let me say that the testimony to which I have reference is found on pages 13, 14, and 15 of the hearings. I do not care to take up the time of the Senate in reading it, especially in the Senator's own time. But there is the testimony in which Lilienthal clearly indicated, and I heard him say so, that he did not want any interference from the military and that they would not be present at the meetings of the Commission.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. I want to make a very brief observation. As I recollect, after the first of the year, immediately after the Commission took over, General Groves went to Florida for a very well-earned rest, and until about 10 days ago, I think he was at the old Miami-Biltmore Hotel, which had been turned into a Government hospital. He has now returned and is on the military liaison committee. General Brereton has been appointed the head of that committee. There has been no complaint of any kind whatever from the military about noncooperation; in fact, the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy have given their approval to these nominations.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. When the Senator from Connecticut says there has been no complaint from the military, that is a broad statement; is it not? Members of the military have complained to me. I shall not elaborate on what they have said or mention their names at this time. But when the Senator from Connecticut says that no one in the military has complained about this matter, that is a broad statement. The Senator certainly has not consulted the military list extensively. He knows only that one has complained to him, does he not? He can speak only for himself.

Mr. McMAHON. I think that if the Senator has any observations to make regarding any specific complaints made by any responsible member of the military it is a proper subject to place in the RECORD at this point.

Mr. BRIDGES. The military men I have talked with are opposed to Mr. Lilienthal. Of course, the President has nominated Mr. Lilienthal, and the fact that the President is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy could mean their careers would be prejudiced by taking a public position in opposition to the President. Therefore, I do not blame them for being silent. But if the Senator will talk with some of the military or naval men with whom I know the Senator is acquainted, because I have seen him from time to time hobnobbing with some of them, and if he will lend his ear, I am sure they will give him information about Mr. Lilienthal which could, if the Senator's mind is open, cause him to change his mind.

Mr. McMAHON. All I can say is that during whatever hobnobbing I have done with them they have never let out a peep.

Mr. BRIDGES. Perhaps they thought the Senator was too far committed, and they did not want to waste their time and energy in that respect.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire or any other Senator why these military officers who were so brave on the field of battle are now such cowards that they cannot open their mouths to a Senator.

Mr. BRIDGES. Let me say to the Senator from Kentucky, that he knows how long a Navy or Army officer would last if he publicly took a position against the President of the United States.

Mr. BARKLEY No; I do not know how long he would last, but I think it is due the Senate and the country, when Senators are constantly referring to some secret, private conversation, some whispering into the ear of a Senator by a high ranking military officer, to let it be known who the officer is and what is behind it all.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I think the Senator from Kentucky might well recall the very distinguished case in which a very high-ranking officer of our Navy did take issue with the President of the United States, and consequently was demoted from the very exalted position he held. That was the case of Admiral Richardson, a case which was fully explored in the Pearl Harbor investigation, and concerning which there was no doubt that Admiral

Richardson was removed from his position of power and prestige because he dared to put his considered military and naval judgment against that of the President.

So I think we have very definite evidence of what happens, or certainly of what happened under a previous administration.

Mr. BARKLEY. That was not a case were Admiral Richardson or any other naval officer whispered into the ear of a Senator his private views in regard to something which was a matter of disagreement, between the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy and the high-ranking officer, over naval policy as to which the Commander in Chief had the responsibility of making the decision. Admiral Richardson told the President very frankly that if there was a disagreement between them in regard to the policy at Pearl Harbor, the President should appoint someone who was in sympathy with his own views.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is not my recollection of Admiral Richardson's statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator will recall that Admiral Richardson specifically stated before the Pearl Harbor Committee that his transfer from the command at Pearl Harbor to a position in the Navy Department in Washington, D. C., was within the rights of the President. He made no complaint against it; and he took the position that the President, in the exercise of his own judgment and discretion, was not to be criticized for it.

Mr. BREWSTER. That is quite correct; but it is quite different from the Senator's earlier statement.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator can make any point out of it that he wishes to make.

Mr. BREWSTER. It is quite true that Admiral Richardson made exactly the statement which the Senator has now given, and it certainly reflected great credit on his concept of obedience.

But here we have an exactly parallel case in which the President of the United States has the responsibility of naming these officials, and he has exercised it. It might well be presumptuous for Army officers who may be familiar with this matter to express their private opinions—certainly in the light of the existing executive prohibition forbidding any Army or Navy officer to say anything inconsistent with the policies of the President. That is covered by a written Executive order which is now in effect, and certainly it suffices to explain the difficulty to which the Senator from New Hampshire has referred.

Mr. BARKLEY. All this is probably beside the point, but I think that if we are to give credence to confidential, secret conversations held by Army or Navy officers with Senators, the Senate ought to have the advantage of their names and the circumstances under which they complained, if they have complained, so that we might pass judgment upon it and weigh the testimony, if it is testimony, according to its own merits.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have confidence that if an officer whom the Senator from Kentucky liked and respected, say, a colonel or a general in the Army, should come to the Senator from Kentucky and say, "ALBEN——

Mr. BARKLEY. Will the Senator make it "Dear ALBEN"? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes—"Dear ALBEN, I have lived my life in Kentucky. I am an old neighbor of yours, and I feel that I could tell you something that you should know"—I think the Senator, no matter what his position was on the floor, would not betray the confidence of that old friend. I have too much faith in the Senator from Kentucky to think that he would. I really think he would respect and honor that confidence.

Mr. BARKLEY. I thank the Senator for the compliment, and I hope I deserve it. But if some such person were to come to me and tell me that he had information in regard to a Presidential appointment which a congressional committee should know or which the Senate should know or the country should know, I feel that I would urge him to make the information available to the committee; and if he declined to do so, I might, of course, inquire—and I would have a right to do so—as to his motive in coming to me, no matter how friendly he might be in urging the rejection, for instance, of a nomination made by the President. I think, in fairness and truth, I would feel disposed to ask him why he was coming to me personally and confidentially, and why he was unwilling to make the information available to the committee, if it was worthy of consideration by the committee.

There come times, I think, in the life of a military or naval officer, just as they come to Members of the Senate, when the interest of the country is more valuable than confidential information.

Mr. BRIDGES. I agree.

Mr. BARKLEY. And where men have to take the chance of losing something which they regard as a temporal advantage, if they can serve their country by so doing.

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes; I agree. But if that old friend who had come to the Senator from Kentucky and had called him "Dear ALBEN," as the Senator desires, and had approached the Senator from Kentucky in that way, had also said "I tell you that it will mean my career—my career probably will be shattered; and I will be on my way to Timbuktu, or somewhere in the Pacific; but I am telling you this because I believe that in your great power as minority leader of the Senate you can utilize this information for the best interests of our country," I have every confidence that the Senator from Kentucky then would say, "Of course."

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I tell the Senator that I would not reveal a confidential conversation; but I would not let it outsway testimony or facts brought publicly to a committee as to the qualifications bearing on a nomination.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. I wish to say that so far as I can remember, not one Army officer, not one naval officer, not one air officer, not one Marine Corps officer, came before the committee. Am I mistaken about that, or is my statement correct?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. It is correct.

Mr. McKELLAR. I felt sure it was correct. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, in answer to the query of the Senator from Kentucky, who asked me why men who have been so brave on the field of battle fear to come before the committee, I might suggest that on the battlefield they have some fighting chance for their lives, and they are brave men because they have that fighting chance; but I am afraid that if they were thus to risk their political careers, they would have no chance whatever for their political lives.

Mr. BARKLEY. I agree with that. But is a committee or is the Senate to be swayed by reason of a prejudice against a nomination with which they had nothing to do, simply because that person did not take that chance and appear before the committee either for or against the nominee?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I say to the Senator that in my argument I have not alleged that any Army or Navy officers have whispered anything to me.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand that.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. So I am out of this argument. It is academic so far as I am concerned.

Mr. President, I merely wish to make one other statement; namely, there are a number of incidental matters which I think undoubtedly will come up during the debate. They are incidental in connection with the hearings, because in my judgment those matters go to administrative detail, not to the fundamental question of confirmation of the nomination. Therefore, I shall not take the time of the Senate to discuss matters which I believe go to administrative detail. As to some of them I disagree; but none of them go to the fundamentals of the question of confirmation of the nomination.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am sorry that I have not had an opportunity to hear all the Senator's discussion of this important subject since he has had the floor. However, judging from the newspaper reports, I am certain that the question of communism will be raised during this debate.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. It was raised yesterday.

Mr. ELLENDER. I am sure the distinguished Senator from Iowa is about the best-qualified member of the committee to answer the question I am about to ask; namely, Is it a fact that all members of the committee which reported the nomination concluded that Mr. Lilienthal was not a Communist and was not sympathetic to communism?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I can only answer that question by saying—and I should like to have each member of the committee make his own statement on this matter if he believes my statement to be incorrect—that it is my opinion that each member of the committee came substantially and soundly to that conclusion.

Mr. ELLENDER. That was my understanding.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I now yield the floor.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of Cecil Wayne Gray, of Tennessee, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and a secretary in the diplomatic service, to be also a consul general.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

MEMBERSHIP OF NATIONAL ARCHIVES TRUST FUND BOARD

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair wishes to make the following statement: The act of July 9, 1941, establishing the National Archives Trust Fund Board, provides that the Board shall be composed of the Archivist of the United States, as chairman, the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, and the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library. In view of the reorganization of the committee system of Congress and the disappearance of the House and Senate Committees on the Library, the Archivist, Mr. Solon J. Buck, states that he is at a loss to know who the other members of the Board now are. He asks for instructions and authority from the Senate.

In the opinion of the President pro tempore, in view of the fact that the Committee on Civil Service has taken over the functions of the Committee on the Library, insofar as they relate to the National Archives, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] is the duly qualified member of the National Archives Trust Fund Board; and, without objection, this announcement will stand as being made with authority.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR CONTROLS

Mr. FERGUSON obtained the floor.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate Joint Resolution 58, relating to the extension of sugar controls.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution (S. J. Res. 58) to extend the powers and authorities under certain statutes with respect to the distribution and pricing of sugar, and for other purposes, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr President, will the Senator from Michigan yield to me?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield to the Senator from California for a question.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I wish to address a question to the majority leader. My question is this: In view of the fact that we have before us these very important nominations to the Atomic Energy Commission, and in view of the further fact that, as was pointed out the other day, the United States probably has lost about 18 months in the development of nuclear power, and also in view of the other important legislative matters requiring early action by us—including the one which now is the unfinished business, following adoption of the motion by the Senator from New Hampshire—is it not necessary that we recognize the importance of such matters and the deadline of March 31 which we face, and is it not, therefore, possible to have evening sessions, so that we may be able to take care of these urgent matters and at the same time not unnecessarily delay confirmation or rejection of the nominations of members of the Atomic Energy Commission?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, of course if it is the desire of the Senate we can hold evening sessions, I shall take the matter up with the members of the policy committee to determine whether at this time we should again undertake to hold evening sessions. Our two experiences up to date have not been particularly helpful. But if Senators want evening sessions they can readily be provided, and I shall discuss the matter with the policy committee.

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. BREWSTER. I do not think the statement should constantly be repeated, unchallenged, that we have lost 18 months in nuclear power. I understand that, according to many Members of the Senate, we now have a very competent man directing this field. While he may feel the sword of Damocles suspended over his head, I presume he is proceeding under the responsibility and power that are clearly his. During the preceding period, when the President failed to make the appointments to the Commission, I assume the President felt it was in the competent hands of the military and of General Groves. I am at a loss to understand why we hear constantly reiterated the statement of 18 months being lost.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I merely wish to say to the Senator from California that the urgency of the sugar situation must be apparent to him as it is to all of us. Controls on sugar will expire next Monday. The Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, after weeks of deliberation, reported Senate Joint Resolution 58, and submitted a written report, and unless we act on the joint resolution by tomorrow, it will be too late, because it must go to conference after we get through with it. I realize the urgency of the situation regarding Mr. Lilienthal.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I do not think that in my statement I disputed the urgency of action on the measure taken up on motion of the Senator from New Hampshire; in fact, I acknowledged it. I merely pointed out that, due to the fact that there are two urgent matters before the Senate, it seems to me the Senate could well meet in evening sessions and expedite the business of the Senate.

Mr. TOBEY. I am glad the Senator corrected me. In the confusion I did not catch his point.

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may be absent from the sessions of the Senate tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the leave is granted.

Mr. WHITE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] be excused from attendance on the sessions of the Senate tomorrow and until Thursday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, leave is granted.

MEETING OF COMMITTEES ON BANKING AND CURRENCY AND FOREIGN RELATIONS

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency may sit while the Senate is in session on Wednesday and Thursday of this week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

And, without objection, the Committee on Foreign Relations is given authority to sit tomorrow afternoon.

RECESS

Mr. WHITE. Will the Senator from Michigan yield?

Mr. FERGUSON. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan has the floor. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, March 26, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate March 25 (legislative day of March 24), 1947:

DIPLOMATIC AND FOREIGN SERVICE

Cecil Wayne Gray, of Tennessee, now a Foreign Service officer of class 1 and a secretary in the diplomatic service, to be also a consul general of the United States of America.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 1947

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In this sacred stillness, Heavenly Father, we would lift our eyes unto Thee. Thou hast set Thy glory above the heavens, and all Thy works shall praise Thy name in earth and sky and sea. We beseech Thee to pour into our lives a high and holy meaning, renewing and refreshing them. We praise Thee for the assurance that Thy mercy strengthens, Thy heart forgives, and Thy wisdom guides us aright. Even in the dark hours when reason and experience fail, we pray for Thy comforting signals. Send forth Thy light, which strikes a crimson pathway through the ages, and bless us with that spirit of brotherhood which breathes from the Saviour of men. In the name of our Lord and Master. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

S. J. Res. 86. Joint resolution to authorize Herschel V. Johnson, Deputy Representative of the United States to the Security Council of the United Nations, to be reappointed to the Foreign Service.

REDUCING INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX PAYMENTS

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 161, Rept. No. 181), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income tax payments, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 6 hours to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendments shall be in order to the said bill except the substitute amendment recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means now in the bill and such amendment shall be in order any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding but shall not be subject to any amendment except such amendments as may be offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means. At the conclusion of such consideration the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SMITH of Ohio asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the Wall Street Journal.

COMMUNIST PARTY VIOLATES CORRUPT PRACTICES ACT

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Nevada?

There was no objection.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, last December the Committee To Investigate the Conduct of Elections, pursuant to the authority of this House, laid before Attorney General Tom Clark the facts in connection with the failure of the Communist Party to file a report under the Corrupt Practices Act.

The Communist Party actively engaged in the election of Representatives and Senators in several States in the 1946 election. The Republican Party and the Democratc Party are compelled to file reports of their receipts and expenditures under the law. Why should not the Communist Party also comply with the law?

Our committee went into this and made a full report of the facts to the Attorney General so that he might bring prosecution.

As a humble citizen, I am tired of the political outward anti-Communist drive of the administration while, at the same time, it fosters and protects Communists who violate the law. The Attorney General should proceed forthwith with this prosecution.

A TAXI DRIVER'S VIEW ON COMMUNISM

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, last night when I left the House Office Building I grabbed the first taxicab available, and I asked the taxi driver what he thought of President Truman's plan to combat communism in Greece, Turkey, and other places, and he said, "I think he better start combating it right here, and the conditions which give rise to communism. I am living with my wife and two daughters in a house with only one bedroom, because we cannot get any other place. We ought to take care of Americans first. I do not think," he said, "that these people will ever pay the money back; they will not think any more of us for having given it to them, and they are not going to take care of me and my family when we are in trouble. It might be well," this taxi driver said, "to let them have communism to get their fill of it, see how bad it is, and then maybe they will not like it or keep it."

Mr. Speaker, I give you these not as my own opinions but the answers as I get them.

THE CONSUMER IS THE MOST IMPORTANT FACTOR IN ANY FOOD PROBLEM

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, in the last session of Congress the House passed what promised to be a very important bill. It was the Hope bill dealing with food, the manufacture, preparation, and scientific development of food from various angles. It was so popular that the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. FLANNAGAN], chairman of the Committee on Agriculture, stated that that legislation was the most important legislation passed in the history of the country as far as agriculture was concerned. However, the Department of Agriculture is refusing to put that law into effect.

I have been granted permission to address the House this afternoon on this subject, but in view of the fact that it will be very late before I can be recognized for that purpose, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that instead of taking that time I may be permitted to extend my remarks at that point in the RECORD, and in my extension I shall deal at length with the subject to which I have just referred.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. REED of New York asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article.

Mr. REEVES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement and certain excerpts.

Mr. RICH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the Saturday Evening Post of March 1 entitled "The Russians Made It Hard To Aid Them."

Mr. DEANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. ROONEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article by Dorothy Thompson, and further to extend his remarks and include a resolution and memorandum with regard to naval shipyards.

Mr. FORAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. CELLER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by Pandit Nehru on Indian aims.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a statement by W. Craven-Ellis, former Member of the British Parliament, on the subject The Truth About British Housing Construction. I am informed by the Public Printer that this will exceed two pages of the RECORD and will cost $165.67, but I ask that it be printed notwithstanding that fact.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

ACQUISITION FROM BRITAIN OF A 99-YEAR LEASE OF THE ISLAND OF CYPRUS

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, the Navy has announced that a task force to be led by the 27,000-ton aircraft carrier Leyte, will soon visit the Dardanelles Strait in Turkey. This aircraft carrier will proceed to the Mediterranean to join with the cruisers Dayton and Providence, and the destroyers Bristol, H. R. Dickson, and Purdy, presently in the Malta area; the cruiser Portsmouth and destroyer Compton now at Trieste; the destroyer Calnard at Pola, now on the Istrian Peninsula below Trieste; and the destroyer Hyman at Naples. These warships will undoubtedly call at Piraeus, Greece, which is the port of Athens, and will visit the Suda Bay in Crete, as well as Gibraltar, Naples, Istanbul, and Alexandria.

The United States has no naval base in the Mediterranean area. It has no facilities of its own for the berthing, refueling, repairing, and dry docking of its vessels. In addition, it obtains vast supplies of fuel from the Palestinan and Saudi Arabian areas in the eastern Mediterranean Basin.

The new "Truman doctrine" will undoubtedly require from now on, the presence of our naval forces in the Mediterranean. The acquisition of a 99-year lease from Great Britain of the Island of Cyprus, would greatly bolster this new "Truman doctrine."

We cannot rely in times of peril and emergency, upon the services for our ships, to be obtained at Malta, Gibraltar, Italian Naples, French Marseilles, Spanish Tangiers, or any of the ports of the Moslem areas of Tunisia, Algeria, or Morocco. From now on we are on our own. We need a naval base to implement the interest we are now taking in the Middle East.

Great Britain, I am quite certain, would willingly grant this base. She has everything to gain thereby, and nothing to lose. The maintenance of this base would be one of the greatest factors in the maintenance of the peace in the Middle East.

THOMAS LYNCH

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, on May 21, 1946, in the Seventy-ninth Congress, I introduced the bill (H. R. 6512) for the relief of the legal guardian of Thomas Lynch, a minor. This is a private tort claim against the Government. The bill died in the Claims Committee of the Seventy-ninth Congress. Certain files which are now in the House file room and the property of the claimant are necessary to enable the claimant to prosecute this claim in the district court. I ask unanimous consent that these papers and files may be removed from the House file room so that they may be turned over to me for return to the claimant.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

COMMUNISTS

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, in the Sunday papers we saw big headlines stating "Truman orders check of all Federal workers to determine loyalty." We have been working on that ever since we established the Dies committee years ago. The people of this country, and especially the President, knew what the Dies committee and the Committee on Un-American Activities have been telling him and the country about communism in this country. They only wake up to this fact when they want to do something to try to drive communism out of countries way over in Europe. That is all right, but we want to get communism out of this country first. Clean our own house before you start on another. I am glad he issued this order, but I do not want this order now to be construed by the public all over the land as meaning that it is time for us to spend billions and billions and billions of the dollars of the American taxpayers trying to drive communism out of other countries, until we first drive it away from our own shores.

Oh, this propaganda to bring the issues is so apparent. But we must be so very careful in what course we take in obligating our country to do what the United Nations should do and do now.

We must not take on the responsibility of being godfather to Greece, to Turkey, and to dozens of other nations. Involving us in war, involving us to look after these countries of Europe, Asia and Africa. We are not now responsible to help Great Britain in pulling her chestnuts out of the fire. We have done that long enough. Time to stop before we wreck ourselves. I am for America first, last, and all the time.

LEGISLATIVE LARCENY

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Louisiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday my good friend, my distinguished colleague from Nebraska, Dr. MILLER, made a feeble attempt to explain away his participation in what has become public property, of a piece of legislative larceny committed during last week. At the time I was not on the floor and I was not given an opportunity to read his remarks until this morning. Therefore, I am taking this opportunity to suggest that those who are interested in keeping the record straight and in keeping the Congress intellectually honest read the extension of my remarks in reference to what he had to say.

I am seriously considering writing a book about the whole business which I shall entitle "Ali Baba and the Forty Republicans—More or Less."

I assure you it will be interesting reading when the facts are all brought out in the open.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. TRIMBLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a report.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include some editorial comments.

LET US NOT GIVE AWAY OUR WEAPON SECRETS TO THE NAZIS

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, it comes as a shock to most Americans to learn that our War and Navy Departments have actually imported Nazi scientists to work on the development of secret weapons. Anyone familiar with the Nazi mentality should know that they consider a war that is lost, merely a battle that is lost, and they immediately lay plans to correct their mistakes so that they will win the next, and final one.

Nazi scientists are entirely unscrupulous. While we have brought them here to assist us, we must not lose sight of the fact that they will help themselves to our military secrets which they may turn against us some day. And with their cynicism, you may depend upon them to get the best of the exchange.

On the one hand we are striving with might and main to perfect a plan for international control of the atom bomb, while, on the other hand, we invite Nazi scientists who were recently working to destroy us to share in our ordnance secrets. This is an impossible situation.

In the interests of genuine security, I propose that we prohibit the use by the United States of Nazi scientists and other Nazi experts.

Under the bill which I offer, all those now working for our Government shall be discharged and no agency of the executive branch shall be permitted to bring any more to this country for the performance of any task which permits them to gain access to information of such a secret character that it is being withheld from the American people.

This would apply only to those aliens who were at any time members of the German National Socialist Party, or who were employed at any time between March 23, 1933, and May 9, 1945, by the German Government.

Hard-headed realism, won at such a fearful price, should warn us to be on our guard. Once a Nazi, always a Nazi. Do not let them get near any of our military or naval secrets lest we be called upon again to pay dearly for our awakening.

Or perhaps wake up too late.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. PASSMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

Mr. DURHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. MUNDT] may extend his remarks in the RECORD and include the script of a broadcast given last night over the Columbia Broadcasting System on the subject Should Special Restraints Be Placed Upon the Communist Party?

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

ADMITTING FERRY CROSLINE TO AMERICAN REGISTRY

Mr. LATHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (H. R. 1344) to admit the American-owned ferry Crosline to American registry and to permit its use in coastwise trade.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. JACKSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill was reported out unanimously by the committee. The reason it is being brought up at this time is that the present war powers which would make it possible to extend the operation of this vessel will expire on March 31 and thereby the ferry service in that particular area will be interrupted.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, nothwithstanding the provisions of section 27 of the Merchant Marine Act, 1920, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 46, sec. 883), the ferry Crosline, owned by the State of Washington, shall be admitted to American registry, and shall be entitled to engage in the coastwise trade and to transport passengers and merchandise between points in the United States, including districts, Territories, and possessions thereof embraced within the coastwise laws.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SELECTIVE SERVICE RECORDS

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, agreeable to the majority and minority leadership, I am instructed by unanimous vote of the Committee on Armed Services to ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill S. 918, an act to establish an Office of Selective Service Records to liquidate the Selective Service System following the termination of its functions on March 31, 1947, and to preserve and service the selective-service records, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask a question about the personnel now employed in the Selective Service. What will it do with the personnel now being employed under the Selective Service Act?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The great majority of the personnel will be dismissed.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will that keep intact the personnel and overloaded staffs that are now in every State capital handling the selective-service records?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. No; it will not.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Will it reduce them?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. It will greatly reduce them.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. By how much.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I cannot tell you exactly.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I would like to know; otherwise, I am going to have to object because this is an important bill.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. There is a time limit on this bill, and this bill must go through today.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The gentleman should not bring such an important bill up without having the bill or report before us. I insist on seeing the bill and the report.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold his objection for just a moment, I will explain the report to him. This establishes an office of selective-service records and transfers to this office all of the property records, personnel, and unexpended balances of the appropriations of the Selective Service System.

The continuance of the confidential nature of selective-service records with a provision for penalties for violations of these confidences.

I may say that these records go back to the States and then to the county agents and are left there. Many of the States have set up a system of bonus for the men who served overseas. Unless this is done, there is no authentic way in which the matter can be carried on after next Monday.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Did not the President of the United States request that they be sent to the central office in the State capitals?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. He did; but the Senate, wisely, I think, adopted a further amendment to put them down in the counties and leave them there, where they would be available for the communities.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Can the gentleman give us any information as to how much the present personnel may be reduced in the handling of these selective-service records?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The expenses for operating the present local board organization to June 30, 1947, is estimated at $4,500,000. The cost of liquidating the Selective Service System is estimated at $11,150,000, and the cost of establishing and maintaining the Federal-record depots in States from July 1, 1947, to June 30, 1948, is estimated at $4,500,000. Thus it will be seen that if the Federal-record depots in States were established at once, $4,500,000 of this expense would be eliminated; but there would be $5,000,000 of office equipment and an unestimated amount of leases that would be lost by the immediate liquidation of local offices.

Most of the office equipment and material of that is, under this act, transferred to the National Guard Associations of the several States and the Reserve Officer Associations at their request.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. How long do the records stay in the position they are under the proposed resolution?

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. It runs until July 1, 1948.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I have been one of those who have felt that the selective service, since the war is over, should be folded up. The President suggested that these records be sent to the State capitals, and I am under the impression that is where they belong. It seems to me that this bill will continue selective service, with their large personnel, until 1948.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. It will not. I might add further that there are 44,000,000 records included in this provision. They are of much value to the several governmental and State agencies who have a legal right to this information. State-bonus acts are in operation in some States and contemplated in others. As a result, there have been over 1,000,000 inquiries from veterans and governmental agencies, outside of the selective-service inquiries, during the last 6 months. These will undoubtedly continue at a heavy rate for some months to come. For convenience and speed in handling these inquiries, it has been deemed advisable to maintain these records at the presently organized local selective-service offices until the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1947.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am going to object to the consideration of this bill until we have more information on it.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard.

DOMESTIC RUBBER-PRODUCING INDUSTRY

Mr. SHAFER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk House Joint Resolution 118, a joint resolution to strengthen the common defense by maintaining an adequate domestic rubber-producing industry, with Senate amendments, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the House joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

There shall not be declared as surplus nor shall War Assets Administration dispose of any synthetic-rubber plant and facilities costing the Government in excess of $5,000,000, until the effective date of permanent legislation enacted to accomplish the policy set forth in section 1 (b) hereof: Provided, That there shall be exempt from such disposal limitations the neoprene plant, styrene plants, the petroleum-butadiene plant located at Toledo, Ohio, not to exceed two alcohol butadiene plants, and butadiene-styrene-type copolymer plants to the extent that the aggregate actual capacity of such copolymer plants remaining in Government ownership shall not be less than 600,000 long tons per year. It is hereby directed that the aforesaid powers, functions, duties, and authority of the United States to so manufacture and sell synthetic rubber shall be exercised and performed by Reconstruction Finance Corporation while that Corporation has succession and thereafter by such officer, agency, or instrumentality of the United States as the President may designate: Provided further, That nothing herein shall be construed as precluding any other agency of Government from engaging in research authorized by law."

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, I wish the gentleman from Michigan would explain the amendments to the House and tell us whether they make any material change in the bill as passed by the House.

Mr. SHAFER. In answer to the gentleman from North Carolina I might say that the Senate made very few material changes in the bill. They made such changes as inserting the word "natural" in place of the word "crude" when speaking of rubber.

The one change that probably should be explained is that beginning on line 16, section (b), an amendment suggested by the RFC better to control the synthetic-rubber industry. I think it is a good amendment. No doubt we would have adopted it in our committee had we received the amendment in time.

Mr. DURHAM. There is no material change in the bill as it passed the House.

Mr. SHAFER. That is right.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Senate amendments were agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes today, following any other special orders heretofore entered for the day.

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a letter from Ernest T. Weir on the Greek deal.

Mr. SHAFER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

Mr. VAN ZANDT asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in regard to House Resolution 38, which he introduced today.

Mr. McGREGOR asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include certain tables.

Mr. JOHNSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD.

HOUR OF MEETING TOMORROW

There was no objection.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR-FEDERAL SECURITY APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 2700) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes; and pending that I ask unanimous consent that general debate be limited to 1½ hours, the time to be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from New York and myself.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 2700, the Labor-Federal Security appropriation bill, 1948, with Mr. HOPE in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] yield time now in view of the fact that our side closed the matter yesterday.

Mr. ROONEY. Yes. I think we shall not have any difficulty with regard to it. We will see that the gentleman has the opportunity to close the debate.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. HAVENNER].

Mr. HAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, the dissolution of an entire service to labor and industry is a matter for grave consideration. Therefore, I would like to analyze the result of action by the House Committee on Appropriations which voted to dissolve the Division of Labor Standards in the Department of Labor and decided to transfer a few of its functions to other agencies.

The Division of Labor Standards is a highly specialized agency and the smallest agency in the Labor Department. It is therefore vulnerable to attack. But size is no indication of worth.

The Division of Labor Standards was established within the Labor Department to represent all of the people in the effort to standardize labor legislation and practices. All of our 48 States have autonomy in such fields as workmen's compensation, industrial safety and health and a good many other fields affecting the relationship between management and labor. Is it not the responsibility of the Federal Government to be at least aware of the legislative action of its 48 parts? I believe it is. No single State will assemble material on what all the others are doing in the field of labor legislation. No other agency in the Labor Department is concerned with assembling State labor legislation.

This is a proper function for the Federal Government—to have a Division of Labor Standards in which information on labor-management legislation is accumulated and which works to encourage the States to raise their standards.

This year 44 State legislatures will be in session. Every 2 weeks the Division of Labor Standards assembles digests of State labor bills. This is not a statistical job; it is a frank effort on the part of the National Government to encourage the passage of better labor laws.

That is the function of the Division of Labor Standards—a clearinghouse for information and promotion of higher standards.

For example, there is much to be done to reduce industrial-accident rates. This is a job being performed by the Division of Labor Standards. But it will not be done if the Appropriations Committee report is approved.

Last year about 16,000 men and women were killed in industrial accidents. Last year about 2,000,000 workers were injured on the job. Has the Federal Government no responsibility to reduce the cost of these deaths and accidents? The cost to American wage earners of industrial accidents last year was $1,500,000,000. The cost to industry was $1,800,000,000. Experts say 90 percent of this gigantic waste was preventable.

Can the people in California be responsible for industrial deaths in New Jersey? Can the States themselves reduce this frightful accident record? Whether they can or not, the facts prove that they have not reduced accidents as much as they should be reduced. The States need help, and the Division of Labor Standards has been providing them with help. Through the services of its Federal safety engineers, working in cooperation with the States, the accident rate in the last 3 years—years of the most intense industrial activity in our history—has come down. But 70 percent of the accidents occur in plants which have not yet been approached by safety experts.

It is obvious that the States need help. The very fact that there are only 500 safety inspectors in the States for 40,000,000 workers in industry is proof of that. The fact that the States have indicated their desire for the maintenance of this Federal-State cooperation is further proof.

Because the Bureau of Labor Statistics is an agency which studies objectively the results of labor-management relationship, it cannot be expected to alter the results. That is the job of the Division of Labor Standards and the service should be maintained.

Just as no other agency in the Labor Department is equipped for this Federal-State cooperative effort in the field of safety and health and in the field of workmen's-compensation and child-labor laws, so no other agency can rightfully assume the labor-education job of the Division of Labor Standards.

The House Appropriations Committee has admitted that the workers of this country should be educated for union responsibility. It has admitted that the Federal Government should help public and private agencies to educate the workers in such things as collective bargaining and labor legislation.

The committee admitted this by recommending $63,000 for the continuation of the labor-education program of the Division of Labor Standards—but by transferring that service to the Bureau of Labor Statistics.

This shows a fundamental misconception of the functions of the Bureau of Labor Statistics. That Bureau gathers information and adds up the figures and announces the result—without consideration for the effect of those totals. If the cost of living rises, it says so. But by no stretch of the imagination does it attempt to educate labor or industry on laws or practices. It is a research agency.

But the field of labor education is entirely different than that. The universities throughout the country which are only just now starting classes for the study of industrial-relations problems are not interested in just figures. They want basic texts in collective bargaining. They want the advice of experts in this relatively new field of labor education. In short, they want to raise the level of practices in this field. That is what the Division of Labor Standards was created to do, that is what it has been doing, and that is what it should continue to do.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS].

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Chairman, in 1943 and again in 1945 and again in 1947, I introduced a bill for the prevention or purge of subversives in our Government employ. It is now H. R. 1103. The enactment of such a bill is the way in which employment only of the loyal may be assured. Such legislation is within the constitutional power of Congress.

The token payment on our debt to decency proposed in the pending bill, H. R. 2700, is unconstitutional at least in that it would invade the province of the Executive, and even if it were constitutional, it would be a piecemeal, haphazard, inadequate procedure. The Humphreys case, the Meyers case, and other cases decided by the Supreme Court of the United States have condemned that kind of practice, not that this does not avoid some of the manifest characteristics of a bill of attainder so recently condemned. This may escape condemnation as a bill of attainder, and is better than those preceding appropriation bills that carried similar provisions that were condemned by the Supreme Court. However, I wish to read from the decision in the Humphreys case:

> The sound application of a principle that makes one master in his own house precludes him from imposing his control in the house of another who is master there. James Wilson, one of the framers of the Constitution and a former Justice of this Court, said that the independence of each department required that its proceedings "should be free from the remotest influence, direct or indirect, of either of the other two powers."

We should just as fiercely repel a threatened invasion of the executive province by the legislative as we would resent an intrusion by the executive branch of our Government into the legislative.

It has been suggested that the Conciliation Service in the Department of Labor was not created by Congress. That is all the more reason that we should stop, look, and listen before we intrude upon the clearly defined prerogatives, privileges, and province of the executive department.

I will take second place to no man in fighting intrusion on the part of the executive or the judiciary into our province. What I am voicing again today is a warning, with the utmost friendliness for the objective sought, that we should respect our oaths of office, the traditions of our Government, and the doctrine implicit throughout our Constitution, observed in our legislation, and commended by our courts, of separation of the powers of Government into three coordinate, independent, free branches.

It may be argued with a smile that this is not an intrusion because we are "firing" no one. But if the result be the same that argument is facetious, specious, and untenable.

So I am pleading again, as I have in the past, let us do this job in the way which is within our province, let us exercise our own power and adopt the bill H. R. 1103 or some similar measure, and with the utmost care and propriety let us implement the message of the President of the United States exercising his Executive functions, as he should, by suitable punishment to be inflicted upon subversives, as well as upon their employers, and so keep every single one of them out of every branch of the Government, or drive out those who got in. Otherwise, there is no security, nor possibility of national perpetuity.

Boll weevils can destroy the whole cotton crop. Termites can ruin the finest homes. We must accomplish this purpose if the Government is to endure. My plea is, please do it in the sphere in which we are authorized by the Constitution of the United States to operate. There never has been one syllable of power conferred on Congress to hire or fire executive employees. We can destroy beyond question the whole Department of Labor by denying appropriations. The life we gave, we may take. If that be a desirable end, then let it be done. That is within our power, but let us not stoop to an invasion of the sphere of authority of another independent, coordinate branch of our Government through a back door or side door and thus seek to curtail the functions implicitly and explicitly committed by the Constitution to another branch of the Government.

Let us protect the principle of the separation of powers. Let us protect, as we would be protected against any invasion of any one of our powers. If we revere the Constitution, let us observe it.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am so happy, always, to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALTER. What assurance would we have that Mr. Warren would be separated from the Federal Service in the event that the legislation as reported was not amended?

Mr. HOBBS. Only the assurance in debate given us by the distinguished, able, perfectly honest chairman of the subcommittee presenting this bill, and others who have assured us that will be the result.

Mr. WALTER. There would be nothing to prevent the transfer of this man from his present position to another position in the same department.

Mr. HOBBS. That is true, but that must come, sir, and I repeat, at the instance and request and under the order of the executive branch and not the legislative branch of our Government. We are not pleading to save any man. We are not pleading here to prevent the Congress from wreaking its vengeance or working its will in any respect in which it is authorized so to do. But we are pleading that it perform its own functions and not those of another branch of the Government.

Before you vote, please read these authorities, directly in point:

Humphrey's Executor v. United States (295 U. S. 602); Meyers v. United States (272 U. S. 52); Morgan v. T. V. A. (115 Fed. 2d 990, certiorari denied 61 Sup. Ct. Rep. 806); Opinion of Attorney General Mitchell (37 Opinions of Atty. Gen. 56, 61).

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, in ordinary circumstances, I certainly would not trespass the proprieties by speaking out of order in connection with general debate on an appropriation bill. I do so only because right soon a bill now in preparation in the Committee on Deficiency Appropriations with an estimate of $350,000,000 will come to this House which is designed to provide for foreign relief. In the not distant future there will probably be on the floor of this House a bill dealing with relief for Greece and Turkey. It is only in the interest of emphasizing the attention these problems must necessarily receive that I do trespass upon your time this morning.

AID TO GREECE AND TURKEY—A NEW FOREIGN POLICY

We are confronted with a new foreign policy.

It is embodied in 28 words.

It is the essence of the President's message.

Most of the message deals with the Greek request for aid, the reasons for the request, what might happen if aid is denied, and, finally, the kind of assistance to be rendered.

But it is the three-line statement of policy which is the nub of the President's message.

It states in brief that:

I believe that it must be the policy of the United States to support free peoples who are resisting attempted subjugation by armed minorities or by outside pressures.

At once certain questions arise: What peoples? How many? What will it cost? What is included in the term "attempted subjugation"? What is meant by outside pressures? Where does this policy take us? Is it realistic? Will there be firm adherence to it if it is carried into action? How will other nations react? What about Russia?

These are but some of the questions which immediately spring to mind.

APPLICATION OF THE POLICY

Obviously, the President refers to the militant Communist minority in Greece.

But there are also armed minorities in Korea, China, Iran, and elsewhere. The President's reference to "outside pressures" must mean Soviet needling and economic pressures on small nations in the Soviet orbit.

It embraces what might be called psychological aggression.

At the San Francisco Conference in 1945 former President Hoover suggested that the United Nations take account of psychological aggression. It was then waved aside. Now it is on our doorstep and precipitates a crisis.

In general, this new policy would apply to Communist expansion in small nations too weak and unequipped to successfully resist.

To these, in all parts of the world, the President now offers assistance in behalf of the people of the United States.

AREA OF AGREEMENT

In general our people will applaud a spirited resistance to communism.

It is the avowed enemy of our free system.

Lenin and Stalin have made it abundantly clear that the two systems cannot live together in the same world.

They regard us as imperialistic.

American policy must necessarily take account of this sharp conflict.

But all this must be considered against the background of recent history.

SOME BACKGROUND

Not so long ago this Nation was assisting communism.

Eleven billions of lend-lease supplies went to the Soviet Union.

Yugoslavia received thirty-two million and Greece seventy-one million.

A misguided UNRRA program, badly administered, directly aided and strengthened communism.

Of the $2,700,000,000 of UNRRA aid provided by the taxpayers of this Nation, four hundred and eighty-five million went to China, four hundred and forty million to Poland, three hundred and ninety million to Yugoslavia, three hundred and eighty-five million to Italy, three hundred and thirty million to Greece, two hundred and fifty million to Czechoslovakia, two hundred and thirty million to Byelo-Russia and the Ukraine, one hundred and ten million to Austria, and twenty-five million to Albania.

Since VJ-day, lend-lease aid on a long-term, reimbursable basis has been made available. France received three hundred and ninety-two million and Russia two hundred and thirty-nine million. In addition, substantial loans have been made by the Export-Import Bank.

How fantastic it all appears now as I look back upon the action taken in July 1945 on the bill to expand the capital of the Export-Import Bank. At that time I offered an amendment which read as follows:

Provided, That none of the powers granted herein may be exercised with respect to any country (including political subdivisions, persons, organizations, and business firms, corporate or otherwise, owing allegiance thereto) unless such country has adhered and continues to adhere to and is faithfully observing the first three principles of the joint declaration of the President of the United States and the British Prime Minister, otherwise known as the Atlantic Charter, as set forth in the message of the President of the United States to the Congress of the United States under date of August 21, 1941: Provided further, That, if any such country is in the enjoyment of any aggrandizement obtained subsequent to its adherence to the said Atlantic Charter and contrary to the principles thereof, such country may qualify for benefits hereunder by divesting itself of such aggrandizement: Provided further, That the certificate of the President of the United States that such country meets the requirements hereof shall be conclusive.

In brief, that amendment would prohibit loans to any nation, which did not faithfully adhere to the freedoms which were assured in the Atlantic Charter.

It would have denied loans to any country which had violated the principle of self-determination set forth in the Atlantic Charter and was designed to protect small nations against aggression.

It was a modest effort to prevent American dollars from undoing the work of dead American GI's, but singularly enough it failed.

All of our previous policies in terms of money have served to strengthen and entrench communism.

The latest available report from Communist Party headquarters in London indicates that in Italy the party has 2,000,000 members, 108 seats in Parliament, and 4 memberships in the Cabinet. In Austria the party has 150,000 members, 4 seats in Parliament, 1 member in the Cabinet. In Bulgaria the party had 450,000 members and 278 seats in Parliament. In Czechoslovakia it boasts 1,000,000 members and 115 seats in Parliament. In Hungary it has 650,000 members and 70 seats in Parliament. In Rumania it claims 500,000 members, 68 seats in Parliament, and 4 memberships in the Cabinet. In Poland it claims 600,000 members and scored more than 9,000,000 votes in the recent election. In Yugoslavia it boasts 100,000 members and gained 6,725,000 votes in the last election. It is in complete control. In Albania it also has complete control.

Here are the beneficiaries of American aid. In many cases they have established complete total government and are directly allied with the Soviet Union.

Our reproof of Bulgaria for holding an undemocratic election was little more than a light tap on the wrist.

Our note to Poland in protest of an unfree election marked by Communist terrorism was nothing more than a mild note.

Yalta and Potsdam made concessions to communism.

Releasing the secrets of atomic energy to the Communists was seriously considered by the administration.

There has been appeasement at every turn.

Now we are confronted with a sudden show of resistance.

What shall we believe? What shall the people believe? Will this be a sincere and genuine effort or is it political in character?

THE SITUATION AT HOME

Until this good hour, the present administration has shown but a mild interest in eradicating communism at home.

Sincere and genuine resistance to Red fascism, like charity, must begin at home.

The record reveals no such effort.

There are Communists in Government today.

The Personnel Division of the Treasury Department testified before the Appropriations Committee that charges were made against 352 persons in that Department—page 268 of the hearings—but only one hearing was held on such charges.

There are Communists in certain labor organizations today.

The Communist Party has actively supported the Democratic administration.

Only a single day before the President's message did a responsible administration official speak on the subject.

Secretary Schwellenbach called for the outlawry of the Communist Party.

Even that suggestion was so timed to tinge it with political suspicion.

Anticommunism was the greatest single force in the elections of November 1946.

Its implications were not lost on the administration. If the administration means business, why are vigorous anti-Communist measures so long in coming?

This ideological malady cannot be successfully resisted abroad until we are completely cured at home. The President's first Loyalty Commission has had 4 months to do something. Little has been done. On Saturday last, there has come a new Executive order and a new Board. Will it achieve more substantial results or must it be done by legislative flat?

WHAT LIES AHEAD

Appeasement of communism at home and abroad has shaken confidence in the administration.

It now proposes an about-face.

But, is it real? The Congress and the country want definite assurances on that point. The record of the past is too revealing.

If succor for free peoples against armed minorities and outside pressures shall be our policy, there must be some evidence of good faith before the Congress and the country embrace such a policy.

Some pertinent questions suggest themselves.

Who will be selected to administer this aid? To place food and supplies, valued at hundreds of millions of dollars, purchased with funds from the pockets of American taxpayers, at the disposal of intellectual pinks and misguided liberals will mean that communism will be strengthened, not stopped. This Nation is interested in firm and long range results and wants no more experiences like that of Yugoslovia where more than $400,000,000 worth of United States aid has assisted Tito in maintaining a huge army with which to provoke the very problem in Greece to which the President now directs attention in his message.

Do we propose to meekly submit to Soviet falsehoods in the press and over the radio or do we speak our minds?

How shall this new policy be translated into action? Does it call for a broad delegation of power to be used by certain persons as they think best, no matter what the views of the Congress and the country may be, or shall the policy be reduced to writing and then adhered to as an assurance to those who pay for this policy and this assistance, that it is being carried out?

Does this become another costly goodwill binge without tangible benefits, or do we at long last become realistic and in return for this aid request certain concessions such as naval bases, air rights, travel privileges, the elimination of trade and exchange controls? Communism is not resisted for a day or a week or a month. We are embarking on a long range policy which may lead us into strange and devious paths and it must be implemented in realistic fashion.

What have we to show for more than $350,000,000 of lend-lease and UNRRA aid to Greece? The very request which is the basis for the present so-called crisis indicates an impoverished, unstable country swept by inflation and powerless to deal with an armed minority estimated at 400,000 Communists. To add additional hundreds of millions would be like bailing out the ocean unless there is an immediate reordering of exchange and the stabilization of currency so that a thin crust at the top does not become the principal beneficiary of our largess.

How many persons is it proposed to send and who are they? Shall we have another experience like UNRRA when mental misfits, indolent adventurers, and hypersensitive pinks squandered billions of American funds?

How carefully has this estimate of Greek and Turkish needs been considered, or does it contain jokers? The people would not like it if, for example, certain quantities of powdered milk at an estimated cost of 23 cents per pound was considered for shipment to these countries when it might be purchased for half that amount.

These are but some of the questions for which there must be adequate answers and they at once suggest a course of action. Once before the Congress delegated broad lend-lease powers to a President which developed many strange and unanticipated results and which will cost this Nation billions of dollars with little to show for it.

Yes, there was a victory, but the President's own message now makes it appear that while we have dispatched a black dictator, we have nurtured a red one. Otherwise, why this message and this crisis?

A COURSE OF ACTION

Resisting communism at home or abroad is no child's play. It requires strong, purposeful, and coordinated action. The following suggestions should be considered for incorporation in any proposal to authorize the expenditure of funds of United States taxpayers for this purpose:

First. The amount authorized should be determined after a most careful and critical examination of the needs and purposes to be served. Waste has become a settled habit in the field of international relief and must be halted. Our own survival in a desperate world is a matter of primary consideration, and we cannot continue forever dissipating the assets and resources of this country. Wherever possible, war surplus supplies, material, commodities, and equipment should be utilized to reduce the cash outlay that might be involved.

Second. There should be a proviso that all goods and commodities for relief shipment should be purchased in the United States.

Third. A commission should be created to administer this aid composed of men experienced in the field of business, economics, and finance and the members thereof should be confirmed by the Senate.

Fourth. There should be a requirement that no aid shall be furnished until a clear and reasonable detailed statement of what is proposed to be done and how it is to be done shall have been prepared in writing and submitted to the Congress for information and study. Congress should seriously consider the creation of a Congressional Advisory Committee to provide constant and sustained oversight of this policy.

Fifth. There should be a requirement that all goods be shipped in American vessels.

Sixth. There should be a requirement that negotiations be instituted with Greek and Turkish authorities for long-term air rights, naval bases, trade concessions, and travel privileges. Is this asking too much? What would Britain or Russia do under similar circumstances?

Seventh. There should be a proviso placing a definite limit on the number of persons to be sent to Greece and Turkey for the administration of this aid, and each person so designated should be required to submit to a loyalty test.

Eighth. Insofar as United States assistance might be regarded as relieving Great Britain of any responsibilities there should be a requirement that all Greek and Turkish credits and balances in London should be freed from all exchange restrictions so that these countries might convert sterling balances into dollars for the purchase of American goods. In the case of Turkey, there should be a reexamination of her assets to determine whether aid from the International Bank might be utilized.

Ninth. There should be a requirement for commitments of adequate newspaper space and radio time with which the United States might tell its story to the people of Greece and Turkey.

Tenth. Revamping of the currency systems of these two countries should be one of the conditions of the loan and should be attended by a vigorous stamping out of black markets under heavy penalties.

It is common knowledge that large quantities of UNRRA funds and commodities went into the black market for the enrichment of speculators.

Eleventh. Consideration should be given to the adoption by the beneficiary countries of a repayment tax. Corollary thereto there should be a definite understanding with respect to any outstanding loans against the Greek Government, in the nature of a moratorium, so that her economy will not be too heavily burdened by repayments on those obligations.

IN CONCLUSION

There should be an evidence of complete good faith in respect of this new policy by an immediate vigorous all-out drive on communism at home.

What shall it profit us to resist communism abroad and lose freedom at home?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE].

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, there are many who think the task of a member of the Committee on Appropriations is very easy. It is in fact one of the most difficult, as all who have served in that capacity will have to admit. It is extremely difficult at this time, more so, perhaps, than it has been for the past 14 years, because we have been engaged in an ever-expanding system of spending, deficit spending, reckless spending, spending to get into and out of the depression, spending to get into and out of a war, spending to get into a peacetime program.

Let us just consider for a moment whether or not we are willing to approach this proposition from the standpoint that the people of this country are demanding that we approach it, from a realistic standpoint. Let us see what has happened all during these years with reference to these various items that are covered by this bill. Let me give you a few figures in order that we may be realistic. Every bureau, every agency that appears before the committee considers that it and its functions and services are the most important of any connected with the Federal Government. They are indispensable, according to these bureaucrats, and they want even more money. They have grown like Topsy, just grown up until they have mushroomed beyond the realization of the people. Let us see for a moment what these figurers have been doing.

Take the office of Secretary of Labor and the salaries of that office. In 1938 the salaries for that office were $323,500; in 1947, $1,083,686. We have allowed in this bill $819,500, almost three times as much as the salary item for 1938.

Then take salaries and expenses. For the office of Secretary of Labor in 1941 they were $78,940, and last year, 1947 fiscal, $1,075,775. The item provided in our bill is $755,300. Then let us look at the next item in the bill, contingent expenses. In 1938 that item was appropriated for at the amount of $115,000. In 1947 it had grown to $681,316. Our bill provides for $468,400. Traveling expenses in the office of Secretary of Labor were $630,800 in 1938, and in 1947 they had mushroomed and grown to $3,017,757. That item in our bill is fixed at $2,112,400. Take printing and binding in that same office, the office of Secretary of Labor. In 1938 it was $253,560. In 1947 it was more than double that amount, $518,388. Our bill provides for that item at $414,700. Penalty mail in 1945 was $107,763. In 1947 it was five times that amount, $551,925. Our bill is fixed at $119,700.

So we go on. Then we have the Conciliation Service about which there has been so much talk. In 1938 that item of appropriation was $275,000. In 1947 they had $2,583,976. We have heard much talk about the appropriation for the Bureau of Labor Statistics, in the office of Secretary of Labor. I invite your attention to the fact that in 1938 the appriation for that year, for this function, was $784,000, but in 1947 it was $5,517,465. We fix the figure in the bill at $3,373,400.

I could go on indefinitely and show that there is no end, apparently, to what will be asked. I invite your attention to some wise sayings, or sayings of wisdom, by the Comptroller General of the United States, Mr. Lindsay C. Warren, in an address he delivered some months ago to the chamber of commerce at Asheville, N. C. Listen to what Mr. Warren said:

> The States are now, for the most part, in excellent financial condition. Their budgets, unlike that of the Federal Government, are in balance, and most of them have comfortable reserves. If the States will assert their leadership in their proper sphere, there will be less incentive for further expansion of Federal power.

But the weaning time has come, and it is a difficult task to wean the bureaucrats.

Here is another statement made by Mr. Warren:

> I, for one, still believe that there are important functions to be exercised by the States and their subdivisions. There are highly proper and necessary contributions that the Federal Government should make, but if the States, in order to obtain Federal funds, surrender too many of their rights and functions to the Federal Government, something very precious, something very valuable and democratic, and something uniquely American will have gone out of our public service. The danger is that our people, looking to Washington indiscriminately for aid, will sell their political birthright for a mess of Federal pottage.

We have come to the weaning time. That is always a difficult time, in politics as well as elsewhere. We have come to the time when we must wean the bureaucrats, and the public is demanding that. That is what they said on November 5. I for one shall vote to wean as many of them as possible to keep our Government American and from becoming communistic, and we all know that it has been tending that way a long time ago. Let us not be deceived. Everyone likes the Government's protection, Government aid. We have been spoon feeding, we have been nursing the bureaucrats too long. There is no record in history of any human being who wanted to be weaned away from Government aid. They get a taste of it, and it is almost impossible to get them off of it.

Many years ago former United States Senator Robert L. Owen, one of the first Senators from the State of Oklahoma, one of the authors of the bill creating the great financial institution that largely controls our Government today, the Federal Reserve System, a member of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee, a man who had few equals and no superiors when it came to statesmanship, a man who now has seen 91 summers but is still intellectually brilliant, the recent inventor of the Global alphabet, when he saw this danger approaching made a statement that may sound crude coming from a statesman, as he was, I say, and may sound a little commonplace. Nevertheless it is illustrative of the weaning time that has approached. Senator Owen in speaking on the point that we are now discussing, of weaning people from the Federal pay roll, referred to a 6-foot boy 16 years old chasing his mother through the cornfield and howling, "Damn her hide, she's trying to wean me." That is the point we have arrived at right now. That is why we are being damned, if you please, by some of our brethren who have long been promoting this program. They are damning our hides because we have called the weaning time.

Here is a statement from a man who recently delivered a speech which most of you got in the mail this morning, Paul M. Millians, vice president of the Commercial Credit Corp., of Baltimore, Md., before the annual meeting of the Council of State Chartered Building, Savings, and Loan Associations of Maryland. He said:

> Please understand, however, we are not condemning all Government aid.

Neither are we.

> There are great and deserving needs which Government must support * * * many demands for public aid have strong emotional appeal.
> No one here is without sympathy for the social unfortunate and we are all willing to provide a floor for these high enough to violate no one's self-respect. We can all think with deep emotion about the Nation's obligation to the returned veteran, we can think with still deeper emotion about those who did not return and about their loved ones who weep. The hunger and despair of peoples in war * * * devastated nations of the world pull at our hearts.
> But national solvency comes ahead of all claims against the Federal Treasury. About public debt we must be cold, dispassionate, rational. We cannot feel about public debt, we must think.

Now we think that the weaning time has come. Let us wean the bureaucrats. They are old enough to wean. Most of them have been in the Government for 14 years. Let us not be afraid that they will upbraid us. The people elected us to do the job. Let us acquit ourselves like true representatives and get back to peacetime appropriations of figures such as I have referred to and could refer to in many other instances.

We have a bill here, Mr. Chairman, that in my humble opinion is too high and not too low. The figures should be further reduced.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY].

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, I am rather amazed at the extent to which the Republican Party has gone in its efforts to circumscribe the rights of labor. When I refer to labor, I mean all labor, organized and unorganized. There are something like 55,000,000 workers in the United States. I hope they take cognizance of what has been going on under the auspices of the Republican Party in this Congress.

Why this onslaught against labor? Why this apparent coordinated effort to restrict the activities and the rights of labor by denying sufficient funds to carry on the work of the Conciliation Service, the Vocational Training Service, the United States Employment Service, the National Labor Relations Board, and many other functions of the Labor Department? This is not the first attempt that has been made in this session of Congress to cripple the functions of the Government dealing with labor or to deny the rights of labor. So the question naturally poses itself—why this concerted efforts on the part of our Republican friends?

The Conciliation Service has done a great deal of good in the prevention and settling of labor disputes—thousands of them each year—not given publicity in the papers because they have been handled silently and efficiently. Mind you, these crippling actions are being carried forth at a time when all of the functions of the Federal Government leading to the prevention and settlement of labor disputes are so fundamentally necessary. I am constrained to say that the workingman today is being persecuted on all sides. Restrictive labor legislation is being proposed which would prevent him from exercising his natural rights as a workingman for the protection of his family. Adequate funds are being denied the agencies of the Government which have as their prime purpose the handling of labor disputes, at the same time that this Congress has failed to reduce the cost of living and to enable labor to achieve a proper living wage, which was suddenly taken from it when the war ended. Let us not forget that when we are talking about doing something to lessen labor disputes and to keep labor relations harmonious a negative position is not sufficient. The important thing is to take a positive position and do something for the welfare of labor. People who are persecuted—and I use this word advisedly—such as are labor families today by the majority of the Congress, make fertile soil for the growth of radical doctrines.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK].

Mr. MCCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, it would really start beginning to get amusing if it were not so serious to listen to our friends on the Republican side make the speeches that they are making. They started out with a 20 percent cut across the board for the wealthy income-tax payers. Now they have been forced to make a mild concession with a few crumbs. Then they got tied up on the matter of a six billion or a four and a half billion dollar budget reduction and now cannot get out of it. The bill has been in conference for several weeks.

While I do not know how many times the Republican members of the conference committee have met, there has been but one meeting of the full conference committee.

Now we hear the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE] standing in the well of the House weeping crocodile tears for economy. Yet, he introduced a soldiers' bonus bill which would cost the people billions of dollars. Yet, with reference to a few millions of dollars which mean so much to labor, organized and unorganized, they would wipe that out which would have serious effects upon the Conciliation Service, upon the National Labor Relations Board, agencies of government which are of great importance to both management and labor. The gentleman argues vigorously how strong he is for economy.

Only the other day I heard my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], who is now in the chair, whom I personally like, and who I believe is a great legislator, argue against false economy. But then when my friend, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], took the floor and warned the Republican Members about the $6,000,000,000 cut which they have promised the American people to make in President Truman's budget, my friend, the gentleman from Kansas, on a bill costing twelve to fifteen million dollars more to keep foreign labor in the United States, argued it would be false economy if the bill did not pass. I voted with him.

I thought it was all right. If it is all right for him to argue false economy, then it is all right for us to argue false economy in this case. I say he and other Republicans have caught themselves in a trap on the $6,000,000,000 cut.

I wonder how they are going to reconcile that. I wonder when the projects come in later and when the Committee on Appropriations cuts them out and our Republican friends stand in the well of the House and cry for assistance, what are we going to say and what are we going to think? You have caught yourselves in a beautiful trap. On the roll call vote on the measure which the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE] so brilliantly led the fight, and I was with him, you will find outside of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] and the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN], all of the Republican leaders voted for the bill. Only two outstanding Republican leaders——

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield? I am no leader.

Mr. MCCORMACK. Oh, of course you are a leader. The gentleman is chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in Executive Departments. That automatically makes the gentleman a leader. Whether his party likes him as a leader or not, we admit the gentleman is one of the outstanding, although probably one of the most annoying leaders of the Republican Party—annoying to his own party.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Did I annoy you any yesterday?

Mr. MCCORMACK. Now, the gentleman is my chairman and I do not want my chairman to lessen himself in my eyes. I place you among the leaders of the Republican Party and you cannot escape your responsibility.

Let us see what the majority party is doing in this bill. By "majority party," let us call names; the Republicans. Well, they are practically wiping out the effectiveness of the Conciliation Service. They take away 100 employees, top officials included, and then they say they cannot be replaced. Some of those officials have been there for 37 years. One of the officials has been in the Department of Labor 37 years. Another man has been in the Federal service 39 years, 8 years of which was in the Department of Labor. Another man has been in the Federal service for 29 years, in the Department of Labor. So it is men of experience of that type who are being eliminated. They cannot be replaced even by other persons. We placed a veto upon replacements at the hands of the executive department.

Then, we have the National Labor Relations Board. Half of its appropriations are cut, and at a time when there is greater demand for their services; at a time when we are having hearings before the Labor Committee. They are going to report out a bill. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] said the other day it is not going to be a punitive measure. I believe him. I do not know what it will be when it gets through this House, in which I have seen coalitions work. I have seen them work before. No matter what the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] intends, no matter what his committee reports, I predict it is going to be a far different bill when it gets through this House than when it comes into the House, if there are not punitive measures contained in this bill against labor and I hope there will not be.

Now, for all practical purposes they are wiping out the Conciliation Service.

We have labor troubles in Massachusetts—differences between labor and management. Every State is trying to explore to see what can be done. We are all Americans. We realize that labor and management have to live together, and the public interest has to be served. In Massachusetts we have a problem. The present Governor, Governor Bradford, a Republican by politics, appointed a committee to investigate and report recommendations to him in relation to labor legislation. That committee is known as the Slechter committee, and is composed of Mr. Sumner H. Slechter, of Harvard, Mr. Douglas V. Brown, of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and Father Thomas E. Shortell of the Holy Cross College, and several others. That committee made a unanimous report to Governor Bradford only recently. I have that report before me and the recommendation of Governor Bradford to the Massachusetts Legislature. What is the main thing they report? "New and stronger conciliation service, which gives new opportunities and new responsibilities to employers and trade unionists; and new arbitration service of assured competence and impartiality." Governor Bradford in his message to the legislature called this conciliation service the Magna Carta of labor-management good-will relations.

We have in Massachusetts a Republican Governor and a Republican legislature recommending a strong conciliation service. We have here in the Federal Capitol a Republican-controlled House, recommending practically the abolition of the effectiveness of the conciliation service that has been in existence for some years in the Federal Government. Management has all testified to the fine character of service rendered by the Conciliation and Mediation Service.

The National Labor Relations Board is handling itself in an excellent manner and at a time when we need them. Their appropriation is cut in half, practically wiping away the effectiveness of the National Labor Relations Board to give even a minimum of service to both management and labor when disputes arise.

As the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY] said a few moments ago, the record is being laid for the country. They, the Republicans, are in control, but they have to answer. Political parties must lie in the political bed they make, just the same as all other persons in public life.

We have got to take the consequences of our acts. We see this pattern being set up with the cloth being cut to fit into the picture of the vested few of this country: The 20-percent-across-the-board tax reduction; cutting down the statute of limitations in suits over wages and hours to 1 year; this indirect attack upon the agencies that are of great importance to the workingmen and the workingwomen, not alone the organized but the unorganized. We find this whole pattern, and the record might as well carry the fact.

I realize the chances are that nothing will be done in this body. Under the hysteria of attacking a man they expect to get it over. I know a prominent Republican who occupies a high position, who was the governor of a great Commonwealth—and I admire him. He became a member of an organization the nature of which he did not know, but he resigned only a few months ago. That man knew nothing about the real purposes of the organization—and he comes from Massachusetts and is a man whom I respect very, very much. That man said he did not know what he had joined and I believed him. I met another man 12 years ago when I was chairman of a special committee investigating communism, nazism, fascism, and bigotry. I was in New York and we came across a prominent judge of New York City who belonged to a bigoted organization. I called him in. I asked him if he belonged to this organization. He said, "Yes, I do." I asked him if he knew what the organization was. He said he did from the constitution. I said, "That is what I thought; you did not know what the real purposes of this organization were and I thought you did not know. You joined an organization with a fine patriotic constitution without making a special investigation as to the character of the leadership." I said, "Forget it, it will not be made public." Yet, if I had followed the tactics of some others I would have made his name public and he would have been branded as a member of a bigoted organization, smeared in the press, and his reputation ruined. I wanted more evidence than that to convict a man of being a member of a bigoted organization. The man was well known, one of the chief jurists of New York City. I do not know whether he is alive today or not.

A number make mistakes, sometimes, of joining organizations and then finding the objectives such that we are not in agreement with them and withdraw. That happens. Men join organizations without knowing, and when they find out certain things they withdraw. We have one of the Justices of the Supreme Court who did that, yet he has developed into one of the soundest Justices of the Supreme Court, a man whose opinions on civil liberties are absolutely sound. In my own mind I started out being critical of him, but he has made a great reputation for himself; and he said he did not know the real purpose of the organization when he joined it. Those things can happen in the case of others. It could happen in the case of this man Warren. But outside of that, assuming he is guilty of everything, why destroy the Conciliation Service? Why for all practical purposes destroy the Conciliation and Mediation Service by writing into the bill language which prevents those hundred employees and top officials of this agency from being replaced in case under present circumstances they have to be let go.

And so, Mr. Chairman, this talk about economy; yes, we have the case of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE], with his bill. We have the case of my friend, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE]. I was with him. We have others. It will be interesting to make a survey of the bills introduced by the Members of this House requiring the appropriation of money, introduced by those who voted for the $6,000,000,000 cut, to find out what bills they have introduced and how much they will cost the taxpayers if they become law.

Yes; economy. I say to the Members of the House and particularly to my friend the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. HOPE], that it is false economy, as he said it was false economy only a few weeks ago, to fail to put through an extension for 6 months permitting alien labor, foreign labor to remain in the United States and to make the appropriations therefor. I joined with you in that action. I say it is false economy to make these drastic cuts that are carried in this bill at the expense of the workingman and the workingwoman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to say anything at this time in connection with this bill, but I trust that the committee will indulge me if I dwell upon cuts in an appropriation bill that has previously passed the House. I think what is now happening is of more than passing concern to all the Members without regard to which side of the aisle they sit on.

It has been brought to my attention through the press as to what is happening now at the ports of entry, chiefly in New York, San Francisco, and Detroit, and along the entire Canadian border as the result of the—should I say looseness?—in prescribing cuts in order to arrive at what our Republican friends term economy. Not so long ago the Board of Commerce and the merchants of Detroit appealed to me to protect the merchants and the businessmen throughout the Nation against the uncontrolled influx of goods from Canada. We of the Committee on Ways and Means, prescribed an effective rule, and it became part of the customs law. Today, regardless of the law, by the elimination of customs guards along the border and in the ports of entry this country faces a deluge of foreign goods and the entry, by the way, of perhaps unwanted illegal immigrants. The situation is very drastic, very dangerous, and I want to protest this unwarranted, this senseless economy as prescribed by the Committee on Appropriations.

I want to say to you that I think the Committee on Appropriations does not know enough about it all to justify what they have done in the past. The situation is desperate. It is a dangerous situation which exists, and it ought to be corrected promptly. I want to say on this occasion that unless the committee treats these subjects with more care and diligence and with greater intelligence and foresight, the time will come when the Committee on Appropriations will be abolished, as I have advocated for a long time, and its functions reinvested in the legislative committees who know more about the subject matter covered by appropriations. This is one outstanding example of a condition created by the Committee on Appropriations in its desperation to arrive at what they call economy, which is working against the best interest of the American merchant, the taxpayer, and against the citizens generally.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. COOLEY. My recollection is that I read in the paper yesterday, I believe, that as the result of this drastic reduction in appropriations, that at the port of New York the personnel would be reduced from 840 to 100 persons.

Mr. DINGELL. I understand that is correct.

Mr. COOLEY. They are maintaining only a skeleton organization in that important office.

Mr. DINGELL. That is right, and it will permit smugglers and dope peddlers in New York and elsewhere to operate as they please. The condition of demoralization is going to be general, because the cut is drastic from one end of the country to the other.

Another thing I want to touch upon is the unwarranted cut affecting the Internal Revenue Department and the special agents charged with the responsibility of recovering millions of dollars in taxes due the Government from tax evaders. Preliminary work of these highly trained specialists in tax-evasion work indicates possible recovery of over $600,000,000, which is being jeopardized by an appropriations cut of less than one-twentieth or thirtieth of the amount to be recovered. This is not economy, but rank injustice to the Treasury and to the honest taxpayers. I am told that estimates of recovery for the next 2 years from this source amounts to four or five billions of dollars. I will have more to say on these matters later.

EXAMPLES OF TAX EVADERS WHO MIGHT IN THE FUTURE ESCAPE DETECTION IF THE INVESTIGATIVE STAFF OF THE BUREAU OF INTERNAL REVENUE SHOULD BE REDUCED

An oyster packer, operating in the Chesapeake Bay area, acquired oyster beds either by lease, or from the State, or by purchase of leases from other dealers. During the slack period when oysters were plentiful and the market was low, he would buy all the oysters he could get and then have them dumped overboard on one of his oyster beds, where they could be readily dredged or tonged when very few oysters were coming into packing houses from other sources. When they were purchased and dumped overboard, the prevailing price was between 50 cents to $1 per bushel, but when the price rose to $3 or $4 per bushel, they were redredged and sold at the prevailing market price. Investigation disclosed that the oysters were charged to purchases on the books of the packer at the current market price when redredged, thus overstating purchases by the difference between the price when actually dumped and the market price when taken up. Additional tax and penalties of over $27,000 were levied in this case.

Alex Steinberg, of Dallas, Tex., was one of the most important figures in the liquor trade in the Southwest. He was charged on four counts with attempted evasion of his and his wife's income taxes, amounting to almost three-quarters of a million dollars for the single year 1943. Testimony in his trial brought out that Steinberg dealt in enormous quantities of whisky, the payments for which were frequently shipped to him by express in the form of currency. Steinberg was found guilty as charged, and reports by newspapers in the Dallas area indicate that this conviction had had a very salutary effect on potential tax evaders throughout the Southwest.

In 1934 a promoter was convicted in the Fulton County, Ga., Criminal Court on three counts of larceny after trust and two counts of violations of the Georgia securities laws, and sentences of from 2 to 3 years on each count, to run consecutively, were imposed. After slightly more than 2½ years imprisonment, he obtained a pardon from Governor Talmadge and moved to Miami, Fla. Said to have been insolvent at the time, he first found employment as a parking lot attendant, and later as an electrical appliance salesman. In 1939 he entered the real estate field and organized several corporations that developed vacant properties by erecting groups of store buildings and theaters, which upon completion were rented or sold. Using borrowed funds he also dealt extensively in bonds of Florida East Coast Railroad which were depressed because of the road's financial straits prior to the war. With a group of associates he has gained representation on the boards of directors of the Missouri, Kansas & Texas, Chicago & Eastern Illinois, and Chicago & Great Western Railways. His battle for control of the first-named, and his plan for consolidating the three carriers into a Great Lakes to Gulf system, have been nationally publicized. Investigation of this individual and two of his corporations disclosed additional taxes and penalties of approximately $173,000 to be due.

A Kentucky doctor was in the penitentiary from 1932 through 1936 as the result of a conviction of violating the narcotic laws. After being released from the penitentiary he began an abortionist business in Covington, Ky., and was able to make contacts with several prominent doctors in Cincinnati who assisted him by furnishing him with prospective clients. This doctor was found to have 15 different bank accounts or building and loan savings accounts in different banks and associations, all under assumed names. No other assets of any consequence were discovered, and it is not believed that any other assets existed, inasmuch as the doctor, due to the nature of his business, was afraid to list his assets under a correct name, thus laying himself liable for civil action in those cases where his abortions may have been a failure. Investigation found assets totaling $140,000 and additional tax for the years 1937 through 1945 was assessed in the amount of $71,938.

A notorious operator of a policy-numbers racket in the St. Louis area was subject to tax deficiencies and fraud penalties in the amount of $224,471 for the years 1942 through 1945. This man maintained no records and investigation had to be based on other sources of information. It was finally proven that this man received large amounts of currency in connection with his operations which he failed to report on his tax returns. He had accumulated a large amount of net worth but had reported only nominal income.

An individual operated a wholly owned corporation and a sole proprietorship on the black market in nylon yarn and hosiery. The total income tax paid by the corporation and his individual business amounted to $68.19 whereas the aggregate taxes due for the years investigated exceeded $112,000. Before the investigation was completed, the individual died and after appointment of his wife as executrix for her husband's estate two safe-deposit boxes were located in New York, N. Y., one of which contained $107,345 and the other $76,750, all in cash. An additional safe-deposit box maintained by the taxpayer where he resided in Philadelphia, Pa., yielded $2,370 in cash. This cash no doubt represented the proceeds of the taxpayer's sales in the black market. Upon the discovery of the funds in question, the taxpayer's representatives consented to the payment of the additional taxes previously mentioned.

One of the largest fraud cases developed during the drive against tax evaders was that of the Longchamps Restaurants in New York City, headed by Henry Lustig, who started his career many years ago behind the handles of a pushcart. There were four codefendants in the case, namely, his nephew, E. Allen Lustig, secretary of the seven Longchamps corporations; Joseph Sobel, certified public accountant; Wallace Platt, office manager; and Platt's brother, Martin, the restaurant king's bookkeeper.

The fraud operations in this case consisted of keeping two sets of books—one "honest," the other "elaborately falsified"—the siphoning of approximately $2,000,000 in cash from the restaurant chain's tills into Lustig's personal safe deposit box, and Lustig's asserted pocketing of thousands of dollars in tips handed by customers to his attractive hatcheck girls.

The Platt brothers turned State's evidence and their sentences were suspended. Allen Lustig was sentenced to a prison term of 3 years, and Joseph Sobel, the chief accountant for the Lustig Enterprises, to a 2-year term. Henry Lustig was sentenced to 4 years on 22 counts for willful failure to defeat and evade taxes of the various corporations, the sentences to run concurrently, and was sentenced to 2 years on a conspiracy count to also run concurrent with the 4-year sentence, and to the payment of a fine of $115,000.

The total taxes and penalties in this case amounted to $7,726,124.

Mr. Speaker, I include the following editorial from the Washington Times-Herald of today:

LOOKS LIKE POOR ECONOMY

We're as strong as ever for a big slash in the Truman $37,528,000,000 budget, and think from the debate on the subject up to now that radical cuts can be accomplished without damage to any of the Government's essential services.

We're still taking with plenty of salt the solemn warning of spend-and-spend New Dealers that disaster will follow if Congress forces the Government to come down a bit from the high level of luxurious living on which it has been riding during the New Deal era.

However, it does look as if the House pulled one boner, at least, in its recent approval of a slash of $30,000,000 in the Treasury Department's 1947–48 operating expenses.

Included in this reduction of Treasury spending money was a cut of $6,500,000 in the Customs Bureau's allowance. The Customs Bureau has charge, not only of collecting tariffs on goods coming into this country, but also of maintaining border patrols and other devices for keeping goods from being smuggled in without paying duty.

Because of this $6,500,000 Customs Bureau slash, about 1,600 of the Bureau's employees are in process of being let out, effective March 28, which is next Friday. Customs work at the key port of New York, where most legitimate tolls are paid, and most smugglers ply their trade, will be crippled by this proposed cut.

Harry M. Durning, collector of the port of New York, now has a staff of 840 men engaged in this valuable work. Durning has been forced to notify 740 of his staff, including 600 war veterans, of their impending dismissal. This will leave America's greatest port with a skeleton force of 100 men.

According to John C. Tulloch, an old collector of the port and border-patrol organizer at the important boundary point of Ogdensburg, N. Y., these dismissals also will leave the Canadian border wide open to smugglers of all manner of contraband, and to illegal entry of aliens as well. Similar results are expected along the Mexican border.

The loss in revenues to the Government, if such a condition lasts any considerable length of time, will more than outweigh the cut of $6,500,000 in the Customs Bureau's allotment of funds for 1947-48.

Altogether, the House apparently made a bad mistake. It is made the more striking by the sudden and simultaneous expansion of the Civil Service Commission, which calls for between 2,500 and 3,000 extra investigators, in order to root disloyal and subversive employees from our Government pay roll.

We hope this project works. But, somewhere in the hiring-and-firing confusion, a serious injustice has been done our Customs Bureau, and it is one which ought to be rectified without delay.

The Senate can still perform this job, when it acts on the cost-cutting bill passed by the House. We hope the Senate will do just that, and plug these serious port and border leaks. It seems obvious that better ways to save money can be found than this one.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. RAYFIEL].

Mr. RAYFIEL. Mr. Chairman, I have read the report of the Appropriations Committee very carefully and cannot recall ever reading a report of a committee of this House which is so vindictive in its approach to the problem before it. It is well established that the Appropriations Committee has as its only function the consideration of legislation for the appropriation of money for the efficient functioning of the executive offices of the Government. In carrying out that function the committee must, of course, exercise judgment as to how those functions can be conducted most efficiently and economically. However, this does not give to the committee the power to direct the executive side of the Government as to how its functions should be carried out.

The report of the committee on the pretext of alleged maladministration by Director Warren recommends the virtual elimination of the entire administrative and supervisory staff of the Conciliation Service. If the report is adopted it will make the Conciliation Service a headless body.

Public, labor, and management representatives in the field of industrial relations are virtually unanimous in their belief that a strong conciliation and mediation service is the cornerstone of a sound government labor-relations policy. Although some of these groups may differ as to the method whereby that function should be carried out, they are all in accord with the basic principle that a strong conciliation service is essential in the maintenance of our free collective-bargaining system. It is, of course, fundamental that a strong conciliation function requires adequate and effective supervision, for without proper direction it is impossible to perform the conciliation and mediation functions efficiently and effectively.

The committee report recommending the elimination of the supervisory structure of the Conciliation Service is a repudiation of the virtually unanimous informed opinion that we should have a strong conciliation service. It is a repudiation of the unanimous recommendation of the President's Labor Management Conference that the Conciliation Service be strengthened. It is a repudiation of the recommendations of the Labor-Management Advisory Committee which participates on a regular periodic basis with the Conciliation Service in the program of building and strengthening the Service.

The committee's action is based upon charges made by disgruntled laid-off employees against Director Warren. These charges are preposterous on their face and are completely unfounded. They have been refuted by responsible public officials, such as Senator WAYNE L. MORSE, who was a former public member of the War Labor Board, and by five former public members of the War Labor Board under whom Mr. Warren served.

It has been charged that Mr. Warren has hired a group of high-priced WLB people to build up his organization. Let us look at the facts. Of the 30 grade 14 and 15 employees who may be affected by the proposed cut, only 5 were ever employed by the War Labor Board. Of the 7 regional directors whose jobs would be eliminated by the committee report, all were employed by the Department of Labor before Mr. Warren took office as Director of the Conciliation Service and none were employees of the Labor Board. Let us look at the records of these regional directors whom the committee would have thrown out:

Name	Years of Labor Department service	Total years of Federal service
Colwell, H. Ross	8	39
Cunningham, Edward J	37	37
Durham, Howard E	8	11
Marsh, E. P	29	29
Spillane, James J	0	0
White, William F	12	12
Williams, Clarence H	12	13

Under the committee's proposal, these 30 grade 14 and 15 employees having a total of 346 years of service in the Federal service, 254 years of which were in the Department of Labor, would be removed from Government office. These men have an average of 12 years in Government service. Is it wise governmental policy for us as Congressmen to wipe out this vast reservoir of experience when the public is demanding that we provide for a strong Conciliation Service? Upon what foundation are we to build if we eliminate this vast store of experience in government and labor-relations work?

The report of the committee is based upon distortion and misrepresentation of the transcript of the record. The sole reason given by the committee in its report for the elimination of the positions of regional director and assistant regional director is that in an office out of which work only three conciliators, there is no sense in having a regional director and an assistant regional director. The facts are that there are actually from 20 to 50 conciliators supervised out of each regional office with a regional director and an assistant regional director. This one misconception is sufficient to invalidate entirely the premise on which regional staffs were cut. Such unsoundness in the exercise of judgment on the part of the committee should cast doubt upon the merit of the whole report, particularly as it relates to the United States Conciliation Service.

These unfounded charges upon which the committee relies are merely being used as a smoke screen to cripple the Conciliation Service. If the report is adopted the Conciliation Service will be left a less-effective organization than it was before the President's labor-management conference.

The record of the Conciliation Service in the year and a half since Mr. Warren assumed office has been acclaimed by both labor and management representatives and by impartial experts in the field of industrial relations. In 90 percent of the disputes in which the Conciliation Service has been called in prior to work stoppages they have succeeded in closing the cases without a work stoppage occurring. This is a truly remarkable record when we consider the difficult problems which confronted the Service during this reconversion period from a war economy to a peace economy. That record was possible only because there was sound direction from on top and through the supervisory personnel in the field. Without supervision and close watching of key cases throughout the country, it is doubtful that this remarkable record could have been made. If we vote for an appropriation which contemplates that each conciliator go off on his own without any supervision or direction, we are voting for industrial chaos. We are voting for more strikes. I do not think the Congress wants more strikes. I know the people do not want them. I know the people expect us to provide means for peaceful settlement of strikes. This appropriation bill would defeat that purpose. Unless the funds for the office of the Director and his administrative and supervisory personnel are restored, the people of the country will know that this Congress has voted for industrial chaos and for more strikes.

The recommendation of the committee represents an attempt to usurp executive functions through an arbitrary use of its control over the Government's purse strings. It attempts to give the executive departments detailed instructions as to how the executive shall carry out its designated functions. Such an attempt is, of course, contrary to our basic constitutional concept of separation of powers.

I do not believe that the Congress desires to usurp the executive functions of the Government. I do not believe that the Congress desires to promote strikes.

I feel confident that the Congress will not adopt this irresponsible report.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. SMATHERS].

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Chairman, at this time I should like to protest the cut in the appropriations for the Veterans' Placement Service, as has been proposed by the majority members of the Appropriations Committee.

An examination of the hearings before the subcommittee reveals that this Veterans' Placement Service has done a singularly outstanding job in behalf of veterans. During the first 11 months of 1946 there was something in the neighborhood of 5,394,000 applications filed by veterans. Employment-counsel interviews to those veterans amounted to 952,000. Local job referrals of veterans were in the neighborhood of 4,231,000. The number of handicapped job seekers during the first 11 months of 1946 totaled more than 640,000 with approximately 400,000 of that number being disabled veterans. In addition to assistance to those there has been a steady increase in the activities of the employment counsel. Actual job placements directly attributable to the Veterans' Placement Service have been increasing each month, and the figures that we have show that 198,000 local placements of handicapped workers was made by this service during the first 11 months of 1946.

I would like at this point to read from the statement of Mr. Faulkner regarding this service, and I here quote:

> We know of no precise method of directly measuring the contribution which the activities of the public employment service has made to the economic well-being of this country. We have attempted, however, to make some conservative estimates from time to time of the importance of selected activities. For example, if we take the total number of nonagricultural placements, exclusive of short-time placements, made during the first 11 months of 1946 and make the assumption that the Employment Service has been responsible for shortening by only 1 week the duration of unemployment for the individuals placed, the savings to the State unemployment compensation funds, and to the Veterans' Administration servicemen's readjustment funds on the basis of average weekly benefits amounted to more than $50,000,000. If, in addition, account is taken of the fact that such placement activities resulted in an extra week of employment and earnings at the average weekly wage of $35, the additional wage payments to individuals would increase the national income by $150,000,000.

The veteran represents the biggest investment that this country has today. Many men are still being discharged from the service. Thousands of veterans are now getting out of colleges and schools. These men also represent the greatest productive factor that the United States has. It is important not only to them but to our economy and to the country as a whole that these young men are placed in worthwhile jobs and become self-supporting and productive. The Veterans' Placement Service has succeeded in a great measure in bringing this about thus far.

Mr. Chairman, I regret to see the appropriations for this service reduced in any way because this is the service that has given aid to the veteran who is not going to school under the GI bill of rights and who is not receiving his $20 for 52 weeks of unemployment. This agency is designed to assist those veterans who are anxious to become productive and useful citizens forthwith. It has rendered a great service thus far. It is entitled to our continued support. The veteran needs and wants the assistance of this agency, and this Congress will be practicing false economy if it does not grant to them the appropriation which has been requested.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND].

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, the Appropriations Committee is using this appropriation bill to hamstring the Labor Department in the functions which have been assigned to it by the Congress and thus not only reducing the effectiveness of this Department, but placing the general welfare of the working people of this country at the mercy of the employers.

It goes further than that because it will cripple the Veterans' Employment Service, practically eliminates the Conciliation Service, and abolishes the Division of Labor Standards.

The Division of Labor Standards is a small division set up to carry out the over-all function of the Labor Department, which is to promote and foster the well-being of the workers of the United States. The Service is a clearinghouse for all types of labor information and administration to State labor departments, to labor, to management, to all groups that are interested in improving the working conditions. Through the work of this division, accident prevention has not only gained a foothold in this country, but already has made remarkable progress. It has not only saved lives and limbs of workers, but it also has saved millions of dollars to employers.

To eliminate this division completely is, to my mind, not sound economy but, rather, an expensive venture.

I can see in this action just a part of the over-all pattern which, when pieced together, will show that through anti-labor legislation and through the withholding of appropriations this Republican-controlled Congress is out to whip labor into submission to the whims of the employers. I regret to note that the majority party has decided on such a course.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER].

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly that the Appropriations Committee has seen fit to recommend a reduction in the amount going to the United States Employment Service, and particularly the service provided for veterans in the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944. This is one of the most worth-while laws we have passed for the benefit of the serviceman. It is being carried out in an efficient manner. All of the employees working under this service are quite busy and have produced excellent benefits in finding positions for veterans. The service should be strengthened—not reduced.

In the months ahead positions and jobs are going to be even more difficult for the veteran to find and therefore more veterans will be calling upon the Readjustment Service for assistance. And yet, in the face of this, we are trimming the personnel of this Service drastically. I am glad that an amendment will be offered to increase the funds for this service. I hope the amendment is adopted.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER].

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Chairman, we on numerous occasions have legislated when the Supreme Court, in the judgment of the Congress, has invaded the legislative field, such as just recently in the McNabb case, the Insurance case, and the case of Local 807, but jealous as we are in the protection of our prerogatives, it seems that we ought to be recognizing the prerogatives of another of the integrated branches of our Government.

We are endeavoring today to do by indirection that which the Supreme Court said not so long ago could not be done when we limited an appropriation so as to prevent any part of it from being applied to the salaries of three Governments officials that we did not feel ought to be on the pay roll. I voted for that limitation, albeit with grave apprehensions as to the legality of what we had done. But it certainly seems to me that now, when attention is going to be paid to the loyalty of people on the Federal pay roll, we should adopt another way of removing those people whose services are no longer desired.

I, for one, feel that Mr. Warren has outlived his usefulness. I am thoroughly convinced that his membership in two organizations which were branded by Francis Biddle as being subversive makes it impossible for that man to function satisfactorily in that position. On the one hand you will find management regarding him with suspicion. On the other hand you will find employees going farther than they might ordinarily do because of the belief they have in philosophies they think he might possess. It seems to me that if Mr. Warren is interested in the preservation of a service that means so much to the workers of America he will resign immediately, and if he does not resign I am thoroughly convinced that it will not be very long before he is separated from the service. However, I repeat what I said at the outset of these few brief remarks, we ought not invade a field that is not ours.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is very easy to understand why the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] works himself up into a sweat and wears out the carpet walking back and forth through the well of the House. All you need to do is go back over the record and recall the finding of the so-called Shepherd committee—a Democratic committee—in the other House, where they found that money appropriated by the Congress for the relief of the unfortunate and the needy was being used for political purposes. That report was filed several years ago. The practice then condemned has continued to this day. All you need to do is recall the report of another committee of the same body about the political activities down in Kentucky, where money appropriated for the needy, for the unfortunate, was used to elect a Member of the upper House. During the last campaign Republicans promised economy. They promised to do what they could to get rid of government by bureaucrats. The first time we make a move to carry out those promises along come the Members of the minority side and complain of what we are doing. Why should we not keep our political promises? I know that is a novel doctrine to some of the gentleman on the other side. From the time when the New Dealers first came into power and repudiated the promises they made and which got them elected to office—within 6 months of the date they took office and from then right down to the present moment that party has had no idea of carrying out a campaign promise.

This is not a move to do something that should not be done. Whatever Mr. Warren may have believed in the past is at the moment to me of no concern. It is what they are doing now. Here is a letter dated March 22 from a constituent who is honest and straightforward. Listen to what this department, the Wage and Hour Division, is doing. Not last year; not 2, 5, 10 years ago but in March of 1947. Their representative went down to this industry. Here is the report from the employer:

At the end of the day he—

had been able to find that we should have started paying overtime 2 months before we did, and so he requested us to make up the 2 months' back overtime. Up to this point, although we did not agree with the law, we had no fault to find as we want our employees to have all they are entitled to. Even though this may be more than our agreement called for, we will pay.

There is the statement of a man who is complying with the law and with the request of the Department. Then, what happened? This man from the Wage and Hour Division asked the employer if he could ask the employees some questions.

He had asked if he could visit the employees in the shop and was given permission to do so. He went out and asked them if they were satisfied with their jobs and asked them about their wages.

Now, get this:

He asked them if they had previously worked for another firm in St. Joe, to which they replied in the affirmative. He then said he thought he would be able to get them some extra money from this firm by which they were previously employed; and if they would get it, to remember who got it for them and to tell their friends.

For whom was he campaigning?

Now, what do you think of an employee paid by the taxpayers' money going out into the factory after he has settled all the questions which arose in that factory and after the employer has agreed to make all the payments suggested, going back to the men and women in the factory and saying, "For whom did you work before?" Of course, there was no complaint from anyone concerning that, but he said, "I will go over and see if I cannot get you some more money from your old employer." In other words, if that man were a lawyer, he would be disbarred and would not be permitted to practice. A Federal employee going around to factories in the country asking the employees if they work too hard and if they work too long, and if by some possibility they might not think that they were entitled to something—some additional compensation—from someone else. That is a practice which I understand has continued since 1937. And if they say they are satisfied, this Federal employee still says, "I will go over and look over the books of your last employer and see if I cannot stir up a lawsuit for the employer." An employee of the Federal Government who goes about the country stirring up agitation is not needed on the Federal pay roll.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WORLEY].

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have received a number of telegrams this morning from various veterans' posts of the American Legion, Disabled American Veterans and Veterans of Foreign Wars protesting the arbitrary cut the majority party has made in the Veterans' Employment Service. I understand the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] will offer an amendment to correct that mistake so that this service for veterans will continue.

If the Republican Party is really interested in helping the veterans, I believe the House would be interested in knowing just why this cut of nearly a million dollars was made in the appropriation. I understand the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill, has 13 minutes remaining, and we would appreciate having his views as to just why this arbitrary cut was made, and how he thinks it can be justified.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the welfare of our men and women who have been disabled in the service of their country is in jeopardy. Does anybody deny that disabled veterans have earned a right to the pursuit of happiness found in jobs that are suited to their abilities, interests, and to their ambitions? Does anyone deny that these same veterans, disabled in the service of their country, shall have the assistance they need in finding and establishing themselves in jobs that provide for them the shelter, the food, the clothing they need? Does anyone deny that disabled veterans have a right to dignity and to self-respect in their occupations and to the satisfaction of work well done?

These questions, my colleagues, we must squarely face in our consideration of appropriations for the support of the Veterans' Employment Service. Can we return to our States and face our neighbor's boy who lost a leg at Anzio Beach or the butcher's son who left his eyes on Saipan and tell them "There wasn't enough to go around for you. You'll have to shift for yourselves."

Disabled veterans seek only an opportunity—an opportunity to demonstrate their capacities, their skills, and their abilities to do things as well, yes, better, than their nondisabled fellows. They want the opportunity to prove that they will stick to jobs much better than these fellows; that they are better accident risks; that they are better producers than their fellows.

This is the message which the field assistants of the Veterans' Employment Service are bringing to employers in behalf of disabled veterans. The results are apparent: From January 1, 1946, to November 1, 1946, the placements of disabled veterans increased almost 300 percent. This increase did not just happen. Constant, conscientious, and consistent effect upon the part of the Employment Service produced these results.

The development and application of special techniques for counseling and placement of disabled veterans will be completely abandoned with the curtailment of the United States Employment Service. Disabled veterans need counseling and guidance. Their choice of job opportunities is substantially broadened through job leads developed only through the use of these techniques. Continued development and improvement of special selective placement techniques for disabled veterans by the United States Employment Service is imperative if disabled veterans are to continue to have the service they have earned.

I appeal to you in behalf of the disabled defenders of our great Nation that you face your conscience—remember the sacrifices made by these disabled defenders—and give to the Veterans' Employment Service enough to enable them to serve the disabled veterans adequately.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CANFIELD].

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I am sorry the distinguished gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] was not on the floor of the House yesterday afternoon when I addresed myself to the appropriation for the Customs Department. Had he been on the floor yesterday afternoon or had he read my remarks in the RECORD this morning, he would not have made the remarks he did on the floor of the House today.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the debate thus far is indicative of the approaching contest. The question is: Are we going to make a courageous and determined effort to keep faith with the people and reduce expenses of government in accordance with the mandate given to the Eightieth Congress.

Within a few minutes the Clerk will be reading the bill for amendment. In accordance with advance notice, given by those who are opposed to reducing these expenses, amendments will be offered, the very purpose of which are to destroy the accomplishments of this subcommittee. I warn the House that crippling amendments should be voted down if there is to be any real saving by the Congress.

For week upon week this subcommittee has been meeting daily, from early morning until late at night, in an effort to see that adequate money to carry on the necessary functions of government is provided. There is no disposition on the part of the committee or the majority to cut expenses simply for the sake of cutting expenses. The real purpose is to carry on Government efficiently and at the least possible expense—plenty of dollars for necessary and proper activities but not one penny for waste, extravagance, or political partisan activities. I hold in my hand the printed hearings. There are 847 pages. Every item carried in this bill has been justified before the committee and it is now the duty of the Congress to uphold the hands of a committee possessed of sufficient courage to make cuts where cuts can be made without injury to government, even though pet projects are eliminated and selfish interests are offended.

According to the printed report accompanying this bill, it carries $77,825,520 less than the Presidential budget estimate. The bill as reported carries a total of $1,685,586,780. Now that is not as great a reduction as I should like to see; however, the committee says that this is the largest amount that can be taken from this particular budget and still permit adequate money for the several agencies and departments to do the things that should be done in the interest of all the people during the coming fiscal year.

Mr. Chairman, let us approach the amendment stage in a spirit of calmness and sincerity. Let us act conscientiously, thoughtfully, and not emotionally. Let us forget that the center aisle divides us politically. Up to now the indication is that those who have controlled the Congress during the last few years have become so in the habit of increasing budgets rather than decreasing budgets that it is going to be very difficult for them to espouse the new philosophy of the majority and proceed along the line of less spending, less taxes, more efficiency, and eventually a balanced budget.

Mr. Chairman, unless we do adopt this philosophy and act accordingly, we will have betrayed the trust that the people placed in us in November.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself the remaining time in order that I may answer a few of the questions that have been submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 13 minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, it ought to be perfectly apparent how difficult it is to keep a pledge made to the American people to reduce expenditures of Government. Everyone says, "Oh, yes. Don't touch this agency. Go over to the other one. It is all right to go into that one but don't touch this one."

I just could not understand how my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] could get up here and make the speech he made. Evidently my friend has not even read the report of the committee. Evidently he does not know anything about what is in the report or he could not have made the statements he made.

Let me give you a few facts to demonstrate the truth of what I have just said. He has stated that we have emasculated and killed the Conciliation Service. Yes. We have practically killed the Conciliation Service by our action. Let me give you the figures and let us see whether we have or not.

Under the leadership of the gentleman from Massachusetts and a strong New Deal Congress, what did you do for the Conciliation Service? In 1938, you gave them $273,000. In 1939, you gave them $283,470. In 1940, you gave them $325,000. In 1941, $383,400. In 1942, $444,300. In 1943, $475,917. In 1944, $502,700. In 1945, $493,000. In 1946, $504,350. In 1947–48, $2,050,000. You did not tell the Congress that. You did not tell the American people that. Those figures speak for themselves.

Now, you said we have destroyed the functions of the National Labor Relations Board. What are the facts? Again I say the Minority Whip evidently has not read the report. He listens to a lot of propaganda from these birds down in the Department. Let me give you the facts. In 1945, the National Labor Relations Board, under the generous treatment of the New Deal Congress and under the leadership of the gentleman from Massachusetts, got from this Congress $3,664,373. What did they get in 1946? I will give it to you. Let us not listen to a lot of bunk. Let us get the facts. In 1946, the same Congress, under the leadership of the gentleman from Massachusetts, so generous, gave to the National Labor Relations Board $4,307,530. And in 1947, $4,481,900. The 1948 estimate was $7,934,000. Your committee this year gave to them $4,033,700. How does that stack up?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course you will not.

Mr. KEEFE. I have given you the facts.

Mr. McCORMACK. But there is one important fact lacking.

Mr. KEEFE. There is no important fact lacking. Anyone who wants the facts can look in the record and find them. It is too hard to do that for some people. They prefer to listen to a lot of this bunk that is passed out by the interested parties.

Now I want to talk to you about this Veterans' Employment Service. I had a lot of people come to me this morning, and it is perfectly obvious that the Members of Congress themselves are not familiar with that situation. Let me see if I can tell it to you and thus dispel a lot more bunk that has been handed to you, showing how hard it is to try to reduce an appropriation once it has been granted.

Under the provisions of the Wagner-Peyser Act, with which I assume you are all familiar, which was passed by the Congress in 1933, if you read the Wagner-Peyser Act you will see there is a provision in that act for the establishment of a veterans' placement service. Ever since 1933 right down to the present moment, there has been in every employment office in the United States a veterans' placement and counseling service. That is the service some of you think we have cut down. I have had Member after Member come and say: "You can't cut that old Veterans' Employment Service that has been in these employment offices."

We have not taken a dollar away from the Veterans' Placement Service and the Veterans' Employment Service. That has been in the employment offices since 1937.

We have given $71,000,000, the exact sum asked by the States to carry on that function; every dollar they asked for we have appropriated.

Then what have we done? Let me tell you. You will have difficulty finding out and some of you do not want to find out. Some people do not want the truth. They want to give you some more bunk.

There is an outfit called the Veterans' Placement Service, which was created as the result of title IV of the GI bill, the Servicemen's Readjustment Act. I had something to do with preparing the language in that bill and I know what I am talking about. In title IV of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act a committee is set up consisting of the Secretary of Labor; Mr. Hershey, the head of Selective Service; and General Bradley, the head of the Veterans' Administration They are authorized under the provisions of that law to select a secretary, and they selected, or somebody selected, a man by the name of Perry Faulkner, from Ohio. He came down here to be the secretary of that veterans' placement body set up in title IV of this bill. Now, if you read title IV—and I suggest that the gentleman from Massachusetts and others read it so they will know what there is in title IV—you will see it provides for a liaison between this committee set up here in Washington——

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not yield. The gentleman cannot interrupt at this moment.

It provides for a liaison in the form of a representative to be appointed to sit in each State, one man who would transfer to the local employment services the ideas of this committee set up under title IV.

Instead of doing that, what have they done? They have created a new Federal employment service for veterans, an entirely new service superimposed upon the regular Employment Service, and they have hired some 677 special agents throughout the country operating under the direction of Mr. Faulkner here at the Federal level. The Employment Service is under the Department of Labor. Mr. Faulkner's service is responsible only to General Bradley in the Veterans' Administration. Administratively the Secretary of Labor has no control over it whatsoever; and, as I told you yesterday, when the Secretary was discussing this matter before our committee, he said that as an administrative proposition the whole thing was simply "nuts."

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not yield. I want to give these facts to the gentleman.

The party in power, represented by the majority of this committee, had tremendous difficulty in getting from Mr. Faulkner this year just exactly what he wanted. Look at the record and read it, and you will find it. He had a lot of difficulty understanding the budget estimates. He could not understand what the Bureau of the Budget had done. He said he wanted only 500 people in the field. The Bureau of the Budget gave him 640. He could not understand that, neither could we. So we cut his outfit about a million and a half dollars, that is all.

We have given everything to the Employment Service to carry on its veterans' service as it has carried it on up to the establishment of this service, and we gave Mr. Faulkner $1,700,000 to carry on his service on top of that. I think the committee has been exceedingly liberal.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. ROONEY. Is it not the fact that the request made of the Bureau of the Budget and by Mr. Faulkner, the head of this veterans' employment service, was in the amount of $3,309,300, and that the committee cut it to $1,756,800?

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman is absolutely misinformed; and whoever gave him those figures has been just as guilty of misstating the facts as many of these other things that have been said here during the debate on this bill. I have the figures right before me. I do not have to take it from somebody down in the department. Look at the budget itself; it is there, nobody can take it out. The Employment Service for 1948 requested $2,650,600. They had for expenditure in 1947 $2,342,500. Now, the committee allowed them $1,756,800, or a reduction of $585,700 in that item.

Now, let me say this to you, my friends. You are going to be right up against a wedge in the road. You are either going to keep your promises to the people that sent you here or you are going to listen to this suave talk that I have listened to now for 8 years. You will never cut the estimates of the Bureau of the Budget until you cut, and that requires action here today.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. All time has expired.

The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums are appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, namely:

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if the Members read the Times-Herald for today, they will have observed an editorial which says that Congress evidently pulled a "boner" in enacting the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill with a slash of $6,500,000 for the Customs Service.

Now, the accuracy of that editorial is on a par with some of the inaccuracies that have been ventilated on this floor. No. 1 is that there was no slash of $6,500,000 in the Customs Service. The committee did take out $3,500,000, but only when they came to us with an estimate of more than $6,000,000 over and above the fiscal year 1947. So, in truth and in fact the bill as it left this floor had in it over $3,000,000 more for the Customs Service than in the fiscal year 1947.

Now, when some inquiry was made as to how that editorial was written and where they got the figures, it was stated—and I shall not use names this morning—but it was stated this morning over the telephone that that editorial came from New York, and it indicates what is going on at the present time by way of an organized effort on the part of the bureaus and the agencies and the departments of government to seek to roll back the intent of Congress and to have this money restored. In other words, the bureaus are seeking to frustrate the efforts of Congress to achieve economy.

Now, it is only a few days that the Treasury announced that 8,200 revenue agents would be fired, who are collection men. The Treasury forgets that there are over 33,000 administrative employees in the Treasury, as compared with 26,000 who are gathering taxes in the field, and in that report—and I wrote the language myself—we said the committee was going to review Treasury and make sure that the field force was not dissipated and impaired. But notwithstanding that expression of intent, they are firing them in the wrong place, and I have been advised from very credible sources that the best propagandists and informational specialists and publicists in the Treasury Department have been assigned to carry on this campaign in the country. That is a pretty fair indication of what is going on.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think the gentleman, in all fairness, ought to state the source of his information.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Definitely not. I am not going to give anybody the ax. You know what will happen. Any person's job will be just as good as through at 6 o'clock tonight if his name is revealed.

But I am telling you about the announcement in the paper, and it is on a par with this editorial that appeared in the Washington Times-Herald this morning. Evidently they do not want any economy, so they send any number of inaccuracies into all the corners of the country. That is why the governors and others are calling up Members of the other body right now, and they are wanting to find out what we did and what the basis for it was.

They are getting $3,000,000 more in the Customs Service than they had last year, and they asked for a good many additional employees over and above the number now on the rolls. The committee took out $1,668,000 for new personnel—that is more persons than they had in the fiscal year 1947. Now, how do you justify this statement from the Treasury Department that men now in the Customs Service have to be laid off? That is a part of an organized campaign.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. CANFIELD. Is it not true that the bureau also asked for a foreign agency, which the committee disallowed?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes. They wanted $2,200,000 for a customs agency service abroad, a service that can be performed by the consular service in the State Department.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I think, with all due deference to the gentleman, there is much to be said for a foreign connection in the customs service with which, perhaps, the Committee on Appropriations is not at all familiar. A smuggler is frequently detected before he leaves a foreign land.

I want to ask this question of the gentleman. The gentleman admitted that a cut has been made in the customs service.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes; half as much as was reported in the newspapers, but still more than three million above the fiscal year 1947.

Let us get the facts straight. They asked us for $6,500,000 more for fiscal 1948 than they had in fiscal 1947. We just halved that amount and gave them $3,150,000 more in 1948 than they have in the current fiscal year. Most of the cut came out of the fact that we disallowed not the people who are on the rolls today but the increased number that they requested over the current year of 1947. Then, in addition, we disallowed the amount for setting up this foreign agency, because we thought the State Department facilities could provide the information that is necessary.

I want to admonish the agencies of government that they forget that the Congress, which has the appropriating power, also has the rescinding power. I am going to suggest to the chairman of the subcommittee that we ask the bureau chiefs in the Treasury Department, including the Secretary, to come up some day soon and confront them with these releases and say, "Where did these come from? Where did you get these figures?" And then point the finger at them and say, "Look here. Maybe the cut should have been more. Do not forget that if we cannot enforce the will of the people for economy and there comes a test of strength as to whether the Congress or the appointed bureaus are running the Government of the United States, we can exercise the rescinding power over in the Appropriations Committee and take away a little more."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in talking with the Chief of the Secret Service yesterday, he informed me that they have to let 95 of their agents go, at a time when counterfeiting is going to come back actively again. He told me that about 95 would have to be let go, men assigned to the important duty of detecting counterfeiting.

On this situation in the Customs Service our Republican friends are apologizing and defending themselves, and it is going to grow and grow and grow, until between now and June 30 they will arrive at the inevitable result of having trapped themselves.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] has a very unusual habit when anybody disagrees with him of charging in his loud-voiced manner that everything the other fellow says is bunk, bunk, and he uses a lot of other common, common phrases of that kind. The gentleman has referred in such a manner to everything that has been said by any Democrat who disagrees with him, and I have heard him say the same thing about Republicans who disagreed with him, so it is apparent that the only inference we can draw is that the superintelligent Member of the House is the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE].

He overlooked putting in some important facts when he made his presentation on dollars and cents. He did not tell you that the activities of the Conciliation Service in 1938 would not be comparable with the activities in 1948 or the fiscal year 1947. He did not tell you that there would be increased business. He did not tell you that there are increased salaries.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman refused to yield to me, but I yield to him.

Mr. KEEFE. I thank the gentleman very much. That is very kind of him.

Mr. McCORMACK. I have never refused to yield to the gentleman, that I can remember.

Mr. KEEFE. I suggest again that the distinguished gentleman read the record and the report, and he will see that they have a rapidly declining business in the Conciliation Service, instead of an expanding one. That is their testimony.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman overlooks the fact that during the war there was not so much activity in the lines in which many agencies were engaged, but that they will have to engage in increased activities after the war. This applies to the Conciliation Service and the National Labor Relations Board. The War Labor Board took over during the war and had jurisdiction over a lot of these activities. Now, with the termination of the War Labor Board, the Conciliation and Mediation Service and the National Labor Relations Board must pick up these activities.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. ROONEY. Is it not a fact that the cases which now come before the Conciliation Service are much more involved and take much more time and are very much more important to the economy of our country?

Mr. McCORMACK. I believe the statement just made by the gentleman from New York is based upon his study and experience as a member of the subcommittee having jurisdiction of that subject matter.

I have here an editorial from the Washington Star. While I admire that paper, I do not believe by any means that the Washington Star is a Democratic paper. In talking of the action of the subcommittee on appropriations under the heading of "Bad politics," the editorial said:

> On the whole record, however, it would be difficult to say that Congress would be wholly unjustified in coming to the conclusion—> that Mr. Warren is the wrong man for the job he holds. But that is an entirely different thing from saying that the Appropriations Committee is justified in the action it has taken.

That is, talking about Mr. Warren—

> The committee has not been content merely to lock the door on Mr. Warren. Instead, through an abuse of its control of the purse, it has assumed a veto power over the filling of Mr. Warren's post and the posts of about 100 other executives and employees of the Conciliation Service.

That is what I said during my remarks. That is what the gentleman referred to as "bunk." Well, the Washington Star is in the same category as the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The gentleman from Wisconsin, if I may say so, in his dynamic character, has an unfortunate habit of characterizing the remarks made by other Members. So far as I am concerned, any time he criticizes anything I say as bunk, I consider the characterization coming from the gentleman from Wisconsin as one of the finest and highest compliments that I can receive.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, it is always a pleasure to listen to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK]. He says it is all right with him to have what he says characterized by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] as bunk. You know what was said when the fellow kissed the cow—"Everyone to his taste." If the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] has no objection to the characterization, I am sure I have none. Whether his statements were accurately described as bunk can be determined by a reading of the RECORD.

Here is what is griping some of our friends on the other side. There are a lot of good, fine, patriotic gentlemen on the other side, and they vote with us once in a while and sometimes twice in a while—in fact, whenever they think we offer something worth while. We helped them to put through some good legislation last year. That brings me to the point of asking: Did not the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] vote for this bill, the Treasury and Post Office bill which went through the other day, one of the bills which he is criticizing today and because of which he now complains about the discharge of some people in the customs service?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The vote was 387 to nothing.

Mr. HOFFMAN. To nothing?

Mr. DIRKSEN. That is right.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Then the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] must have voted for it. Nevertheless the gentleman comes here today and cries and weeps and moans about the cut in the bill and criticizes what he says is going to happen and of what he thinks is going to happen he is fearful. Here is what is the matter with some of those boys on the other side, if I may violate the rules by so referring to them, and I would like to address my colleagues on this side of the aisle.

For years the agencies down there in the executive departments and elsewhere all over the country have been spending Federal money to elect New Dealers and some good Democrats from the South, and some of us are glad to know that is one good thing that has come out of all that spending. Now, when they find that we intend to carry out our promises and give the country a little economy and a little efficiency, a little freedom from bureaucratic rule, they realize that if that pocketbook is taken away from them they will not have all that money to be spent in their behalf. Sure, it hurts. Running for office on your own pocketbook is one thing, and running for office with Federal funds and influence is something else again. If I had been running in that kind of a campaign in that way, I too, would be fearful of what might happen to me the next time because my funds could not possibly equal the funds of the Federal Treasury. If you cut some folks from the Federal funds and their jobs they cannot buy any more CIO-PAC support through the activities of the Labor Department and the National Labor Relations Board and all those Federal agencies which have been campaigning over the years. They are fearful of what might happen in 1948. Cry about it? Sure. Weep? Sure. It will not do them any good because the Republicans are going to carry out those campaign promises they made. That may be something of a shock to some, as I said before. It is unusual, but that is the way I think it is going to be. That is the way I hope it will be.

Republicans and Democrats who want economy and efficiency, who are tired of government by Federal employees, will do well to deprive the bureaus and agencies of the funds which enable them to carry on extralegal activities.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman, of course, speaking as he does, has lived up to just what I said he was a little while ago—one of the great leaders of the Republican Party.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I only wish that were true. For 10 years I tried to get the House—but you so dominated it that they would not listen—I tried for 10 years to get the Communists kicked out. When President Truman found out the Congress was about to do it, along he came, tagging along behind. I will not say that of him and I will not say it of any Member of this House, but I will say that of somebody, just like the stink that follows an automobile when the gas is burned out, along they come. Now, they are all against Communists. They all want to do something about these wicked departments, because they do not believe the people were exercising good judgment in November but they nevertheless realize it might happen again in 1948. So they want to get in before the storm comes.

Oh, do not let them steal your thunder. Let us cut this appropriation just as the committee suggested we should, for the reasons given by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] who know what they are talking about, and not follow along some of these campaign speeches that might well be made on a soap box in Boston or somewhere else.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has expired.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have asked for more time this morning to supplement my remarks of yesterday on the abolition of the Division of Labor Standards in the Labor Department appropriation bill. I understand that after I left this hall yesterday, the chairman of the House Subcommittee on Labor Department and Federal Security Appropriations, undertook to instruct me as to the action of the committee on the child-labor and youth-employment function of this Division. He attempted to reassure me that I might save what he apparently regarded as my crocodile tears, or something of the sort, over what the Republican majority had done to the future protection of our Nation's youth.

Let me assure the chairman and Republican members of the House Appropriations Committee that I have read their report with exceeding care. But I am sorry to tell them that it does not make me feel any better. Had they extended me the courtesy yesterday of allowing me to finish my remarks, I would have explained why. I shall do so this morning, although I hope some of you may be sufficiently interested to read my full statement in the RECORD of yesterday. The Republican majority of the House Appropriations Committee cut in half the funds available for the child-labor and youth-employment function of the Division of Labor Standards and transferred the functions to the Wage and Hour Division of the Department. Now that action to which they point with pride will satisfy nobody who is seriously concerned for the welfare of children.

The functions were transferred on the score that the Wage and Hour Division administers the wage-and-hour provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, and therefore could and should administer the child-labor provisions and perform all the research and advisory services now being carried on by the Division of Labor Standards. Now if anybody should know what the intent of Congress was when it enacted the Fair Labor Standards Act and conferred upon the then Children's Bureau, and now the Division of Labor Standards, the administration of the child-labor provisions of the act, I really think I should. I was chairman of the House Labor Committee which deliberated over many possible methods of administering this act. Every draft proposed to use the experience and skill of the Children's Bureau in some way to enforce the child-labor provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. The final version placed all responsibility for their administration in the Children's Bureau.

I also understand that my remarks were construed by the gentleman from Wisconsin as reflecting upon the competency of the Wage and Hour Division. I can assure you that they were not so intended. I have a high regard for the Wage and Hour Division, but I know full well that that Division is an enforcement agency. Its job is to check employers' pay rolls, time records, invoices—things like that, a type of accounting job. Why should they now be saddled with research on hazardous jobs for youngsters? Why should we believe that they are equipped to work with State administrators and women's groups and labor and community organizations in developing better State child labor standards? Why should they be asked to negotiate agreements with States on certificates of age?

I note by the report that you are also proposing that they become safety and health inspectors for the States. At the same time you cut their funds by 25 percent. They are now getting around to only 8 percent of the plants and you expect them to take on all of these new functions. With a smaller staff they will probably get around to 4 percent. They have plenty to do in the enforcement of the Wage and Hour Act without becoming the promoters of improved standards of child labor.

The Congress that passed the wage and hour bill, as I have said before, decided after much deliberation to keep the child labor and youth employment functions separate from the Wage and Hour Division. What facts had this Congress that would change the decisions of its predecessor? A small House Appropriations subcommittee has taken upon itself to rewrite the law.

If this Congress takes that step, it will not be on the merits of the question, I can assure you. This Congress will be playing politics with its future generations. It will be doing so at a time when, as a result of war, over two and one-half times as many youngsters are at work as in 1940, at a time when a million fewer children are in high school than in 1941.

In further reply to the gentleman from Wisconsin, I fear that there is some misunderstanding about the point of view expressed by the Secretary of Labor concerning the transfer of the child-labor and youth-employment functions of the Bureau of Labor Standards to the Wage-and-Hour Division. He did not state definitely that he would recommend the transfer of the entire functions of the Bureau to the Wage-and-Hour Division but said that he would study the problem when the Wage-and-Hour Division was transferred back to Washington. It may be that there are some inspection functions which could be transferred to the Wage-and-Hour Division, and in cases of duplications of functions, I would not oppose such a transfer. However, I would oppose the transfer of the entire Division, as it was erroneously stated the Secretary of Labor suggested. The majority of this Congress insist they received the people's mandate last November to economize in government. We Democrats are as interested as anybody else in true economy. But we do not think you Republicans received any mandate to exploit America's future citizens. The American people did not give you a mandate to recreate the sweatshops of the nineteenth century. They gave you no mandate to condemn their 12- and 14-year-olds to long hours, night work, back-breaking toil for starvation wages, hazards of life and limb, too early contact with the seamy side of life. They gave you no mandate to deprive their children of a chance to learn to work and to live and to develop to the height of their capacity. They gave you no mandate to deny their children the proudest heritage of America.

Further reference was made to the transfer of a considerable amount of money from the Bureau of Labor Standards to the Wage and Hour Division for the child labor and youth employment program. The truth of the matter is that this bill decreases the funds of the child labor and youth employment program by 50 percent. That 50 percent has been transferred to the Wage and Hour Division appropriation. The other 50 percent is so-called economy.

The kind of economy that will help to provide a tax decrease at the expense of the children of America.

I presume, Mr. Chairman, this economy is considered necessary because I understand that tomorrow a bill will come to the House to cut the taxes of the wealthy people of this country who can well afford to pay taxes, 30 percent. Is that the kind of economy you want? It certainly is not the kind of economy I want. Or is that the kind of economy you believe the people gave you a mandate for?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I address my remarks not only to the Members here, but to the gentlewoman from New Jersey, who I know cannot disagree with what I shall say, because she well knows that they have the so-called Walsh-Healey Act still on the books; not only the Fair Labor Standards Act but the Walsh-Healey Act. She did not tell you about that. She did not tell you that ever since the Walsh-Healey Act has been on the books that the Wage and Hour Division has not only made the inspections for child-labor violations, but the Wage and Hour Division has done all of the work of enforcement and punishment and recommendations, every single thing, that the Children's Bureau does as to child-labor work under the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

Now then, to say that the Wage and Hour Division is not equipped to handle this function is to say that they are not able functionally or otherwise to handle the functions placed upon them as to child-labor interests.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. The gentlewoman did not yield to me but I will yield.

Mrs. NORTON. The gentleman knows perfectly well that the Wage and Hour Division cannot handle the children's affairs as well as the Children's Bureau can. He knows that.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, that is a categorical statement by the gentlewoman, and may I say to her that I recommend that she read the hearings, and if she does, she will see.

Mrs. NORTON. I have.

Mr. KEEFE. Well, if she has, then she knows that her statement is not correct, because she knows that I asked the specific question of Mr. Walling, "Is the Wage and Hour Division equipped to do this work?" And the answer of Mr. Walling, the Wage and Hour Administrator, was that they were; that they are already doing that work under the Walsh-Healey Act.

Now, then, why give any misrepresentation to the press or the public or this Congress? The fact of the matter is that Mr. Schwellenbach himself very definitely said they were giving consideration to turning this over to the Wage and Hour Division, and perhaps the only reason that it was not turned over at the time of the hearings was because the Wage and Hour Division was still located up in New York and had not got back to Washington. Now, that is all there is to it.

May I say to the gentlewoman from New Jersey something that perhaps she does not know and she ought to be informed on the subject, that we were given a budget estimate showing just exactly how this transfer could be effectuated, and it is in the record.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not yield further. The gentlewoman has not read the record. If she had she would know those facts, and she would not make the statements she made on this floor, and I think it is high time that instead of just going on with these glittering generalities of talking about how we have done away with the protection for the little children and the youth of America, you ought to listen to what Katharine Lenroot, the head of the Children's Bureau, said about the man who is addressing you on that subject, when she spoke night before last in my own city, and you would get a different impression and you would not be talking about the gentleman from Wisconsin like you have been. I know something about the Children's Bureau and I have been one of its protagonists, as the gentlewoman from New Jersey well knows, ever since the Children's Bureau has been in existence.

You shake your head. I am not going to try to convince the gentlewoman from New Jersey. A lot of people have tried to convince Boss Hague up there and they have not been successful.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in summing up this debate, which has been very interesting, there comes to my mind the fact that the people of these United States of America spoke out at the last election as to the course they would like for their Government to follow.

Something was said by one of the previous speakers about our getting certain mandates. We did get a mandate to reduce the cost of Government, because the people know that the only way to balance the budget, the only way to reduce taxes, and the only way to get the ship of state out of the dangerous position it is in at the present time is to move it out of the danger zone through economy in Government back toward a sounder financial economy. We are their representatives, supposed to carry out their wishes. The Republican majority have from the first day they came here up to this very minute given every evidence of carrying out that mandate of the people. We have worked and voted for economy. The Republican Party has been opposed in this effort by you of the minority at every step of the way from the day the President called for a budget of $37,500,000 to run this Government in peacetime, four times what it had ever cost to run the Government in peacetime before. You are opposing us again today. You of the minority here on the floor of the House made your initial step by trying to defeat the will of the people which we of the Republican majority were trying to carry out when we voted in this House to cut the budget by $6,000,000,000. After we had achieved that objective, then the strategy of opposition to every economy became very plain through the minority leader and the minority whip, who has injected himself so forcefully into the debate today. That strategy is to fight the reduction in the cost of Government, the reduction sought by the Republicans, every time an appropriation bill comes on the floor of the House. They seek to prevent the Republican majority from reducing governmental expense in the interest of the taxpayers.

It is unfortunate that all of the American people who voted in this last election and who will have an opportunity to vote in the 1948 election that they cannot be in this gallery today, yes; that they could not have been here when we were voting to reduce the budget, yes; that they could not have been here when we were voting 2 weeks ago on the Treasury-Post Office Appropriation bill, so the people in the districts represented by those on the minority side who have sought to block the way, could have found out exactly what their strategy is, and what they are trying to do. After they had opposed reducing the appropriation in the Treasury-Post Office Appropriation bill and sought to block the reduction that we sought to bring about in the interest of the American people, when they had to answer a roll call go down in the printed record they voted 100 percent to support the action the majority had forced through on that particular bill. I predict that when the roll is called today the dissidents on the minority side will make a similar record, so that they can say in the next campaign to their people, who are so far away that they cannot be here to keep a watchful eye on them, "Oh, yes; we voted for a reduction in the cost of government."

This is the people's fight, and the Republicans will not turn back. They will keep their promises. If we do not cut the cost of government now and thereby reduce the Federal pay rolls it will never be done. The people of the Nation should know the opposition on this floor joined with the bureaucrats here in Washington are standing together as they have stood for the past 14 years solidly fighting against our efforts for economy in the interest of the great mass of the American people.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries: For personal services in the District of Columbia, $819,500.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROONEY: On page 2, line 6, strike out "$819,500" and insert "$1,190,000."

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. ROONEY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the motion is not in order now, until some debate is had on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is well taken. The motion is not in order at this time, since there has been no debate on the amendment.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, being a member of this great subcommittee, I suppose I should defend my chairman, the gifted gentleman from Wisconsin, who does not always use the word "bunk," who does not always answer the gentlewoman from New Jersey by referring to Mayor Hague, incidentally a great man, who has done more for public health, welfare, and education, and to help the little man in the State of New Jersey than the gentleman from Wisconsin ever did in his life. The gentleman from Wisconsin is really a charming fellow, when you get to know him. I spent 9 weeks with him as a member of this subcommittee, and it was just one grand tea party. If you did not agree with him, whether you were a member of the minority or the majority, it did not get you anywhere. He wrote the bill. You saw him on the march here awhile ago, strutting as he usually does from one side of the floor to the other, and you have listened, I am sure, to all those fancy expressions of his.

In yesterday's debate he quoted the Secretary of Labor, Mr. Schwellenbach, as having said that the set-up in the Veterans' Employment Service was "nuts." I will say at this point that Secretary of Labor Schwellenbach at no time in the hearings reflected in the slightest degree upon the ability or integrity of Mr. Perry Faulkner, the Director of the Veterans' Employment Service, appointed by General Bradley, the Administrator of the Veterans' Administration, or upon the work of the Veterans' Employment Service. He did say that it was an unusual situation where General Bradley appointed Mr. Faulkner and he—Secretary Schwellenbach—appointed the entire staff. Mr. Schwellenbach advocated a much larger appropriation—larger to the extent of about a million dollars for the Veterans' Employment Service of the United States Employment Service.

We now have before us the first item in the march of the gentleman from Wisconsin to cut the vitals out of the functions of the Department of Labor. We have here an item requested by the Bureau of the Budget in the amount of $1,190,000 for salaries and expenses in the District of Columbia for the Secretary's office. Is it such a great increase? Oh, no. In the present fiscal year the amount under which they are now operating is $1,015,400. But the gentleman from Wisconsin has cut that down to the amount of $819,500. It is apparent, as pointed out here yesterday and today, that the march of the gentleman from Wisconsin and his colleagues against the Labor Department is well on the way. Why have they singled out that particular Department and not the other items in this general bill, the total amount of which is $1,763,412,300? Although the amount requested by the Department of Labor for its annual appropriation for fiscal 1948 is only $103,578,700, which is less than 6 percent of the total amount $1,763,412,300 requested in this appropriation bill, nevertheless the gentleman from Wisconsin and his colleagues on the majority side have cut the Labor Department operations to the tune of $12,714,500, which is 46 percent of the total cut of $27,725,500 referred to by the gentleman from Minnesota yesterday.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, can anyone advise us how long it will be before we vote?

Mr. KEEFE. At the present rate, and if the same tactics are indulged in, which I understand will be indulged in all through the bill, I assume we will be here until midnight.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROONEY. Let me say that that is another familiar expression of the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I object to the extension of 5 minutes if that is the way the gentleman is going to speak.

The CHAIRMAN. The objection of the gentleman from Michigan comes too late.

Mr. ROONEY. May I say that the usual careless language so often used by the gentleman from Wisconsin has again been heard. When anyone who disagrees with him is talking, that Member is using dilatory tactics—tactics designed to interfere with what? With the gentleman's full sway as a dictator and as a czar of this appropriation bill. He might well stop, look, and listen.

There was an editorial in this morning's Times-Herald referring to a subject which has been discussed previously. I quote from it:

Because of this $6,500,000 Customs Bureau slash—

And that was the slash, you know, in the Treasury, Post Office appropriation bill passed a week or so ago by this House—about 1,600 of the Bureau's employees are in process of being let out, effective March 28, which is next Friday. Customs work at the key port of New York, where most legitimate tolls are paid, and most smugglers ply their trade, will be crippled by this proposed cut.

Harry M. Durning, Collector of the Port of New York, now has a staff of 340 men engaged in this valuable work. Durning has been forced to notify 740 of his staff, including 600 war veterans, of their impending dismissal. This will leave America's greatest port with a skeleton force of 100 men.

According to John C. Tulloch, an old collector of the port and border patrol organizer at the important boundary point of Ogdensburg, N. Y., these dismissals also will leave the Canadian border "wide open" to smugglers of all manner of contraband, and to illegal entry of aliens as well. Similar results are expected along the Mexican border.

The loss in revenues to the Government, if such a condition lasts any considerable length of time, will more than outweigh the cut of $6,500,000 in the Customs Bureau's allotment of funds for 1947-48.

Somewhere in the hiring-and-firing confusion, a serious injustice has been done our Customs Bureau, and it is one which ought to be rectified without delay.

The Senate can still perform this job, when it acts on the cost-cutting bill passed by the House. We hope the Senate will do just that, and plug these serious port and border leaks. It seems obvious that better ways to save money can be found than this one.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROONEY. I am sorry. I do not have time.

So I say, you are here today doing the very same thing in connection with the Labor Department appropriation when you single them out for slaughter and cut them 46 percent of the actual amount admitted by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN] as the amount cut from the budget estimates in connection with this appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] has expired.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I regret exceedingly to hear the kind of speech that has just been delivered on this floor, when a member of the Subcommittee on Appropriations for Labor and the Federal Security tries to make the Members of the House believe that the chairman of this particular committee is a swaggering czar, strutting, and so forth, and so on; and that the chairman of this subcommittee has written the bill without consultation with his colleagues. I feel that the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] has violated the rules of the House in so stating, and I am looking right at him when I am saying this.

Mr. ROONEY. I say I am looking right at the gentleman, too.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. It is regrettable that we cannot discuss this particular bill upon its merits. I know and any member of the majority on the subcommittee will testify to the fact, that very little interest was given in the hearings by either of the two members of the minority on that committee. Scarcely ever did they offer anything constructive. I ask you to go through the hearings and see whether you can find any place where those two members of the minority offered any constructive suggestions.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I refuse to yield. The gentleman might as well sit down. Scarcely any place in the record can you find anything constructive offered by either the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY], or the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY], and I challenge them to find it.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I also refuse to yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I refuse to yield.

Mr. Chairman, it seems to me too bad, after 6 weeks' hearings and attempting to do something worthwhile for the people of this Nation, that the majority members of the committee must virtually carry the entire load by themselves. Certainly we had to write the bill, the four of us in the majority. There was no cooperation from the others whatsoever.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. With the exception of the Public Health Service.

I am just saying these few words in the hope that we can get down to sanity in the discussion of this bill, Mr. Chairman. Let us discuss issues, let us not try to attribute to the chairman of this subcommittee, one of the most capable men in the Congress of the United States, statements to the effect that he is a czar, that he is strutting around, and so forth, and so on; whereas, if the truth were known, that particular man knows more about this bill than any Member of either body of the Congress.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment and all amendments thereto do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, may the amendment be read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the Clerk will again read the amendment.

There was no objection.

The Clerk again read the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROONEY) there were—ayes 65, noes 114.

So the amendment was rejected.

"Contingent expenses: For necessary expenses of the offices and bureaus of the Department, for which appropriations are not specifically made, including purchase of two passenger motor vehicles (including one at not to exceed $3,000); transfer of funds to United States Public Health Service for costs of health service program as authorized by act of August 8, 1946 (Public Law 658); commercial and labor-reporting services; when authorized by the Secretary of Labor, dues for library membership in societies or associations which issue publications to members only or at a price to members lower than to subscribers who are not members, not exceeding $400; newspapers, press clippings, and teletype news service not to exceed $7,300; and contract stenographic reporting services as authorized by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (Public Law 600); $468,400, of which $1,000 is for payment of claims pursuant to part 2 of the Federal Tort Claims Act."

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as this amendment applies to the Veterans' Employment Service I ask unanimous consent that at this time all four amendments be considered at once and that I be permitted to continue for an additional 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: On page 3 strike out lines 3 and 4 and following the figure "600;" add the following: "$474,950, of which $21,510 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of title IV except section 602 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, and of which $1,000 is for payment of claims pursuant to part II of the Federal Court Claims Act."

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, at this time I do not speak for any particular department of Government.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, may I interrupt the gentleman and say that I do not have any objection to his having five additional minutes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. May I make this inquiry? Will the gentleman agree to the consideration of all four amendments at this time?

Mr. ROONEY. Not at this point. I cannot say that I have studied it sufficiently. You see, the minority has been in entire accord with the accepted position of the gentleman in regard to increasing the Veterans' Employment Service. That has been our position all through the hearing. So I withdraw my objection to his proceeding for five additional minutes.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Then, Mr. Chairman, I renew my request that I be permitted to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I speak at this time for two of America's great veterans organizations, the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars. Naturally, they are concerned with the employment of veterans so much that at the moment they have at heart the interests of 1,300,000 unemployed veterans in the United States, the majority of whom are veterans of World War II. These organizations cannot understand why it is necessary to cut from this bill less than $1,000,000, and in so doing deny the unemployed veteran the service of 644 agents, whose responsibilities are to secure and place veterans in employment.

In the enactment of the provisions of title IV of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944—Public Law 346—Congress declared as its intent and purpose that there should be set up an effective job counseling and employment placement service for veterans and that to this end policies shall be promulgated and administered so as to provide for them the maximum of job opportunity in the field of gainful employment. For this purpose there was created to cooperate with and assist the United States Employment Service a Veterans' Placement Service Board. The present Chairman of this Board is Gen. Omar Bradley, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs. Gen. Lewis B. Hershey, Director of the Selective Service System, and the Honorable Lewis B. Schwellenbach, Secretary of Labor, are the other members. This Board is charged with determining all matters of policy relating to the Veterans' Employment Service of the United States Employment Service.

The Chairman of the Veterans' Placement Service Board was given direct authority and responsibility for carrying out its policies through the Veterans' Employment Representatives in the several States. This authority has been delegated to Mr. Perry Faulkner, executive secretary to the Veterans' Placement Service Board and Chief of the Veterans' Employment Service. The veterans' employment representatives in the several States are charged specifically by title IV of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944 as follows:

In cooperation with the public employment service staff in the State, he shall (a) be functionally responsible for the supervision of the registration of veterans in local employment offices for suitable types of employment and for placement of veterans in employment; (b) assist in securing and maintaining current information as to the various types of available employment in public works and private industry or business; (c) promote the interest of employers in employing veterans; (d) maintain regular contact with employers and veterans' organizations with a view of keeping employers advised of veterans available for employment and veterans advised of opportunities for employment; and (a) assist in every possible way in improving working conditions and the advancement of employment of veterans.

Section 605 of the Servicemen's readjustment Act of 1944 assigns budgetary responsibility to the Board as follows:

The Board through its executive secretary shall estimate the funds necesasry for the proper and efficient administration of this title; such estimated sums shall include the annual amounts necessary for salaries, rents, printing and binding, travel, and communications. Sums thus estimated shall be included as a special item in the annual budget of the United States Employment Service. Any funds appropriated pursuant to this special item as contained in the budget of the United States Employment Service shall not be available for any purpose other than that for which they were appropriated, except with the approval of the Board.

In March of 1946 the Veterans' Placement Service Board, in order to adequately carry out the provisions of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, deemed it necessary to materially increase the field staff of the Veterans' Employment Service. It was only after careful planning that the additional field staff was requested of the Bureau of the Budget. This additional staff was to include a few more assistant veterans' employment representatives in those States where the necessity warranted; but in the main the requested personnel, which are now called field assistants, were to be located in strategic areas throughout the various States and their duties were to locate job opportunities for veterans. However, the actual placements were to be made by the local employment offices as the Veterans' Employment Service had no desire whatsoever to attempt setting up its own employment service.

The headquarters staff very carefully planned, with the assistance of each individual State veterans' employment representative, the areas wherein the selected field assistants were to work. Vigilance has been maintained at all times to insure that the individual worked within his assigned area. The number of field assistants requested for their respective States was planned on a basis of 1 to every 30,000 veteran World War II population. Following this plan of expansion, the Veterans' Employment Service in March of 1946 requested approval from the Bureau of the Budget the following positions for the fiscal year of 1947.

Field: 1,029 positions at a cost of $3,101,750.

Department: 66 positions at a cost of $241,529.

Total positions, 1,095; total cost, $3,543,279.

The Bureau of the Budget did not approve the Veterans' Placement Service Board's expansion request, however the Appropriations Committee of Congress granted the following positions:

Field: 738 positions at a cost of $1,924,405.

Department: 57 positions at a cost of $171,990.

Total positions, 795; total cost, $2,096,395.

The Veterans' Employment Service, by exercising extreme conservatism in recruiting practices and observing economical management procedures, was able to successfully meet the ever-increasing demands being made upon it as of the first of the calendar year of 1947. However, it was apparent that the excellent record of job placements for veterans could not be maintained with the then current Veterans' Employment Service staff. The Veterans' Placement Service Board, therefore, after careful study, again recommended to the Bureau of the Budget in February of this year substantially the same addition in personnel as was made last year.

For the fiscal year 1948 the following positions were requested of the Bureau of the Budget:

Field: 1,005 positions at a cost of $3,263,446.

Department: 57 positions at a cost of $209,044.

Total positions, 1,062; total costs, $3,472,490.

The Bureau of the Budget recommended that Congress grant to the Veterans' Employment Service the following:

Field: 644 positions at a cost of $2,521,697.

Department: 32 positions at a cost of $128,799.

Total positions, 676; total cost, $2,650,496.

H. R. 2700, the present bill you are considering, grants to the Veterans' Employment Service only $1,756,800 for personnel services. Such a radical cut in appropriation would force the Veterans' Employment Service to lay off all of its newly appointed field assistants. These men are doing a splendid job of selling merchandise—the veteran. It is by placement of veterans in jobs that the Veterans' Employment Service is seeking to carry out congressional directives. Job placements of veterans represents the greatest of all benefits to veterans. Successful placement of veterans in jobs, in the minds of the Veterans' Placement Service Board, represents the most economical and beneficial service that could possibly be rendered to those citizens who have risked their lives in the service of their Nation.

Your cooperation and support is earnestly and sincerely solicited to the following amendments to H. R. 2700.

Inasmuch as section 605, paragraph (a), of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, specifically states:

> Sums thus estimated shall be included as a special item in the annual budget of the United States Employment Service. Any funds appropriated pursuant to this special item as contained in the budget of the United States Employment Service shall not be available for any purpose other than that for which they were appropriated, except with the approval of the Board.

It appears necessary to earmark all funds assigned to the Veterans' Employment Service. H. R. 207 does this only on personal services, hence a qualifying clause is suggested in each of the other budget items.

I. CONTINGENT EXPENSES

The Veterans' Employment Service requested the Bureau of the Budget for contingent expenses the sum of $21,510, and they, in turn, recommended to Congress that the Service be granted $18,700. In reporting out the appropriation bill the committee recommended a 20-percent cut in contingent expenses. The bill should be amended to increase the amount of $468,400—line 3, page 3—to $474,950, of which $21,510 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of title IV—except section 602—of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944.

The above category covers what might well be called practically all expenses for items other than personnel, travel, and printing and binding. The items include supplies, communications, transportation of things, equipment, and other materials necessary for the maintenance of any Federal service. In their request to the Bureau of the Budget for the sum of $21,510, the Veterans' Employment Service felt they were justified if they were to carry out their work efficiently and in good order. The Bureau of the Budget in their recommendation to the Congress lowered the figure to $18,700, or $2,810 less than the original request. No doubt this lesser figure was due to general cuts of practically all objects which we requested in the budget for the fiscal year 1948. The amendment serves to restore the original amount requested.

II. TRAVELING EXPENSES

The Veterans' Employment Service requested of the Bureau of the Budget for traveling expenses—departmental and field—the sum of $888,000 and they, in turn, recommended to Congress that the Service be granted $600,000. In reporting out the appropriation bill, the committee recommended a 30-percent cut for this item. The bill should be amended to increase the amount of $2,112,400—page 3, line 6—to $2,580,440, of which $888,000 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of title IV—except section 602—of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944.

Requests for travel funds for field personnel were figured on a formula which the Veterans' Employment Service has learned from many years' experience is quite accurate.

Twelve dollars a day covers both transportation and per diem. The State veterans' employment representatives, naturally, due to their administrative duties, are not in travel status as much as the assistant veterans' employment representatives, while the field assistants, whose work is solely in the field and not of an administrative nature, should be in travel a great portion of the time. However, with the exception of those field assistants working in thinly populated areas, there will be very little of this $12 a day travel cost spent in per diem. Nearly all will be transportation costs.

To arrive at the figures requested of the Bureau of the Budget, the Veterans' Employment Service merely multiplied the number of days the various members of their field staff should be in travel status, in order to properly do their job, by $12.

Each agency in the Government bases their individual travel requests upon such a formula, although the amount for each day's travel may vary in some instances. The Veterans' Employment Service formula is their own and, as has been previously stated, is based upon past travel records of field personnel. Stringent travel regulations are carefully enforced by the administrative staff of the Service. Employees in travel status are limited to their specifically assigned territories on the basis of a preaudited itinerary.

III. PRINTING AND BINDING

The Veterans' Employment Service requested of the Bureau of the Budget for printing and binding the sum of $50,000, and they, in turn, recommended to Congress that it be granted $40,000. In reporting out the appropriation bill the committee recommended a 20-percent cut. The bill should be amended to increase the amount of $414,700—line 8, page 3—to $432,700, of which $50,000 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of title IV—except section 602—of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944.

The request for $50,000 was made by the Veterans' Employment Service to cover necessary items involved under printing and binding. A successful potential employer—potential employer relationship is considered absolutely essential in the present pattern of the Veterans' Employment Service job-promotion program. Explanatory documents, technical tools such as charts, graphs, maps, and illustrative materials, as well as leaflets, pamphlets, and booklets have known to be invaluable media in aiding the promotion of the program. Receipt of systematized summaries of new legislation, changes in regulations, new directives, and actual listings of job opportunities are musts from the standpoint of both the field operations of the Veterans' Employment Service as well as the United States Employment Service. With the pending liquidation of the Retraining and Reemployment Administration and the apparent necessity of discontinuing certain functions of the Selective Service System, the absolute need of increased effort in this field appears obvious. Media for transmitting vital information to the various State employment services also is included in this item.

IV. UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

General administration: In reporting out the appropriation bill the committee recommended that the United States Employment Service be granted the sum of $2,656,800, of which $1,756,800—line 8, page 5—shall be for, and so forth. The bill should be amended to increase the total of $2,565,800—line 8, page 5—to $4,372,496, of which $3,472,496 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of title IV—except section 602—of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act.

Justification for this amendment is found in the forepart of the document. Your attention is called to the current liquidation of the Retraining and Reemployment Administration and the suggested transfer of certain responsibilities of the Selective Service System to the Veterans' Employment Service. Acceptance of additional responsibilities once assigned to these agencies on the part of the Veterans' Employment Service certainly should be considered as potential additional evidence for the need for the sum requested by the amendment.

I want to call to your attention at this time, and I repeat what I said in the beginning, there are more than a million unemployed veterans in the country today. You who are Members of this body look to the American Legion, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the D. A. V., and the other great veteran organizations to assist the Government and assist the people in general to place the veteran in employment. All, we agree, these organizations have done a magnificent job. But when you deny them the services of these 644 field men, you are taking away one of the most valuable assets they have to place the unemployed veterans in jobs.

We of organized veterandom believe in economy, sure we do, but we do not believe that economy should be practiced at the expense of the men who bared their chests to the bullets of the enemy on the many far-flung frontiers of this last war. We earnestly solicit your vote in support of these amendments all offered in behalf of these great veteran groups who speak for the veterans of this country.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAN ZANDT. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. ROONEY. I wish to commend the gentleman for his statement and say that I am in entire accord with him at this time. I withdraw my objection to considering the four amendments en bloc, as proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I have now had time to study them.

Mr. VAN ZANDT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the four amendments may be considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the remaining amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment No. 2 offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: On page 3, strike out line 6 and substitute therefor the following: "Department, $2,580,440, of which $888,000 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of Title IV (except section 602) of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944."

Amendment No. 3 offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: On page 3, strike out line 8 and substitute therefor the following: "Department, $492,700, of which $50,000 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of Title IV (except section 602) of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944."

Amendment No. 4 offered by Mr. VAN ZANDT: On page 5, strike out line 8, and substitute therefor the following: "Public Law 600), $4,372,496, of which $3,472,496 shall."

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, how easy it is to run to cover in the field of economy.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, is the gentleman rising in favor of this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from New York?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not yield.

Mr. ROONEY. I want to understand for what purpose the gentleman rises.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has been recognized.

Mr. KEEFE. If the gentleman who attempts to be so facetious will just sit down for a little while, I am sure when I have finished he will understand thoroughly why the gentleman rose. He cannot wait to hear the gentleman from Wisconsin speak. He wants to clap his hands because the Congress of the United States will not be able to save as much money as we thought we were going to. He gets up on this floor and agrees to everything that my friend the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] says. Oh, yes, he is for it. He is not only for that but he is for every other thing that will be presented here that will spend more money, and you will find that out before we are through with this bill.

I have received all the telegrams that you have received from the Veterans' Affairs Members of Congress. We went into this thing very thoroughly. This is not anything new. May I say to you of faint heart who get these telegrams that I told you back about 3 weeks ago that you were going to have to have courage if you were going to cut the expenditures of Government. I told you in this well and warned you what was going to happen. You are not going to get any help over on this side except from a few fine Democrats who want to save this country.

You are going to get the type of thing that my friend from New York is suggesting—that we increase everyone of these appropriations. That is what you are going to get. I warned you about it then, and it has all come to pass. Now, turn to the record. How many of you have read the record on this Veterans' Service? I do not think very many have read it from the questions that have been asked me. You have not had time to read it and it is not fair to expect that you would have had time. But you do have a committee that has worked diligently on this thing, may I say to you, despite the statements of the gentleman from Brooklyn who from the very first day that he came on this committee has attempted at all times to give no real suggestions, as the gentleman from Minnesota, has said, except to throw flies in the ointment all the time, as he is doing today. I expected that, too.

How many of you know what this agency is that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] is talking about? How many of you actually know what this organization is? I tried to explain it here a few moments ago when there were a few people on the floor. I tried to point out to you just what this veterans' placement service is and what is involved. I told you then, and I repeat now, that ever since 1933 when the Congress of the United States passed the Wagner-Peyser Act there has been a veterans' placement service in every United States employment office in the land. When we enacted the GI bill, if you remember, and you can go back and read it in title IV, we made provision for a board composed of the Secretary of Labor, the head of the Veterans' Administration, and the Director of Selective Service. They chose a secretary of that board. His name is Perry Faulkner, and he is supposed to represent that board. To do what? Read the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 5 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object, does the gentleman suppose that we will finish this bill by midnight?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not think so, if we give it the consideration that it is entitled to receive. In view of some of the statements made here, I think it is going to take quite a long while.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. I am trying to give you this information because many Members on both sides of the aisle have asked me to give this information. There is quite a bit of confusion in the minds of many people on this subject, and the confusion has been deliberately generated.

Let me read to you, if you will, some questions and answers appearing on page 483 of the hearings:

Mr. KEEFE. The thing that the Congress would be interested in and is interested in, I think, Mr. Faulkner, is this: We had a Veterans' Employment Service in the United States Employment Service and it was contemplated to have one under the Wagner-Peyser Act, in the State operations. This is an intensification of that veterans' program that you are undertaking?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEEFE. And it may be summarized by the statement that you are intensifying the scratching of the field for jobs and job openings for veterans?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEEFE. And you are doing it in a supplementary way, over and beyond what the regular service is doing. That is right; is it not?

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, sir; and it is all encompassed in the one phrase in the law that you wrote, that the veteran shall be given a maximum job opportunity.

Mr. KEEFE. And when you have found these job openings you report them to the Regular Establishment, and the Regular Establishment then calls in the veterans who have those skills to fill those jobs.

Mr. FAULKNER. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEEFE. And if there are no veterans, then a civilian has a crack at it?

Mr. FAULKNER. And my men are supposed to be out at veterans' meetings, where they can find veterans, hunting veterans for those jobs, too. That is the other end of it.

Mr. KEEFE. I assume that the work is not as onerous in those locations where there is a surplus of jobs and job opportunities; is it?

Mr. FAULKNER. No.

Now, the fact of the matter is, when you provided in title IV of the GI bill for this committee and Mr. Faulkner was appointed secretary of that committee, there was absolutely not a thing in that bill—and I defy anyone to get up here and point it out if he thinks otherwise—that provided for a Federal veterans' placement service of the character and kind that is contemplated in the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT]. In fact, it is the opinion of those who know about it that the whole thing is subject to a point of order, and there is no authority for it in point of law. This committee has gone along with this program despite the fact that we think it is subject to a point of order, and we have not raised the point of order and are giving Mr. Faulkner $1,700,000—enough to employ 500 men in this field to supplement the tremendous number of men who are engaged in that work in the regular employment offices that we are giving $71,000,000 to in this bill. All I can say to you is, if you just want to go out and say the sky is the limit and say the limit is there, because the veterans' organizations ask for it, that is the privilege of the Members of this House. But let me tell you something, if you are going to save any money, if you are going to cut Government expenses, you have got to exercise some reason.

We have given to the veterans every single service you can think of in the way of finding jobs and job counseling. Those are in the regular offices of the employment service. We are now adding 500 more to go out in the States and assist veterans in job placement. The committee has given Mr. Faulkner over $1,700,000 for this purpose. I ask you in all seriousness, my friends, to read the hearings. If you will only do that I am sure you will conclude, as the majority of this committee concluded, that we have done right well by the veterans who fought this last war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] has again expired.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I will first say to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] that my record in this House on the Committee on Appropriations belies the statements he made a while ago. For me to take his position in regard to this amendment would be to act like an undertaker, and I am sure I do not look like an undertaker at a funeral, not only of the Veterans' Employment Service but of the United States Employment Service and the Labor Department as well. This I refuse to do. Justice has a great part in these appropriation items.

The veterans of this country are very much interested in the Veterans' Employment Service. Secretary Schwellenbach has stated that they have been doing a fine job. He pleaded for sufficient funds to the amount submitted by the Bureau of the Budget, to carry on their work. He has stated that Mr. Faulkner and his staff, whom he appointed, as Secretary of Labor, were doing a fine job in this service.

I am in receipt of a telegram from the department commander of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of my State, Mr. C. Burton Huse, in which he says he understands the Labor Department appropriation bill H. R. 2700 does not provide adequate funds for Veterans' Employment Service:

> This is a most important service; absolutely necessary that it not be curtailed. Urge support of amendments to increase funds.

I agreed to consider the four amendments proposed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] en bloc, and after having read the language and figures in those amendments I stated that the gentleman from Pennsylvania should be commended for the position he took. I am sure no Member of this House wants to curtail the employment services for war veterans, nor does any Member desire to curtail, as suggested and proposed by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], the regular United States Employment Service, which has been cut to a ridiculously small amount by the gentleman from Wisconsin and his colleagues.

Before I sit down I would like to say to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN], who reflected upon the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] as to his attendance at committee hearings, that our attendance was much more faithful and diligent than his. I vigorously resent his statement on the floor of this House or anywhere else about the attendance of any member at any committee meetings. I happen to be a member of three subcommittees of the House Committee on Appropriations, all important and all sitting at the same time during the past 10 weeks.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROONEY. I yield, although the gentleman did not see fit to yield to me.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I regret if I did not see fit to yield to you at the time, but under the circumstances it was impossible. May I ask the gentleman if the subject under discussion was not the question of attendance but——

Mr. ROONEY. The gentleman brought it up, though.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. It was a question of whether the gentleman had made any suggestions worth while throughout the hearings of several weeks.

Mr. ROONEY. The suggestions of the gentleman from Rhode Island were worth while to my mind and to the mind of the gentleman from Rhode Island. They probably were not worth while in the eyes of the gentleman from Minnesota because he represents a farming district and is strictly looking out for the interests of his people. It is my responsibility to see that the gentleman from Minnesota does not so gage a Labor Department appropriation bill as to cripple the activities of the Department and bring about the attendant wrecking of a program which is for the benefit of an industrial district such as the one I represent.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. ROONEY. Let me say one thing more to the gentleman from Minnesota. He has made a statement here on the floor with reference to a number of questions asked by the gentleman from Rhode Island and myself during the hearings. A reading of the record of the hearings will disclose that most of the record was taken up by the imposing gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], the chairman. As a matter of fact, although he started out, as he said, to streamline the hearings and cut the volume of the record——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one additional minute.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I object unless the gentleman will yield to me.

Mr. ROONEY. I will gladly yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendments do now close.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendments do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROONEY) there were—ayes 130, noes 89.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered and the Chair appointed as tellers Mr. ROONEY and Mr. KEEFE.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 163, noes 99.

So the motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROONEY) there were—ayes 110, noes 145.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported that there were—ayes 113, noes 150.

So the amendments were rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Printing and binding: For printing and binding for the Department, $414,700.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 3, after line 8, insert a new paragraph as follows:

"Salaries and expenses, Division of Labor Standards: For necessary expenses, including personal services in the District of Columbia and purchase and distribution of reports and of material for informational exhibits, in connection with the promotion of health, safety, employment stabilization and amicable industrial relations for labor and industry, and the functions under the Fair Labor Standards Act (except the enforcement of the child labor provisions of such act) transferred under and pursuant to Reorganization Plan No. 2 of 1946, $473,000."

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment restores to the Department of Labor, Division of Labor Standards, what has been stricken out by this committee. It is a function of government which I sincerely believe is a very necessary function. As you will note, the sum that I have included in the amendment is $473,000. That does not include the enforcement provisions of the Child Labor Act. The amount that was spent by the Division of Labor Standards in 1947 was $642,142. The Division of Labor Standards this year requested for the fiscal year 1948 $865,142. So you can see by this amendment that I am not attempting to justify the budget that has been sent up here, but just asking for $473,000.

There has been one item in this bill that has been discussed pro and con, yesterday and today, and that is whether or not the Wage and Hour Division can do this work that has been done by the Division of Labor Standards, pertaining to the Child Labor Act. As I remember the hearings, when Mr. Walling was asked by our chairman, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], whether or not he could take over the enforcement provisions of this act, he said, "Yes." The Budget Director said, "Now, you are talking about the enforcement provisions." And again the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] said, "Yes; the enforcement provisions of this act."

The enforcement provisions of the Child Labor Act is the smallest part of that sum. It only amounted to $92,000. The youth employment and research part of the Child Labor Act amounts to the largest part of that sum, which is $236,557. That is what I intend to leave in the Division of Labor Standards. I do not believe the Wage and Hour Division can do it, and if this committee had any advice from Mr. Walling, Director of the Wage and Hour Division, if he could do it, they did not ask him at that time how much money he needed. But in my contact with the State directors all over the country, I have yet to find one who has harmonious relations with the Wage and Hour Division. This Division of Labor Standards that has operated so successfully in the past has made a record second to none when we talk about States' right. They do not attempt to go into any State and enforce any actions of their own. Their intention has always been to work with the various directors of labor in enforcing the provisions of the Child Labor Act and setting those standards for minimum wages and the doing away of the sweat shops that our children work in today.

One of the most important functions of the Labor Standards Division is the Accident Prevention Division. I have definite proof in the State of Rhode Island that they have done a good job with the funds allotted to them. In Rhode Island they have supplied safety technicians, they have set up State industry-wide safety programs, and it has helped us to train management and union safety representatives.

Last year, 1946, with this Division's help, we were able in Rhode Island to reduce job accidents 14 percent, and save management and labor, in the smallest State of this Union, over $3,500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to point to the record and let us get the facts. I have before me, on page 554 of the hearings, the colloquy which took place between the gentleman who is now addressing you and Mr. Walling, Director of the Wage and Hour Division, referring specifically to the thing which my friend from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] has just discussed.

Instead of making any generalized statement as to what was said and putting the conclusion that you want to put on it to suit your own convenience, let us listen to the questions and answers as they were submitted:

Mr. KEEFE. All that would be necessary would be to set up within the over-all picture of the Wage and Hour Division this group that devote themselves to a study of these reports which your agency makes and determines the policy ultimately as to what is going to be done with these violators.

It seems to me that some very substantial savings can be effected, and it was contemplated by the President when he submitted his reorganization plan to the Congress that substantial savings would be effected by this transfer. Up to date it is costing us a lot more money, according to the figures that have been submitted. Mr. Watson Miller indicates that on the Federal Security side, they see no savings that can be effected.

Suppose this committee, in its wisdom or lack of wisdom, decides to abolish completely the appropriation for the Division of Labor Standards, and transfers to your Division a sum of money to carry out these functions. Could you carry them out?

Mr. WALLING. I am sure we could.

What is the use of talking any further about that situation? That is what the committee did. We transferred the functions relating to child labor that had just been put in the Division of Labor Standards, by the way. Let us get this thing straight. The Children's Bureau went over to the Federal Security Agency and they left in the Labor Department the enforcement and the child-welfare provisions and functions; and Mr. Schwellenbach, the Secretary, said "All right, I will turn those functions over to the Division of Labor Standards." That was done only recently.

What actually happened was that they took the personnel and the functions that were in the Children's Bureau and left them in the Labor Department, and said: "You are now part of the Division of Labor Standards." That is all that happened.

All we have done is transfer those same functions over to the Wage and Hour Division; and Mr. Walling says, "We can handle the job." By so doing we are saving about $150,000; that is all. The amendment offered by my friend from Rhode Island would simply mean to put back into this bill the appropriation request and would nullify completely the action of this committee.

I ask that the amendment be voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOGARTY) there were—ayes 53, noes 147.

So the amendment was rejected.

"Commissioners of Conciliation: For expenses necessary to enable the Secretary of Labor to exercise the authority vested in him by section 3 of the act creating the Department of Labor (5 U. S. C. 611), including not to exceed $50,000 for the temporary employment of arbitrators and mediators on labor relations without regard to the civil-service and classification laws; and not to exceed $133,500 for personal services in the District of Columbia, $2,080,000."

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROONEY:

On page 3, line 17, after the words "not to exceed" strike out "$50,000" and insert "$125,000."

In line 20, after the words "not to exceed" strike out "$133,500" and insert "$291,000."

In line 21, after the words "District of Columbia" strike out "$2,080,000" and insert "$2,678,400."

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment, if it were to be acted upon favorably, would restore the amount requested in the budget estimates for the United States Conciliation Service.

Since the start of the debate on this bill yesterday you have listened to quite a bit about the Conciliation Service and about the charges made by the gentleman from Wisconsin against the Director of the Conciliation Service.

The committee report provides for the appropriation of funds for the office of Associate Director of the Conciliation Service. It calls for the elimination of the position of the Director, Mr. Warren's, and along with this, the elimination of 101 positions, most of them dealing with the top directing force of the Conciliation Service who have been so successful in directing its affairs.

Now, the position of Associate Director, which has been allowed by the gentleman from Wisconsin and the majority of the committee, implies that the associate will be associated with a director, but no funds are supplied or provided for an office of director. It seems to me that just because the gentleman from Wisconsin makes the charges that he does against Mr. Warren, No. 1, that he made a speech one time in which he referred to the matter of the right of Federal employees striking against the Government, which right he has denied; No. 2, that he at one time belonged to an organization known as the American League for Peace and Democracy, a Communist-front organization, as well as the Washington Book Shop, from both of which he resigned as soon as he found out within the space of a month or two that they were Communist fronts, that it does not follow that 101 other employees, among them 32 low-paid clerks, all in the low grades, should be summarily removed from their jobs and the Conciliation Service wrecked.

You have heard a great deal in this debate regarding the Conciliation Service. You know that it and its activities have been endorsed by both management and labor. If you read today's RECORD you will find a number of such endorsements made by the leaders of management throughout the country. They are all agreed that Warren has done a fine job. I yesterday read to you a letter from one of the heads of the American Telephone & Telegraph Co., which letter was one of many such, in which the vice president of the company stated that were it not for the efforts of Mr. Warren and his Conciliation Service, a strike which would have tied up this country's communication system would have occurred.

We are penny-wise and pound-foolish to reduce appropriations for an organization which has done so much to keep industrial unrest at a minimum, an organization which has the approval of labor as well as management. In today's RECORD, as I previously stated, you will find any number of similar endorsements. You will find that Mr. Warren and the Conciliation Service have been wholeheartedly endorsed by the National Association of Manufacturers and the leading industrial firms throughout the country. If the Conciliation Service were run on any basis that would smack in the least of communism or Communist ideas these firms would not have endorsed Mr. Warren and his associates as they did.

Under the permission which I expect to obtain after the Committee rises I include at this point an editorial from the Miami Daily News of March 19, 1947:

LEGISLATION BY FIAT

At the core of President Truman's proposals for labor legislation last January was the strengthening of the Government's conciliation services for the settlement of disputes before they reached the strike stage. That proposal fell on deaf ears insofar as the Republican Congressmen were concerned.

Now, according to Washington reports, the conciliation service already functioning in the Labor Department will be crippled by withholding its funds, another example of the second way to skin a cat which the Republican leaders have hit upon since they obtained control of congressional committees.

Representative FRANK KEEFE, of Wisconsin, who heads the House Appropriations Subcommittee in charge of Labor Department funds, does no conceal the fiat legislation he is preparing. "I have said this before," he told a reporter at the Capitol, "and I will say it again: I intend to do everything I can to see that Edgar L. Warren does not continue as head of the Conciliation Service." Having been rebuffed, presumably, in his request to Secretary Schwellenbach for Warren's removal, Representative KEEFE will recommend withholding funds to pay the salaries of Director Warren and at least 11 of his assistants.

Congress was sat upon by the Supreme Court when it attached a rider to an appropriations bill specifically withholding the salaries of Goodwin Watson, Robert M. Lovett, and William E. Dodd in 1943. Representative KEEFE might keep his act constitutional if Warren and his aides were not named in a bill cutting the funds of the Conciliation Service. But constitutional or not, such an act is fiat legislation usurping the right of the executive department to name its own officers.

There are legal ways by which the Congress can abolish the Labor Department's Conciliation Service. There are not enough votes in Congress to do so, and Representative KEEFE's proposal is a subterfuge designed to accomplish the end without a roll call of the majority.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, again, my friends, I think we will turn to the record. Loose talk does not get very far, and certainly you must recall that the gentleman who left the well of the House just got through saying that Mr. Warren made a speech some place out in Chicago in which he referred to the right of Government workers to strike. Why, what a loose statement that is. Do you know what the facts are? He ought to know them, because he participated in the hearings.

Now, let me read to you something from the hearings of last year. You will find, if you turn to pages 145 and 146 of last year's hearings, the complete text of the speech or statement that Mr. Warren made, in which he advocated the right of Government workers to strike. Did he make that in his speech out in Chicago? He did not. He made it in the fall of 1945 after he was made head of the Conciliation Service and he made it to an interdepartmental group of Government employees right down at the Labor Department. Now, why not give the people the facts about this situation?

Here is his own statement: He says:

As far as I know, that is a correct or approximately correct quotation of what I said in this panel discussion in the autumn of 1945.

You have heard the statements with respect to Mr. Warren. I told the Members of this Congress that I did not even know whether Mr. Warren had ever been a member of any subversive organization until I asked the Committee on Un-American Activities to send me a list of everybody in the Labor Department with any such leanings and tendencies, and for the first time I found the name Edgar L. Warren. So when I had him up before the committee—I deal across the board in these things; no running around behind the bush; I lay the stuff out on the table—I asked him this question which appears on page 662 of the hearings:

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Warren, were you at any time an economist with the Wage and Hour Division of the Department of Labor?

Mr. WARREN. Yes, sir.

Mr. KEEFE. Did you live at 103 George Mason Drive, Arlington, Va.?

Mr. WARREN. I did.

I did not even know the man, and I had to identify him because the report from the Committee on Un-American Activities showed that Edgar L. Warren was at that time an economist with the Wage-Hour Division and that he lived at that address. So he admitted, as the record clearly showed, his record with these two subversive organizations.

My friend from New York says, "Oh, he only belonged to them for just a little while. He resigned." How does he know it? Where did he get the information?

You are not going to get rid of radicals in the Government if you are going to permit them to come in here and say, "Oh, yes, I joined this organization. I did not know what it was. When I found out that there were Communists running the show, why, I got out. I changed my viewpoint." He says he got out years ago, yet in the autumn of 1945, after he was made head of the Conciliation Service, he advocated the old party-line concept of the right of workers to strike against the Government.

Now, you can have it for what you want, that is merely incidental. This fellow Warren down there, in the manner in which he is running the Conciliation Service, which the RECORD will show I have supported 100 percent as a member of this committee, and have supported it in every way up until this year, is simply overloaded with $10,000-a-year men that he has taken over from the War Labor Board, and is now reorganizing the Conciliation Service. In the reorganization he is getting rid of the philosophy that the place to have conciliation is out in the field. He wants to build a bureaucratic outfit here in Washington of these $10,000-a-year cronies.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

COMMISSIONERS OF CONCILIATION

Mr. Chairman, I have consistently advocated the need for maintaining a Federal labor conciliation service of the highest and most efficient type to help settle labor-management disputes. If we are to have labor peace we must provide such an agency. On the one hand to strike out the appropriation for the top direction of the United States Conciliation Service and on the other to ask for labor peace is an irreconcilable position. I am opposed to sweeping labor legislation setting back the clock for labor, and I am for legislation which will deal with specific injustices that may have arisen in the course of the years which affect the public interest. I believe such a policy to have been the true mandate of the people last November 5. An essential element in such a policy is the maintenance, unimpaired, of at least the machinery for conciliation which we have, and its strengthening and improvement. An appropriation bill should not be made a vehicle for crippling this vital service at this time.

UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

I would also like to refer to the sharp cut in the appropriations for the United States Employment Service contained in this bill, a cut of 80 percent. No one can tell now how soon we may have another serious depression. Certainly the high cost of living, the touch-and-go relations between labor and management and the still prevailing tendencies in our economy to excesses of rise and fall promise that we had better be aware of this danger. The whole fate of the world hangs on the security of our internal economy, too. Under these circumstances I consider it very unwise to eliminate, what is for all practical purposes the core of a national employment service system, and to make the United States Employment Service almost solely a bookkeeping agency. If considered in terms of only a stand-by agency—and its work of coordination, technical development, and supervision of the State employment services is far more than that—it would yet be worth the money needed to keep it in shape to head off or to cushion a major depression. I am also opposed to diminishing the services made available for veterans under the Veterans' Employment Service, and voted for the amendment to restore the full amount of that appropriation. I believe that the USES is a necessary factor in maintaining the full value of the Veterans' Employment Service. For these reasons, Mr. Chairman, I will vote for the amendment to give the USES the money to do the job.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 5 minutes.

Mr. FOGARTY. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. BUSBEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I think I should explain to this Committee the incident that occurred Saturday in regard to Mr. Homer Hartz, president of the Modern Frog & Switch Co. in my congressional district, inasmuch as his name has entered into the debate.

It happened that Mr. Hartz called at my office Saturday morning, and I confronted him with the article regarding Mr. Warren which appeared in the Washington Star last Friday evening, stating that he and some leading industrialists in the city of Chicago, had signed a statement in behalf of Mr. Warren. When I asked Mr. Hartz how he happened to sign that statement, he said a good friend of his, head of one of the large industries in Chicago, had called him up stating that he and another party were signing a statement and asked if Mr. Hartz would join with them. Having confidence in this man, Mr. Hartz innocently signed the statement. He signed it by an emissary of Mr. Warren's coming to his office, a man that Mr. Warren had sent out to Chicago from Washington for the explicit purpose of getting this statement signed. I understand that Mr. Warren has sent emissaries to other cities such as New York, Boston, and other places, to get so-called character witnesses.

I then called on the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] in his office and introduced Mr. Hartz to him. Mr. Hartz was astounded when he was shown the testimony of Mr. Warren where he admitted being a member of Communist-front organizations. This is the reason why character witnesses in a case of this kind are of no value.

We have seen a demonstration here today with the galleries full. We have seen a party of 500 delegates of the Congress of American Women, another group which has been identified by the Attorney General and is mentioned in the Washington Daily News of today along with 10 others as a Communist-front organization. The list also includes the Washington Book Shop and the American League for Peace and Democracy, to which Mr. Warren belonged. If Mr. Warren did not know what these organizations were and what they stood for, he certainly should have because he was a director of the Washington Book Shop. Furthermore, anyone who knew about the Washington Book Shop at all knew it was not only a Communist-front organization, but it was the Communists' headquarters in Washington where they held meetings in the back room. If Mr. Warren did not know this, then I do not think he is qualified to fill the position he has been holding in the Government.

The President of the United States came out Saturday with an order to get rid of people who have belonged to Communist-front organizations. I agree with the gentleman from Wisconsin that if we are going to start cleaning house we had better start now.

In regard to this matter of character witnesses and the telegrams and letters that Mr. Warren has solicited, I direct your attention to the case of Carl A. Marzani, one of the most notorious Communists we have in this country who has just recently been indicted. He held a key position in the State Department. I asked for his record at the Civil Service Commission. Here in brief is what they said:

The Commission rated Mr. Marzani ineligible. From this rating Mr. Marzani appealed and was given a hearing before the Board of Appeals and Review, at which time Messrs. H. C. Barton, Chief of the Presentation Division; Emil Depres, of the Board of Analysis; Prof. Edward S. Mason, of the Board of Analysis; and Maj. D. Thompson, of the Army Services Forces, all of whom were fellow employees, with the exception of Mr. H. C. Barton, who was the supervisor under whom Mr. Marzani was employed, and all of whom were with the Office of Strategic Services, testified emphatically regarding Mr. Marzani's loyalty. Thereafter the Board of Appeals and Review recommended eligibility, and the case was again reviewed by two staff members.

Then Mr. Marzani was rated eligible.

It is a well-known fact that character witnesses are recruited generally among people who do not know all the facts.

There are thousands of men capable of filling the position of Mr. Warren, and as well as others who have never held membership in Communist-front organizations.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I am not going to attempt to defend the name of Mr. Warren because I do not know anything more about him than the chairman of my committee knows about him, and that is not very much. But I do not think it is the right way to do things. I think you are establishing a bad precedent in taking funds away as to any particular individual in the Government.

As the previous speaker just stated, the President has given notice of how he intends to rid the Government of all Communists. But in that notice he is also fair enough to say to all those who are being accused that they have a chance for a trial. That is something we are not attempting to give anybody here. We do not give anybody any kind of a trial to prove whether or not he is right or wrong. But let that be as it may; what you are doing in this appropriation bill today is cutting the Conciliation Service $600,000, at a time when industrial peace and stable relations between labor and management is more essential than it ever has been in the history of our country. In the face of the grand job that the Conciliation Service has done in the past year and a half in preventing strikes and settling strikes and in view of the good record they have made, you say you are going to slap their face by cutting them to the tune of $600,000. Oh, yes, it is all right to talk out of one side of your mouth one day and then talk out of the other side of your mouth the next day, but when you go throughout the country preaching to the people that you are going to take care of this labor situation and that you want peace between labor and management you are not going very far in that direction today when you are cutting the most effective arm of this Government for the prevention of strikes and industrial unrest.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this pending amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Apprentice Training Service: For expenses necessary to enable the Secretary of Labor to conduct a program of encouraging apprentice training, as authorized by the act of August 16, 1937 (29 U. S. C. 50), including personal services in the District of Columbia, $2,015,600.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROONEY: On page 4, line 8, strike out "$2,015,600" and insert "$2,544,200."

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this amendment is to increase the amount allowed by the majority of the committee for the Apprentice Training Service to the amount set forth in the President's budget estimate.

In the figures submitted by the Bureau of the Budget, $2,544,200 was requested for this very vital training service. The majority of the committee saw fit to cut this requested appropriation almost 21 percent.

The Apprentice Training Service is a State program, supervised by the Federal Government. It is one that is entirely voluntary. Neither the employees nor the employers are compelled to participate in the program, but they do participate in it because they wish to do so and because the employees wish to learn a skilled trade. This policy of voluntary cooperation between employer and employee has accounted for a great increase in the apprentice-training program for the ensuing fiscal year. This is because of the fact, first, the deficit in the number of skilled workers caused by the war and the preceding depression years; second, because of the experience employers had during the war with workers with limited skills and who were not skillful to the extent that they were of sufficient use to the employer; third, because of the increasing age of the present skilled labor force in the country. You can appreciate what this means in such industries as the construction industry which is at the moment one of the most important industries with which the American people are concerned.

Fourth, because of strong aid in favor of the program from national employer organizations, as well as from international unions in promoting apprenticeship among their members.

And lastly, because of the availability of a large number of veterans who desire to learn a skilled trade.

The work load of the Apprentice Training Service has been greatly increased, has been increased far beyond the amount of work that can be handled by the present staff and by the amount of funds which have been allowed in the present fiscal year. As a matter of fact, as I pointed out yesterday, the program has grown in this respect: The number of establishments participating in the Apprentice Training Service, in this voluntary program—not a program in which the Federal Government says to the employer or employee, "You must participate"—the number of establishments which have participated in the program as of January 1, 1946, in the amount of 30,628 has grown to the amount 78,753 as of January 1, 1947. In other words, an increase of 157 percent.

The number of registered apprentices participating in this program as of January 1, 1946, was 28,329, whereas, as of January 1 of the present year, 1947, we had 105,679, or an increase of 273 percent.

Yet in the face of this substantially added number of establishments, this added number of registered apprentices, the majority of this committee have seen fit to cut 21 percent of the appropriation for this worthy service. I trust you will support my amendment.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, one would think that this apprenticeship training service that the gentleman just talked about is a Federal service in its entirety. As a matter of fact, may I state again that apprenticeship at its State level had its origin in my State. I know something about it and I have been one of the people who supported it vigorously down through the years. The man who heads this, Mr. Patterson, headed the apprenticeship training service in my State. What does he do down here since they called him to Washington? What he is doing is to give leadership from an office here in Washington to the extension of apprenticeship in the States and trying to get those States, of which there are many, which have no State laws on the subject of apprenticeship, he is trying to get them to see light and to enact legislation providing for State systems of apprenticeship, not Federal systems.

So in that effort this terrible committee, headed by the strutting slave driver, the gentleman now addressing you, gave to the apprenticeship training service at Washington exactly within $6 of what they had for expenditure in 1947.

One would think that the gentleman on the other side would at least tell the members of the committee what the subcommittee has really done. He has left you the impression that we have destroyed this service—oh, how we have battered it down, these terrible people, the czars!

Well, we have given to the apprenticeship training service—and you can understand that this is the truth; all you have to do is read the record on page 11 of the report—we are giving them within six bucks of what they had last year. I think you will agree that is a pretty generous act, in view of the necessity for money in other parts of the world.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman means that he as czar cut $6 out of them?

Mr. KEEFE. That is what this "terrible" committee did.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that this amendment be voted down.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KEEFE. Did the gentleman from Rhode Island speak on this amendment?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. KEEFE. Very well.

Mr. FOGARTY. For once the gentleman is wrong.

Mr. Chairman, it always amuses me to hear the chairman of this committee get up and ask those of us on this side: "Why do you not give us all the story?" I do not know yet of one amendment today where he has given you all the story when it meant something to him to have the amendment defeated.

Why does he not come out and tell the whole story? Why does he not tell that this apprenticeship-training program is one of the great programs of our Government, that the service is doing an excellent job and wants to expand to the tune of $500,000 more this year. But this generous committee, headed by that overgenerous gentleman from Wisconsin, says "No, we do not believe that program is helpful, we will give you what you had last year and see if you can get by with that, notwithstanding the housing and other programs that need so much skilled labor."

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOGARTY. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. Has the gentleman read the report of the committee?

Mr. FOGARTY. Yes; I have.

Mr. KEEFE. I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that this "terrible" committee the gentleman has castigated so many times this afternoon states in this report on page 11 with reference to this service:

This has been a splendid contribution on the part of the apprentice-training service and should be continued. The committee has been very sympathetic to the apprentice-training service and desires to see its work continued at the level it has been carried on in the current fiscal year.

Mr. FOGARTY. I think that is exactly what I said, but I said further that they are asking an additional $500,000 to expand and that the majority refused to give them that $500,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Salaries and expenses: For necessary expenses, including not to exceed $5,500 for purchase of newspaper-clipping services; reimbursement to State, Federal, and local agencies and their employees for services rendered; and not to exceed $15,000 for temporary services as authorized by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (Public Law 600); $3,373,400, of which amount not to exceed $2,202,700 may be expended for personal services in the District of Columbia and not to exceed $695,000 for a cost-of-living study and report.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma: Page 4, lines 15 and 16, after the semicolon, strike out the figure "$3,373,400" and insert "$2,373,400."

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this is simply an amendment to cut $1,000,000 off of this appropriation. We have heard so much recently about the unreliability of statistics that the Government statisticians have been foisting upon the people, especially from the Department of Labor, and about all of the soft jobs that they have in that Department, that I think the only mistake our committee made with reference to this amount was by fixing the amount $1,000,000 larger than it should have been.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it seems that the requested budget was $6,750,000. This committee has already seen fit to decrease it by $3,000,000, and even though we do not have any agreement with those on the other side, there are a great many people in this country that think the Bureau of Labor Statistics is one of the very fundamental and necessary functions of our Government today, and it seems to me that when you cut out $3,000,000, almost in half, that you have gone far enough.

I hope the amendment is not agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE].

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES EMPLOYMENT SERVICE

General administration: For expenses necessary for the general administration of the United States Employment Service, including one Director at not to exceed $10,000 per annum and other personal services in the District of Columbia and contract stenographic reporting services as authorized by section 15 of the act of August 2, 1946 (Public Law 600), $2,656,800, of which $1,756,800 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of title IV (except sec. 602) of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944: Provided, That the appropriation in this title for traveling expenses shall be available, in an amount not to exceed $2,000, for expenses of attendance at meetings of organizations concerned with the work of the United States Employment Service when incurred on the written authority of the Secretary of Labor.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FOGARTY: Page 5, line 8, strike out "$2,656,800, of which $1,756,800" and insert in lieu thereof, "$4,796,000, of which $2,650,600."

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

Mr. VURSELL. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. FOGARTY. I appreciate the generosity of the Republican leadership on this day.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to make a little correction here? I know what he is endeavoring to do, but may I suggest that we have already just voted down the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania to raise the amount for the Veterans' Placement Service, and that same thing is now embodied in the figure which the gentleman has submitted in his amendment, so we would be voting on the same thing again.

Mr. FOGARTY. Well, now, I am not going to yield any further. This is not just on that Veterans' Placement Service at all. It raises the appropriation for USES, which I think is advisable at this time.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against that part of his amendment which relates to the Veterans' Placement Service on which the House has just voted.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's point of order comes too late.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, the recommended appropriation for the United States Employment Service, exclusive of the funds specifically appropriated to the Veterans' Employment Service, amounted to $3,912,900. The committee recommendation provides for only $900,000, a cut of 77 percent. The funds requested specifically for the Veterans' Employment Service amounted to $2,650,600, and the recommendation by the committee is $1,750,000, a cut of 34 percent.

This action in effect emasculates the Wagner-Peyser Act of 1933 by abolishing the responsibility placed upon the Federal Government by that act to maintain a national system of public-employment offices and for coordinating these offices throughout the country and increasing their usefulness. This is apparent when account is taken of the fact that the funds appropriated to the States for carrying out their responsibility under the Wagner-Peyser Act, amounting to $71,728,000, are to be administered by the United States Employment Service. An appropriation of $900,000 to the United States Employment Service is scarcely adequate to maintain the separate accounts for the 51 State employment service agencies. In fact, I seriously question whether the United States Employment Service will be able to account to this Congress whether the State expenditures have been made in accordance with the requirements of the Congress under this appropriation. Under these circumstances, it is impossible for the USES to carry out its responsibilities for promoting and coordinating these public-employment offices and for providing minimum standards of efficiency and uniformity in administrative procedures.

The United States Employment Service, to carry out its responsibilities, must develop operating methods and tools as required in the face of changing labor market conditions, analyze the experience and practices in the various States in order to provide for the prompt extension of the best operating practices to all local employment offices; in addition, it must provide employment counseling and specialized placement materials to assist disabled war veterans and war-handicapped workers to find useful employment; maintain a national uniform reporting system to appraise operations and work load; provide for exchange of labor market information on employment opportunities among local offices; and provide for the clearance of labor among the States.

On the basis of the testimony presented before the committee, it is utterly impossible to understand the committee's recommendation. A clue is found, however, in the committee report, which states, and I quote:

It impresses the committee that the functions to be performed by the United States Employment Service are no greater or much different from those performed by the Bureau of Employment Security in the Social Security Administration, which administers the unemployment-compensation program.

Even a casual comparison of the Wagner-Peyser Act with the Social Security Act will disclose at once that wholly different kinds of responsibility are placed on the Federal agencies administering these programs. There is no reference in the Social Security Act to a national system of unemployment compensation. On the contrary, the responsibility of the Bureau of Employment Security consists almost entirely of administering grants-in-aid to independent State unemployment compensation systems. The United States Employment Service, on the other hand, is specifically required by law to promote and develop a national system of employment offices and to coordinate the activities of the employment offices and to increase their usefulness by developing and prescribing minimum standards of efficiency and by assisting them in meeting problems peculiar to their localities and by promoting uniformity in administrative and statistical procedures.

It is obvious that the committee is in error when it states that the responsibilities for administration of the unemployment compensation and of the public employment service are the same and on this basis appropriates to each of the agencies $900,000 for the next fiscal year. The only responsibility which is common to both of these agencies is the administration and allocation of funds to the States, and it is for this reason that I say $900,000 will scarcely provide for the bookkeeping functions required of the United States Employment Service in making grants to the States and accounting for State expenditures.

The committee has erred also in assuming that the appropriation to the Bureau of Employment Security represents the total costs of providing administrative grants to the independent State unemployment compensation agencies. On this basis, it has recommended the same amount to the United States Employment Service. The committee has failed to take into account the fact that over and above the $900,000 which it recommends for the Bureau of Employment Security, it is also appropriating to the Social Security Administration, Office of the Commissioner, $2,072,000 for salaries, consolidated operations. This latter amount covers the central services to all offices in the Social Security Administration, including the Bureau of Employment Security. These services are personnel and business management, accounting and auditing, informational services, and over-all statistical and analytical activities. For example, it is not the Bureau of Employment Security which audits the State agency expenditures, but rather the Social Security Administration. Likewise, State personnel merit standards and examination materials are not developed by the Bureau of Employment Security, but by the State Technical Advisory Service in the Social Security Administration. Indeed, a considerable part of the $2,072,000 appropriated to the Social Security Administration is for services to the Bureau of Employment Security in addition to the $900,000 recommended for that Bureau. The United States Employment Service, however, is supposed to provide for all of these services in addition to the administrative services it renders to the Veterans' Employment Service out of the appropriation recommended by the committee.

The committee recommendation for the United States Employment Service in effect does away with a Federal-State system of public employment offices and substitutes independent State employment office systems. It destroys a capital investment of many million dollars made by the Federal Government in the development of the public employment service. The report throws aside the wealth of employment-service experience acquired by the National Government during the depression and war years. It means the dissolution of professionally qualified and experienced personnel developed in the public employment service over the years. It is my firm conviction that to liquidate the most effective machinery we have developed for mobilizing our manpower resources is ill-advised.

USES SERVICES TO DISABLED VETERANS AND HANDICAPPED WORKERS

I should like to point out to this Congress that if the committee recommendations for appropriations to the United States Employment Service remain unchanged, a great disservice will be done to the millions of disabled war veterans and handicapped workers of this Nation. You perhaps realize that this segment of our labor force requires a most specialized job assistance if they are to obtain suitable employment and take their rightful place in our economy. To deprive these handicapped people from entering on gainful employment because public employment offices do not have in their possession the kinds of techniques and methods supplied by the United States Employment Service represents no economy at all. On the contrary, any job assistance to handicapped people made possible by the cooperative action of the United States Employment Service and the State employment services is a real contribution to improving the welfare of their families and their communities. Only in this way can the handicapped job seekers become taxpayers.

The specialized job placement problems of disabled veterans and handicapped workers requires a thorough knowledge of physical capacities of these workers and the physical requirements of the jobs to which they may be properly referred.

We cannot allow job services to disabled veterans and handicapped workers to be limited to the resources of the individual local employment office. I have here a document that I wish to insert in the RECORD, which the United States Employment Service within the past few weeks has forwarded to all States, entitled "Plan of Employment for Physically and Mentally Handicapped Through Public Employment Services." This document is only one illustration of the type of activity which the United States Employment Service must undertake to develop programs in a State employment service.

I say to the Members of this body that the Public Employment Service is not just another Government agency, but one which in all of its daily operations is dealing with the human problems of obtaining and holding jobs. These problems are even more difficult and more complex for our disabled veterans and handicapped workers. We must not deny to these groups the assistance which the United States Employment Service renders. It is our undeniable obligation to assure adequate funds to the United States Employment Service so that these responsibilities may be carried out in accordance with the requirements of the Wagner-Peyser Act of 1933.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not take 5 minutes. This matter has been quite thoroughly discussed. However, in view of the statements just made and in order that the record may be kept straight, let us bear in mind that this so-called United States Employment Service here in Washington during the period of time in which the United States Government operated the hundreds of employment offices throughout the Nation had the responsibility here in Washington for looking after the management of all these offices scattered from one end of the country to the other.

On November 15 last those local offices and all the services connected with them, including the very services that the gentleman from Rhode Island just spoke about, were returned to the States. They are now being operated by the States, and we are giving them $71,000,000 to carry on those services in the next fiscal year, the very services the gentleman has talked about, except this: The service of coordinating and collecting the ideas of the employment services here in Washington and funneling that information out to the States, and of making the studies of the grants that are made for the administration of these employment offices in the States.

When I made the statement that we gave them $900,000 for that service we gave them that sum because that is all they need to function in that field. We gave as an illustration the amount of money that is given to the social security function which handles the administration of the unemployment-compensation grants, which is almost identical to this employment service here in Washington.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION. Is not that part of the program that is carried on by Mr. Faulkner?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Faulkner's program is part of it. The other part of it is carried on by Bob Goodwin who is head of the USES.

Mr. ROBSION. The States handle that.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say that all Mr. Goodwin has to do is supervise the allotment of funds and the gathering together of information that can be sent out to the various employment offices which since last November are being operated by the States.

Mr. ROBSION. This includes the funds for the program carried on by Mr. Faulkner that the Secretary of Labor labeled as "nuts." Is that right?

Mr. KEEFE. That is correct; yes, sir; that is correct.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield.

Mr. FOGARTY. I do not think the Secretary of Labor ever said that that program of Mr. Faulkner's was "nuts."

Mr. KEEFE. Well, do you want me to bring the record here?

Mr. FOGARTY. Yes; I would like to see the record.

Mr. KEEFE. Would you like me to bring the record here and prove it to you?

Mr. FOGARTY. You have been talking about what is in the record. Let us see it.

Mr. KEEFE. You were there and heard it just the same as I did. It is part of the record.

Mr. FOGARTY. I did not get it the same as you did. Let us see the record. You have been talking about the record all afternoon. Let us have the record and let us take a look at it and see who is right.

Mr. KEEFE. You will get it if you just keep your shirt on.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY].

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, may the amendment be read again?

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will again be reported.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 8, strike out "$2,656,800, of which $1,756,800" and insert in lieu thereof "$4,796,000, of which $2,650,600."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. FOGARTY) there were—ayes 56, noes 131.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

WAGE AND HOUR DIVISION

Salaries: For personal services for the Wage and Hour Division necessary in performing th duties imposed by the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 and by the act to provide conditions for the purchase of supplies and the making of contracts by the United States, approved June 30, 1936 (41 U. S. C. 38), and the functions under the Fair Labor Standards Act transferred under and pursuant to reorganization plan No. 2 of 1946, $3,748,400, of which amount not to exceed $746,100 may be expended for departmental salaries.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROONEY: On page 9, line 2, strike out "$3,748,400" and insert "$4,803,100."

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment seeks to increase the amount allowed by the majority of the committee for the Wage and Hour Division, to make up for a cut of 22 percent which the majority has made.

As you know, the Wage and Hour Division enforces the provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act, as well as the Public Contracts Act, known as the Walsh-Healey Act. There are approximately 550,000 establishments in this country, with a total of 20,000,000 covered employees, subject to the Fair Labor Standards Act alone. For the last few years about 50 percent of the establishments inspected by the Wage and Hour Division have been found to be in violation of the major provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act. That is, with regard to minimum wage, as to overtime, and as to child labor. Of these 550,000 establishments covered under the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Wage and Hour Division has been able to inspect only 45,000, or 8 percent of them, each year. Nearly 380,000 establishments, two-thirds of the total of the currently operated covered firms, have never been inspected during the past 8 years. As I said, under the present budget estimate—and the Department is seeking no increase over the amount allowed them for this purpose for the year 1947—they have been able to make only about 45,000 inspections per year. There is no way in which these laws, the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Walsh-Healey Act, can be enforced unless actual physical inspections are made, and they cannot be made under the amount of appropriation which has been proposed in this bill.

To repeat, the current inspection schedule of 45,000 establishments per year is only 8 percent of the total covered establishments. I would like to tell you something about the inspections in the fiscal year 1946, just 1 year ago. The Wage and Hour Division made 43,832 inspections of establishments under both the Walsh-Healey Act and the Fair Labor Standards Act. Of this number, 22,058, or more than half, were found in violation of one of the major provisions of the acts; that is, the minmum wage, overtime, or child labor provisions. Almost half of them, 20,184, were in violation of the overtime provisions of one or both acts, at some time during the period covered by the inspection. Eleven percent of the inspected establishments were in violation of the minimum wage provisions. The minimum wage law is 40 cents an hour for a 40-hour week, or $16. It seems to me it is poor economy and not to the best interest of the people of this country if we cut an appropriation which seeks to enforce this minimum wage law and which seeks to enforce other provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act and the Walsh-Healey Act, such as the overtime and child labor provisions.

The facts with regard to the child labor provisions of the act were discussed by me on yesterday.

Let me close by saying that any reduction contemplated in this bill is going to cause a great deal of danger to the people of this country and the public welfare insofar as enforcing the provisions of these acts is concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 9, line 5:

This title may be cited as the "Department of Labor Appropriation Act, 1948."

Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, before and during the war out in the San Francisco Bay area we had a rather unholy alliance of the CIO Machinists' Union, Local 1304, and the A. F. of L. Machinists' Union, Local 68, headed by three notorious and unsavory characters known as Hook and Dillon and Turkeyneck Smith. During the war they repeatedly and successfully prevented work on Government and merchant ships, and in some instances even prevented convoys from sailing on time. It got so bad that on one occasion the President at the request of the War and Navy Departments and the Maritime Commission sent a directive to Messrs. Hook and Dillon and Turkeyneck Smith to cease and desist in their efforts to prevent work on vitally needed ships for the Navy and Maritime Commission. Now I refer to page 299 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of January 21, 1943, and quote this directive from President Roosevelt:

I am informed by Army, Navy, and Maritime Commission that actions of your union are seriously interfering with vital war production and have delayed shipments of men and supplies to fighting fronts because, contrary to the action of practically all other labor, you have refused to abide by agreements for work on Saturdays and Sundays and to comply with measures established to prevent unnecessary migration of labor.

You are directed to conform with the amended Pacific coast shipbuilding and ship-repair stabilization agreements and to antimigration measures adopted and generally operating in San Francisco Bay area.

The individuals referred to heretofore ignored the directive. And now—good grief. And good gravy. What next? Here is a letter I received the other day from the California Metal Trades Association of San Francisco:

DEAR MR. ANDERSON: It has come to our attention that Mr. Harry Hook, business agent for the International Association of Machinists, Lodge No. 68, until March 1946, when he was thrown out by the International, and presently business agent for Local No. 168, United Steel Workers of America, CIO, is being seriously considered for a position as labor consultant with the United States Department of Labor.

That is one letter.

Here is another from the National Motor Bearing Co. of Redwood City:

You are probably familiar with the fact that Messrs. Harry Hook and Edward Dillon were the organizers of Local 68, International Association of Machinists, in San Francisco for a number of years and that these men, in their position as organizers, called illegal and unjustified strikes in shipyards and various metal-working industries in the bay area off and on during the war. The situation was so bad at one time that President Roosevelt asked Messrs. Hook and Dillon to return men to work and they ignored this request right in the midst of a crucial period of the war.

I am writing to you at the request of a number of firms in San Francisco and Oakland who are very disturbed over the fact that Harry Hook has applied to the National Labor Relations Board for a position as labor relations adviser, hoping to become a negotiator for the National Labor Relations Board and, as such, seeking civil-service status. We, as manufacturers, object to the National Labor Relations Board appointing a man of Harry Hook's stripe to a Federal agency wherein he could continue the nefarious operations that he has carried on for so many years in the machinists' union.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to put the Department of Labor and the National Labor Relations Board on notice that Mr. Harry Hook will only be employed by the Government over my prostrate form. It's high time that our Federal agencies took care to insure the fact that the persons they employ to serve the public are loyal citizens of the United States and that they are possessed of the highest character and integrity.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, we have now reached title II of the bill dealing with appropriations for the Federal Security Agency. I am wondering if we cannot by unanimous consent agree to consider all of the items under title II as read in order to expedite matters, but any paragraph to be open to amendment. I understand there is no objection to the provisions of title II.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I have no objection to dispensing with the further reading of the bill provided I am granted the opportunity to offer two amendments, and I believe the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] has one amendment and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] one.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title II may be considered as read, and that amendments may be in order at any point thereto.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROONEY: On page 15, line 20, strike out "$14,200,000" and insert "$19,842,759.97."

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment because I find that under the George-Barden Act, Public Law 586, passed by the Seventy-ninth Congress, for the further development of vocational education, including vocational education in agriculture, which act provides for 100 percent matching of funds by the States, there will be a great deal of difficulty caused in the program unless we now appropriate the amount $5,842,759.97 to cover a deficit in the amount of allowances to the States under this item. In order to assure to the States, most of which have promptly cooperated in this program of 100 percent matching funds, in order to grant them the same amounts as they have in the present fiscal year for vocational education, it becomes necessary to allow this $5,842,759.97 increase provided in my amendment.

I therefore ask that my amendment be favorably acted upon by the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York, in the appropriation for the Office of Education for grants to the States for the further maintenance of vocational education, he asks that the amount provided in the bill, namely $14,200,000 be increased to $19,842,759.97, and I am only taking this time because this is a very difficult and technical situation.

You will recall that last year this House passed the so-called George-Barden Act, a very good bill, I will say to my friend, the gentleman from North Carolina, and in that bill they raised the amount of authorization for vocational education in three of its aspects to twenty-nine odd million dollars in the form of grants to the States, but when they wrote that bill they did something else. They changed the formula under which these funds are allocated to the States.

Under the law as it existed prior to the enactment to the George-Barden Act there was a distinct formula written into the law setting forth the bases upon which these funds were to be allocated to the several States. Now, that formula was changed, so here is what we are up against. We get this bill from the Bureau of the Budget, and what does it provide? It provides for an allocation of funds on the basis of $29,000,000, the authorization of the George-Barden Act, and then it carries a budget appropriation of $14,200,000.

Now, how ridiculous. When the committee got to going into this item, and we had to go into it very diligently, we found that if we accepted the Budget suggestion as to the amount of the appropriation State after State would not get as much money under this new formula as they received under the old law. So the vocational people all over the country began to write and wire me and come to my office with a delegation pointing out the difficulties of the situation and what it would do to the vocational-education system in many of the States of the Nation.

What we were up against was this. We wanted to assure to the States of this Nation that have built their vocational systems of education upon the theory that they would continue to receive these vocational grants the same amount of money that they had in the current fiscal year, so the committee asked Dr. Studebaker when he appeared before the committee to figure out how much he would have to allocate and what sum in the allocation process would guarantee to all of the States at least the amount of money that they have had in the current fiscal year. He came up with this figure of $19,842,000 and said, "That is the figure that we must use for our allocation."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for four additional minutes.

Mr. ROONEY. I will not object, although the gentleman objected to Mr. FOGARTY's continuing.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEEFE. I have not objected to any person continuing, and if the gentleman does object I assure him I will be very happy to sit down, because I am exceedingly tired. However, I think the gentleman and the Members of this House ought to know just what is involved in this very complicated and difficult situation that we have to deal with.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. I want to take this opportunity to commend the gentleman and his colleagues for the very effective work they have done in trying to effect some real economy in government. It is quite apparent by now that some of our friends on the other side of the aisle yet persist in pursuing that extravagant spending course that has characterized the conduct of government under their leadership for so long a time. I hope the country will understand that we on this side are intent and determined upon making some real economies in government, and that it is now, as I say, apparent that we are going to have to do it on our own.

Mr. KEEFE. I thank the gentleman.

There is just this about this situation. In the limited time that is available I of course cannot give you all the technical information that is necessary with respect to what the committee did with this paragraph. Simply let me say this to you, that with the appropriation of $14,200,000 and the allocation of funds on the basis of $19,000,000 each State will have allocated to it the same amount of money that it had last year under the old formula. We are forced to do this because of the new formula that was written into the George-Barden Act, and you would not want it to be any other way than the way this committee has written this provision into the law.

I may say to you that there will come a time before long when we shall have to raise the amount of this appropriation, because when you passed the George-Barden Act you authorized $29,000,000 to be appropriated, and there will come a time when the States who have to match those funds will come in with matching funds sufficient so that they can very properly ask us to appropriate more money. If the States actually appropriate at the State level the matching funds necessary to meet the allocation of $19,000,000, I will be the first one to come in here as a member of the Deficiency Committee and ask that those funds be provided.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. Will the gentleman explain to the House the difference in the formula between the present act and the old law?

Mr. KEEFE. The principal difference is this: Under the old law they had it on the basis of population, generally speaking. Under the new law they have provided a minimum amount that must be certified to each of the States, a minimum of $35,000. There are a lot of States that will benefit by that. They are going to get more money than they ever had in their lives under this program, under this so-called minimum amount that must be given to the various States of the Union.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I probably am playing a little unusual role today in supporting an amendment to increase appropriations. My normal tendency is in the other direction.

May I say to the Members of the House it is time to check up a little when you begin to cut the funds off of the vocational-training program, the one great piece of legislation that this House put into effect and had on the statute books for many years, to encourage work, to encourage thrift, and to encourage boys to learn how to earn a living.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will my friend yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield to the gentleman although he was not so kind as to yield to me.

Mr. KEEFE. Is it not a fact that we have not cut the budget and that we have allowed appropriations in the exact amount that the budget recommended?

Mr. BARDEN. When you stop a program dead in its tracks and the need for that program continues to grow, then you have cut it. You can kill it in that way. Do not make any mistake about that. You can kill it. The formula the gentleman talks about as some mysterious formula, I have never heard of before, and the committee on education has not been a party to any change that would be detrimental to the program.

There is the gentleman from Michigan and many of the finest Members on your side of the aisle. We worked for months and months and turned out a bill which when explained to the House was virtually accepted with unanimous approval on the record that was made at that time. On that basis the legislatures of the various States have already met the requirements under this bill and have appropriated moneys in anticipation of these funds.

I do not know of a piece of legislation that is benefiting the average veteran, whom we talk so much about, any more than this legislation. The vocational-training schools in my section of the country are crowded with them. This is the cheapest way in the world for the Government of the United States to render this service.

I heard the gentleman talk about how complaints are coming in from all over the Nation. I have been somewhat in the center of this vocational-education picture. I want to say to the gentleman that not one single complaint, not one single criticism, has come to my attention, and I have spoken, I reckon, to as many vocational schools as any man in the country. I am for them 1,000 percent and this House is for them. With all of the schools that have made good you cannot expect to stop that movement dead in its tracks.

I am asking that this appropriation be fixed at a practical sum. The States are going to meet it. If the States do meet it, then the money will remain in the Treasury. If they do, and I think they will, it will be the finest investment that any dollar of the Government of the United States could take part in.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. JUDD. If this sum is increased and the States do not qualify under the program, the money cannot be spent. Is that not correct?

Mr. BARDEN. Certainly; the gentleman is correct.

Mr. JUDD. Then we are authorizing and making available the sums that we promised under legislation which this House passed?

Mr. BARDEN. That is right. The gentleman knows that the committee was not only tight but very conservative in arriving at the amount of money, and we turned away every request to match in every other way except on a dollar-per-dollar basis. We stood firm on that. We brought the bill here with a fine report. The House adopted it and practically just embraced it. The gentleman from Wisconsin voted for it and everybody was delighted to have that bill because it was a very carefully prepared piece of legislation. It sickens me now because I know there is not a hamlet, there is not a county, there is not a big city that is not drawing real genuine benefits from the money being spent on this matching fund in the vocational-training program in this country. If it had not sold itself to the people, if it had not done such a wonderful job, there would not be such a genuine wholesale cry for its continuation and program.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for an additional 4 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. KELLEY. Is not this program under the Vocational Training Act an expanding program that millions of people in this country need for vocational training?

Mr. BARDEN. The gentleman is correct. The gentleman from Michigan and I have served on this committee. We have seen this fund grow from a little small amount every year, and he knows and I know that it has justified every dollar of its expenditure.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman on your side who addressed the question to you referred to an entirely different matter when he referred to the vocational rehabilitation program. That has nothing to do with this particular item.

Mr. BARDEN. Well, if he did, he intended to say "vocational training." Vocational rehabilitation is in another field, but the vocational-training program is what the gentleman meant to refer to.

You have many counties and sections of States that are calling for these schools, and we have to say "No" to them. I have some of the finest vocational-training schools and instructors in my district in the country. The white people have taken the lead, and the Negro schools are joining in doing a fine job.

Let me tell you of one colored school in my district—an excellent vocational-training school headed by a fine instructor. That one man has approximately 40 of the Negro veterans in that school and is making every dollar do $10 worth of work. Then to say that we must stop there—I cannot understand it, gentlemen. You cannot stop the progress in this movement.

Mr. MACKINNON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. MACKINNON. Is this appropriation the maximum amount, or will it still be permissible for the Congress to appropriate under a supplemental appropriation?

Mr. BARDEN. You will either put it in now or I am afraid the program will be cut down.

Mr. MACKINNON. How is the law worded? Is this the amount of money appropriated for the full year, or is there a definite obligation on the part of the Government to match every nickel that the States put up?

Mr. BARDEN. No; there is no obligation to match anything beyond the amount of appropriation that you make. If the appropriation is made and a State does not match it, dollar for dollar, it will stay in the Treasury. So the gentleman was wrong when he said we had done any great changing in the formulas. You have got three or four different formulas in the bill. You have always had different formulas. When you are dealing with agriculture the formula is one thing. When you are dealing with the city population the formula is another, and when you are dealing with home economics it is another. The gentleman intended to be fair about it, but there are three or four different formulas.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARDEN. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I am a little surprised that my friend, if he has read the record, would make the type of argument he is making——

Mr. BARDEN. Well, now, do not lecture me. What is your question?

Mr. KEEFE. Is it not a fact that I made the statement on this floor that, if the States will match this up to the $19,000,000 which, under this bill, we are permitting the Office of Education to allocate, that I, as one member of the Subcommittee on Deficiencies on the Committee on Appropriations, will be in here asking for an appropriation to match those funds? But there is not a single showing that you can point to that indicates that the States are going to match this $19,000,000 which is authorized.

Mr. BARDEN. I can call one State to the gentleman's attention. That is the State of North Carolina. That State has matched every dollar, and they look around and they find beyond the allocation of the $14,000,000 it will not be available. I wish I could construe the gentleman's statement to mean that, if the need arises, the gentleman could, just by turning a little valve, provide the funds. However, I am going to construe the gentleman's statement to mean that he and his committee will take care of the program if the need arises. I hope the House will make these funds available now, however.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] has again expired.

Mr. COOLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, if I read and understand the record correctly, I think that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], while not always right, perhaps took just about the same position with regard to this particular appropriation as any other member of his party would have under the circumstances. While I am just as anxious as my colleague from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] about the welfare of the vocational education program, I must say that a reading of the record—and I say this in fairness to the gentleman from Wisconsin—indicates that the gentleman from Wisconsin is entirely friendly to vocational education. But the trouble is not so much with the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] as with the Bureau of the Budget. The Bureau of the Budget fixed the figure and he stayed within the figure. As anxious as I am for the figure to be increased substantially, I doubt very much if we should criticize the committee in following, as it did in this case, the exact recommendation of the Budget.

If I understand the record clearly, it also indicates that under the $14,200,000 appropriation, some States will actually receive less this year than before, and we would need to provide $1,532,922.73 additional to prevent any State receiving less than it received heretofore; but to add $1,532,922.73 would be, to that extent, going beyond the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget. Congress has definitely recognized the great value of vocational education and the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget should have been compatible with the expressed will of Congress. Personally I think it is one of the finest programs the Government has ever undertaken. Not only have we recognized it, but we have authorized expenditures in excess of $29,000,000 annually. Notwithstanding our authorizations and the approval of both Houses of Congress, the Bureau of the Budget holds this program down to $14,200,000. Congress should not hesitate to override the Bureau of the Budget and provide additional funds. Certainly, however, we would hardly expect economy-minded Republicans to go beyond the recommendation of the Bureau of the Budget, especially in view of their expressed intention to reduce drastically the recommendations which have heretofore been made by the President and the Bureau of the Budget. I do hope, however, that the leadership in the Republican Party will appreciate the wisdom of providing additional funds for this particular item which means so much to the welfare of the people of the Nation.

I can, of course, appreciate the difficulties involved in trying to increase this amount at this time here in the House, but I do hope that the Senate will increase it. If the Senate does not increase it, then I hope that additional funds will be provided in a deficiency bill which may hereafter come before Congress.

With regard to North Carolina, as my colleague the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN] has pointed out, we predicated and based our program on the maximum, in the honest belief that Congress would keep faith with the authorization and that the money would be provided. We are going to be shortchanged to the extent of about $378,000 unless Congress does provide additional funds. Whether or not it will provide it hereafter in a deficiency bill remains to be seen, but at least we have the statement of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], who is chairman of this subcommittee, that he for one is willing to vote for the necessary deficiency appropriation.

Now, if we have others on his side who will go along on a deficiency appropriation then we certainly are encouraged to believe that the States which can justify and can match the Federal funds will not be handicapped in the vocational-education field.

I understand that Dr. Studebaker will be able to give the Congress the actual data between now and April 15, which is not too far away. If he can obtain the information from the States with regard to the needs, he can give the information to the appropriate committee, then the deficiency can be provided, and our States can be taken care of. I for one am delighted at the support offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

I hope that we may be justified in the belief that his Republican colleagues in the House will support him in the very definite position he has taken with regard to this particular matter.

As I stated in the beginning, I do not feel that we should be too severe on the subcommittee, in view of the recommendations of the Bureau of the Budget, and especially in view of the fact that the several States have failed apparently to furnish the data necessary in the determination of the amount of Federal funds which may be needed in the expansion of the program. I am delighted that the State of North Carolina has demonstrated such a great interest in vocational education, and has placed itself in a position to take advantage of the increased grant in aid. Vocational education is close to the people and should be expanded greatly in the interest of the general welfare of the people of our Nation. The program is not restricted to any particular section of the country, and I have every reason to believe that a great and magnificent job has been done in all areas. Skilled workers still constitute one of the great needs of this Nation. Our recent experience has demonstrated to all sections of our country and to all segments of our population the great need for skilled men and women in all vocations. States should be encouraged to expand vocational education as a means of lifting higher the standards of living in America. Now that we have the assurance of the very distinguished and able gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] that an expanded program will have the benefit of his support, and since everything indicates that additional funds in substantial amounts will be needed, I express the earnest hope that the Bureau of the Budget will approve the increase which will be indicated by the information which is now being collected and which will soon be available.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I would like to try to limit debate on this bill. It is now 4:30, and if we are going to finish this bill today we must have some limitation of debate.

Mr. DONDERO. I can make my statement in 2 minutes.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 2 minutes.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, will it be in order afterward to move to strike out the last word?

Mr. KEEFE. My request relates to this amendment only.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in 2 minutes.

Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to speak on this bill, but this amendment has challenged my interest and attention. As one who had something to do with the framing of the George-Barden Act I want to confirm everything the gentleman from North Carolina has said regarding that bill. That legislation is a matching program, dollar for dollar.

The President in his budget message requested $14,200,000. The committee has tried to follow that recommendation. The committee has said to the House and to the country that if the States should provide funds beyond the $14,200,000 and up to the $19,000,000 figure then the Congress would at a later date provide the difference between the two figures in order to match the State dollars so appropriated.

I will ask the chairman of the subcommittee if that is not about the whole thing in a few words.

Mr. KEEFE. I think the gentleman has very succinctly stated the situation.

Mr. DONDERO. Under those circumstances we should support the Committee and also provide the funds if at a later date it becomes necessary to meet the State appropriations.

Mr. JUDD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. JUDD. Suppose the $14,000,000 should be exhausted or all allocated to States now participating but that in October or November when Congress was not in session other States wanted to qualify; how would they be able to get any money under their authorization when the deficiency committee would not be able to function?

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Michigan yield to permit me to answer the inquiry?

Mr. DONDERO. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. I think if the gentleman will read the record of the hearings and examine what Dr. Studebaker said, he would have observed that Dr. Studebaker hopes by the middle of April to be able to have the figures from the States on this situation. All Dr. Studebaker has got to do then is to convey those figures up to the appropriate committee and the Congress, of course, will see to it that this vocational program is carried out.

Mr. JUDD. Through a deficiency for this fiscal year?

Mr. KEEFE. Why, of course; exactly.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. RICH. Is a point of order against an item in title II in order at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. That stage has been passed, and it would not be in order at this time.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GORE: On page 21, line 10, strike out the paragraph beginning with line 10 and ending with line 24, and insert "hospital and construction activities for carrying out title VI of the Public Health Service Act, as amended (Public Law 725, 79th Cong.), $1,509,965, of which not to exceed $965,000 shall be available for administrative expenses incident thereto, including printing and binding; purchase of eight passenger motor-vehicles; and travel, including attendance at meetings of organizations concerned with the purposes of this appropriation."

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, in pointing out the fact that this bill does not carry one dollar of appropriations for hospital construction, I do not in any way contend or desire to suggest that the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee or any member of it intends to deny appropriations for the implementation of the Hill-Burton hospital construction bill.

I rise, however, to point this out and offer an amendment to correct it, for two purposes: One, because of genuine interest in seeing the hospital construction expedited and, two, to prevent juggling of the budget bookkeeping.

You will note in the hearings, if you have read the hearings, and if not, you can find on page 389 this statement by Dr. Hilleboe, who was testifying before the committee in support of provision of the bill. He said:

So the whole chain of circumstances really awaits the statements from us that there is money in the Treasury and it is allocated, and when the plan has been approved and you have started your construction funds will be certified for payment.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that on page 21 of the bill, instead of following the budget recommendation of placing in the bill an appropriation, the committee has deleted entirely the appropriation item and has written into the bill contractual authority. There, again, we are but postponing the reckoning day for appropriation, but in postponing the date you raise doubts in the minds of many small communities as to whether or not their funds will be matched, because you are placing no money in the Treasury, no money in the bank, so to speak, available for this purpose.

Now, on yesterday the distinguished gentleman and my friend from Wisconsin said that he did not intend this to be shown as a reduction in the budget, and he pointed out that the report did not so indicate. But, Mr. Chairman, if you will notice on page 44 of the report, and if my distinguished friend from Wisconsin will notice, you and he will see listed there $50,100,000 as a reduction in the President's budget and then if you will note on the recapitulation page of the report you will note that it shows a total reduction below the President's budget of $77,825,520. The fact stands that of that $77,000,000 reduction below the budget, $50,000,000 is in hospital construction.

Now, much has been said here about economy. We have been debating a good deal about cutting this bureau some and that bureau, but the over-all figure is what counts in economy. The fact stands that this bill, if passed as reported, reduces the President's budget by only 4½ percent, and included in that 4½ percent is this $50,000,000 item which the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin says is no reduction at all. So, you see, there is an actual reduction according to his statement of only $27,000,000 which is a little more than 1 percent.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is not quite all the story. The contractual authorization authorizes this agency of Government to enter into contracts, not just to the extent of $50,000,000, but to the extent of $150,000,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, that is why I offer the amendment to make actual appropriations in the amount the committee authorizes to be contracted. This business of postponing the day when we make appropriations, this business of leaving it all to some deficiency committee at some later date raises doubts and a lot of indecision in the minds of the people, and it also casts doubt on the authenticity of the figures of the legislative budget. Here we have another example of a cut which is not real, it is an optical illusion, a committee report showing a cut of $77,000,000, when actually there is no cut at all. If you authorize contractual authority of $150,000,000, this bill represents an upping of the President's budget by $75,000,000. So where is this economy? We are but postponing the date when we will live up to our commitments. The original Hill-Burton Act authorized the appropriation of $75,000,000 for each of five fiscal years, beginning with this year. Therefore, my amendment would make available the funds for matching the funds raised by the local governmental units for this year and for next year, which is living up to the full obligation of the Hill-Burton bill. I hope the committee will accept the amendment.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I have just this to say. This afternoon the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY] challenged me to produce some testimony. I stated that I would. In justice to the House, I desire to read it. It is the testimony of the Secretary of Labor when he appeared before our committee on March 14, 1947:

Mr. KEEFE. Did you have anything to do with the selection of Mr. Faulkner?

Mr. Faulkner is head of the Veterans' Placement Service.

Secretary SCHWELLENBACH. No, I did not. I said that I felt that the set-up, to quote my exact language—I thought the set-up was nuts, that there would be within the Department of Labor an organization that had no responsibility within the Department of Labor and whose head is General Bradley.

Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the pending amendment do now close.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. GORE) there were—ayes 66, noes 129.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, yesterday, as will appear on page 2482 of the RECORD, I stated that the committee has not claimed we were making a $50,000,000 saving in the hospital program.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield.

Mr. GORE. I do not wish to enter into any argument with the gentleman about what the report shows; but if he will look on page 44 of the report and the specific item on page 49 of the report, he will see what I say is printed in black and white.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. The gentleman well knows that from all the racket that has been coming today from the other side of the aisle certainly we must have injured somebody's feelings. So far as I am concerned, it is too bad, but we have to hurt somebody when we are doing this job of cutting down expenditures.

We have, however, in the hospital program, allotted under this bill contractual obligations for $100,000,000 more than the Budget had seen fit to give in direct appropriation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. DIRKSEN. I believe I ought to contribute this much at least. I was advised by the Budget Bureau only 2 days ago that while there was a request here for $50,000,000, only a fractional amount of that could have been expended in the fiscal year 1948.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I might add to that in conclusion, Mr. Chairman, that not a single State program had been sent in for approval to the Public Health Service in relation to this entire picture at the time our subcommittee wrote this bill. So why have $50,000,000 lying around doing nothing? The Congress will make every cent available that is matched up to the authorized limit.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on title 2 and all amendments thereto do now close.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROONEY) there were—ayes 137, noes 79.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and the Chairman appointed as tellers Mr. KEEFE and Mr. ROONEY.

The Committee again divided; and the tellers reported there were—ayes 146, noes 71.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I offer a preferential motion which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. COLMER moves that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, I think in my experience here this is the first time I have ever made such a motion. I am not too proud of making that motion today, but we are confronted with a situation here where we have to protect ourselves as best we can.

I had an amendment on the Clerk's desk that I wanted this Committee to consider. I had no opportunity to present that amendment, and I took this method of bringing the amendment to the attention of the Committee.

Since it is likely that the forces that are in control will prevail, I am going to take further advantage of this opportunity to state what that amendment is, at least. I recognize, of course, under the circumstances and the temper of the situation that my plea may have possibly little effect.

Mr. Chairman, about 12 years ago when I first came into this House I was rather proud of the fact that I succeeded in collaboration with the late lamented Senator Pat Harrison of Mississippi in getting a bill through the Congress known as the Sea Food Inspection Act. We succeeded in getting an appropriation to implement that act, after a knock-down and drag-out fight in this Chamber. We got $80,000. Subsequently the Department, as the demand for that inspection grew, recommended a cut and they got only $40,000. This appropriation has been granted annually now for the past 12 years.

The purpose of sea-food inspection, Mr. Chairman, was to prevent the sale of bad sea food that was canned in these factories; to protect not only the packers but the public also.

This year we have asked for the same $40,000 that has been in the budget and appropriated for the past 12 years. It is not in the bill, even though it was in the budget. The Department of Agriculture receives $11,000,000 to inspect meat that is processed in the packing houses, yet we are denied this one little item of $40,000 to inspect seafood as it is canned in the factories.

Yes, we believe in economy, but I contend that this is the falsest kind of economy. Why, the life of one person which might be taken by the consumption of one can of bad shrimp is worth more than $40,000.

The factories themselves put up about two-thirds of the money necessary to operate the Inspection Service and we ask for only $40,000. It is argued that if the packers can put up two-thirds of it why can they not put up all of it? The answer comes from the testimony of one of the witnesses from the Department that appears in the record, that the chances are that some bad sea food will be packed in some of these small factories. They do not, of course, compare with the big meat packers and it is said it will cost the Government more than the $40,000 to go out there and enforce it.

I have brought this to the attention of the committee now and I hope my amendment will prevail.

Permit me to say that this Service has proved of inestimable value to both the public and the sea-food industry. And while I appreciate the fact that the gentlemen over on the left side of the aisle, the Republicans, are in control of this House and have their machine well-oiled and are running roughshod over others, their action certainly comes with ill grace in cutting off by the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE], the chairman, even an opportunity to offer this and other amendments that are to be offered. Especially is this true when it is realized that under the system that prevails those of us who are interested in this and other appropriations are prevented from appearing before the committee and knowing whether our appropriations are included or not because of the fact that these committee hearings are conducted in secret. The first opportunity that we have of knowing whether our appropriations are in the bill is when the bill is reported to the floor of the House. It is to be hoped that in the Senate where the rules of procedure are more liberal this most worthwhile item may be again included in the bill.

And, finally, Mr. Chairman, I submit herewith a telegram which I have just received from the Biloxi Seafood Shippers Association, by Mr. R. H. Sewell, manager, which indicates how these packers who are affected feel about the matter:

BILOXI, MISS., March 25, 1947.

Hon. WILLIAM M. COLMER,
United States House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.:

The chamber of commerce has contacted us regarding your wire of today advising that House Appropriations Committee has deleted the $40,000 item for sea-food inspection. Also regarding your intention to offer amendment to reinstate this amendment. We strongly urge in behalf of local packers and packers in other areas that you do all in your power to have this item retained. Canned shrimp and oysters items are experiencing considerable consumer resistance due to present high costs and additional cost at the packer level will only result in increased consumer resistance. Food and Drug Administration has apparently been misinformed as regards packers being in position to assume full cost of inspection. It is our understanding that meat packers, packing for distribution in interstate commerce, have long been furnished inspection on their products by the food and drug at no cost to them whatever. The $40,000 heretofore granted for sea-food inspection, while but a portion of the total cost of sea-food inspection, has been of great help to the canners in this area. Please be assured that anything that you can do toward having this appropriation retained will be greatly appreciated by all concerned.

Kindest regards.

BILOXI SEA FOOD SHIPPERS ASSOCIATION,
R. H. SEWELL, Manager.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the gentleman from Mississippi that the committee does not care very much about this little item of $40,000 that has been carried in the bill heretofore. The only reason it was stricken out was because we assumed from what Dr. Dunbar testified—and his testimony is right here for anybody to read—that the industry itself would take care of this item.

This $40,000 item, may I say to my friend from Mississippi—and I think he knows it—is only a portion of the money that is spent in the seafood inspection service. I believe that service costs about $121,000 and of this $81,000 is made up of fees paid by the industry itself. The Department asks for only $40,000 to supplement what they were getting from fees.

Now, Dr. Dunbar, the head of the Pure Food and Drug Administration, on page 80 of the hearings, testified in reference to this item, and it was on his testimony alone that we decided to strike this $40,000 out. But the only question involved is just this: Seafood inspection to the tune of $81,000 is being paid for by the industry, and the industry ought to pay for its own inspection in order to police it, and they are policing it, spending $121,000, and here they are only asking $40,000 from the Congress.

Mr. COLMER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEEFE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. COLMER. I want to say first that the gentleman has both in private conversation and otherwise shown the most sympathetic attitude toward this, and I have not criticized the gentleman about that.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the gentleman right at that point, if he will read the report of the committee he will see that the action of the committee is absolutely in harmony with the suggestion of the President of the United States in his budget message, in which he made the suggestion himself that Congress should consider the extent to which fees should be charged to services of this character, for those who are the beneficiaries of it.

Mr. COLMER. But the item was carried in the President's budget, was it not?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes.

Mr. COLMER. Then the fact that 80 percent of it is furnished by those packers, is that any reason that the 20 percent should be denied them, when 100 percent of the meat packers' expense is furnished by the Government?

Mr. KEEFE. Well, I do not think that has anything to do with it at all.

Mr. COLMER. It is the same principle, is it not?

Mr. KEEFE. We found all sorts of certification services in the Pure Food and Drug Administration, where the industry itself is paying for the examination and certification of its products. I want to say as one Member of this Congress that I think the time is here right now when this Congress ought to determine whether or not special services of that character that are rendered to industry, in line with the suggestion of the President himself, should not be paid by the industry that receives the benefit of Government inspections.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER] that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with the recommendation that the enacting clause be stricken out.

The motion was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi desire recognition to offer an amendment at this time?

Mr. COLMER. Yes, Mr. Chairman; I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. COLMER: On page 13, line 11, after the word "act" insert a new paragraph as follows:

"Salaries, sea-food inspectors: For salaries of sea-food inspectors designated in accordance with the provisions of section 702A of the Pure Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act, $40,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FOGARTY: Page 17, line 16, after the word "agency" strike out the sum "$18,000,000" and insert "$19,710,000."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FOGARTY].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE III—NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

Salaries: For three Board members of the National Labor Relations Board and other personal services of the Board in the District of Columbia and elsewhere necessary in performing the duties authorized by law, $3,063,100.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Amendment offered by Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma: Page 42, line 7, and page 43, line 19, strike out all of title III "National Labor Relations Board" beginning with line 7 on page 42 and ending on line 19 on page 43.

Mr. SCHWABE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, this appropriation is rather premature at this time. The House Committee on Education and Labor, as we all know, is about ready to report a bill. Nobody knows, I take it, just what that bill will contain nor how much money should be appropriated. I suggest to you that the law under which we are operating now has caused us more confusion and more trouble than perhaps any other law that was ever passed by this Congress. I want to read some remarks I placed in the RECORD on June 14, 1946, giving some factual information:

Senator WAGNER, the author of the bill, stated in 1935:

"The enactment of this measure will clarify the industrial atmosphere and reduce the likelihood of another conflagration of strife."

Eleven years later, we are now experiencing the bitterest labor strife in history.

Senator WAGNER further stated 11 years ago that:

"There is not a scintilla of truth in the propaganda that this bill will create a labor dictatorship."

Now a few labor bosses are dictating to industry, to the Government, and to 130,000,000 American citizens. John L. Lewis was successful in accomplishing practically everything for which he precipitated the coal strike.

Senator WAGNER, speaking further in 1935, of the National Labor Relations Act, said:

"This bill is designed to promote industrial peace."

Apparently it has had the opposite effect.

Let us see what the Wagner Act has done. During the past 11 years—there have been more than 37,000 work stoppages—three times as many as there were the 11 years before the passage of the act by Congress in 1935. The number of workers involved in the work stoppages for the past 11 years is almost 17,000,000, again approximately 3 times the number for a like period before the passage of this act. Hence, roughly speaking, there have been three times as many idle, time wasted, and production lost since, as compared with a similar period before the Wagner Act—National Labor Relations Act was passed in 1935.

Now almost 12—

Consider these facts: In January 1946 there were 325 new work stoppages, with a carry-over of 175 strikes from the month before, both together involving 1,750,000 workers, and 19,200,000 man-days lost. In February 1946, 260 new work stoppages were added to the 200 carried over from January involving 1,450,000 workers and 21,500,000 man-days lost.

Mr. Chairman, I conclude by saying that there is no doubt but that there will be some kind of labor legislation passed by this Congress to remedy the evils that exist and to stop the activities of the labor racketeers. I suggest that this appropriation is premature.

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, very briefly we on this subcommittee cannot act as a legislative committee. If the Congress in its wisdom later decides that this shall be taken out of the picture, the Committee on Appropriations can bring in a rescission bill and take away this sum of money. With all due respect for my fine colleague from Oklahoma, I hope that the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. No one will accuse me, I think, of holding any special brief for the National Labor Relations Board, but may I say that for us to abolish the National Labor Relations Board in this way at this time I think would be a definite mistake. I feel confident from what I heard from members of the House Committee on Education and Labor when I appeared before them and when I have talked with them individually that the House is going to have an opportunity to consider what it wants to do with respect to the National Labor Relations Board and the Wagner Act. To abolish it by denying all appropriations in this way I think would be a very great mistake. Let us leave the NLRB to the time when we consider the recommendations of the Labor Committee. Last year the Board received $4,069,000, and with the increases in pay it is anticipated that the Board will have in this current year $4,481,000. The 1948 budget estimate came in for $7,984,000. The committee is recommending in this bill $4,033,700, which constitutes a reduction in the budget estimates of $3,950,000. Certainly the committee has recommended a very sizable reduction in the budget request. I believe we should allow that at this time in order that the Board may proceed until the House has full opportunity to consider what it wants to do in a legislative way. We would be open to justifiable criticism if we were to abolish the NLRB in this manner and with no more debate or consideration than can be given here today.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Education and Labor, I do not believe I would be trespassing on anyone's rights when I say there has been no such suggestion in the committee.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment which is at the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Perfecting amendment offered by Mr. ROONEY: On page 42, line 11, strike out the sum "$8,063,100" and insert "$6,157,000."

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, may I inquire as to the status of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE]?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] is in the nature of a perfecting amendment. The Schwabe amendment will be held in abeyance until the Committee has had an opportunity to pass upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY].

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and other amendments to this section close in 10 minutes.

Mr. FOGARTY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] would amend his request to limit the time to 10 minutes on this amendment and all amendments thereto.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I believe that can be settled very easily. There are only a few Members interested in speaking.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I shall be very happy to do it that way.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] be limited to 10 minutes.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] close in 10 minutes, 5 minutes to be allotted to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order. I make the point of order that the motion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order that the motion is not in order at this time. The Chair sustains the point of order. The gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] may proceed.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Chairman, I was quite amused awhile ago when we were taking the last teller vote. One of my good friends on the other side of the aisle made the remark that union cards in the Republican steamrollers' union had just been issued today.

Mr. Chairman, the purpose of my present proposed amendment is to increase the amount shown on line 11, page 42, for the annual appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board to the amount of the budget estimate. The majority of the committee have seen fit in this instance to cut the amount proposed by the Bureau of the Budget 50 percent and to the tune of $3,950,300, in the face of the fact that there have been numerous undue delays in the handling of cases by the National Labor Relations Board due to insufficient personnel, with the result that in many instances parties have been unable to obtain NLRB collective-bargaining elections, or, rather, elections to determine who is the correct collective-bargaining agent in behalf of employees. The further result is that we play right into the hands of the Communists who, after the employees have been waiting for months upon months upon months for remedial action, then are able to say, "You see, we're getting nowhere, let us go out on strike." This is not the orderly way to handle industrial labor relations in this country. This is one of the results we cause when we cut the amount in this budget estimate for NLRB appropriations to the extent of 50 percent. The estimate is being cut 50 percent in the face of the fact that it is impossible, according to the testimony, for the National Labor Relations Board to handle cases under present conditions and under their present appropriation, since in the first 6 months of the present fiscal year the amount of case intake has increased 65 percent over the corresponding period of the previous year.

This in face of the fact that the staff of the National Labor Relations Board has been decreased 25 percent below that which they had at the close of the last fiscal year. Therefore, I fail to see how we are going to eliminate industrial strife and trouble in this great country of ours if we continue as we have here today, to cut appropriations such as this item to the tune of 50 percent, for the legitimate and absolutely necessary activities of the Labor Department. One of the most important, as you all know, is the National Labor Relations Board. I trust that you will vote for this amendment.

Under the permission which I expect to obtain later when we go back into a session of the House, I insert at this point an article by Thomas L. Stokes entitled "Reckless Ax Wielding":

RECKLESS AX WIELDING

(By Thomas L. Stokes)

In its avid quest for economy, Republican leadership in the House continues to exhibit what appears to be something short of wisdom.

There seems little contribution to the public welfare in whacking off 40 percent of the budget for regular operating expenses of the Labor Department submitted by President Truman, or in cutting almost in half the amount he recommended for the National Labor Relations Board, created by the Wagner Act to protect labor's right of collective bargaining. These are among economies of the second major supply bill laid before the House by its Appropriations Committee.

The wholesale economy in this particular field is surprising. For it was during a GOP administration that the Labor Department was created 34 years ago this month. Formerly there had been a Department of Commerce and Labor. The bill for a separate Labor Department was the last signed by President Taft, father of the present Ohio Senator, before he retired from office on March 4, 1913.

Since its creation the Department's functions have been broadened and enlarged, through both Republican and Democratic administrations, as the Nation has grown, as the labor population has increased, and as the people have recognized the need of improving conditions among workers, organized and unorganized.

This Department, like others, has a general function inherent in our system of government, aside from specific administrative functions. This is to serve as a sort of watchdog on behalf of the people, in this instance of the great mass of workers who keep our industries going.

In carrying out this function, the Labor Department continually inquires into matters affecting labor—working condition safety precautions, employment prospects, protection of women workers, education of workers, and the like. It gathers pertinent information and makes it available to States, organizations of all sorts, and the various public media.

The proposed appropriations cut affects this vital function in various ways. For one illustration, it abolished the Division of Labor Standards, a relatively small agency which had a part in this function. It shifted its components elsewhere on a restricted basis where it did not eliminate them entirely.

The importance of any Federal department is that it and its agencies take the over-all look. Through the facts it can make available it can be helpful in improving local conditions, particularly where local agencies either lack the facts or, for reasons obvious to any newspaper reporter, hesitate to move in. The Federal Government carries prestige and is less susceptible to local influences of one sort and another which often stop action.

The House Appropriations bill, for example, does away with the industrial safety and sanitation service of the Division of Labor Standards, which requires only a few people. In defense, the committee said industrial safety and sanitation is a State matter and explained that safety and sanitation "are being constantly appraised by insurance companies and by private organizations."

But any newspaper reporter knows how private interests can influence local agencies and State legislatures and not only suppress information but prevent action. It is a common experience that reporters constantly go to a Government agency to dig up facts which, when published, open the eyes of people in a local community and force action.

This is a service of Federal Government with which the layman is not so familiar, though he enjoys its benefits. Such service is especially valuable for labor, since it still does not have complete protection in its work and its work conditions.

It seems false economy to withdraw or curtail so severely the many useful functions affected by the appropriation bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY] do now close.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ROONEY].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, I offer a perfecting amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. CHURCH: On page 42, line 11, strike out "$3,063,100" and insert "$2,050,000."

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, it is very evident that my amendment if adopted may save the NLRB. I feel quite certain that when Congress amends the NLRA there will be much less work for the NLRB.

My amendment provides for a cut from $3,063,100 to $2,050,000, a cut of a little more than a million dollars. That leaves ample money, I am sure for this item. It leaves $5,000 more than the appropriation for 1941 and $335,000 more than the appropriation for 1944.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The effect of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] would be to further reduce the amount below the amount suggested by the committee $1,015,100. If you will read the report, you will observe that the report itself indicates there was a sharp division on the committee with reference to the appropriation for the National Labor Relations Board. That division is clearly manifested here now. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE] wanted to give them no appropriation at all. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH] wanted to cut it another million dollars. The strident, bold, bad chairman of the committee had to step into the situation when the vote was taken in order to get for the National Labor Relations Board the amount of money carried in this estimate. I think also the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. H. CARL ANDERSEN].

I do not see how we can expect to consider the amendment that has just been offered or the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE]. We cannot legislate on an appropriation bill in this manner. Somebody may say, "Well, you just did it. You knocked out the provision for the Division of Labor Standards in the Labor Department." I would fully expect somebody to rise and say that. The difference is just this: The National Labor Relations Board is the creature of the Congress by enactment of organic legislation. It is an act of Congress. I have always taken the position on every one of these bills that it is not the prerogative or the function of the Appropriations Committee to try to emasculate or do away with existing law.

Mr. KEEFE. May I say to the gentleman and my colleagues, who have been so patient during this afternoon, that I hope, with all deference to my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE] and my friend from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH], who have rendered such splendid service on this subcommittee, that both of their proposals will be rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. SCHWABE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in an effort to intimidate, bulldoze and bully the Congress of the United States into continuing a program of extravagance, duplication and waste the bureaucrats of the Treasury Department and the Customs have launched a campaign of deceit, misrepresentation and falsehood to achieve their ends.

Not satisfied to receive $3,500,000 more than they have for 1947, nor to carry out the express intent of the House of Representatives as given in the report which accompanied the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, the Bureau of Customs in an effort to obtain publicity for pressure purposes has sent dismissal notices to the most vital personnel in Customs service.

Bureaucrats will hold their jobs and their prerogatives at the risk of encouraging smuggling.

They will dismiss port employees yet spend $259,000 for traveling expenses.

They will dismiss port employees yet spend millions to set up new bureaus in foreign countries.

They will dismiss port employees yet spend $250,000 for telephone calls and telegrams.

They will dismiss port employees yet spend $400,000 to transport household effects of Bureau personnel from place to place, and other transportation items.

They will dismiss port employees yet spend $271,000 to do repair work on buildings and property that will draw construction materials away from the Government housing program.

They will dismiss port employees yet spend $55,000 for an Information Exchange.

They will dismiss port employees yet spend $305,000 for stationery, tires and such automobile accessories, rope, box openers, and such miscellaneous expenses.

They will dismiss port employees yet spend $350,000 to purchase desks, filing cabinets and such trappings of bureaucracy.

They will dismiss port employees yet spend $558,000 to hire temporary day labor and other part-time employees.

They will not carry out the will of Congress to cut down administrative expenses and retain port employees. They were given sufficient money to retain these port employees and to hire a few new ones.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I do not understand there are any further amendments.

Mr. ROONEY. We have no further amendments on this side.

Mr. KEEFE. Then, Mr. Chairman, then I ask unanimous consent that title IV, title V, and title VI of the bill be considered as read and open to amendment.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, and I shall not, this will not preclude me from making a pro forma amendment and taking about 2 minutes, will it?

Mr. KEEFE. No.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, earlier this afternoon I spoke about the ill-advised and unjustified Treasury Department cuts. I referred to the loss of revenues and the sources of loss. I now submit actual samples of tax evaders who might in the future escape detection if the investigative staff of the Bureau of Internal Revenue should be reduced; and I ask unanimous consent that this be made a part of my previous remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the pro forma amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is becoming increasingly apparent that there is a Nation-wide plot on the part of bureaucrats, left-wingers, and New Dealers to sabotage the work of the Appropriations Committee. I think the American people should be placed on guard against it.

It is utterly essential if we are to maintain our free enterprise system that the budget be reduced. The American people voted for this reduction on November 5 and the Republican Congress is determined to carry out their mandate.

But an insidious campaign of misrepresentation, deceit, and falsehood is being conducted to the effect that we are scuttling essential public services. It is being applied to the two bills already reported and I am convinced it is to be applied against every bill as it comes up.

A striking case in point is the propaganda that the Customs Service is being forced to discharge members of its ports patrols and throw our ports open to smugglers.

The facts are that this Service was given $3,165,000 more than it had for the current fiscal year. It sought $6,500,000 more. Its original figures were recognized as being padded by both the Treasury and the Budget Bureau.

It can hire at least 400 more employees than it now has and yet it is announcing large reductions in force with the deliberate object of deceiving the people.

Our committee also caught the service in a shocking effort at deceit in the matter of mileage allowances sought.

It so happens that this particular appropriation bill was passed by a unanimous vote of the House.

It is a well-nigh intolerable situation when the bureaucrats, faced with an end of their heyday, use their offices to sabotage a Congress which is struggling to restore sanity to our Government. And I may as well say to them that we Republicans are determined to do our job and if the administrators cannot give efficient service on the appropriations granted, then we manifestly need new administrators.

This particular administrator, instead of being hurt, will have $32,500,000 to spend next year, including $300,000 for telephone calls.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I wonder if the Chairman's attention has been called to the real words which were spoken by Mr. John C. Tulloch, who has been mentioned here today by the gentleman from New York as the collector of the port at Ogdensburg, when he said this:

With 156 Federal agencies in Washington they should forget patronage for a while and economize there instead of taking off the patrols.

Those are the words, Mr. Chairman, of the collector of the port up in Ogdensburg.

Mr. TABER. He should read the bill and be honest with the people and quit playing to the galleries and falsifying everything in connection with this situation.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, those of us who have worked with the distinguished gentleman who has just spoken, the chairman of the Appropriations Committee, day in and day out and year in and year out do not doubt for one moment the gentleman's utter sincerity. He started out seriously about this business of economy. His intentions were good. The only obstacle was that the gentleman and other leaders of his party were talking in theory apart from a practical application of their theories or was it promises?

It was very easy for this House to pass a resolution that we were going to reduce $6,000,000,000, but what is the score today? For a goodly number of years the gentleman and his party have been telling the country what they were going to do, what they would do. Well, that easy saddle of pleasant vaticination has become the hard seat of responsibility. The question now is, and in 1948, I assure you, will be—what have you done? What is the score to date? When we vote on this bill today we will have considered a little more than 40 percent and acted upon a little more than 40 percent of the President's budget. With what result? We will have made an actual reduction of less than 1 percent.

Of course, the distinguished gentleman now blames the bureaucrats, as we have just heard. Well, for 9 years here I have heard the woes of the world blamed on the bureaucrats. The bureaucrats did not write these Republican appropriation bills. Forty percent of $37,500,000,000, the President's budget is exactly $15,000,000,000. The Treasury-Post Office bill contained $13,265,000,000 in the budget request. What did we appropriate? We cut it actually $97,000,000. Of course, there was that bogus claim of an $800,000,000 cut in tax refunds, but when you pass this tax bill tomorrow you are not only going to have to reappropriate that $800,000,000, but you will have to add another billion dollars to it to make tax refunds.

What is the score in this bill which appropriates $1,785,000,000? We have heard today a lot about economy cutting of the heads of a few bureaucrats here and there. My distinguished friend from Wisconsin has assumed the role of a martyr to economy, a big bad wolf. The gentleman is really not a big bad wolf, not very.

If you look at the totals in this bill, you will find that, even if you consider that they have cut this hospital item completely out, the cut is only 4½ percent below the budget. Not counting the hospital cut, it is only 1½ percent. I think a Democratic committee might have cut more.

In appropriating 40 percent of the President's budget there has actually been a reduction of less than 1 percent. If we grant all the claims, the $800,000,000 phony on tax reduction, the $50,000,000 item for hospital construction, which at least two distinguished majority members of this subcommittee, including the chairman, have said was no cut at all—well, is it or is it not—but granting that is a real cut, granting all economy claims, they have cut only a fraction over 6 percent.

What does that mean? We have considered a little more than $15,000,000,000 of the President's budget. This leaves $22,500,000,000 yet to be considered. Of that amount 80 percent is for the Army and the Navy and the veterans. Unless you slash national defense and veterans, where are you going to save your $6,000,000,000? The truth is, you are meeting your responsibilities face to face, and strained though the acquaintance may be, you may as well get acquainted with your responsibilities, and not try to cram an unsound tax reduction down our throats on the theory that great economies are to be effected before we know how much our expenditures will be, before we know what our foreign commitments will be. What's the rush on tax reduction? Mr. Chairman, what are my Republican friends afraid of? Their promises or performances? Or both?

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. OWENS. If what the gentleman says is true, why are we wasting so much time today?

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Do I understand the gentleman to reply that we have not cut enough?

Mr. GORE. I certainly do, if taxes are to be slashed $3,840,000,000. What did we do to the Post Office Department? You made a smaller cut than the Democratic committee did last year. Where is this vaunted Republican economy drive? It is completely bogged down. What are you going to do about it?

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I will always yield to my friend, the distinguished gentleman from New York.

Mr. TABER. Has the gentleman, since he has been on the floor in connection with these bills, offered to cut appropriations?

Mr. GORE. I offered an amendment today to try to correct the finagling in your budget bookkeeping.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto close in 5 minutes.

Mr. BONNER. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this bill and all amendments thereto close in 7 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER].

Mr. BONNER. Mr. Chairman, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for March 10 and 11 in the debate on the Treasury Department and Post Office Appropriation Act contains certain statements concerning the Coast Guard and its administration which cannot be supported by the facts. The unjustified inferences resulting from those statements should be brought into the open and subjected to the clear light of the true facts relating thereto.

Mr. CANFIELD, on page 1875 of the RECORD, states that—

> The Coast Guard is attempting to build itself up into a full and complete replacement for the independent Navy.

The only apparent basis for this remark is that the Coast Guard in its budget for 1948 originally asked for approximately $232,000,000. As we all know, during the wartime period from 1939 through 1945, developments in technical fields, including air transportation and communication, were startlingly rapid. Postwar commercial and military conditions cannot be compared with or brought back to 1939. During the war the Coast Guard played a large, active part in development of facilities for safe sea and air navigation. This year the Coast Guard recognized that the country's need for safe transport was vastly different than before the war.

As is well known, this country has been participating in a Provisional International Civil Aviation Organization in determining requirements, standards, allocation of routes, safety services, and so forth, covering international transport. Also there is an established Air Coordinating Committee comprising the heads of the executive departments concerned, which has an over-all responsibility for this country's program relative to air transport. Both of these agencies have stated to the Treasury Department the need for modern and adequate navigational service and rescue facilities outside the United States. In preparing its budgetary program for the fiscal year 1948, the Coast Guard would have been burying its head in the sand and derelict in its duty if it did not present estimates of the cost of the necessary ships, planes, and stations required to meet the country's needs for safe transport. Estimates were prepared on a considered basis related to the prospective volume of military and commercial sea and air transport and the use of modern technical developments to provide adequate safety. We all have read of many recent instances in which our citizens and our international neighbors, have lost their lives in transport disasters. Were it not for the navigation and rescue facilities, inadequate though they have been, probably many more lives would have been lost. We all know, further, of specific cases in which the Coast Guard can be credited with the saving of lives outside of the continental limits of the United States. The Coast Guard believes, just as you and I do, that these lives are valuable. I do not think that in these terms, the Coast Guard's program can be termed "grandiose."

Whether or not this Congress intends the Coast Guard to provide navigational aids and rescue services beyond continental limits of the United States is, of course, a matter for this Congress to decide. Until the decision has been made in the negative, the Coast Guard should not be scathingly censured for presenting estimates of the cost of such services. In fact, the Coast Guard would have been subject to severe criticism if it did not present such estimates. It is emphasized that the original budget proposal of the Coast Guard was based in every instance on properly carrying out statutory functions, or new functions resulting from developments during the war—functions which other Government agencies requested and urged the Coast Guard to continue—functions which the Coast Guard could not itself determine were unnecessary—functions which have not yet been shown to be unnecessary for the proper continuance of our Government.

Mr. CANFIELD on the same page states:

> Some of my colleagues will, a little later, give you specific examples of the waste, the extravagance, and the grandiose schemes of the Coast Guard.

Despite the great number of words used to censure this service, which has always willingly and efficiently performed all tasks assigned to it, the nearest approach to specific examples of waste are vague statements concerning high ranking officers and a completely unsupportable inference that Coast Guard headquarters is deliberately operated with practically all commissioned officers. It is emphasized that, despite the sweeping derogatory statements about waste and extravagance, not one specific instance attributable to the Coast Guard is cited. Gentlemen, if specific instances had been found, I am sure you will agree that they would have been brought to our attention in no uncertain manner by the gentlemen who saw fit to make these vilifying statements about the Coast Guard.

Mr. CANFIELD further states:

> We hope to cause a reduction in the great and disproportionate numbers of high ranking officers whose rank was created admittedly to keep pace with Navy protocol.

No explanation is given as to how this number of high ranking officers is disproportionate. If reference is made to the second table on page 586 of the hearings it will be seen that the only great disproportion appears in the rank of lieutenant commander. The reason for this, as explained by the table on page 583 of the hearings, is the absorption into the Service of 676 personnel of the former Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation, whose duties are such that it is clearly necessary that they have commissioned status, and the position of the great majority of these officers in the former Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation was such that it is fair and appropriate that they should have the rank of lieutenant commander or above. This is practically the entire reason for any disproportion as it appears in the break-down of officers by rank at the present time. Workable plans have been made by the Coast Guard to bring these proportions to whatever Congress decides they should be as soon as possible without injustice to these officers who have, since the beginning of the war, been absorbed into the Coast Guard.

Mr. ROBERTSON on page 1879 states that—

> There would be one officer for every six enlisted men.

No reference is made to the footnote to the table on page 587 of the hearings which makes it clear that if the former Bureau of Marine Inspection and Navigation officers, who admittedly and necessarily work without an enlisted force, were eliminated from the computation the ratio would have been 1 to 8. Furthermore it is to be noted that the figures used include over 700 warrant officers—officers who have been appointed from the ranks. If they were also eliminated, the ratio would be 1 officer to 12 enlisted men. This ratio of commissioned officers to enlisted men is a fair one to compare with similar ratios in other services. The more or less standard ratio in the Navy, for example, has been 1 commissioned officer to 10 enlisted men.

Mr. ROBERTSON on page 1879 further states:

> Captain Richmond, Chief of the Planning and Control Staff, admits that when they have to reduce personnel in the Coast Guard, they let the enlisted men go and keep the admirals.

A careful perusal of the testimony in the hearing reveals that, not only was such a statement not made, but that no statement was made from which such an inference could be drawn. The number of admirals in the Coast Guard today is less than half what it was 2 years ago. During demobilization hundreds of officers in the Coast Guard were reduced in rank, and other hundreds who had been temporarily commissioned from warrant or enlisted status had to revert to their permanent position in the Service. It is clear that any insinuation that the Coast Guard is not striving to achieve a well-balanced workable officer structure which is comparable to that maintained before the war cannot be justified.

Mr. DIRKSEN on page 1927 of the RECORD makes much of the fact that the Coast Guard is asking for three times as many captains and commanders as were in service in 1940, and states:

> Would you not say that the adjective "grandiose" is rather properly applied when an agency reaches out for that kind of an expansion program.

This presents a very simple problem in arithmetic. If you refer to the table on page 579 of the hearings you can readily see that the number of commissioned officers in 1940 has more than quadrupled in 1947, which is the same number as was requested for 1948. Now note, gentlemen, that the Coast Guard is not asking for four times as many captains or four times as many commanders, which the ratio of expansion indicates it should have. It is asking, as Mr. DIRKSEN points out, for only three times as many. I ask you, gentlemen, where is there anything scheming or grandiose about this? Or where is there any evidence of disproportionate numbers of officers in the higher ranks?

Mention was made of the number of flag officers requested. The table on pages 585 and 586 of the hearings shows clearly what the cost of flag officers in the Coast Guard is and will be. The Commandant of the Service is, as he stated in his testimony before the committee, convinced that greater efficiency will result to the Government if flag rank is authorized for each commander of a Coast Guard district and for certain other responsible positions in the service, and that the very small additional expense is well justified. There is no intention on his part to exceed normal percentages for flag officers in a military service, and the Coast Guard will adjust itself accordingly just as soon as an indication of the will of Congress on this matter is expressed in legislation.

Mr. ROBERTSON on page 1879 states:

> In the Commandant's headquarters in Washington there are eight officers for every enlisted man.

Gentlemen, allow me to quote from the appropriation bill itself beginning on the second line of that part of the bill which deals with the Coast Guard:

> Provided, That no part of this appropriation shall be used to pay any enlisted man of the Coast Guard while detailed for duty at Coast Guard headquarters if such detail increases above thirty the total number of enlisted men detailed to such duty at any time.

I merely need ask how the administration of this busy agency of the Government is to be carried out at its headquarters unless officers who understand Service functions are brought in to do it. Mr. ROBERTSON did not see fit to point out that his committee provided for some 700 civilians who do the work at headquarters which, to a large extent, could be performed by enlisted men if the Congress had not annually placed a limitation on the number of enlisted men who may be stationed in Washington; this limitation has been repeated annually in the appropriation act for the past 30 years.

Mr. ROBERTSON further states:

> Added altogether we have a sordid story of bureaucratic expansion at its worst.

If there is anything sordid about the expansion of the Coast Guard, it certainly does not appear in the RECORD. Reference is made in the RECORD to Coast Guard air bases and their proximity to Navy air bases. In many instances a Coast Guard air station was the first one in the vicinity; other air stations were established by Congress at later dates; so the proximity to other air stations cannot be attributed to the Coast Guard in all cases. Congress in 1916 provided for the establishment of 10 Coast Guard air stations along the coasts of the United States. Since that time Congress has provided for one additional air station. Nothing can be seen in this history of the growth of the Coast Guard that can be considered unreasonable or "sordid."

In the course of the discussion statements were made to the effect that the Coast Guard was not intended to be a "blue water" organization or to function as a military or naval organization. How can this be reconciled with statutes which require the Coast Guard to conduct the International Ice Patrol, to enforce the Whaling Treaty Act, to provide medical aid to deep-sea fishermen, to remove derelicts on the high seas, and, finally, to enforce all United States laws on the high seas and the navigable waters of the United States. The Coast Guard is, by statute, a part of the land and naval forces at all times, and as such has always been required to maintain its equipment in a state of military readiness to function with the Navy in time of war or in time of national emergency, and this requirement of military readiness must be given constant attention in any training program that the Coast Guard maintains. The record of this Service in World War II bears irrefutable evidence that the Coast Guard was properly trained as a military service, and the wisdom of such training cannot be questioned.

Make no mistake, gentlemen, when you cut the Coast Guard you are cutting one of the national defense forces of the United States; while it is very small in comparison to the Navy, it is an efficient organization which gives military training to thousands of young Americans yearly, and at the same time gives valuable service to the Government; it certainly seems short-sighted to cut this branch of our national defense force on the one hand while we are considering compulsory military training on the other. Why do we not realize that we have a service here that provides military training and useful service to the Government at the same time?

It seems entirely unjustified that a service which functioned throughout the war with the Navy on every ocean in which combat vessels were engaged in operations should be accused of "sordid expansion," "disproportionate numbers of high-ranking officers," "wastes, extravagance, and grandiose schemes," because it is requesting that the internal organization of the service approximate that of the Navy even though it be on a ratio of about one twenty-fifth in size. It appears that the Coast Guard has been severely criticized for requesting that it be given funds to carry out functions which other departments and agencies of the Government believe are necessary, and for requesting that its internal organization be similar to that of other military organizations of the land and naval forces of the United States. It appears to be a most unjust criticism of the Coast Guard to brand its request for approximate equality in officer percentages with the peacetime Navy as unreasonable expansion when it was called upon during the war to serve side by side with that organization and will undoubtedly be called on again in case of any war or national emergency to operate in the same manner.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, hope springs eternal in the human breast, it is said, and it is particularly true in the case of those afflicted with many of the so-called incurable diseases.

I call attention to the fact that there is a little hospital in my home county of Chautauqua located at an elevation of about 1,600 feet that has made perhaps more progress toward the cure of tuberculosis than any other institution known in the country. Of course, they are dealing almost entirely with the application of this drug known as streptomycin.

My purpose in taking the floor is to call to your attention some newspaper articles and to give you some idea of the miraculous—and I use that word advisedly—miraculous work being done there in curing tuberculosis cases that are very far advanced. The Government must provide this streptomycin to help this institution and many others like it which are going to take up this type of study, investigation, and cure.

The articles referred to are as follows:

[From the Buffalo Evening News of January 28, 1947]

REMARKABLE RESULTS OF NEW TUBERCULOSIS TREATMENT EXPLAINED—DOCTORS HERE LEARN OF WORK OF DR. RATHBUN WITH STREPTOMYCIN AT CHAUTAUQUA COUNTY'S SANATORIUM; STILL IN EXPERIMENTAL STAGE

A new hope for combating mankind's terrible scourge, tuberculosis, rests with the miracle drug streptomycin.

This was the word that spread rapidly among Buffalo's medical profession after a demonstration Monday evening of the remarkable results achieved in 4½ months of experimentation by Dr. Walter L. Rathbun at Newton Memorial Hospital at Cassadaga, Chautauqua County's tuberculosis sanatorium.

While it was emphasized that the treatment is still in the experimental stage, the accomplishments have been so impressive as to draw comments of "amazing, miraculous, momentous" from physicians who have worked in the tuberculosis field for half a century and more. Streptomycin is a drug developed from soil fungus.

The results of the treatment were presented in preliminary form by Dr. Timothy C. H. Liang, assistant to Dr. Rathbun (who was unable to attend because of illness), to 20 Buffalo physicians and tuberculosis specialists at a private dinner in the Buffalo Club arranged by Dr. Albert H. Garvin.

FORTY-ONE CASES SHOW IMPROVEMENT

Dr. Liang pointed out that 41 cases have been treated during these 4½ months and all have shown general improvement. In fact, only three cases continue to show the presence of active tubercle bacilli. The others have shown sputum negative, urine negative and generally diminishing tuberculosis.

Most spectacular of the cases described was that of a Navy veteran of World War I, who entered Newton Hospital last September at the point of death. He was suffering from tuberculosis in nearly every part of the body, including the meninges, or covering of the brain. The disease was so widely disseminated that physicians held no hope for his recovery.

He had been in a coma for 19 hours when streptomycin was injected intramuscularly. "He regained consciousness," reported Dr. Liang, "and he is still with us today. He has gained 28 pounds and he is up and around and taking a new interest in life. Now he has shown up negative in three successive tests for tuberculosis bacilli."

REMARKABLE RECOVERIES

In X-ray plate after X-ray plate, Dr. Liang pointed out remarkable improvements from the disease in 1 week, 4 weeks, 2 months. He cited lung cases and grave bone cases, where tissues had healed and bone structures were being restored following the use of streptomycin.

Each patient receives two grams of the drug daily for the first 4 days, Dr. Liang explained. Then for a month he receives one gram daily in two injections. Starting with the second month, the dose is reduced to half a gram daily, depending on the individual patient's conditions.

Difficulties, Dr. Liang pointed out, were the scarcity of the drug; the high price and the inability of the manufacturers to produce uniform quality. Variations in the potency of the streptomycin from lot to lot affected results, he said.

The drug costs $4.80 a gram. While that appears to be extremely high, it is considerably less than the price when the drug first appeared on the market, $20 a gram.

DR. GARVIN VISITED HOSPITAL

Asked about research with streptomycin at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minn., Dr. Liang pointed out that experiments there had been conducted before a dosage of the drug had been established and before manufacturers had developed present methods of achieving purity.

Dr. Garvin, who is president of the Tuberculosis Association of Buffalo and Erie County, Inc., visited the hospital at Cassadaga a week ago and studied the treatment first-hand with Dr. Rathbun, the hospital superintendent. The two have been friends for more than 40 years.

"What I have seen is to me a modern miracle," Dr. Garvin said. "I saw a 9-month-old baby with tuberculosis who was sent down from Jamestown to die. That baby was perfectly normal in 8 days.

"In 40 years of contact with tuberculosis, I've never seen anything like it."

Dr. Nelson G. Russell, chairman of the Advisory Board of Health, reported good results in eight cases receiving the streptomycin treatment at the J. N. Adam Memorial Hospital, Perrysburg, under Dr. Horace Lo Grasso, superintendent.

"I saw an improvement in 1 week in a supposedly hopeless case that would have required many months of treatment without streptomycin," he declared. "This is one of the medical events of our lives."

FINAL PROOF STILL LACKING

One note of caution was sounded by Dr. A. H. Aaron, chairman of the X-ray committee of the Tuberculosis Association of Buffalo and Erie County, Inc. After questioning Dr. Liang, he pointed out to a News reporter that final proof is still lacking that streptomycin actually destroys tubercle bacilli.

The evidence shows, he explained, that the drug inhibits the disease. Whether or not it destroys the bacilli can only be determined by postmortem examination of the tissue, he said.

Dr. Liang, a Chinese doctor who has been working on tuberculosis in this country for several years and has been at Cassadaga 7 months, was accompanied by his wife, Dr. Esther Chang Liang, also a physician, who has been on the staff of the Josephine Goodyear Convalescent Home in Buffalo since last fall but now is working with her husband.

FORTY-SEVEN PATIENTS GET STREPTOMYCIN AT NEWTON MEMORIAL HOSPITAL

(By Lance Zavitz)

High in the windswept hills of Chautauqua County is a sanatorium on which the eyes of the medical world are focused because of the promising results achieved in the use of streptomycin as a treatment for tuberculosis.

The sanatorium is Newton Memorial Hospital, Chautauqua County's institution for the treatment of this disease, an institution built with funds provided from the estate of Mrs. Elizabeth Mary Newton of Fredonia and maintained by county funds.

A bronze plaque above a fireplace in the reception room reads: "In appreciation of the splendid generosity of Elizabeth Mary Newton of Fredonia, N. Y., who by provision in her will made possible the erection of this group of buildings to be known forever as Newton Memorial Hospital for the treatment of tuberculosis. Dedicated to the memory of her two sons, Albert L. Newton and Henry J. Newton, 1919."

FIVE BUILDINGS IN HOSPITAL

Located atop the ridge which divides the northwestern portion of Chautauqua County from the southeastern district, Newton Memorial Hospital, is 1,600 feet higher than Buffalo and is reached by a swift climb from Cassadaga.

It has accommodations for 185 patients, including 60 children. The hospital consists of five buildings—an administration building, infirmary, and separate buildings for men, women, and children.

In this quiet rural setting, Dr. Walter L. Rathbun, hospital superintendent, assisted by Dr. Timothy C. H. Liang and his wife, Dr. Esther Chang Liang, mission-trained Chinese doctors, is employing one of the newest methods of treating tuberculosis and obtaining results which physicians with long experience in the treatment of the disease to date have termed "marvelous." It is not yet, however, a substitute for the conventional methods employed up to now.

Dr. Liang and his wife are graduates of Chee Loo University, operated in the capital of Shantung Province, China, by the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions.

CAME TO UNITED STATES TWO AND ONE-HALF YEARS AGO

Dr. Liang was an associate in medicine at that university and several other medical colleges in China. He came to the United States 2½ years ago and spent a year with Dr. J. Burns Amberson in the Chest Service, Columbia University Division, Bellevue Hospital, and another year on the staff of the State Hospital for Incipient Tuberculosis at Raybrook.

Dr. Albert H. Garvin, president of the Buffalo & Erie County Tuberculosis Association, has been watching the work at Newton Memorial Hospital with close attention. He has been a friend of Dr. Rathbun, head of the hospital, since their graduation from medical school. Both are impressed with Dr. Liang's ability to carry on the experiments. During the war he performed more than 3,000 surgical operations with the Jap-infested jungle for an operating room.

Dr. Esther Liang, generally referred to at the hospital by her maiden name, Dr. Chang, to distinguish her from her husband, has been in the United States only 6 months.

RESULTS WERE SURPRISING

She was resident physician of the Josephine Goodyear Convalescent Home, Williamsville, until a few weeks ago, when she went to Newton Memorial Hospital to aid in the streptomycin work. She is devoting her attention largely to laboratory studies. Dr.

Liang's family is Christian, but Dr. Chang is the first member of her Buddhist family to embrace Christianity.

Decision to try the streptomycin treatment was reached when a Navy veteran was brought to the hospital with tuberculosis in almost every part of his body, including kidneys, lungs, and meninges or brain covering. Dr. Rathbun conferred with Dr. Ralph M. Bruckheimer, Cassadaga health officer and part-time member of the hospital staff, and Dr. Liang. It was decided, in view of the patient's critical condition, that they would be warranted in risking streptomycin treatment. The results were so surprising that its use was extended under the supervision and direction of Dr. Rathbun and Dr. Bruckheimer.

HAD INITIAL DIFFICULTIES

The treatment was started with 41 patients, but is being administered now to 47 patients. It is expected this number will be increased to 60 by the end of next month.

Dr. Rathbun explained that difficulty was experienced at first because the hospital had no funds with which to purchase streptomycin. This difficulty was overcome by the Chautauqua County Tuberculosis & Public Health Association.

The association's executive committee last December 9 voted $5,000 from its Christmas Seal funds to buy streptomycin at Dr. Rathbun's discretion. The appropriation, to which $1,000 has since been added, was to form the basis of a fund to be used only for the purchase of streptomycin for further research and for the treatment of needy patients. The fund is to be known as the Dr. Walter Rathbun Fund, the committee stipulated.

While patients are treated at county expense at Newton Memorial Hospital, the normal county appropriation covers only well-established forms of treatment. Special treatments, such as streptomycin, must be paid for by the patient or from funds provided for that purpose, such as the Dr. Walter Rathbun Fund.

May I inquire of the Chairman whether, as I understand, the Budget Bureau is now considering that very item and that it will come before us in other legislation?

Mr. KEEFE. I may say to the gentleman and to the other Members that no committee of this Congress could possibly be put together which would be more sympathetic to providing funds for further research in the use of streptomycin in tuberculosis than is this committee. The difficulty with the situation is simply that we have given them the funds that are needed for research in the field of tuberculosis. Very late in the hearings the representatives of the National Tuberculosis Society came to my office and presented the situation that confronted them with respect to streptomycin. We discussed the matter in the field, and the Public Health Service is going to submit a budget. When it comes up, this committee will give them the money to carry on this research in the use of streptomycin.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Replying to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], who on the one hand votes for all amendments to appropriation bills and against economy and on the other hand complaints about Republicans not cutting enough, I have this to say, the budget will be balanced. Expenses will be cut, whether you like it or not. We are going to cut taxes, no matter what you say. We are going to keep our campaign pledges. If the Army and Navy budgets need to be cut, our defenses will not be hurt by that cut. We are going to cut expenses wherever necessary. We have the votes and we are going to do exactly as we promised last November—something new after 14 years of the New Deal.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS].

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Chairman, earlier in the day the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. VAN ZANDT] offered amendments to pages 3, 4, and 5 of the bill to restore to the bill certain funds for the Veterans' Placement Service under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act. By all the acts of this House, we have obligated ourselves to the cause of the servicemen. We should have kept these funds in the bill. I am convinced when this bill goes to the Senate the funds will be put in there. There is no reason why we should not do it here. When we go back into the House I am going to offer a motion to recommit, which I hope will accomplish that purpose.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. HOPE, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that the Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 2700) making appropriations for the Department of Labor, the Federal Security Agency, and related independent agencies, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, directed him to report the bill back to the House with an amendment, with the recommendation that the amendment be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the bill and amendment to final passage.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. HENDRICKS. I am opposed to the bill in its present form.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk reads as follows:

Mr. HENDRICKS moves to recommit the bill H. R. 2700 to the Committee on Appropriations, with instructions to report it back forthwith with amendments as follows:

On page 3, lines 3 and 4, strike out lines 3 and 4 and insert "600); $474,950, of which $21,510 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of title IV (except sec. 602) of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, and of which $1,000 is for payment of claims pursuant to part II of the Federal Court Claims Act."

On page 3, strike out line 6 and insert "Department, $2,580,440, of which $88,000 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of title IV (except sec. 602) of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944."

Page 3, strike out line 8 and insert the following: "Department, $432,700, of which $50,000 shall be for carrying into effect the provisions of title IV (except sec. 602) of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944."

Page 5, strike out line 10 and insert the following: "(Public Law 600) $4,372,496 of which $3,472,496 shall."

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit, offered by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. HENDRICKS].

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, on that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 170, nays, 211, not voting 51, as follows:

SMALL-BUSINESS UNIT IN DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE MOST WORTH-WHILE STEP

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. KEFAUVER] has been granted permission to address the House later this afternoon. Due to the lateness of the hour he does not wish to take the time of the House, but I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. Speaker, a short time ago I was much interested in an item appearing in the public press regarding the announcement by the Honorable Tom C. Clark, Attorney General, of the reestablishment of a Small-Business Unit in the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice. This announcement followed very closely upon the President's address to the Congress on the State of the Nation. Members of the Congress will recall that second on the list of President Truman's major economic policies which he believed the Government should pursue during 1947 was "restriction of monopoly and unfair business practices, assistance to small business, and the promotion of the free competitive system of private enterprise."

On inquiry, I am informed that the reestablishment of the Small Business Unit was designed for the dual purpose of conforming with this declared policy of the President and of meeting the increasing demands from small businessmen upon the Department of Justice for relief against existing conditions throughout industry.

ATTORNEY GENERAL CLARK COMMENDED

Many of my colleagues here in the House may recall that in the early years of the war, the Small Business section of the Department of Justice received commendation from the Members of Congress in both House and Senate, for the effective work that that section was doing on behalf of this great segment of American enterprise, commonly called Small Business. It was the thought of the Antitrust Division that after the war was over and the various regulations and controls were lifted by the elimination of the various war agencies, the difficulties confronting small business would be largely eliminated. This has not, however, proved to be the case. Consequently, Attorney General Clark and Assistant Attorney General Berge, in charge of the Antitrust Division, have felt the necessity for the reestablishment of a unit devoted exclusively to ministering to the needs of those who feel the pinch of concentrated wealth and power.

The Antitrust Division necessarily has on its staff men whose extensive service has given them a broad understanding of the workings not only of business but also of the various departments and agencies of Government. The entire work of the Antitrust Division is devoted to the study and understanding of problems of business. Its sole reason for being is to protect business against monopoly, restraints of trade, and other unfair business practices. Members of the Antitrust Division, therefore, are singularly aware of the many types of difficulties with which a small business may be faced. They are unusually equipped to work out a solution to a small businessman's difficulties and to work it out with as little delay as possible.

WILL NOT DUPLICATE WORK OF OTHER AGENCIES

I am familiar with the work on behalf of small business which is being conducted by other departments and agencies of Government. I am familiar, too, with the suggestion that has been made that perhaps the work of the Small Business Unit of the Department of Justice duplicates or overlaps the activities of these other agencies. A study of their respective activities, however, convinces me that this is not the case. In fact, no other agency is equipped, or could be expected, to render the type of service offered by the Antitrust Division because such a service is distinctly a part of that Division's function of enforcing the antitrust laws.

Most of the complaints of small businessmen which reach the attention of the Small Business Unit of the Department of Justice involve situations which, if uncorrected, would ripen into major antitrust violations. By looking into these situations as they arise and by nipping them in the bud the Department of Justice is actually saving the taxpayers a considerable amount of money which would otherwise have to be spent in instituting antitrust suits. For this reason the Small Business Unit seems to me to effect an economy which should receive the support of the House.

ENFORCEMENT OF ANTITRUST LAWS PAYS DIVIDENDS

We hear much in these days of governmental economy. It seems to me that no one can quarrel with the fact that a very conscientious effort must be made on the part of all in the Government to reduce expenditures in the maximum amount consistent with the national policy as determined by the Congress.

Nevertheless, when we are dealing with law enforcement it seems to me that economy must be subservient to the public interest in obtaining respect and obedience to law. This policy is particularly true in the case of enforcing a law of such paramount importance as that of the Sherman Antitrust Act. Chief Justice Hughes, whom we should remember was the Republican nominee for the Presidency in 1916 and Chief Justice of the United States, called the Sherman Act the American businessman's charter of freedom. No effort should be spared to protect the charter.

I suppose that there are some who advocate a reduction in the budget for the enforcement of the antitrust laws who do so because they do not believe in those laws. I daresay, however, that the vast majority are simply unaware of the consequences of cutting. It certainly is not true that by effecting a reduction of 10 or 20 percent in appropriations for antitrust enforcement that you will be squeezing out the water. In antitrust enforcement we get only what we pay for. The effectiveness of the law is in direct proportion to the amount of funds for enforcement that we vote.

Without hesitation many of us have willingly voted sums that are astronomical as compared with the $2,500,000 requested for antitrust enforcement in the coming fiscal year. These sums have been appropriated for what, I am sure, are very worthy projects such as land reclamation, conservation of national resources, bridge building, care of Alaskan Indians and all the countless other services that we conceive to be the duty of the Federal Government. But of what avail are expenditures for these worthy purposes if we are to neglect the guiding principle upon which our entire economic life is based: the preservation and promotion of free competitive enterprise.

I shall not attempt to recite the extent and degree to which concentration of economic power in this country has increased nor the added momentum which it received as a result of the war effort. These facts have been set forth in innumerable reports during the past 6 or 8 years. Notable are the studies of the Temporary National Economic Committee and, more recently, the report of the Smaller War Plants Corporation to the Senate Committee on Small Business entitled, "Economic Concentration of Word War II" and, finally, the Staff Report to the Monopoly Subcommittee of the House Committee on Small Business. The record is perfectly clear.

At the same time, an optimistic note is introduced by reason of the recent increase in the number of small businesses. If these businesses are to survive we must have adequate antitrust enforcement. In addition, we must render positive assistance to small business.

In a limited way the Antitrust Division of the Department of Justice is attempting to do its part through the Small Business Unit. I am told that the total number of the men on the staff of that Unit is six. Its recent reestablishment is a good omen. It should receive the support of the entire Congress.

RELIEF FOR GREECE

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House at this time for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I have today introduced a joint resolution which would provide the relief which the people of Greece so urgently need, and at the same time preserve the integrity and prestige of the United Nations.

I am most certainly in favor of relief for Greece, and there can be no doubt that a most unhealthy political and economic situation exists in Greece today. No one can read the recent report of the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization without being acutely aware of the suffering of the Greek people. Funds for food, clothing, and for the rehabilitation of her war-torn economy must be forthcoming. In fact, relief should be given to the hungry peoples in many parts of the world—in Italy, Poland, China, Hungary, Yugoslavia, as well as Greece. The United States, the richest country in the world, has a Christian duty to provide a large share of this relief.

At the same time, the United States has other obligations. We are a member of the United Nations, and that Organization was created under the leadership of the immortal Franklin D. Roosevelt—it was nurtured by his dying breath. The Government of the United States has the sacred obligation of working within the framework of the United Nations in solving international political and economic problems which fall within its jurisdiction. If the United Nations is weak, we have the duty of helping make it strong. If the UN does not work effectively, we have the duty of helping streamline it and making it function properly. We have the responsibility of protecting it and building it up as an instrument of peace. Above all, we have the moral obligation of refraining from taking any action which would tend to weaken it.

The United Nations was created to prevent war and aggression, and to lay a firm foundation for world peace. As an instrument of peace it reflects the hopes and aspirations of all humanity. I well remember how elated my Army buddies and I were when the delegates at the San Francisco Conference agreed upon and signed the United Nations Charter. We believed that at last we were going to be allowed to lay away our uniforms forever.

Now we see the entire United Nations structure in the greatest jeopardy. The House Committee on Foreign Affairs is now considering a bill, H. R. 2616, which would provide military and economic aid to Greece and Turkey without consultation with the United Nations. It will, if it is adopted, mean unilateral action on the part of the United States and complete bypassing and ignoring of the United Nations. This bill is based upon the assumption that the Greek problem is an American problem only, when in fact it is a world problem. As a world problem, it falls squarely within the jurisdiction of the United Nations.

My chief objection to the provisions of this bill is the probable effect it would have upon the future of the United Nations. In my opinion, this effort to bypass the international organization is a cruel blow to its prestige, and is taking the heart out of its high aims. We will, if we pass such a bill, be setting a dangerous precedent for future unilateral action by the United States and other great powers. Walter Lippmann pointed this out in the March 22, 1947, issue of the Washington Post when he said:

> If the pattern of our conduct in this affair becomes a precedent we shall have cut a hole in the Charter which it will be very difficult to repair. * * * Suppose that in Greece later, or in some other wracked and hungry land, there comes into power by elections a government of the extreme left. * * * What happens then is that government calls upon the Soviet Union for aid, asks it to equip and train its armies, to supervise its budget, to plan and direct its economy. What under the "Truman doctrine" do we do if the Soviet Government says that there is an emergency, that it has been invited to intervene, that the United Nations is not in a position to extend the kind of help required?

Let us not forget that it was unilateral actions on the part of the great powers which weakened the League of Nations, and eventually destroyed it. In my opinion, the inevitable consequences of such a policy will not only undermine the whole structure of the United Nations, but will divide the world into two hostile camps and destroy the very foundations upon which the nations of the world are attempting to build a stable and enduring peace.

On the other hand, international action in solving the Greek crisis will have the effect of strengthening the United Nations. It seems to me that it is time for the Congress to stop and weigh carefully the consequences of the Truman doctrine. I, for one, believe that relief which Greece so sorely needs should be administered by a United Nations mission such as has been proposed in the report of the United Nations Food and Agricultural Organization. I insist that if there are border violations of Greek territory, or if Greece is in danger from outside, then it is the duty of the Security Council to protect Greece. I am also of the opinion that if the real issue in the Greek crisis turns out to be not Russian expansion, but the oil of the Middle East, then the United Nations should expose this hoax. If Greece is in danger, let the United Nations tell us the facts and recommend action to be taken. Let the United States follow such recommendations. Let the United States give aid to Greece through consultation and agreement with other members of the United Nations, and let them share in the project and shoulder some of the responsibility.

The bill which I have introduced contains the following major provisions:

First. The Government of the United States is requested to take immediate steps toward calling an emergency session of the Security Council to cope with the dangerous and explosive situation in Greece, Turkey, Palestine, and the entire Middle East.

Second, it would authorize a contribution by the United States of $250,000,000 for Greek relief and rehabilitation. This money would go into an international fund for Greece, with recommendations that other states should also contribute according to quotas fixed by the UN. Pending the creation of this fund, an advance of $100,000,000 by the RFC is authorized.

And, third, the bill would provide for United Nations supervision of the distribution of all supplies in Greece. The distribution would be administered by appropriate international agencies under the control of the Secretary General. Such supplies would be made available to Greece on the condition that they be used without discrimination on account of race, creed, or political belief, and providing that the press and radio would be permitted to observe and report fully regarding the distribution of all supplies.

I am convinced that this is the only logical approach to the problem of Greece, the Near East, or any other international problem of similar nature. Such a bill would provide relief for Greece and at the same time protect and strengthen the United Nations. It will also eliminate any doubts and fears as to the motives of the United States. I do not want it to be said 20 years from now that the United States contributed to the destruction of the United Nations.

The Congress has a great decision to make. We must decide whether our foreign policy is to be based upon the principles of the United Nations, the good-neighbor policy, and the ideals of Franklin Roosevelt, or whether we are to follow the unilateral road of power politics which may eventually lead to war. America must choose between the internationalism of Wendell Willkie and Franklin Roosevelt and the short-sighted nationalism contained in the bill now being considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

I realize that it is becoming increasingly unpopular to believe in the ideals of our late President, or to suggest that his path was the right one. But I now want to go on record before the Congress as standing with Franklin Delano Roosevelt when he said:

> The structure of world peace cannot be the work of one man or one party or one nation. It cannot be an American peace or a British or Russian or Chinese peace. It cannot be a peace of large nations nor of small nations. It must be a peace which rests on the cooperative effort of the whole world.

I fear that the dream of the United Nations is fading fast. It is with the hope of saving it, and the Roosevelt ideal of world peace, that I submit this joint resolution for consideration by the Congress.

PRELIMINARY DRAFT OF JOINT RESOLUTION

Whereas the postwar adjustment in the Near East and Middle East areas has given rise to a number of interrelated situations which endanger the peace and foster suspicion and distrust among members of the United Nations, including armed conflicts in Greece and Palestine, disputes over the control of the Dardanelles, and problems of access by the various nations of the world to the critical oil resources of these areas on an equitable basis; and

Whereas the people of the United States have renounced war and the use of armed force in the solution of international disputes and have joined with other peace-loving nations in the United Nations in order to promote and secure the peace through international cooperation; and

Whereas there is and will be hunger, privation, and suffering in Greece if assistance is not promptly provided, and the Government of the United States desires to assist in the furnishing of such assistance to Greece for humanitarian reasons and in order to promote international well-being; and

Whereas administration of such assistance by the United Nations will promote international confidence and minimize suspicion and conflict among the nations: Therefore be it

Resolved, etc., That (a) the United States shall initiate a request for an emergency meeting of the General Assembly of the United Nations to consider, investigate, and take appropriate action looking toward the resolution of those situations in the Near East and Middle East areas which are endangering the peace, and (b) United States representatives at the several constituent organizations of the United Nations now in session request such organizations as have jurisdiction over any of the aforesaid situations to expedite consideration and action upon such situations pending the convening of the emergency meeting of the General Assembly.

SEC. 2. The United States representatives at the appropriate constituent organizations of the United Nations are hereby authorized and directed to initiate proposals looking toward the establishment of a fund for the relief and rehabilitation of Greece in accordance with the following terms and provisions:

(a) The said fund shall be subscribed by voluntary contributions of the member nations (but the United Nations may recommend to the member nations quotas based on equitable considerations);

(b) The said fund shall be controlled and administered by appropriate organizations and officials of the United Nations;

(c) The said fund shall be used only for the provision of supplies for the relief and rehabilitation of the civilian economy of Greece (including incidental administrative, transportation, technical, and other necessary services); but no part of said fund shall be used for the provision of military material, supplies, or services;

(d) No assistance shall be provided through this fund unless the Greek Government has given assurance satisfactory to the Secretary General of the United Nations that: (1) The supplies made available under this fund as well as similar supplies made available locally will be distributed among the people of Greece without discrimination as to race, creed, or political belief; (2) representatives of the United Nations and of the governments which have contributed to the said fund and representatives of the press and radio of the countries which have contributed to said fund will be permitted to observe freely and report fully regarding the distribution and use of said supplies; and (3) upon request of the Secretary General of the United Nations the Greek Government will furnish promptly information concerning the production, distribution, importation, and exportation of any supplies which affect the relief and rehabilitation needs of Greece.

(e) The Secretary General of the United Nations or the appropriate organizations of the United Nations shall submit quarterly to the nations contributing to the said fund reports of expenditures and activities pursuant to said fund.

SEC. 3. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated to the President upon the establishment of the fund described in section 2, a sum of not exceeding $250,000,000 to provide the United States contribution to such fund. Any advances made by the Reconstruction Finance Corporation pursuant to section 4 shall be charged against any appropriation made under this authorization and shall be repaid to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

SEC. 4. Pending the establishment of the fund described in section 2, and notwithstanding the provisions of any other law, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation is authorized and directed until such time as an appropriation is made pursuant to section 3 to make an advance of $100,000,000 to the President for the purpose of providing supplies for the relief and rehabilitation of Greece. The administration of such relief and rehabilitation shall be carried out by appropriate organizations of the United Nations. For this purpose the President shall transfer the aforesaid advance to the Secretary General of the United Nations or to such constituent organizations as the Secretary General may direct, in such amounts as the President shall determine to be appropriate, upon the receipt of assurance satisfactory to the President that the terms and conditions specified in subsections (c), (d), and (e) of section 2 will be complied with.

SEC. 5. The authority of the President under sections 3 and 4 may, to the extent the President so directs, be exercised by the Secretary of State.

(Mr. BLATNIK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include the text of a resolution which he introduced today.)

JURISDICTION OF THE COURTS

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 2157, entitled "An act to define and limit the jurisdiction of the courts to regulate actions arising under certain laws of the United States, and for other purposes," with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I have cleared this through the majority leader and the minority leader. The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], the minority leader, does not happen to be in the Chamber at the moment, but he spoke to me as well as to the Speaker of the House.

The SPEAKER. The Chair might advise the House that the minority leader advised the Chair that he was agreeable to this procedure.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I know the gentleman from Michigan had cleared this matter with the majority and minority leaders. I want him to know that I have such confidence in him that if he had not done so, but assured me that this was the course of action to take, I would have acceded to his request.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MICHENER, GWYNNE of Iowa, GOODWIN, CELLER, and WALTER.

ECONOMY IN GOVERNMENT

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] just received unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an editorial appearing in a Washington newspaper today. I wish to make the observation that all the money figures quoted in that editorial are in error with the exception of one.

THE CONSUMER IS THE MOST IMPORTANT FACTOR IN ANY FOOD PROBLEM

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, for the past several years a group of Republican Congressmen has been conducting an independent study and investigation of the food and agricultural situation in the United States. As early as the Seventy-eighth Congress the value of the work this group was doing was recognized by the Republican leadership of the House, and it was designated the Republican Congressional Food Study Committee. To me fell the honor—and with it, may I say, many hours and weeks of hard labor—of being made chairman of that committee.

Since its inception that group, whose membership is almost equally divided between representatives of consumer and producer districts, has been the outstanding public exponent of the doctrine of full and unrestricted production of food commodities as the answer to not only wartime shortages but to the long-range welfare of American agriculture and health and happiness of the people of this Nation. At times it seemed that this committee was the only exponent of this sound and humanitarian doctrine.

Time after time the committee has denounced as unwise, unworkable, and inherently evil the economy of scarcity in food production which was foisted on this country by Henry Wallace and his cohorts and which has remained even throughout the war years the greatest single reason for the scarcities of sugar, meat, fats, and oils, and other basic commodities which have plagued the American housewives.

The committee has not confined itself to mere criticisms of the fallacious policy of reducing food production so as to maintain a high price for that which was grown. It has taken the constructive viewpoint that some better answer than limitation of production could and must be found. After studying the situation the committee reached the conclusion that underconsumption, not overproduction, was the basis of our agricultural difficulties. As a result of its studies, the committee prepared a bill expressing in legislative form the philosophy of abundant production. The purpose of this bill was to establish a philosophy of abundance as a national policy and to create in the Department of Agriculture as a separate and distinct unit an organization which should devote its entire time and attention to the problem of the scientific development of processing, marketing, and distribution of food and agricultural products.

This legislation was introduced in the House on March 28, 1946, by Representative CLIFFORD HOPE, a member of this committee, and then the ranking minority member of the House Committee on Agriculture. To Members of Congress, Republicans and Democrats alike, who had long studied this problem, this bill appeared to be the answer for which they had been looking. The goal it sought to attain was the goal toward which the special marketing committee of the House Committee on Agriculture also had been working for 2 years. The result was that the combined products and findings of these two committees, and of the many independent studies which had been made by individual Members of Congress and different organizations, were combined into the Hope-Flannagan bill of the Seventy-ninth Congress, which was reported favorably by the Committee on Agriculture and adopted unanimously by both the Senate and the House of Representatives. Following the adoption Congressman FLANNAGAN, then chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, predicted that it would "accomplish more for American agriculture than any other piece of legislation ever enacted."

The policies and intent of that legislation, which is now Public Law 733, are plain. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of Agriculture to set up and establish within the Department of Agriculture a special, semi-independent unit or branch for the purpose of servicing and developing the private marketing system in the United States. This Department was also to perfect and carry out plans to apply scientific research to food and agriculture utilization as it has in the past been applied to agricultural production. A fundamental and very important function of this Department would be to improve the nutritional level of the people of the United States and to develop new and wider markets for the agricultural products of this country. Into this bureau or branch were to be concentrated all the functions and activities of the Department relating to marketing, research, development, regulation, and servicing.

From time to time since the enactment of this law and its approval by the President, I have had occasion to point out on the floor of this House and to the Republican membership of the House in the Food Study Committee's bulletins which were sent to them regularly during the recent recess of Congress, that the Department of Agriculture did not appear to be moving to carry out the intent of this legislation as rapidly and as willingly as many of us thought should be done; nor indeed as willingly as the Department's spokesmen indicated would be done when hearings were held on the bill by the Committee on Agriculture.

Strange as it may seem to Members of Congress, who after years of full personal experience with it have almost unanimously come to the conclusion that the doctrine of scarcity is a failure, there are still within the Department of Agriculture a sizable and an important group of officials who cling tenaciously to the theory of acreage and production restrictions, and seem unwilling to accept the enacted policy of Congress that the welfare of the people of this country is to be promoted best by a scientific increase in food consumption rather than by a dictatorial decrease in food production.

These officials are important enough in the Department both in numbers and in the positions they occupy to have succeeded thus far in completely avoiding the establishment of a marketing research branch and program in the Department pursuant to Public Law 733, and have effectively nullified the declared policy and intention of the Congress.

It is now 7 months since Public Law 733 was approved by the President. Even prior to its approval, in the months when it was being considered by the Congress and during which the hearings were being held, the Department knew that its adoption was almost certain, it expressed its willingness and desire to work with the Congress in effectuating the policies of the legislation, and it had those several months within which to begin to put into operation the plan for carrying out this legislation. In spite of the time that has elapsed, the Department of Agriculture has not as yet taken one single constructive step toward realining its own organization in keeping with the announced intent and principle of this legislation. Such marketing functions as the Department now has are scattered willy-nilly and without rhyme or reason throughout its various planning, production, and action units. No separate branch or unit can take the lead and the responsibility for establishing a marketing research, servicing, and regulating organization, and such has not as yet been established in the Department; nor are there any present plans for the establishing of such a unit.

It is becoming increasingly clear that the Wallace disciples favoring restriction of production are still sufficiently in control of the Department of Agriculture to dictate the policies of that important branch of the Federal Government. It is also increasingly clear that the Department of Agriculture, as now constituted, has no intention of carrying out or putting into effect the clear intent of Congress as expressed in the Hope-Flannagan Marketing Research Act, Public Law 733, Seventy-ninth Congress.

I am advised that the Department of Agriculture has now under consideration or soon to be considered by the Committee on Appropriations a request for several millions of dollars of appropriations to be expended on some of its pet projects which it believes it will be able to bring in under the authorization of Public Law 733.

I hope my esteemed colleagues on the Committee on Appropriations and the Members of the House who voted for the Hope-Flannagan bill with such high hopes for the benefit it was to confer on the country, will agree with me that not one single cent of the funds authorized in that act should be appropriated to the Department of Agriculture until it has put into operation clearly, willingly and effectively the kind of organization and the policies which the Congress enunciated in that law.

There are some valuable marketing research programs now under way in one or two branches of the department—particularly in the fields of the transportation, storage, and wholesale marketing of perishable commodities. Money should be appropriated to continue and even to expand these valuable activities.

But as to the bulk of funds for the establishment and operation of the great marketing research agency, an organization of which Members of Congress and the soundest agricultural thinkers of this country have been dreaming for years—let us say to the schemers in the Department of Agriculture, "Gentlemen, the Congress has outlined for you the blueprints of an economy of plenty for this country. It has told you as explicitly as it knows how exactly what it wants you to do and how it wants you to go about doing it. You have responded with delays and evasions—with words that signify nothing. The task before you is of such transcendent importance to the people of America that we believe it is better not started at all than started in a manner that foredooms it to frustration, disappointment, and failure. Until you condescend to put into effect the law Congress has written we will give you not one cent of money to squander on another of your semiannual reorganizations of your interlocking bureaus and branches."

The Department may claim that it cannot set up the organization before it receives an appropriation, but this claim is without merit. There are already in existence in the Department marketing, research, and servicing and regulatory activities which are now spending annually some $10,000,000, and which can and should be transferred immediately to this new semi-independent marketing, research, and development branch. These functions and activities could and should form the nucleus of the new marketing-research program directed by the Congress. The administrative set-up could be completed for all immediate purposes by the appointment of one competent, outstanding man to head the new bureau and bring together under his guidance the counsel and cooperation of all Federal, State, and private organizations engaged in this tremendously important program.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

QUESTIONS TO OUR STATE DEPARTMENT

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I note from the newspapers that our Navy is sending some of its ships to the Dardanelles. Why is the Navy sending these ships to the Dardanelles now? Secretary of State Marshall, one of the great military strategists of all times, is now sitting in Moscow in a peace conference, and our Navy Department sees fit to send ships—battleships, aircraft carriers—down to the Dardanelles. How do you suppose that situation looks to the Russians? I remember so well when the Japanese Ambassador was here in Washington in December 1941, supposedly negotiating a peace with Secretary of State Hull at the same time that Japanese aircraft carriers were closing in on Pearl Harbor. Mr. Speaker, the right to declare war resides in the Congress of the United States, and the time has come for Congress to tell our War and Navy Departments and our President, Mr. Truman, that only the Congress has that power. I personally do not like and I resent the waste involved for the American taxpayer for these belligerent, nonsensical, foolish displays of military power in the Mediterranean when we have a perfectly competent Secretary of State in Moscow. Mr. Marshall does not need a Navy to be running around loose in the Mediterranean in order to back up his points.

One of the things that troubles me, Mr. Speaker, about our President's request is the provision that he be permitted at his discretion to send military advisers and personnel to Greece and Turkey. Mr. Speaker, the President himself in this Chamber stated that Greece is one aspect of the global situation. If we agree to grant the President the power to send an American military mission to Greece and Turkey, are we not also by implication committing ourselves to grant similar power to the President to send military personnel to any country in the world which requests it?

Mr. Speaker, let us consider that thought just a little bit. If our President obtains the power to send a military staff anywhere in the world—to intervene in any civil conflict anywhere in the world or to bolster up some rotten, corrupt government by force of American arms anywhere in the world—have we not in effect transferred the power to declare war from the Congress of the United States to the President of the United States? I ask this House to analyze what is involved in the grant of military powers that the President has requested. Do our Army and Navy now consider that the whole world has turned into another Central America and that they can intervene as we did in the twenties in the international affairs of every nation everywhere in the world with our armed forces? Constitutionally, is this a valid grant of powers to the President? Suppose that 5 months from now the Government of Iran requests that we send in 50,000 American troops. Suppose that 1 year from now the British ask us to send a quarter of a million men to India. Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the Chinese Government 1 year from now asks us to send a half-million men to China. Suppose, Mr. Speaker, that the President of the United States and our Chiefs of Staff determine that they have the authority to send our men anywhere that they choose throughout the world—what kind of situation are we in? I want to know before I vote on the request of the President what exactly is involved in this extraordinary request for authority from the Congress to send military advisers and personnel.

I know that the request states that our men are to be advisers—nothing but advisers. But what is advice? Why cannot the advice be given here in Washington? Why do our military men have to be in Greece in order to advise the Greek Government? Does advice cover the practical fact that our military men expect to plan, direct, and give orders for the operation of the present Greek Army in the civil war now raging in that nation? I want to know what in actual fact is intended under the word advice, and the Members of this House, I believe, want to know whether the President of the United States expects that we will grant authority to him to send military advisers anywhere in the world that he sees fit to send them.

Mr. Speaker, if we send advisers, and the advisers then inform our Chiefs of Staff that the present Greek Army is politically unreliable and that American troops are needed, what do we then do? After all, the British are now maintaining 10,000 troops in Greece, and previously have been maintaining more men. What have the British casualties been in the present civil war in Greece? I think that the Congress has a right to know what the British casualties have been up to now in Greece. How many casualties—American casualties—can we budget for the next 2 years in Greece? If some Ohio boy is killed on a military mission in Greece, I want to be able to tell his mother why Congress voted to send him there. So far, I do not believe that any American mother will be satisfied with the explanation that we had to sustain a corrupt, venal, undemocratic Greek monarch in order to keep the Greek people from turning to communism. I do not think that the answer that the British said it was important for us to do it will satisfy anyone who loses his son in Greece. Frankly, the American people understand why hungry people should be fed, why naked people should be clothed. They are ready to support appropriations for relief, but they are not ready to commit themselves to another world-wide war to protect the British Empire, to maintain monarchy, to bribe every scoundrel throughout the world to keep screaming against communism.

Mr. Speaker, I submit here on the floor of the House these questions to our State Department:

First. What do the words "adviser" and "advice" cover?

Second. Will our advisers direct the activities of the Greek Army?

Third. What have been the British casualties in Greece in the last 2 years?

Fourth. If we grant this power requested by the President, do we by implication grant authority to send American military missions anywhere in the world at the discretion of the President?

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee (at the request of Mr. PRIEST), for the balance of this week, on account of official business.

To Mrs. DOUGLAS (at the request of Mr. MCCORMACK), for Tuesday, March 25, on account of illness.

SENATE BILLS AND A JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

Bills and a joint resolution of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 736. An act authorizing the Commissioners of the District of Columbia to establish daylight saving time in the District of Columbia during 1947; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, March 24, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

In the name of Jesus Christ, who was never in a hurry, we pray, O God, that Thou wilt slow us down, for we know that we live too fast. If we are to burn ourselves out, may it be in causes worth dying for. With all of eternity before us, make us take time to live—time to get acquainted with Thee, time to enjoy Thy blessings, and time to know each other. Deliver us from wasting time and teach us how to use it wisely and well.

We ask these things in the lovely name of Jesus. Amen.

TRANSACTION OF ROUTINE BUSINESS

By unanimous consent, the following routine business was transacted:

INTERNATIONAL BROADCASTING FOUNDATION—REFERENCE OF PROPOSED LETTER AND BILL

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has received from the State Department a communication transmitting a draft of a bill to promote development of international radio broadcasting, to create an international broadcasting foundation, and for other purposes.

This is one of those situations, under the language of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, where a choice of committee references is clearly possible within the mandate of the reorganization law; but it seems in this instance the reference could be either to the Committee on Foreign Relations or to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. Inasmuch as the bill has to do primarily with the creation of a domestic corporation dealing with the subject of radio broadcasting internationally, it seems to the Chair that the radio phase overrides whatever the international character of broadcasting involves. Therefore, without objection, and unless there is an appeal to the contrary, the Chair will refer this communication and proposed legislation to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

SUSPENSION OF DEPORTATION OF ALIENS—WITHDRAWAL OF NAME

A letter from the Attorney General, withdrawing the name of Francisco Mora y Bovis from a report relating to aliens whose deportation he suspended more than 6 months ago, transmitted by him to the Senate on March 15, 1947; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AUDIT REPORT OF FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE CORPORATION

A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the audit of the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1945 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

AMENDMENT OF CLASSIFICATION ACT OF 1923

A letter from the President of the United States Civil Service Commission, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to further amend the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; to bring about uniformity and coordination in the allocation of field and departmental positions under the grades of the Classification Act of 1923, as amended; and for other purposes (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Civil Service.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Appropriations:

"Senate Joint Resolution 2

"Joint resolution relative to congressional support for flood-control projects

"Whereas the total flood-control needs in California as expressed in terms of current costs of projects authorized but for which funds have not been appropriated by Congress amounts to $555,000,000; and

"Whereas the allotment to California for the 1948 fiscal year for such projects recommended in the President's budget is only $5,000,000; and

"Whereas the economic justification of the immediate construction of the more vital flood-control projects in California is demonstrated by the fact that there would be an estimated annual flood-control benefit of $23,274,000 and the total reported flood damage for the 1937-38 winter season alone for the entire State was in excess of $100,000,000; and

"Whereas the President's recommended budget appropriation of $5,000,000 by the United States toward the total estimated cost of the authorized flood-control projects indicates that vital flood-control works necessary for the development of the State of California in the protection of lives and property will, under the contemplated rate of appropriation, be long deferred and will seriously interfere with the development of this State as required for its future progress and assimilation of rapidly increasing population, because of the yearly threat of flood damage; and

"Whereas all authorized flood-control projects for California will cost approximately 25 percent of all authorized projects for the United States and the portion of the President's budget of $189,000,000 for flood control to be allocated to California amounts to less than 3 percent thereof; and

"Whereas the State water resources board is supporting for 1948 Federal appropriation an amount less than California's proportionate need based on authorized projects; and

"Whereas the President's budget provides principally for the continuance of flood-control projects already commenced and not for commencement of authorized projects; and

"Whereas if this basis for appropriation is established and continued by the Congress it will mean that because money has not been appropriated in the past for projects in California, money will not hereafter be appriated therefor: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate and Assembly of the State of California (jointly), That the governor and State water resources board are requested and directed to vigorously present to the Congress the need of California for additional 1948 Federal appropriations for authorized flood-control projects; and be it further

"Resolved, That the governor and State water resources board are requested to vigorously present to the Congress the need for those purely flood-control projects in California which have been heretofore authorized but for which no moneys have yet been appropriated for construction; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Congress of the United States be memorialized to enact legislation and make appropriations as above indicated; and be it further

"Resolved, That the legislature pledge its full support to the State water resources board in taking action as above requested and directed; and be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the senate forthwith transmit copies of this resolution to the governor, each member of the State water resources board, the State engineer, the President of the United States, the President pro tempore of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives and each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States and each member of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States."

A letter in the nature of a petition from Rafael Arjona Siaca, senator at large, Senate of Puerto Rico, relating to the political conditions in Puerto Rico; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A resolution of the Board of Supervisors of the City and County of Honolulu, T. H., favoring the enactment of the bill (H. R. 857) to remove the racial restrictions upon naturalization and to amend the immigration laws; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. IVES:

A resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York, favoring the enactment of legislation to authorize the Veterans' Administration to acquire the St. Albans Naval Hospital to provide adjudication service, outpatient service, examinations, rehabilitation service, and as an orthopedic section; to the Committee on Armed Services.

(See resolution printed in full when laid before the Senate by the Acting President pro tempore on March 24, 1947, p. 2425, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of New York; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Resolution 11

"Whereas the borough and county of Queens, State of New York, is larger in population than many of the States in the United States; and

"Whereas Queens does not possess adequate United States veterans' facilities for hospitalization of wounded and disabled veterans; and

"Whereas a large number of men formerly in the armed forces, who now require hospital, medical, or surgical treatment, came from localities in or contiguous to Queens and must travel great distances to receive proper attention: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved (if the assembly concur), That the Senate and Assembly of the State of New York do memorialize Congress to establish a veterans' hospital and maintain suitable facilities for the hospitalization of such veterans in the borough of Queens, city of New York and State of New York; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be sent to the President of the United States, the Speaker of the House of Representatives, each member of Congress from the State of New York, and to the Administrator of the United States Veterans' Administration."

By Mr. WATKINS:

A joint memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah, favoring the transfer of certain land and buildings on the military reservation of Fort Douglas, Utah, to the Federal Administrator of the Veterans' Administration; to the Committee on Armed Services.

(See joint memorial printed in full when laid before the Senate by the President pro tempore on March 25, 1947, p. 2522, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.)

A memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah; to the Committee on Armed Services:

"Senate Concurrent Memorial 4

"Concurrent memorial to the Military Affairs Committees of the Congress of the United States of America and to the Secretary of War, urging the use of certain lands and the transfer of certain buildings at the Tooele Ordnance Depot at Tooele, Utah, to the State department of public welfare

"Be it resolved by the Legislature of the State of Utah:

"Whereas the State of Utah, through the public welfare commission, in cooperation with the commanding officer of the Tooele Ordnance Depot, did establish at said depot on August 1, 1946, the Tod Training Center, a center for the education, training, treatment, and employment of boys between the ages of 16 and 21 years, who because of their problems must be removed from their natural homes; and

"Whereas the said program has been of great value in adjusting said boys to life and preparing them for useful citizenship; and

"Whereas the commanding officer of the Tooele Ordnance Depot has advised the State of Utah that the Tod Training Center must cease operation on or about April 15, 1947, because of lack of employment opportunities for said boys; and

"Whereas buildings, facilities, and equipment will be necessary if such substitute program is developed; and

"Whereas it appears that the Tooele Ordnance Depot will have no use for the buildings, facilities, and equipment now used by the Tod Training Center: Be it therefore

"Resolved by the Twenty-seventh Legislature of the State of Utah in session assembled, That necessary action be taken immediately to transfer from the jurisdiction and custody of the Tooele Ordnance Depot to the State department of public welfare the title to all buildings, facilities, and equipment now occupied and used by the Tod Training Center, together with the use of the land upon which such buildings are situated; be it further

"Resolved, That the secretary of the State of Utah forward copies of this memorial to the congressional delegation from the State of Utah, the President of the United States Senate, the Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, members of the Military Affairs Committees of the United States Congress, to the Secretary of War, and to the commanding officer of the Tooele Ordnance Depot."

(The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate a memorial of the Legislature of the State of Utah identical with the foregoing, which was referred to the Committee on Armed Services.)

By Mr. CAPPER:

A petition of sundry citizens of Salina, Kans., praying for the enactment of Senate bill 265, to prohibit the transportation of alcoholic beverage advertising in interstate commerce; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PROTEST AGAINST INCREASE IN TAX RATES IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for appropriate reference and to have printed in the RECORD a resolution adopted by the Graphic Arts Association of Washington, D. C., expressing their opposition to an increase in tax rates for the District of Columbia until the Federal Government contributes a fair amount of the cost of maintaining the District of Columbia.

There being no objection, the resolution was received, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolution opposing sales tax

Whereas the Federal Government has for many years failed to pay a fair proportion of the cost of operating the District of Columbia Government; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has seen fit to declare large real-estate holdings in the District of Columbia tax exempt; and

Whereas the Congress of the United States has seen fit to exempt thousands of persons enjoying the benefits derived from residing in the District of Columbia from the payment of District of Columbia income taxes; and

Whereas the Federal Government, the owners of tax-exempt real estate, and the local residents exempt from the payment of District of Columbia income taxes enjoy and use all of the facilities and services offered by the District of Columbia, to the same extent as the individual District of Columbia citizen and taxpayer: Be it

Resolved, That this association condemns and opposes the enactment of a sales tax or any other new tax laws or the increase in the rates of any taxes now in effect until and unless the Congress of the United States provides that the Federal Government contribute a fair amount to the cost of maintaining the District of Columbia and until the Congress of the United States removes from the present status the real estate and incomes of those landowners and individuals now exempt from tax action.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR CONTROLS—AMENDMENTS

Mr. ELLENDER submitted an amendment in the nature of a substitute intended to be proposed by him to the Joint Resolution 58, to extend the powers and authorities under certain statutes with respect to the distribution and pricing of sugar, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. WHERRY submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 58) to extend the powers and authorities under certain statutes with respect to the distribution and pricing of sugar and for other purposes, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY FARM LEGISLATION

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, on behalf of myself and my friends and colleagues, the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. AIKEN] and the junior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG], I ask unanimous consent to submit for appropriate reference a concurrent resolution. I shall state very briefly, by way of a prepared statement, the reason for submitting the resolution at this time.

In submitting the concurrent resolution providing for the re-creation of a joint committee of the Senate and House to study policies relating to agriculture and to recommend supporting legislation that will promote the stability of this great industry and enable it to go forward and assure a high level of production in the postwar years, I wish to draw attention to three important considerations:

First. The economic structure and well-being of the United States rests to such a great extent upon agriculture that this basic industry must be prosperous if the Nation as a whole is to prosper.

Second. Price supports under the Steagall amendment, which are a vital part of the present farm program, will end in less than 2 years, so that consideration of legislation to stabilize farm prices will be imperative.

Third. We must plan now to avoid the hardships and losses which the farming segment of our population experienced in a similar period immediately after World War I.

It is doubtful that any emergency legislation is needed to safeguard farm prosperity during the present levels of prices, production, and world food needs. However, when the parity price payments end on December 31, 1948, if we shall have failed to provide for the transition, through a sound farm program, it is certain that a crisis in agriculture will occur. It could result in serious damage to the agricultural economy before emergency legislation could be enacted.

I want the Congress to be fully aware of the needs of agriculture in this period. I am not worried about the specific method of arriving at the desired result. If we make a study of conditions now, I believe that such a joint committee of the Senate and House, as proposed, would suggest especially constructive means of determining what legislation is needed and would, at the same time, help to coordinate the legislative program for agriculture along desirable lines.

I do not regard this as a partisan proposal in any sense. In submitting the concurrent resolution I welcome the interest and support of my friends on the Democratic side who are as deeply concerned as I am in developing a sound and stable agricultural program.

Basically, what is proposed is a careful study of legislation to be considered in the next session of Congress, and a research into the agricultural economy to determine long-term needs. The latter is already in progress under the constructive provisions of the Research and Marketing Act of 1946. The work of the joint committee would supplement the research program with special emphasis on what needs to be done in the next year.

Mr. President, we dare not run the risk of permitting a recurrence of disastrous prices for agricultural products, as they were in the early thirties. We must not and we cannot afford to fail in planning an effective and coordinated program, for failure might lead again to such conditions as prevailed in 1932 when mortgage foreclosures increased to shocking totals and thousands of farm families lost their life's savings and thousands more became homeless because of the foreclosures.

Such adverse conditions in the next few years would lay an especially heavy burden upon young people, many of them veterans, who are only now, after long delay, establishing themselves in business and farm management. They have assumed and are assuming heavy personal financial obligations, to say nothing of their share of the staggering national debt and the burden of taxation they will have to shoulder. Thoughtful planning and action by this Congress would bolster the hopes and opportunities of many young Americans who are seeking to find a satisfying livelihood in farming.

It is with these major considerations in mind, Mr. President, that I submit the concurrent resolution providing for the establishment of a joint congressional committee. From such a committee I am confident would come recommendations for legislation to provide, in ample time, a well-balanced and adequate plan for agriculture in this new period of transition through which we are passing.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 11) submitted by Mr. THYE (for himself, Mr. AIKEN, and Mr. YOUNG) was received and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be composed of five members who are members of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and five members who are members of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. The committee shall select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members. A vacancy in the membership of the committee shall not affect the power of the remaining members to execute the functions of the committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as in the case of the original appointment.

SEC. 2. The committee shall make a thorough study and investigation of existing and pending agricultural legislation and of the trends, needs, and problems of agriculture in the United States, including, but not limited to—

(a) the effect of the expiration on December 31, 1948, of the period specified in section 8 (a) of the Stabilization Act of 1942, as amended (56 Stat. 767), and section 4 of the act entitled "An act to extend the life and increase the credit resources of the Commodity Credit Corporation, and for other purposes," approved July 1, 1941, as amended (55 Stat. 498), relating to price support for basic and nonbasic agricultural commodities, and the advisability of additional legislation on account of such expiration;

(b) methods of conserving the Nation's soil and forest resources, and encouraging the better use of land and more efficient cutting of timber;

(c) improvement of methods of production, marketing, and distribution of agricultural commodities to the end that present high levels of production may be maintained and expanded and agriculture may assume its basic position in the national economy; and

(d) such other problems and subjects in the field of agriculture as the committee deems appropriate.

SEC. 3. The committee shall confer and consult with responsible leaders and experts in Agriculture, shall complete its study and investigation as expeditiously as possible, and shall forthwith thereafter (but not later than January 1, 1948) report to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry of the Senate and the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives the results thereof, recommending such legislation as may be necessary to assure and speed the transition from a wartime, to a sound, stable, and continuing prosperous, peacetime agricultural economy.

SEC. 4. For the purposes of this concurrent resolution, the committee, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings, to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eightieth Congress, to employ such clerical and other assistants, to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such correspondence, books, papers, and documents, to administer such oaths, to take such testimony, and to make such expenditures, as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services to report such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per 100 words. The expenses of the committee, which shall not exceed $10,000, shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House of Representatives, upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR REPORTS BY FORMER COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS

Mr. BUTLER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 97), which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands:

Resolved, That the authority granted to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys under Senate Resolution 315, Seventy-ninth Congress, agreed to July 30, 1946, relating to studies and investigations of matters referred to such committee, as heretofore extended, is hereby further extended to May 31, 1947, for the purpose of allowing additional time in which to make a report to the Congress.

THE STEAMSHIP "MARTIN BEHRMAN"

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, this morning's New York Times contains an advertisement regarding the steamship Martin Behrman. I ask that this advertisement, with its statement by the president of the Isbrandtsen Co., be reprinted in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STEAMSHIP "MARTIN BEHRMAN," AN AMERICAN SHIP

This vessel, which has figured a great deal in the news lately, is owned by the United States Government and under charter to our concern. We are an American company, entirely American owned. We buy commodities in foreign countries, essential to our economy and sell American goods abroad.

We own and operate American vessels on regular trade routes and otherwise. We are inclined to be independent, and we follow the American way whenever possible.

On January 28, 1947, representatives of our firm concluded arrangements with responsible Indonesian interests and with Dutch Government authorities in Washington, and with full knowledge of our State Department, to have the Martin Behrman call at Cheribon, Java, a port controlled by the Indonesians to load a cargo of cinchona, sugar, rubber, and other scarce products on consignment to our firm. Under present regulations these goods would be disposed of to United States Government agencies, much interested in receiving them. In fact, President Truman has within the last few days asked for an extension of war powers in order to accumulate further materials of this character.

Simultaneously with the Martin Behrman's arrival in Cheribon, the Dutch authorities changed the rules by issuing various decrees and applying same to the Martin Behrman, contrary to prior assurances given us in writing. These decrees virtually established a blockade of all Indonesian controlled ports, thus stopping the flow of produce from Indonesia to the outside world.

After loading her cargo, the Martin Behrman was forcibly taken by the Dutch to Batavia, a Dutch-controlled port, purportedly for inspection, but actually for the purpose of unloading and seizing her cargo. According to news dispatches, our State Department protested this action, but at this writing the process of unloading is still going on.

Capt. Rudy Gray of the vessel and his men have resisted, as they naturally would, such high-handed action. They have been confronted with Japanese war prisoners rummaging through their ship and have met the humiliations offered them as best they could.

After weeks of delay and after much moral pressure being brought by public opinion, both here and out there, it has been suggested by the Dutch Government that they will supply the Martin Behrman with another cargo and compensate us for delay of the vessel, etc. That proposition would require us, as consignors, to abandon the interests of the original shippers with whom we made our agreements and to join forces with the people who have despoiled them. This may be good diplomacy, but it is not the American way of doing business. This will not be the first time where we might be involved in financial loss, because we find it hard to throw off the habits of a lifetime of fair dealing.

We can speak about our foreign trade and our merchant marine as much as we like. But unless we keep freedom of access to ports and freedom of trade we might as well stay home, both in peace and war.

If it was worth while for our young people to be sent out to maintain the open door, the old John Hay policy, we should not now return so soon to Old World subtle and legalistic diplomacy, which up to this time has chiefly involved us in wars, loss of life, and high taxes.

When we don't follow elemental simple rules, we do not keep faith.

NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair state the parliamentary situation. The Senate is in legislative session, and the question is on agreeing to the first committee amendment to the Senate Joint Resolution 58 to extend the powers and authorities under certain statutes with respect to the distribution and pricing of sugar, and for other purposes.

The Senator from Michigan has the floor.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, yesterday I obtained the floor to speak upon the matter which was then under consideration in executive session, and I wish to speak upon that subject today.

I have sought long and earnestly to settle in my own mind the issues which are involved in the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal to be Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. I reviewed as carefully as time would permit the testimony produced in the hearings held by the Senate section of the Joint Atomic Energy Commission. I dipped back into certain testimony and reports on the TVA under Mr. Lilienthal's directorship. Wherever they were obtainable I read

Mr. Lilienthal's writings and public addresses. I made this personal investigation with an open mind, knowing that when this nomination came before the Senate I would have to stand and be counted, upon my own judgment and responsibility.

Today, the United States is farthest in advance of other nations in knowledge of the theory of atomic energy. Of equal importance is the further fact that we have the capacity to make practical application of this strange and terrible power. We gained that knowledge at great financial cost and under the bloody stimulus of war.

We possess this great force at a time in world history, as the President recently said, when "nearly every nation must choose between alternative ways of life." He referred to the great struggle going on all over the world between a way of life based upon individual liberty, free institutions, and the will of the majority, but with respect for minorities, and an opposing way of life founded upon oppression and upon the coercion of the majority by a ruthless minority. At bottom this is the age-old struggle between freedom and slavery, between democracy and totalitarianism, which has appeared over and over again in the course of civilization.

In this conflict the use or misuse of atomic energy is of crucial significance because of the range of its terrible destructive power. As a war weapon ruthlessly applied it can tip the balance in this struggle between freedom and slavery. Although the United States alone possesses the full power to use atomic weapons, it is practicing remarkable self-restraint by its willingness to devote the discovery to the benefit of all mankind. America asks only that there be proper safeguards against the destructive use of atomic energy by those who learn the secret at our expense and by our voluntary disclosure. We do not wish our generosity to become the instrument of our own destruction or the means by which others may enslave mankind.

National suicide and the enslavement of mankind can readily follow any disclosure of the practical use of atomic energy if time and proper safeguards are not used to prevent such tragic consequences. Other nations will require time to equip themselves with this destructive power; they cannot use it now because they do not have the equipment or the knowledge of how to use it. Eventually they will gain the knowledge and capacity, but if we wisely use the intervening time to build procedures capable of protecting mankind we may save rather than destroy civilization.

We cannot bottle up the development of atomic energy and put it on ice until the world is ready to use it safely. We have to continue with the development. Other nations will do the same in all the frenzied haste of which they are capable. Some nations may even be spurred to greater efforts by the diabolical dream of world domination which atomic weapons conjure in the mind. In any case we know that development will continue here and elsewhere throughout the world.

To do this in an orderly, safe fashion we have established a Commission into whose hands will pass the fundamental knowledge we now possess. A terrible responsibility rests upon the men who will compose this Commission. The Nation's trust—our lives, our possessions, and our fortunes—are literally in the hands of these Commissioners. They will hold the key to the world's future. On this account, we who are to confirm their authority have a solemn responsibility of our own.

This is the background with which I approached Mr. Lilienthal's nomination. What manner of man is he? How will he approach the trust we are asked to place in him? Where does he stand in this struggle between freedom in democracy as America knows it and oppression by minorities elsewhere in the world?

The Communist issue has been raised in this case. The implication has been made, if not the direct charge, that Mr. Lilienthal may be a Communist, or that he is a fellow traveler, and that at least he was tolerant of Communists when their presence was disclosed in a public enterprise directed by Mr. Lilienthal. The reference is to the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The theory of this charge is that we cannot afford to trust anyone with atomic energy development who is friendly or indifferent to communism when we know that Communists are in violent opposition to our conception of free democracy and that Communist-dominated Russia is striving intensively to learn atomic technology.

I should like to dispose of this charge. I am convinced Mr. Lilienthal is not a Communist. As to what are Mr. Lilienthal's thoughts on communism in United States, I cite what he has admitted. When his attention was drawn to the presence of some Communists in TVA he brushed the evidence aside as of no consequence. He considered the Communist "cell" too small and too unimportant in the vast TVA to bother about it.

This is an error in his judgment which causes me some concern. In the Canadian Communist spy ring there were involved only 16 persons. Ample testimony on Communist operations shows that it is part of Communist tactics to work in exceedingly small and disciplined minorities. When Communists took control in Russia back in 1917, they numbered about 25,000. In all the vast population of Russia, the Communist Party remains a mere fraction yet it rules the country with an iron hand. Sometimes a single person is a "cell" at some key point in an organization.

In ordinary circumstances there is excuse for remaining indifferent to minority groups in general. It might even be excusable in Government agencies like TVA and RFC, where any harm an ordinary minority group may do cannot wreck the country before it is checked. But Communist minorities are different than ordinary minority groups. Indifference to Communists is not excusable because of their tactics and because of the destructive nature to their movement. The smallness of their number bears no relation to their effectiveness and to the damage they can do. Certainly this would be the case in atomic energy development. A single person serving, let us say, as research director on the Atomic Energy Commission, or as editor of scientific studies, can be a leak of incredible and tragic proportions. One man or a chosen few could work great harm.

I believe, therefore, it was a grave error for Mr. Lilienthal to remain indifferent to Communists in TVA when he knew of their presence and was aware of the manner in which Communists operate. It raises a doubt in my mind about the wisdom of confirming him for the important post on the Atomic Energy Commission.

This does not make him a Communist or a fellow traveler and I would not reject him on those grounds. But it does raise the question in my mind of why Mr. Lilienthal was indifferent to Communists. This calls for further examination into his personal qualities and his thinking and the bearing they may have upon the trust we are asked to place in him.

I do not raise any question about his education or his administrative ability. The peculiar nature of the atomic force and the extraordinary powers of the Atomic Commission compel us to dig deeper into the type of men we place in charge of it.

We are required to go beyond surface generalizations in these appointments for another important reason; namely, the bearing of atomic energy development upon this struggle between two ways of life. The President described this struggle as one based upon rule by majority versus rule by minority. He did not elaborate upon these opposing forces except in general terms of political freedom versus political oppression. But we have to go deeper than that, as I hope to make clear to the Senate.

Minorities which rule by oppression, by controlled press and controlled radio, by fixed elections and the suppression of personal freedoms are rightly called totalitarian governments. But there are other identifying marks of totalitarianism than these. Those who push everywhere for government planning, government ownership, government controls, government paternalism are also traveling the road to totalitarianism. They may not know it. They may not intend it. They may argue otherwise. But in my judgment they move inevitably in the direction where the people exist only for the state which is the basic philosophy of totalitarian governments.

Considerable government activity is consistent with freedom, but when sufficient government ownership, planning, controls, and paternalism is achieved in any country, the people of the country lose their liberites, their free elections, their free institutions, and the representative character of their governments. This conclusion to me is logical; it is a reasonable one to make; it has been demonstrated many times in history; and the world's experience in the last 50 years documents it with many terrible examples.

Anyone professing to believe in the constant expansion of government—in planning, ownership, controls, and paternalism—heads in the direction of the authoritarian state. If such a person were to head atomic-energy development, every decision, every undertaking, every act in that regard would widen the framework of government domination. I am aware that the Atomic Energy Commission is itself to be a government monopoly. I am sorry that the nature of the force compels that form of development. I submit to government monopoly only because security makes it imperative until international agreement makes atomic development safe.

But I do not admit that the occasion should be one for using such a monopoly to extend government domination indefinitely and wherever the opportunity arises. But this is what those who believe in big government would do. Experience with the actions of such people show that they are possessed of a crusading spirit, that they are not scrupulous about the tactics they use, and that they follow the dangerous doctrine that the end justifies the means. Their operations are often sugar-coated by the intent to do good things, but the inevitable upshot of this thinking and these tactics is totalitarianism.

How does this bear upon Mr. Lilienthal? How should it bear upon our decision to confirm or reject his nomination?

It has been said that Mr. Lilienthal is a New Dealer. It is said that he is considerably to the left in his thinking and philosophy. Such labels are not disparaging, and in themselves are meaningless. What I want to describe, if I can, is the actual nature of his thinking and attitude on this question of Government planning, ownership, controls, and paternalism as I gather it.

From an examination of his writings, addresses, and activities at TVA, I am convinced that he is one who would push big government until Government dominated the lives and property of all its people. He is a crusader in that direction. He believes Government domination is necessary and inevitable in modern conditions. Let us admit he is sincere in his belief that on this road lies progress and the advancing welfare of the people. Wherever he has his choice between encouraging private and public enterprise, he will lean to public enterprise. He wants the Government to plan, to own, to control directly where possible and by money indirectly.

I do not believe Mr. Lilienthal would or could deny this. All of his acts as TVA Administrator travel in that one direction. As early as 1934 he was denouncing private business for what he described as its inaction in the depression. He then said:

> In this situation it became one of the new functions of Government to supply the necessary stimulus to industry. (Business and Government in the Tennessee Valley, Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, vol. 172, March 1934, pp. 45–49.)

He did not then understand industry, and he does not now understand Government; for, thereafter, with 7 years of Government stimulus to industry on a colossal scale, the evils of which he spoke were not corrected until the war liquidated the depression of the 1930's.

As late as June 1946, in an address at the Utah State Agricultural College, Mr. Lilienthal declared:

> Only an antiquarian will fail to recognize that the country must entrust the Federal Government with extensive powers and responsibilities, and that these responsibilities will be broadened rather than narrowed as time goes on. (Appendix of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, vol. 92, pt. 11, p. A3500.)

Back in 1939, he was of the same opinion when he declared:

> The granting of additional responsibilities to the National Government has been a victory for clear thinking. (Address before the Southern Political Science Association, November 10, 1939, The TVA: An Experiment in the Grass Roots' Administration of Federal Functions.)

In a moment, I will challenge this victory for clear thinking.

I say that the vast extensions of Federal power in the 1930's did not solve our problems. It intensified and aggravated them. It did not solve the monopoly problem in economic life, but aggravated it. It did not solve the labor problem, but intensified it until today we have seen some labor challenge government itself. Big government did not solve the problem of purchasing power, but gave the consumer the largest dose of inflation his dollar ever took. Price and production controls of big government did not stabilize the economy, but created hopeless confusion which plagues us to this day.

All of these grants of power to the National Government are what Mr. Lilienthal describes as "a victory for clear thinking." Yet instead of solving our problems they have hopelessly confused and magnified them. Mr. Lilienthal and those who constantly push for greater government powers will never understand that there are many problems which cannot be solved by government fiat, by government planning, or by government control. Yet that is the only clear thinking they can offer; and they stick to it notwithstanding it has failed over and over agair in their own lifetime and in all history. They stick to it too in the face of recent and historical experience which shows that progressive transfer of powers from the people to government eventually undermines the free foundations of the nation and destroys the freedom of the people.

A new name is needed to describe men like Mr. Lilienthal. His philosophy is what may be called social aristocrat. It is socialist because he believes in government ownership and controls. It its aristocratic because he believes that experts should be the new governing class.

It is because of these beliefs that he has been accused of communism. Communism has much in common with socialism, with government ownership and domination over economic life. Communism likewise believes in a special governing class with dictatorial powers. Mr. Lilienthal would extend government power, perhaps without calling it socialism, and certainly without subscribing to communism. He would do it for a good end—the people's welfare—and he would expect to achieve an advancement of the people's welfare short of communism and short of government oppression. But the end result would be benevolent despotism until it degenerated into tyranny.

The zeal of people like Mr. Lilienthal is so great that they are not overscrupulous about their tactics. I do not mean to imply that they are intentionally dishonest, although the thread here sometimes runs pretty thin. Acting as they do within the framework of crusading idealism for what they believe to be the highest public good, they make decisions and shade operations which will move them along toward those goals.

This disregard for scruple has occurred on many occasions in connection with TVA. In appraising the struggle between Dr. Arthur E. Morgan and Mr. Lilienthal which ended in Mr. Lilienthal's domination of TVA, the minority of the Joint Committee Investigating the TVA declared:

> We conclude, therefore, that the real issue back of this dissension in the Board was the question of whether this great public enterprise should be conducted on the highest possible plane, with clear, adequate, and thoroughly honest reporting as to what it was doing, or whether it should be conducted on a plane which involved using the methods, which were lacking in complete candor, and which would be condemned in the conduct of private business. (Minority Views, Report of Joint Committee Investigating the Tennessee Valley Authority, 79th Cong., 1st sess., p. 274.)

Dr. Morgan, this report continues, "objected to indirectness, concealment, manipulation, and indeed to all methods of carrying on the business of the TVA which, while within the pale of the law, could not be justified by a high standard of fair dealing." The majority of the TVA Board, on the other hand, did not give all the pertinent facts, took short cuts to make a favorable showing for TVA, and exaggerated their accomplishments. This congressional report further declared:

> Frequently the (TVA) administration has been arbitrary, dictatorial, and unbusinesslike. Its reports to the Congress, its releases to the public have not always represented the facts and have tended toward exaggeration. Its reports have not always been candid. Moreover, it has in many instances completely ignored the rights of the States and has impinged upon their sovereignty almost to the point where there is ground for the charge that the Tennessee Valley Authority was endeavoring to set up a sort of superstate in the Tennessee Valley area.

These are the words which the minority members of the congressional investigating committee used to describe the lack of scruple practiced by the TVA under Mr. Lilienthal's administration.

I do not rely alone on reports like these or upon representations of private power companies who have been hostile to the TVA program. I have been looking into some of these matters on my own and I am convinced that this lack of scruple I have described does exist.

I have here photostatic documents and other papers of a case which illustrates the lack of scruple on the part of the

TVA. This case concerns the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc. This was a cooperative organization incorporated under the laws of Tennessee, January 23, 1934, "to promote, organize, establish, manage, finance, coordinate, and assist in any way whatsoever in the development of cooperative enterprises in the Tennessee Valley and contiguous areas through grants and loans of funds and management services."

The first thing to notice about this case is that while the organic law of the Tennessee Valley Authority itself gave the TVA no powers to form these cooperative corporations, the directors of the TVA found a way to get around the law and form the corporations anyway. I quote from the opinion by the general solicitor of the Tennessee Valley Authority dated January 18, 1934, which I have at my desk. They were trying to form these corporations. They could not do it under the law or under the authority of the TVA, but they got an opinion from the legal officer of the TVA, and this is how they did it:

> You will note that I have provided that the Corporation is to be formed—

They used the Government lawyer to do it—

> You will note that I have provided that the Corporation is to be formed by the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority and not by the Tennessee Valley Authority itself. I do not believe the Tennessee Valley Authority is authorized under the act creating it to organize other corporations or to hold the stock itself. At best, the right is certainly very doubtful. It would be just as easy—

This is their own counsel, the Government counsel speaking—

> It would be just as easy for the directors to organize the Corporation and hold the stock in trust for the United States or to take the stock in the name of the United States, as we have done with the Electric Home and Farm Authority, Inc.

Without legal power to set up cooperative corporations in their capacity as directors of TVA, the directors, of whom Mr. Lilienthal was one, thereupon functioned as plain individuals to form the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc., and became the stockholders—for the United States, without legal authorization—and officers of the cooperative corporation. What they could not do by direct authority of Congress, they did indirectly anyway. This, I assert, is an example of this lack of scruple I have been describing. It is also an example of the turn of thought which leads men like Lilienthal to turn to Government corporations and Government planning rather than to methods of private enterprise.

But this is not all that they did with this corporation. It is not the only demonstration of unscrupulousness. The cooperative corporation they formed was to be something of a cross between a holding company and an RFC for the purpose of creating a large number of cooperative enterprises. It had to have money to lend to these smaller cooperatives. Where was it to get the money? The one place that Mr. Lilienthal would look was to the United States Treasury to get the money. Not one cent could be obtained from private capital. It thereupon arranged to get this working capital by inducing the Governor of Tennessee to apply for a $300,000 grant from the Federal Emergency Relief Administration. In fact, Mr. Morgan, one of the directors, wrote to the FERA first about getting the $300,000.

Mr. McMAHON. Which Morgan was that?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. Arthur E. Morgan, I think.

The grant was made by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration; and thereafter the Cooperative Corporation went into business and thereafter launched nine smaller cooperatives.

In the course of time the General Accounting Office sought to audit the accounts of this cooperative corporation. In an amazing statement of evasion, the Cooperative Corporation denied the right of the General Accounting Office to audit these accounts. In a letter to the United States Comptroller General, the Cooperative Corporation took this position:

> Because of the fact that these funds were granted by the Federal Emergency Relief Administration to the State of Tennessee, and by the State of Tennessee to the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc., and because no money has been put into the organization directly by the United States, we feel that this organization is not subject to the usual regulations affecting Government departments.

Later I shall show why they did not want the Comptroller General to look into their books.

So all the stock was owned by the United States Government, having been put into the organization by the Government. By the way, the $1,000 which was used to cover expenses of incorporation was obtained from the United States Treasury. They did not want to have their books audited, even though the organization was a Government corporation solely owned by the Government and not capable of being formed under the law. Mr. President, let me show why they did not want an audit made: Here, by a roundabout device conceived by Mr. Lilienthal and his friends, they first set up a cooperative corporation which they had no power to form as directors of TVA; and second, they obtained $300,000 capital for it in such a way as to give them technical grounds to deny that there was any United States money in the enterprise. They did deny the investment of Federal money, although the application of the Governor of Tennessee plainly stated "Title to all property bought with Federal funds is to be * * * held to the use and benefit of the Federal Emergency Relief Administration." The purpose of the denial was to give them a free hand.

They finally did allow the General Accounting Office to look at the books, and that brought to light some further interesting examples bordering upon the unscrupulous. The $300,000 granted by the FERA as relief funds became the working capital to finance and sustain a group of cooperative associations launched by the parent cooperative corporation. Executives paid by the Tennessee Valley Authority appropriations—those of a Government corporation—served this privately organized cooperative corporation. The administrative expenses of the cooperative corporation were also paid by the TVA, but were capitalized on the books of the TVA as "regional development." In other words, Mr. President, we have the counsel of the TVA telling them that the TVA could not do this, that they could not operate those services; but they simply set up their own little corporation, and used the FERA money which they obtained, and then started out to engage in that business.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a brief inquiry at this point, for the purpose of clarification?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; although I did not wish to yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. What year was that?

Mr. FERGUSON. 1935 and 1936.

Mr. KNOWLAND. That was during the time that Dr. A. E. Morgan was Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority; was it not?

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct; but Mr. Lilienthal was one of the directors.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield for a further question, let me ask whether the FERA was a relief organization which was the predecessor of the WPA. It was, was it not?

Mr. FERGUSON. Yes; I think that is true.

Mr. HILL. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, to digress for a moment from what I was about to say, let me state that this organization is referred to as being a relief organization. All during the war the small amount of money that was left from the $300,000 was being used by the Tennessee Valley Authority, and it is still being used. I propose to introduce a bill, some time later, to close this corporation and return these funds to the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. President, in the fiscal year 1935, TVA appropriations to the amount of $39,780.09 were again diverted to the cooperative corporation, but were capitalized on the books of the TVA as "construction work in progress, cooperation with TVAC" pending distribution to project investment accounts. The TVAC is what they called the new corporation. In 1936 the TVA again spent funds for these cooperative ventures to the amount of $54,866.61. In other words, they did not want to use the $300,000, which they had received, as money for these small corporations, but they were getting those funds from the TVA and were using them to operate the corporation—in other words, using Government funds in that way. Let me state how they listed it: The expenditure was innocently set up under the title "Cooperative Research and Experiment Division"; they were using $36,083.54 for the purpose of furthering the program of social and economic development, and the balance of $18,783.07 was used directly for the administration of TVAC affairs; in other words, for the affairs of the Tennessee Valley Association Cooperative.

This, to me, is a typical example of what I mean when I say that men like Mr. Lilienthal follow practices bordering upon the unscrupulous. It distinctly shows how they make decisions and shade operations to further their plans for government ownership and planning. It is an example of what the congressional investigating committee meant when it said that the Tennessee Valley Authority reports "were not always candid"—to phrase the matter delicately. So tenuous is the use of words today that it is always possible for persons like Mr. Lilienthal to explain away unscrupulous acts and to play up with convincing indignation the good ends they sought to achieve by saying, "Oh, yes; this is for the public welfare," with utter disregard of what has been accomplished by private initiative and private enterprise in building our magnificent industrial system, which has afforded greater opportunities for employment and advancement and brought about a higher standard of living than can be found anywhere else in the world. We hear Mr. Lilienthal extol the virtues of the Tennessee Valley Authority, but do we ever hear him extol the virtues of the great private industries of America? That is the test. The idea seems to be that what is done by TVA is for the public welfare and therefore it should be praised.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FERGUSON. I prefer not to yield at this time. I would rather yield at the end of my remarks, because I know we wish to proceed with the sugar legislation.

Mr. HAWKES. Very well.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, these are the questionable practices we can expect if Mr. Lilienthal becomes Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. Practices like these may not be harmful so far as the TVA is concerned; but if carried over into the Atomic Energy Commission in dealing with other nations, such subterfuges may become tragic for the interests and even the security of the United States.

It is characteristic of Mr. Lilienthal and people who follow his philosophy to read greater powers into laws than were placed there. When they ask for authority, they ask it in broad terms; and that enables them to read a good deal more of their own powers into the law than Congress intended. We have seen this happen in the NRA, the WPA, FERA, AAA, lend-lease, the selective-service law, OPA, and dozens of other statutes over the last 15 years. Indeed, this is one of the most obvious characteristics of New Deal legislation, including the TVA.

Those who would govern us in this way subscribe to the belief that modern life has become too complex for the people to govern themselves. They believe that this is the day of experts, of a special managerial class to whom the people must grant broad powers. They imply, but do not say it in so many words, that they know best what is good for the people, and that the people are to do what they are told to do. Harry Hopkins, I believe it was, said that the people were just too dumb.

These experts want more than broad powers. They want us to set up a special Government authority, such as the TVA, for many great economic undertakings, and to entrust these authorities to experts. They want Government corporations, Government boards, Government commissions, and other Government agencies to be endowed with legislative, administrative, judicial, and enforcement powers combined. They want no one to interfere with them.

They want blank-check appropriations in huge amounts. They do not want to be hedged about in the use of money. They want the powers of eminent domain, so they may extend Government ownership to places where they want it extended. They want unrestrained power to plan things as they think best. They want to license, to control, and to order by directive. It is with this self-expressed philosophy of Mr. Lilienthal that I disagree.

Those who believe as Mr. Lilienthal does are impatient and dissatisfied with rule by the people through freely elected legislatures. They put up with Congress and with State legislatures only because they need them to get broad powers. It is a gesture to get popular support, just as the Nazi plebiscites were gestures of popular support, but otherwise meaningless.

Mr. Lilienthal prefers to operate in government by what is smoothly called modern management. What this would imply may be gathered from some of Mr. Lilienthal's views on this point. Writing in his book, TVA—Democracy on the March, Mr. Lilienthal declares:

> The policies of lawmaking in the immediate past have been largely regulatory and negative: This shall not be done. The atmosphere of the legislature has, therefore, been heavy with this regulatory spirit, expressed in carefully limited responsibility, lack of trust, and forever setting one man to watch and checkmate another.

That is what Mr. Lilienthal thinks of legislatures. In other words, he does not approve of our three departments of Government, which act as a check and balance upon each other. Mr. Lilienthal thinks it is a bad thing for lawmaking bodies to exercise limited powers over people. He thinks they are wrong when they enact laws in terms—as he says—"This shall not be done." He misses entirely the implications of this method in free government. By defining only what shall not be done, which the legislature does to protect the majority from the abuses of a few, the great majority of the people are left free to do all other things that are lawful and legitimate. This is the very essence of free government—a government of limited powers with all others reserved to the people.

Continuing his thinking, Mr. Lilienthal describes his preference for something like a managerial form of government in these terms:

> The tradition and climate of the skill of management, however, are remote from all such negation. Management is affirmative and initiatory: "This is to be done." It is in the process of defining, with skill and sense, what is to be done, and with it the fixing of responsibility for results, with wide freedom for judgment in the managers as to how it may best be done, that you have the essence of the best form of modern management.

He was talking about what kind of authority we should give to the managers of governmental corporations. This passage is a perfect gem of authoritarian thinking. Consider for a moment the sentence, "Management is affirmative and initiatory: 'This is to be done.'" Applied to government, this is the heart of the dictatorial process. It quickly becomes government by decree, as we have seen in Germany, Italy, and Russia. Surely Mr. Lilienthal was not advocating this, but what he was expressing in government leads to this, as is shown throughout history.

Take another phrase in this remarkable paragraph—"with wide freedom for judgment in the managers as to how it may best be done." Reflect on that phrase for a moment; it has two dangerous implications: One is that the people are to surrender their own freedom of judgment to a small body called managers. The other implication is that means can be separated from ends when the people direct something to be done. Both of these ideas—the people's surrender of their freedom to managers and the separation of means from ends—are marks of totalitarian government; they have no place in the operation of good government in a free society, as in America.

The people left the regulation of the price system to the managers in the OPA, and our economy was all but ruined. Yet, Mr. Lilienthal would have us turn our affairs over to managers, give them broad powers, and then be told by them, "This is to be done." In other words, he does not want the Government to say, "This shall not be done"; he wants the managers, men outside the legislative body, to say, "This shall be done." He is naive enough to believe that the people can reserve to themselves the right to "fix responsibility." The answer to that is written in the blood of people who have done so in recent history only to become the victims of persecutions, purges, and banishment to concentration camps when they complained against the managers who were trusted with power. When people surrender their freedom by broad grants of power to managers, presidents, fuehrers, or whatever we want to call them, they soon find themselves helpless to "fix responsibility." The grant of power soon makes protest impossible.

Mr. Lilienthal is enamored of government by experts. In the same book—TVA—Democracy on the March—Mr. Lilienthal says:

> The experts, using the term in its broad, modern sense, have a central role to play not only in the development of harmony between private interests and public interest, but in every facet of modern living. The people and the experts: The relation between them is of the greatest importance in the development of the new democracy. For people are now helpless without the experts—the technicians and managers (p. 108).
> This will require some drastic changes in the prevailing relations between experts and the people, both in industry and in government (p. 108).

What drastic changes? They are implicit in all of Mr. Lilienthal's writings. Give broad powers to the managers.

Leave them free to do what they think is best for us. Let the managers say: "This is to be done." Let them plan, control, and direct. Reserve to the people only the privilege to fix responsibility—that is, after the deed is done. That is the essence of his thinking.

It is also the perfect framework, not of democracy, but of the authoritarian state, the totalitarian state. It begins with good managers partially checked by the people. It progresses step by step to the point where the people are progressively the wards of the managers. Correspondingly the powers of the managers are enlarged, deepened, and strengthened by the institutions and bureaucracy they set up. In time it becomes benevolent despotism, and finally tyranny.

The most mystifying thing about this process is that it is called democracy. Russia at this very moment proclaims her methods to be democratic. Yet from every test we apply we know Russia is the opposite of a democracy. Her people have given all power to the commissars, who say "This is to be done"; they have given power to the experts who set up the 5-year plans; and now the Russian people are not free to "fix responsibility"; they cannot speak freely; they cannot write freely; they cannot even move freely about their own country; and if they are dissatisfied with all of this they cannot change their managers. Yet that is called democracy; and that is what comes when the people surrender the freedom to decide their own destiny. Mr. Lilienthal would shrink from such a system. He would be one of the first victims of it. Yet his whole approach to modern government will take us down the same tragic road.

In a TVA, an RFC, an OPA, and in other agencies of Government small enough to be subject to the greater power of Congress, the people have a check upon totalitarian trends. We can repair the harm if the pendulum swings too far in encroachment upon the people's liberties. Still in possession of reserved powers and exercising them democratically, the people can afford the luxury of some of these would-be czars who undertake to manage our lives for us. But extend the system step by step, turn more and more powers over to these experts and their managers, and the time will not be far distant when freedom will be wholly lost. We shall be told "This is to be done," and we shall be powerless to think or do otherwise.

Development of the atom bomb should not be in the control of people who are so naive as to think they can manage our affairs without also leading us down the road to tyranny. Why did we take this power out of the hands of the military and place it in civilian hands? We did it because many people were fearful of the military frame of mind. Well, I am fearful of the authoritarian frame of mind—of the people who would push Government ownership, planning, management, and control over our lives. I am convinced that no matter how good his intentions may be, Mr. Lilienthal falls within that group.

Having a crusading attitude, these experts drive toward goals of their own making even if they have to resort to twisted statistics, to subterfuge to get around the law, and to propaganda tactics. They make alliances with individuals and groups operating among the people in order to contrive a measure of support.

Always the grand design is for expanded Government ownership, planning, spending, and controls. Always the direction is toward greater centralization in the hands of the expert few. Inevitably the result is progressive loss of the people's freedom and of free institutions. Behind the veneer of paternalism which marks this development lies the shadow of benevolent despotism so common in the history of the past. And benevolent despotism invariably passes into tyranny. We do not want this to happen here. When I look at this entire situation and consider my responsibilities to the people of Michigan and of the United States I cannot vote to confirm Mr. Lilienthal's nomination.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR CONTROLS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. J. Res. 58) to extend the powers and authorities under certain statutes with respect to the distribution and pricing of sugar, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, at long last the joint resolution relating to sugar is before the Senate. Probably no piece of legislation will affect more people individually and in groups than that which we are considering today. The history of the proposed legislation is that some weeks or months ago a measure was introduced and referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency, and considered by a subcommittee of that committee, of which the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] was chairman. The subcommittee held extensive hearings, and after their deliberations were concluded they reported a measure to the full committee. The full committee then met, considered the subject, and by a vote of 10 to 3, reported Senate Joint Resolution 58 which is now before the Senate.

For some time we have been trying to have this measure considered and acted upon by the Senate, but in vain. Now, if ever it can be said truly that time is of the essence, it can be said of this proposed legislation because of the fact that sugar controls expire next Monday, and sugar legislation passed by the Senate today must of necessity go to conference so that the differences between it and similar legislation passed last week by the House by a large majority may be reconciled. Time is rapidly passing, and so far as it is in my power I shall confine myself to as few remarks as possible, and I hope that will be the policy followed in connection with the consideration of the measure this afternoon.

Mr. President, the motivating factor which prompted me, at least, and I believe most, if not all of my fellow Members on the Senate Banking and Currency Committee to vote to report Senate Joint Resolution 58 favorably to the Senate, was the promise that under this measure the housewife and the members of her family would get a minimum of 35 pounds of sugar per capita for the coming year. That represents a general increase of about 10 pounds per capita over last year's rations.

I may interpolate that last year householders received a total of 25 pounds of sugar, 10 pounds being earmarked for canning. This year, the calendar year 1947, they will receive 35 pounds with no earmarking at all, which is an increase of 40 percent over the amount given them last year.

There are no definite statistics which indicate the exact amount used in home consumption before the war, but the Department of Agriculture has informed our committee that the best information available tends to indicate that 50 pounds per capita constituted the normal prewar home consumption figure.

Now, there is a possibility that the United States may receive, this year, an additional amount of sugar over that previously estimated. For instance, Mr. James H. Marshall, Chief of the Sugar Section, Department of Agriculture, in a telephonic conversation with sugar experts in Cuba on March 15, 1947, was informed that if the present weather conditions continue to be favorable in that country, there may be an increase of 300,000 short tons of sugar in the Cuban crop over the estimate upon which allocations from that source were made to the various countries by the International Emergency Food Council. That does not mean that the United States will receive those 300,000 short tons. The International Emergency Food Council, of which this country is a member, will allocate any increase to all countries to fill in that amount previously allocated to the various countries which was to come from undesignated sources. For instance, the United States was to receive 6,800,000 short tons of sugar, 200,000 short tons of which were to come from undesignated sources. The United States will receive their aliquot share to fill in that undesignated sources allocation. However, the fact remains that this country may receive from an increase in the Cuban yield or an increase in other sources, a larger amount of sugar than was previously estimated for the coming year.

Bearing these facts in mind, I desire to offer an amendment designed to achieve two desired results. First, I wish to convert the present promise of a 10-pound per capita increase into an assurance, written into the law, that the housewife and the members of her household shall not receive less than the promised 10-pound increase per capita. Secondly, in case there is an over-all increase there will be strong pressure, on the part of commercial sugar users, to obtain the benefit of that increase. To protect the Department of Agriculture against such pressure, this amendment would write into the law a requirement that any increase in the national sugar supply shall be allocated for home consumption until the prewar level of 50 pounds per capita is reached.

So, Mr. President, I now submit the amendment which I have outlined in my remarks as an amendment to the committee amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire to the committee amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 2, line 20, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "And provided further, That refined sugar shall be allocated for home consumption at a rate of not less than 35 pounds per capita per calendar year, and any increase in the amount of sugar available for allocation in the calendar year 1947 over the amount recommended by the International Emergency Food Council for allocation to the United States for 1947 shall be allocated for home consumption until the allocation for such use equals 50 pounds of refined sugar per capita."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment by the Senator from New Hampshire to the committee amendment.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I also submit, as an amendment to the pending bill, an amendment covering and safeguarding the civil-service status of veterans of all wars as this transfer is made from the OTC, formerly the OPA, to the Department of Agriculture under Clinton P. Anderson, the Secretary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, at this point I should like to have printed in the RECORD several telegrams bearing on the need for speed and the urgency of continuing the sugar controls.

There being no objection, the telegrams were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., March 26, 1947.

Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY,
Chairman, Senate Banking and Currency Committee,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

We urge you to do all in your power to see that pending legislation continuing sugar rationing is passed by Senate immediately. Untold hardship to some 24,000 small-neighborhood retail bakers will result otherwise, likewise householders and many other small industrial users of sugar will be affected. Your help will be appreciated.

FRANK G. JUNGEWAELTER,
Secretary, Associated Retail Bakers of America.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 26, 1947.

Hon. CHARLES W. TOBEY:

We are gravely concerned over the delays in getting Senate action on Senate Joint Resolution 58, since March 31, 1947, is the dead line for the President to sign the law, making possible the orderly decontrol of sugar by March 31, 1948. It is the considered opinion of persons best qualified to forecast sugar trends that if the Senate fails to take favorable action immediately, April 1, 1947, will usher in the most disastrous period for growers, refiners, distributors, industrial users, and the many tens of thousands of small business dependent on sugar for their products. Under sudden decontrol now, the greatest scarcity and maldistribution would most likely occur in the distribution channels serving small business and the housewife. The resulting business failure, unemployment, and the loss of large outlets for many agricultural products can be avoided by prompt Senate action. We respectfully solicit your assistance.

American Bakers Association, American Bottlers and Carbonated Beverages, The American Bulk Condensed Milk Association, Associated Grocery Manufacturers of America, Associated Retail Bakers of America, Cocoa and Chocolate Manufacturers Association, Dairy Industry Committee, International Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers, National Association of Food Chains, National Association of Frozen Food Packers, National Association of Retail Ice Cream Manufacturers, National Candy Wholesalers Association, Inc., National Confectioners Association of the United States, National Preservers Association.

CHICAGO ILL., March 25, 1947.

Senator CHARLES W. TOBEY,
Chairman, Senate Banking and Currency Committee,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.:

Control of sugar will end on March 31 with the ending of the Second War Powers Act. Joseph M. Creed testified before your committee for bakers, and many others testified for other industrial users and urged the continuation of sugar rationing in the interest of all consumers. We urge you to do all in your power to see that pending legislation continuing sugar rationing is passed by both Houses immediately. Untold dislocations and hardships will result otherwise. Your help on this extremely important matter will be greatly appreciated. Many thanks.

C. P. BINNER,
President, American Bakers Association.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I shall not speak further on this subject except to say that the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], who has very conscientiously and faithfully conducted the deliberations in the committee, will now, at the request of the committee, discuss the sugar situation as he sees it, presenting his views after conferences in the committee room.

Mr. FLANDERS obtained the floor.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I ask if the Senator from Vermont will yield so I may suggest the absence of a quorum. The subject before us is an important one. Only a bare handful of Senators are present. It is not the way to legislate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield for that purpose?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield for that purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. YOUNG in the chair). Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I should like to ask where the 87 Senators are. I suggest sending to the Bureau of Missing Persons.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment on that very point?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to have the RECORD show that four committees, namely, the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Banking and Currency, the Committee on Finance, and a subcommittee on housing and rents, have obtained unanimous consent to hold meetings this afternoon—and some of them through the entire week—during sessions of the Senate. It is becoming obvious that if we continue that practice there will not be a quorum in the Senate to transact business. I think it is sufficiently important at least for those who are responsible for conducting the Senate sessions to begin to object to such unanimous-consent requests.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. I think the Senator from Nebraska is entirely correct. At the beginning of this session of Congress, I thought the Senate would undertake to observe at least the intent of the Reorganization Act. It is not only embarrassing at times, but it is difficult for Members of the Senate to carry on committee work and keep up with what is going on in the Senate Chamber. I think the Senate should put a stop to this practice early in the session. Either the Senate should resume the program of meeting every other day, holding three meetings a week, permitting committees to work likewise on an every-other-day basis, or we should put a stop to this practice before it goes too far.

I agree with the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like also to include in my previous statement that the Subcommittee on Indian Affairs of the Committee on Public Lands is holding a hearing this afternoon. They have unanimous consent to meet this afternoon. Yet we have this important measure before us, which must be passed, as the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has told us. I shall certainly bring this question up at our next policy meeting. We must discontinue granting such unanimous-consent requests if we are to have a session of the Senate every day in the week.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Amplifying the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Nebraska, the pending legislation is of interest to every person in the United States. A large part of our national economy is involved in the proposed legislation. Very few Senators are in the Chamber, and yet the Senate as a whole must vote on the joint resolution. There is hardly a Senator who has read the hearings. Most of them rely upon what is said on the floor to guide them in their determination. How can they vote intelligently if they are not present to hear the evidence given by proponents and opponents of the legislation? It is possible to have a good cause lost or a bad cause thrust upon us because of inadequate information, due to the nonpresence of Members on the floor. I recognize the conflict because of special meetings of committees. But I agree with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] that the question of policy should be determined.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. I should like to have the RECORD further show that this is additional proof that the Reorganization Act, for which I voted, and for which I am sorry, is unworkable.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, the joint resolution which is now before the Senate contains a number of provisions, but the overriding one is the authorization to extend sugar rationing and price control under the administration of the Secretary of Agriculture until March 31, 1948. The decision to report such a measure is the result of the collection of much data, long consideration, and thorough discussion. While the committee had a sizeable majority in favor of reporting the joint resolution to the Senate, opinion on this matter was by no means unanimous. The reasons for this are not far to seek. The subject is very complicated, and furthermore, some elements of judgment must enter into the final decision. It is comparatively easy to collect statistics on the production, distribution, cost, and pricing of sugar which all will agree, in general, to be reliable. It is likewise possible, with little disagreement, to review the facts of the results of sugar rationing and price control to date, and even to agree on some of the lessons to be drawn therefrom. But when an endeavor is made to extend past and present information into the future, and particularly when it is necessary to protect what the interests and desires of many millions of sugar users will be and how they will affect a given situation under controlled markets or free markets, we must forego the sure guide of mathematical logic and base our final conclusions on judgment. It is essential to get the most experienced and disinterested judgment possible in such a case.

As a basis for forming our own judgment, the committee held a series of three hearings. In the first of these we listened to Government officials. These included Mr. Francis A. Linville, of the State Department, whose responsibilities are concerned with the world-wide allocation of sugar under the International Emergency Food Council. There also appeared Mr. James H. Marshall, Director of the Sugar Branch of the Department of Agriculture, and Mr. George A. Dice, head of sugar rationing in the Office of Price Administration.

A second session was held to hear proponents of continued sugar rationing and price control. These included representatives of all branches of the industry, including producers, refiners, distributors, and industrial users in every important line of production. The third and last hearing was open to opponents of the program set forth in the joint resolution. These included a group of industrialists who were not in sympathy with the major group which attended the second hearing.

As a result of the hearings and subsequent discussion, the pending joint resolution has been prepared. As already stated, it was not reported unanimously, but by a substantial majority. For reasons already explained, this was not an unexpected result, since the subject of this proposed legislation is one on which reasonable men may not come to perfect agreement. It is important that the facts and reasoning back of the joint resolution be presented in some detail so that each Member of the Senate may have a basis on which to form his own judgment.

The purpose of the joint resolution itself is stated in the preamble:

> Joint resolution to extend the powers and authorities under certain statutes with respect to the distribution and pricing of sugar, and for other purposes
> Whereas the war has resulted in an acute shortage of sugar to an extent which is impairing the reconversion of the national economy from war to peace; and
> Whereas it is in the interest of national defense and security to effectuate an orderly distribution of sugar at reasonable prices in order to prevent profiteering, hoarding, market manipulation, and speculation in sugar and waste or spoilage of perishable agricultural commodities and to prevent or eliminate other disruptive practices arising out of the scarcity of sugar: Therefore be it Resolved—

And so forth. Section 1 extends price control under the Price Control Act and the Stabilization Act of 1942, export control under the so-called Export Control Act, and allocation and rationing under title III of the Second War Powers Act, beyond their present termination dates of June 30, 1947, for price and export controls, and March 31, 1947, for allocation and rationing. Title XIV of the Second War Powers Act, relating to the utilization of certain vital war information, is extended until March 31, 1948. Section 1 of the joint resolution also authorizes the allocation of sugar without regard to the provisions of title II of the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act of 1944. In substance this permits the Secretary of Agriculture to use discretion in the allocation of available supplies.

Section 1 of the joint resolution, as received from the Senate, has been amended by the committee to provide that the authority contained therein shall not be deemed to permit the Secretary to exercise price, allocation, or rationing control of any product which was not controlled on February 18, 1947, except that allocation control of products imported into the continental United States could be exercised even though not controlled on that date.

Section 2 of Senate Joint Resolution 58, as amended, relates to decontrol of sugar and provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall remove such controls when he determines that the supplies of sugar are sufficient to warrant such action. This decontrol provision supersedes the present decontrol provisions of the Price Control Act, including those relating to action by the Price Decontrol Board.

Section 3 vests in the Secretary of Agriculture sole responsibility for the administration of sugar controls carried out pursuant to the statutes extended by section 1. Section 3 also continues in full force and effect all orders, directives, rules, and regulations relating to the functions so transferred, until modified or revoked by the Secretary of Agriculture. Unexpended balances of appropriations and property available to the respective agencies in the exercise of the functions transferred are transferred to the Secretary of Agriculture. The last provision has been enlarged by the committee to include an amount to liquidate obligations against such appropriations incurred prior to transfer, and to authorize the transfer, on a temporary basis, of such personnel as may be needed in the exercise of the functions transferred.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I have received a letter from the American Legion office in Washington concerning the word "temporarily," on page 4, in line 18. They take the position that if that word is left in the joint resolution it will adversely affect veterans. I understand from the chairman of the committee that that word has now been deleted. The Senator from Vermont read it just now. Do I correctly understand that that word has been or will be removed?

Mr. FLANDERS. By an amendment which the Senator from New Hampshire will present, that word will be clarified in a way, I am sure, to preserve all the rights that veterans would have had if they had remained under OPA.

Mr. TOBEY. That amendment, Mr. President, has already been presented.

Mr. FLANDERS. Yes. It makes clear that no employees so transferred would have any retention rights in the Department of Agriculture when the functions transferred have terminated. Section 3 also continues all provisions of existing orders, directives, rules, and regulations pertaining to sugar, for the purpose of sustaining any proper suit, action, or other proceeding with respect to violations, liabilities incurred, or appeals taken thereunder.

Section 4 provides that the provisions of the joint resolution shall become effective immediately upon its enactment.

Under the provisions of Senate Joint Resolution 58, as amended, the Secretary of Agriculture is given discretionary power to terminate price control and rationing of sugar at any time prior to March 31, 1948, if conditions warrant such termination. The committee is confident that Secretary Anderson will use this discretionary authority if it is possible to do so, and at the earliest possible date.

What are the purposes of the joint resolution thus briefly described? The obvious purpose of price control is to keep prices from going abnormally high. The obvious purpose of rationing is to insure an equitable distribution of the product. Is there danger that prices will become unreasonably high and that distribution will be seriously inequitable for any length of time if rationing is removed? These are the questions which have to be answered.

Of the sugar produced by us or allocated to us from foreign production, there are two principal classes of users—industrial users and household users. The categories of industrial users include bakers, soft-drink bottlers, ice-cream manufacturers, confectioners, and producers of jams, jellies, preserves, and other canned fruits. In general this group is satisfied with present rationing and price-control regulations, and would like to see them continued. This is not strange. At current costs of sugar and at the current price which sugar shortage has made possible, the possibilities of profit in these food and drink and confectionery industries are not only excellent but are stabilized. Most of the uncertainties are removed and the businessman engaged in the use of sugar can pursue the even tenor of his way without having to lie awake nights wondering whether to play his inventory close or to lay in a large stock in fear of anticipated rises or short supply.

In addition, there is a certain protection of his position, so far as new competition is concerned, although this protection is by no means 100-percent effective, since some provisions are made for new industrial users, particularly if they are veterans; and, in addition, new restaurants, hotels, and so forth, as well as some other categories of new enterprise, are allowed access to the supply of sugar.

All this adds up to saying that under present rationing and present prices, industries are safe, have a certain measure of protection from competition, and, for the most part, would prefer that safety to the scramble and uncertainty that would follow the end of a controlled market.

The housewife is in many respects in a different position. If her family is composed of adults, she has been on short rations throughout the war. If she has small children in the family, the present allowance has permitted more generous portions for the other people. If she lived in the city, the allowance may have been sufficient most of the time. Had she lived in the country she would have had to, and did, cut down on the canning and preserving which play such a large part in country families, and even in many village, town, and city families. In consequence of this decrease in her supply of preserving sugar she has been in the market for commercial preserves and canned fruits, for which she has had to pay, in terms of the sugar furnished, many times what would have been the case could she have done her own preserving.

The price at which she might have to buy her sugar, were controls removed, would be of importance to her; but its total effect on the family budget would still be comparatively small, since it is such a small item in the home. Her real concern under any reasonable price possibilities is to get what sugar she needs, when she needs it. This must furnish the basis of our judgment as to whether and how, controls shall be continued on sugar. Will the end of controls now so disrupt the distribution of this commodity that the housewife will have more trouble than now in getting as much as she wants, when she wants it? On the other hand, will continuation of controls, to the extent proposed, meet her desires more successfully in this respect?

Another question may well be raised at this point. With all of us convinced that controls are undemocratic and in the long run destructive of the interests and rights of the people as a whole, can we be assured that their continuance at this time will lead us in the future to a period when they may be more safely relinquished than now?

The sum of all this is that the key to our legislation on the pricing and rationing of sugar is the best interest of the American housewife. No other consideration compares with this in importance. Will continuance or immediate repeal be in her interests?

Everyone expects a period of disorganization in prices and supply immediately at the end of controls, even under the best conditions. A free market price and even distribution cannot come automatically into action immediately or even in a few days' or a few weeks' time after the end of control. It is easier to get hold of a bull's tail than to let go of it. It is easier to establish controls than it is to relinquish them. A lot of dust will be raised and some fast footwork will be necessary when it comes to letting go, and there may be some casualties.

The primary consideration is that there shall be enough sugar in primary stocks, in transportation, and on retailers' shelves throughout most of the Nation so that the housekeeper shall be able to purchase freely at a reasonable price. If controls are taken off when stocks are short or unevenly distributed the country over, and if the purchasers find that they cannot purchase as much as they desire, we are going inevitably to have a run on sugar which will both drive hundreds of thousands or even millions of tons out of circulation and at the same time increase its price far beyond that which would be reasonable under normal supply and demand conditions.

We have to admit that at least twice in our recent history the American family has exhibited a tendency to hoard sugar if the head of the household suspected that the supply was short. This was true in 1920. A run of purchasing and hoarding was initiated in 1939 and if supplies are not on hand in 1947 or 1948 or whenever controls are taken off, the same process will be repeated.

The conditions in some respects will be worse than they were in 1920. Available world supplies are less. The Philippines are not yet in full production. The sugar stocks of Java, now doubtless much depleted, are still surrounded by a blockade until political arrangements have been completed between the Dutch and Indonesian governments. There was far more destruction of the beet sugar production in Europe and consequently there will be a slower recovery. All of this is an added danger as compared with the situation in 1920.

It is not necessary to examine in detail the controversies about the various production and stocks figures to see the dangers of decontrolling sugar now or providing definitely for such termination on October 31. Most of the controversy about the production and stocks figures boils down to disputes about 300,000 or 400,000 tons of sugar at the outside. If international obligations are recognized, and if it is recognized that the 1947-crop beet sugar cannot be consumed before it is produced, the picture is clear. The Department of Agriculture has assured us that all the 1947-crop beet sugar which can be moved into consumption in 1947 will be so moved; however, the fact that beet sugar is not produced until the last quarter limits the quantity which can be moved into consumption before the end of the year, and therefore, there is necessarily a large increase in year-end stocks in a year when we are fortunate enough to have a large beet crop. It is also pointed out that the most optimistic estimates of the Cuban crop will not provide enough additional sugar to fill by itself the quantities already allocated from undesignated sources.

The gap between the 6,800,000 tons now indicated as available for the United States in 1947 and the estimated requirements under a free market is about 1,000,000 to 1,500,000 tons. Therefore, it is evident that even if we should be able to get a few hundred thousand tons of sugar in addition to the 6,800,000 tons, such additional quantities would not be sufficient to narrow the gap between supplies and requirements to a point which would prevent burdensome price increases, undue price fluctuations, and disorderly and inequitable distribution.

The compelling idea behind this bill is that there is not now enough stock, enough sugar in the warehouses, in transportation, or in the refineries to prevent a serious price rise; and, more seriously, a wild scramble for the available supply.

It is true that we are having bumper crops of sugar in Cuba. It is possible that the size of the crop previously estimated at 5,500,000 tons may be several hundred thousands of tons more than that amount when it is finally harvested and processed. The first priority on any increase in Cuban sugar production must be to fill this 700,000-ton deficiency. Furthermore sugar is moving to our Atlantic and Gulf seaboard more slowly than normal due to transportation difficulties. At the best it will not begin to come through the refineries ready for distribution in any large volume before May and June if past history is any guide. We would therefore have at least two months of shortage and widespread hoarding before the new supply could make its effect and even then the new sugar would not come into a normal market but into one which had been depleted; and it would be doing so at the very time when the peak demand occurs due to the commercial and household preservation of fruit.

This would tend to spread the overbuying and hoarding of the well-to-do and fortunate buyers on the eastern border of the country, while the West, already using up its beet-sugar supply in the normal course of events, would all the more frantically join in the hoarding process. This would result in the added complication of shipping some of the Cuban sugar to the beet-sugar regions which normally depend upon their own supply, in this case hoarded because of a run on the market.

The expectation that this would occur during the summer, when the canning demand is at its highest, disrupts the situation so far as the American housewife is concerned, and she is our principal concern. It is she whom this measure is intended to protect. There is in the minds of the sponsors of the bill no doubt whatever that we would be doing her a disservice in removing controls at this time.

But when is a good time? To come to a proper judgment on this matter we can do no better than to suggest a close analogy between a run on sugar supplies and a run on the cash of a bank whose supply of cash is dubious.

In times past, when the American housewife has suspected a short supply of sugar she has bought more than she needed. This is no different than the natural impulse of the bank depositor to withdraw his cash if he suspects the bank has a short supply. The bank may well be solvent so far as normal operations are concerned, but can be made insolvent by a run of withdrawals.

That fear which leads depositors to begin withdrawals from a bank has been mitigated by the provisions of deposit insurance. An ample supply to meet an emergency has been made available through the Federal Reserve System. There is no sugar insurance, and there is no sugar-reserve system to draw on. In other words, there is no substitute for a well-distributed stock of the commodity when controls are taken off.

When can we have this well-distributed stock in the commodity of sugar which will warrant the removal of controls?

Most fortunately we can foresee the time. The unusual Cuban sugar crop expected this year will permit a more liberal distribution of sugar to consumers and at the same time leave some over to help fill the pipe lines and the shelves.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Vermont yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BUTLER. The Senator from Vermont just made the statement that there would be no controls over the movement of sugar in case present controls were removed. I should like to ask him this question: Suppose all controls were off as of any certain date, and those who had sugar for sale were not satisfied with the price that was available. There would be a tendency to hold back, would there not, just as in the case of any other commodity?

Mr. FLANDERS. There would be.

Mr. BUTLER. If the price were sufficiently interesting and profitable there would be a tendency to move the supply into the market. It is exactly the same control we have had over the movement of all commodities during all history, and it is, I think, the only control which the people of the United States want for a permanent diet.

Mr. FLANDERS. I agree with the Senator from Nebraska in saying that the control of supply is normally and properly through price. The question arises whether the price will be excessive, whether it will lead to a boom and bust as in 1920. Furthermore, I call attention to the fact that if sufficient supplies are not in sight it will begin to affect the distribution before controls are released, because, 1 month, 2 months, 3 months—heaven only knows how long—before an announced date for taking off controls, there will be inevitably a tendency on the part of those who possess sugar at any stage of production and distribution to hold it with the expectation of the higher price coming immediately after the relinquishment of control. So I still conclude, while agreeing with the Senator from Nebraska, that the evidence, physical evidence, statistical evidence, of a strong supply of the commodity is in the long run the only safeguard against its getting out of hand.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BUTLER. I agree thoroughly with the statement made by the Senator from Vermont. I do not know at what date he is ultimately going to arrive, in his recommendation, but in that connection I personally state that I favor the date October 31, for the exact reason that the Senator from Vermont has just given: namely, the prospect of a good supply October 31 is just ahead of or at the beginning of the movement of the beet-sugar crop, and October 31 is only slightly ahead of the date the cane offshore crop begins to move. So we are removing controls at the time when there is the largest prospective movement or available supply of the commodity under consideration.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senior Senator from Vermont.

Mr. AIKEN. I should like to ask my distinguished colleague if he does not think, inasmuch as there is going to be a tendency to withhold the commodity from the market in anticipation of the removal of price controls, that if we set October 31 as the date for removing the controls, the sugar would be withheld from the market at least 6 weeks prior to that date, or at the height of the canning season?

Mr. FLANDERS. I am glad to agree completely with the suggestion of the senior Senator from my State. I think the fall canning certainly, and very likely the summer canning, would be apt to be very seriously affected.

Mr. AIKEN. About the only worse time for removal of controls would be during September, or possibly October 1.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I thank the Senator. The question asked by the senior Senator from Vermont has led very much to what I had in mind, namely the effect of the time of releasing controls. Of course, if October 31 is the date used for release, the canning season would have passed by that time. It might not have passed for the apple or the fruit season, but it would have passed for a part of the berry season throughout the country.

Mr. AIKEN. What I had in mind was 60 days or so prior to October 31. The months of August and September are the two important canning months.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I think it has been stated by the able Senator that the principal interest is in getting supplies for the domestic user—that is, the housewife—and I join in that. That is the principal concern I believe to most of us, to see that there is available an abundance of sugar for domestic use.

There are two questions I have in mind which I want to address to the Senator. The first is, What in his opinion, would be the amount of rise in the price of sugar per pound if it were released from control at the present time?

Mr. FLANDERS. I would like to inquire of the Senator from West Virginia how much the stock market will be up or down at any given time? The question is of the same sort.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It is as uncertain as that?

Mr. FLANDERS. I think so; yes, sir.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am somewhat surprised to hear that, because I thought there was a rather definite knowledge of the sugar supply, which would indicate what the price might be.

Mr. FLANDERS. There is a definite knowledge also of the supply of stock on the market. The imponderable is the psychological element in the purchases, whether of sugar or of stocks. I might say that in one respect my analogy falls down, since we cannot be sure in advance whether the stock market is going up or down at a given time. We could be sure that sugar was going up.

Mr. REVERCOMB. May I say further to the Senator that of course there are a good many more factors entering into the rise and fall of the stock market than in the case of a staple product such as sugar? In a general way we know from its historical use the amount of sugar which will be used; we know how much we have on hand; and, as the Senator says, we know it will go up. But I take it from the Senator's answer that he does not desire to indicate to what extent it would go up, even knowing what the sugar supply would be, and even knowing what the historical use of sugar has been in this country.

Mr. FLANDERS. I may say that testimony of various persons with experience in the industry has shown prices ranging from 15 to 30 or even 40 cents a pound. I am inclined to discount those very high prices. The Senator is asking me to guess on the stock market.

Mr. REVERCOMB. No, not on the stock market; I am interested in sugar.

Mr. FLANDERS. It is the same sort of question. I would be surprised if, under the worst conditions, the price of sugar should go above 30. It might be somewhere between 20 and 30. The point I am making is that we can so set the conditions that the price rise will be comparatively unimportant.

Mr. REVERCOMB. May I ask the able Senator another question?

Mr. FLANDERS. Certainly.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Does he feel that the price rise would be less if controls were extended a longer time, a matter of months, or a matter of a year, than if we released them today?

Mr. FLANDERS. It is my belief, sir, that if controls were released today there would be an unusually large price rise. I am not prepared to say what it would be, but my guess is it would be well over 20. Furthermore, I believe that we can find a time before the year has ended, when controls can be taken off and the price rise be somewhere around 15 cents, and then drop back again. But I am neither a prophet, the son of a prophet, nor the grandson of a prophet, and I am just talking hot air on that particular subject. So, I think, is everyone else.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let me say to the Senator that I think the question of what the price rise would be is a very important guiding point in this discussion. That is the reason I make inquiry of those who have given particular study to this subject. We want to get rid of controls, but I think that in considering that question we must look into the subject of price rise. There will be a temporary rise, but if it were to be such a rise as is talked about here, of course, that would be most unfortunate. We want plenty of sugar, but we want it at reasonable cost, particularly to the domestic consumer, indeed, to all consumers. That is the reason I put the question to the Senator.

I believe that both those who advocate the views of the able Senator and those who advocate other views have taken the position that they primarily want the domestic consumer, or, as we say, the housewife, to have first consideration in the use of sugar and the supply of sugar in this country; is that correct?

Mr. FLANDERS. That is correct, sir.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It then comes down to a question of the better argument as between the two points of view, as to which course will give the domestic consumer more sugar, and I want to say that that will be largely guiding with me.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont a question in furtherance of the statement made by the senior Senator from Vermont, concerning October 31 as a possible date of ending controls. In addition to the canning, is there not a very large seasonal business in ice cream and confectionery that would be adversely affected by the suspension of controls on that date? In other words, if we are going to suspend controls, is it not better to do it at the end of March than it is at the end of October? If we do it at the end of October, we are going to affect the housewife adversely, because all large industrial users are going into the market for what sugar they can get. Is that not correct?

Mr. FLANDERS. That is correct, sir, from my point of view.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. FLANDERS. I now yield to the Senator from Virginia. I am trying to recognize Senators in proper firing order.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, is it not a fact that the Secretary of Agriculture informed the subcommittee of which the Senator from Vermont was chairman, that the bulk of our domestic production would not be available for distribution until after October 31; that at that time the stocks available for distribution in this country would be at their very lowest ebb, and therefore October 31 would be the very worst time to end control, if the Senate has in view the keeping of prices within the purchasing power of the average consumer, as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts suggested, and protecting certain industries which are not in position to pay high prices for the sugar they need?

Mr. FLANDERS. That, sir, is, according to our best information, the fact. There are three important sections of the country, so far as the source of sugar supply and its consumption are concerned. The Pacific coast in general is taken care of by the continuous production of the Hawaiian fields, though that production suffered somewhat last year because of strikes. The great middle section of the country, roughly from the Sierras to the Alleghenies, is for the most part dependent on beet sugar. The eastern seaboard and a part of the South are dependent on Cuban sugar. A part of the South is dependent on the Louisiana cane. But in general there are those three regions. They stock up at different times. They are drawn down at different times. October 31 is about the worst date, because the heavy drains will have been made on the Cuban sugar on the eastern seaboard, and the beet sugar will have been pretty nearly completely drained away, leaving the total supplies to the country at their lowest point at that time.

I shall mention one other point, and that is that it may be feasible, or considered feasible if we get, for instance, a large stock of sugar from Cuba, and the beet sugar supplies are drawn down, to put Cuban sugar into box cars and transfer it to the beet-sugar regions, or under similar but reverse conditions we can bring it back. But that is the uneconomical way to do, and in view of the story told by our friend, the Senator from Kansas, concerning box cars, it is an unwise thing to do. The proper thing to do is to have in each of these regions a sufficient stock when the controls are taken off so that any price and distribution flurries will be of a minor degree and of short duration.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. Since the Secretary of Agriculture has become so thoroughly involved in this discussion on sugar, and since the Senator from West Virginia has raised a hypothetical question as to what the price of sugar would be if controls were removed, I should like to say that in testifying before the Committee on Agriculture last month, about 6 weeks ago, the Secretary of Agriculture estimated that if controls were removed this spring the retail price of sugar would rise to between 30 and 40 cents a pound.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from West Virginia raised the question of price controls coming off immediately, and the effect which would be caused thereby. I point out that the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] answered him by discussing the price increase which would ensue. In the statement of the Senator from Vermont I concur; but I point out that it is not only the danger of a price increase that causes us concern. The fact remains that if controls were taken off today prices would soar, but beyond that it would result in crucifying the small businessmen, because, ergo, the large sugar users with ample means to finance their purchases would purchase large supplies of sugar and drive the price up and store the sugar away for themselves to the exclusion and detriment of the small businessmen.

I point out that about 8,000 veterans have availed themselves of the GI bill of rights to start small sugar-using businesses, such as soft-drink businesses, ice-cream businesses, candy businesses, pharmaceutical businesses, and businesses engaged in the production of gelatines and other types of desserts. When we express our interest in and compassion for the small businessmen, here is a very good opportunity to show our concern and regard for him in safeguarding against such increases, which I believe are a great probability and potentiality if we should remove controls now.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I should like to say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I fully concur with him, that in the event of serious dislocation of prices and distribution it would be the small businessman, particularly the new businessman, and the housewife, who would be the sufferers.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. I want to say that I am for a continuation of controls on sugar. I shall in the course of this debate state my reasons why I believe October 31, 1947, should be the date at which controls should end.

I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont this question: If the controls are ended on March 31, 1948, will there not be a tendency on the part of the processors of sugar in this country—say, the Louisiana processors, the beet processors, those in Cuba and in Puerto Rico and Hawaii, who begin their grinding seasons in January—to retain their sugar and keep it from the market until after March 31, 1948, in order to obtain a larger price for their commodity?

Mr. FLANDERS. That, sir, is possible, but supposing we do have ample supplies when control is taken off, we can ride out those 2 or 3 months. But that is merely one more argument for assuring ample supplies before controls are taken off.

Before I yield again, I should like to make an observation to this effect: The distinguished Senators who have interrupted me are moving me rapidly through my prepared speech toward its latter end, and whether to thank them or whether to ask them to hold up a bit is beyond the possibility of my deciding at the present moment, but I think I shall let them proceed. I yield further to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, as I indicated a moment ago, it is true that on October 31 the supply of sugar is less than it is ordinarily, but if we stop controls at that time, is it not true that we are going to have a supply flowing in from continental producers and also from offshore producers who usually sell in this market?

Mr. FLANDERS. That is true, but the supply comes through only at the rate that the refining process can be carried on.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes. The further point I wanted to make was that in the House measure, aside from controls which continue until October 31, there are the inventory controls, which extend until the 31st of March 1948. That would have a tendency to keep large industrial users from piling up great quantities of sugar, and would leave the housewives a greater supply from which to buy sugar.

Mr. FLANDERS. Inventory controls have a certain definite usefulness, but they do not go the whole way, for a number of reasons. In the first place, they are applicable only to the primary distribution from the refineries to the wholesaling warehouses and the large industrial users. To make such controls effective through to the smaller wholesalers and the retailers, and particularly to the housewives, would require the swarm of spies and functionaries which Thomas Jefferson so delightfully described in the Declaration of Independence. In other words, we would have to multiply our former OPA force by several times to have them really follow through to the stocks in which the hoarding would occur.

But there is another point. The large industrial users might not hoard their stocks of sugar as such. They might rush the sugar through to the finished products, and inventory it in the form of finished products. They might bring about that condition by increased working forces, night shifts, and overtime. At no time would they have more than the proposed 30 days' supply on hand. Inventory control has a usefulness, but it is a limited usefulness.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I thank the Senator for yielding to me. I will not interrupt him further if I may ask two brief questions.

The Senator has just discussed the question of what would happen when sugar controls were taken off. The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] spoke of sugar controls, and the result with respect to holding sugar back from the markets if we removed the controls on October 31, 1947. Let me put this question: Will there not be a holding back of sugar whenever the controls may be ended? We must end the controls at some time. Naturally there will be a holding back of sugar from the market on the part of some. The only way to get around that is to slip up on them quickly and end the controls; but we do not do things that way. Will there not be a holding back regardless of the date when controls are removed?

Mr. FLANDERS. The Senator from West Virginia is entirely correct as to what will happen. To what extent it will happen, and how serious the withholding and price rises will be, will depend upon how large a stock of reserve sugar we have when the controls are removed. If that stock is large, the dislocations will be comparatively small and of short duration, and the withholding will be comparatively small. If our stocks are small, the price increase will be large, the dislocations in distribution will be great, and the withholding from distribution in advance of the removal will begin at a much earlier date.

Mr. REVERCOMB. In the discussion by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] he spoke of great hardship being placed upon small business if controls were released. Am I to understand from that that the housewife, the domestic user, today is suffering shortage in part from the allocations under controls to business? There seems to be a question of balancing the use of sugar between business and the domestic user. If it goes to business, whether it be small business or large business, it naturally comes from the domestic user so long as there is a shortage in the supply of the domestic user. Am I to gather from the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire that under controls the small-business user, or any business user, is taking sugar to the detriment of the supply of the domestic user?

Mr. FLANDERS. Let me say a word to the Senator from West Virginia with regard to the status of the allocation as between industry and the household user to date. Approximately 80 percent of the industrial use is apportioned to industry based upon its normal prewar use. That allocation was based on a 75 percent basic allocation. At the end of the war a great many industrial users found themselves with enlarged plants and enlarged working forces. They made a plea to the sugar-control authorities that they be permitted to expand beyond the 75 percent of their historic basis, in order not to throw men into unemployment at that particular time. Those pleas were listened to, to the extent that some of them were given as much as 80 percent, and some 85 percent; but the average increase in all those cases amounted to an over-all 80 percent of the prewar use. This season's promised allocation to the housewife is 35 pounds, which figures out about 70 percent of her prewar use. So industry is getting a 10 percent larger distribution than is the housewife. However, I should like to invite attention to the fact that that allocation was given industry on the basis of maintaining employment, and for no other purpose.

Have I answered the Senator's question?

Mr. REVERCOMB. Yes.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to make a comment on the first question asked by the Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. It is true that no matter when controls are taken off, no matter what date is fixed, there will be a tendency to hoard sugar. But that tendency would be further removed by fixing the date at October 31 than by fixing any other date that could be fixed, because today the Commodity Credit Corporation owns the entire Cuban crop which is now being harvested. It also owns the entire Puerto Rico crop which is now being produced. In other words the Government can better control distribution of the sugar it now owns.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Does the Senator from Louisiana mean that the holding back would be less if the date were fixed at October 31?

Mr. ELLENDER. Absolutely. There can be no question about it.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. On the point raised by the Senator from Louisiana, with regard to holding back sugar, whether the date be October 31, 1947, or March 1948, we must bear in mind these factors: There will be production of beet sugar in Europe this year, which may enable the international control to give us a larger percentage of sugar from Cuba, available by March of next year. We expect a substantial shipment of sugar from the Philippines by the spring of 1948, commencing perhaps in April. That statement is based upon the report of the Department of Agriculture. We expect that when the Dutch settle their political problems in Indonesia and other sugar-producing areas in that section of the Pacific, we shall get a substantial supply from that source, which will probably come to us by March of next year. So from every standpoint we shall be in a better position if we relax control in the spring of 1948 than if we were to end the controls in the fall of 1947.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. BUTLER. I appreciate the interruptions which the Senator has permitted, because I believe they have added to the information of all of us who are keenly interested in this subject.

The question centers for the moment around matters of production, in determining what date might be most propitious for decontrolling. We all admit that the decontrol date is approaching. The question is, what would be the most propitious time? I take it from the tone of the remarks which have been made by the distinguished Senator from Vermont, and perhaps by other Senators, that a continuation of control tends to give the answer to this whole question. The answer is production. Is not that correct?

Mr. FLANDERS. The answer is production and the building up of sufficient stocks.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; the answer is production. Let me ask the distinguished Senator from Vermont what the record is in reference to the production of sugar under Government control.

Mr. FLANDERS. My personal knowledge of that is doubtless very much less than that of the Senator from Nebraska, who lives closer to the sugar-beet-producing areas than I do. I know however, that at times the Department has discouraged the production of beet sugar, but at the present time it is encouraging it by every means within its power.

Mr. BUTLER. For the information of the Senator from Vermont and other Senators. I may say that production of sugar in our own continental area is considerably reduced, especially as regards the production of sugar beets. It is almost 50 percent lower, in my own State today, than it was in the prewar era.

Mr. FLANDERS. What about the planting?

Mr. BUTLER. The planting has been under the control of the Department; and it is that form of control that the producers do not like. My prediction is that the sooner we get rid of control, the greater will be the production. In other words, the sooner we eliminate control, the sooner we shall find the answer to the problem.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I am referring now to the comments concerning the date of decontrol—whether October 31 or next March. Addressing myself briefly to that subject, in my opinion if the date were fixed as of October 31, the eastern seaboard probably would receive very little sugar, if any, during September and October, because the persons who had it to sell would know that rationing was being terminated at the period of greatest scarcity and that, therefore, prices probably would be bound to go up; and so they would withhold the sugar during the months of September and October, and not sell it to the merchants, but wait for the price rise which would be inevitable then.

On the other hand, if the date were fixed as of March 31, and if the Secretary saw that there was sufficient sugar to end rationing March 31, he could do it as of midnight of that date without any previous announcement; and the hoarding and speculating feature would not then enter the picture, so the people in the eastern half of the country would have sugar in September and October, which from the sugar standpoint are very important months to them.

Let me point out that Senate Joint Resolution 58 contains a section which makes it mandatory for the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Anderson, to decontrol whenever in his good judgment he finds he can do so.

I should like to point out to the Senator who referred to sugar from the Philippines—I think it was the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]—that before the war we received a million tons of sugar a year from the Philippines, year after year. Of course, the war destroyed their refineries and plants, but now they are slowly being restored. In the last few years we have been exporting sugar to the Philippines; but as he stated—and I confirm it—in another year, by March or April, our receipts of sugar from the Philippines will be back to nearly the prewar basis.

Mr. FLANDERS. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire for putting his finger on the possibility of removing controls before March 31, and of doing it unexpectedly, because that is very much within the possibilities and within, in fact, as he has indicated, the mandatory provisions of the pending joint resotion. March 31 is the limit beyond which it must not go. As I shall show a little later, the possibilities of removing controls before that time are extremely hopeful.

I shall continue briefly on the subject of United States sugar-beet production. The average production in the period 1935 to 1939 was 1,520,000 tons; for the period 1944 to 1945, 1,056,000 tons; 1945–46, 1,278,000 tons; 1946–47 the crop, as estimated by the Department, is 1,541,000 tons—the largest in our history.

I do not know who is correct—the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], who lives in the sugar-beet area, or the departmental statisticians, who admittedly have not always been correct.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. BUTLER. I should like to answer the distinguished Senator just to this extent: The figures quoted are average. The figures I quoted, showing that the production in the State of Nebraska was almost 50 percent under its former production, are approximately correct; in fact, I know they are correct. But to balance that, when we consider the increased allotments under the control program to other areas—I might mention the State of California as an example, in perfect good will, because none of us cares where sugar is produced, so long as we can obtain it—the point I am making is that we are not getting more than half the amount of sugar we could get from my State; and there are many other similar areas.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. After listening to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], I wish to have the record show that so far as beet sugar is concerned, the height of sugar production—that is, the time when there would be more sugar than at any other time—would be in October, rather than next March. So I think the record ought to be clear that, so far as the growers in America are concerned, there would be sugar to be sold at that time. If we make the date next March, we are likely to find that beet sugar will be held over until after March, so that the producers will get a higher price.

So I think we have to choose a date. So far as I can learn from the growers of sugar beets in Michigan, they would prefer the date in October, rather than the date in March, for the ending of these controls.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to say, first, in answer to the remarks made by the Senator from Michigan, that, of course, beet sugar does not become instantaneously available when the beets are harvested. They go to the sugar mills, and the sirup is extracted, and the sugar is drained off and refined. Doubtless the Senator knows more than I do about the duration of the process, but I should be surprised if the refineries were not working for at least 3 months on the fall beet crop.

Mr. FERGUSON. But during that entire period the sugar would be coming out and could be supplied directly to the market, and if the producers were being paid what they regarded as a fair price at that time, there would be no reason to withhold the sugar.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Following up what the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] so ably stated, what impresses me is that in voting for the March 31 date, we have to think of the movement of crops next fall, when cotton and every other crop will move, and we must realize that a tremendous car shortage is expected at that time. As the Senator well knows, in connection with the sugar-inventory cases which were brought up by the Secretary of Agriculture and others, the really serious situation will develop next fall when beet sugar and the other sugar will be distributed.

The shortage of cars is well known to the Members of the Senate. Approximately 65,000 cars in the last year, alone, passed out of use. The testimony throughout the hearings, by every witness in connection with the inventories, was that the distribution of the crops in the fall will present a most serious problem because of the boxcar shortage which will exist at that time.

Mr. FLANDERS. I thank the Senator from South Carolina for bringing out that point. It only emphasizes the necessity for having sufficient stocks of sugar coming from each of the sources, in the regions which normally supply it, so that it will not be necessary to shuttle it back and forth across the country.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, let me say that the testimony also shows that there will have to be a tremendous shuttling movement in order to supply the points outside those where the Cuban sugar is available or where beet sugar is produced.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont whether testimony was submitted to the committee, on behalf of the processers of sugar beets and on behalf of the growers, to the effect that the March date, rather than the October date, was more desirable from the point of view of the beet-sugar industry?

Mr. FLANDERS. Such testimony was offered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am not at all surprised that it was, although I was not present at the committee meeting, because I know that in the Rocky Mountain beet-sugar area the program for the refining of sugar beets is not completed at all by the 31st of October. In some cases it is not completed until long after that time.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. There are two or three questions which I should like to ask the able Senator from Vermont. The first is this: While it is true that the stock of sugar will be very low on October 31, nevertheless, beginning at about that time, from October on, a large supply of sugar commences to come into the market. Is not that correct? That is the first question.

The second question is this: Is it not true that the consumers' demand for sugar is larger at about March 31 than it is at any other time?

Mr. FLANDERS. I would say to the Senator from Louisiana that that is rather doubtful. The largest demand for sugar would naturally come in the summer, with its combination of the use of sugar for household canning, coca-cola, and other soft drinks, and ice cream.

Mr. OVERTON. We in Louisiana have coca-cola all the time.

Mr. FLANDERS. The Senator from Louisiana is fortunate.

Mr. OVERTON. And the use of sugar by confectioners, and for ice cream, and so forth, increases in the spring.

However, it is also true, is it not, that production begins immediately after October and November, and continues, with increasing quantities, from then on?

Mr. FLANDERS. In the beet-sugar regions beet sugar production begins in October; Louisiana production begins a little later, and subsequently the Cuban sugar begins to come in. That is the "firing order" of the production of those three separate production and consuming regions.

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct.

Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Vermont another question: It is true, is it not, that for Louisiana cane-sugar production, the producer is paid the average of the market value of refined sugar from October 15 until January 31?

Mr. FLANDERS. That is as I have understood it. I would defer to the Senator from Louisiana as an authority, rather than attempt to give him any information. From what I know, the conditions are very much more favorable for the sugar-beet producers, who have the price turned back to them at whatever price the sugar leaves the refinery at any time during the year. I could only wish that the cane-sugar producers in Louisiana could be as enterprising or as fortunate as the beet-sugar producers are.

Mr. OVERTON. That has been the history of the method by which the cane-sugar producers are paid. For years and years in Louisiana they have been paid on the basis of the average market value from October 15 to January 31.

If control is retained until March 31, of course that will do a rank injustice to the sugarcane growers of Louisiana and Florida, as compared with removing control on October 31, for in the former case control would be held over sugar until the Florida and Louisiana sugar had been marketed, and then control would be released.

On the other hand, if it is released on October 31, that will afford an opportunity for the cane-sugar producers to receive the increase in the market price.

Mr. FLANDERS. I may say to the Senator from Louisiana, Mr. President, that there is no question that the cane-sugar producers of Louisiana and Florida will not be in as good a position so far as price is concerned as will the beet-sugar producers or the Cuban sugar producers. That is most unfortunate. It may properly be taken into account and doubtless will be so taken into account, in weighing the time when controls should be released, if it develops that they can be released very much earlier than the final date set.

However, I still wonder how the Louisiana cane-sugar producers got into a situation as disadvantageous to them as the existing situation is, as compared with that of the beet-sugar producers. The beet-sugar producers seem to have done very nicely by themselves.

Mr. OVERTON. The custom dates back so far into past times that I do not recall how it originated. The system under which the cane-sugar producers in Louisiana are paid has prevailed for years and years and years. Perhaps the junior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] may be able to state how it originated. At any rate, that is the way it is. I think the answer the Senator from Vermont has made is very fair.

Mr. FLANDERS. However, Mr. President, there is this to be considered—and it is of real importance: If the final removal of controls is left to a time when there are ample stocks available, no one will make any great windfall of profits, either in the case of beet sugar or Louisiana and Florida cane sugar or Cuban cane sugar. That is the sum and substance of the matter, as I see it.

Mr. OVERTON. Of course, that brings up another question, namely, when will that event take place, or when could it take place?

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I say to the Senator from Louisiana that if I had a little encouragement, I would read further in my manuscript, and perhaps we could come to that subject.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator from Vermont, and I shall not interrupt him again.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, as I have said, most fortunately we can foresee the time when controls may safely be removed. The unusual Cuban sugar crop expected this year will permit a more liberal distribution of sugar to consumers, and at the same time will leave some over to help fill the pipe lines and the shelves. Encouragement is being given to the planting of sugar beets this year. It is hoped that the Senate will pass House bill 2102, permitting the importation of labor supplies so that this great crop can be planted, cultivated, and harvested. It is possible that the small supplies available in the Far East may be released before the year is over. It is hoped that the new Louisiana cane crop will be good. It should be noted that none of them will be available for filling the warehouses, pipe lines, and shelves until the very end of the year and the beginning of next year. Between now and then, Cuban sugar has to carry the full burden.

There are geographical and transportational difficulties in putting the whole burden on this source of supply. Ordinarily this sugar goes to the eastern seaboard and to such part of the South as is not completely taken care of by the Louisiana and Florida cane sugar. The great Midwest, clear to the Rocky Mountains, depends on beet sugar. Only on the Pacific slope is there the relatively constant supply of Hawaiian sugar whose last year's crop was diminished by strikes. It is clear, therefore, that dependence on the Cuban crop as a backlog after decontrol involves a large scale transportation of this sugar to areas which do not normally depend on it. And we may safely prophesy that any depletion of eastern reserves by premature lifting of controls will in turn at a later date require an unnatural flow of beet sugar to the seaboard. This unnatural distribution of sugar to take care of artificial scarcities comes in a country in which the boxcar shortage has passed, the danger point even at a time of year when there is normally a surplus.

This situation applies particularly to one of the early dates frequently suggested, that is, October 31. A maldistributed Cuban supply will have been carrying the load for the whole country east of the Sierras. The new beet crop would be in the course of harvesting but not yet completely refined and moving from the refineries to meet customer requirements. It would be many weeks before this could effectively take place, particularly if this beet sugar had to move east to replace depleted stocks of Cuban, and it should be noted that this eastern movement would be taking place at the same time as the railroad lines would be meeting the big demands for moving grain in the same direction. Again we are up against the boxcar shortage.

All of these questions point to a time past the end of the year as being the time when under proper control there will be enough sugar in warehouses, in transportation, and on the shelves to meet any run which may develop when the commodity is given over to a free market.

All this is in the interest of the American housewife, but what can we do for her in the period between now and this far-off end of controls?

Announcement has already been made that she will be allowed 10 pounds more of sugar per person this year than she had last. Last year she had 15 pounds regular, plus 10 pounds of canning allowance, making 25 pounds in all. This year she will have 35 pounds straight.

Throughout the countryside, in villages and small towns—even with many housewives of the great cities—the question of sufficient sugar for canning and preserving is a serious matter. The 10 pounds of last year was not enough. In many instances, indeed, the housewife did not get the 10 pounds due to the fact that when she went to the store, it was not there—thus emphasizing the point which has been emphasized so continuously in this argument, that plentiful stocks are an essential, not merely to the ending of controls, but for the continued purchase and use of sugar, whether under controls or not.

Last year the allocation for canning was intended to be used for this purpose only. It was soon found that it is impossible, administratively, to police the use of canning sugar. To do so would have required a great increase in the already existing number of unpopular, and at times offensive, OPA administrators and investigators. The prospect of adding to this already large force enough to do a good job of policing the use of canning sugar, is too terrible to contemplate. We may therefore easily agree with the rationing authorities that it is better to do as has been done this year: to lump the sugar all together rather than to put on a 10-pound coupon with the special requirement that it is to be used for canning. The net result is that the housewife will get 35 pounds per person instead of 25.

Feeling that something better than this might be possible if the Cuban crop is as large as or larger than has been expected, I have conferred with the Secretary of Agriculture as to the possibility of increasing the distribution of sugar to families during the summer canning season. I am glad to say that he has approved of the suggestion, and I shall read into the RECORD the letter on the subject which I have just received from him:

MARCH 24, 1947.

HON. RALPH E. FLANDERS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: In connection with the pending proposals for the continuation of controls over sugar, you have expressed concern regarding the lack of sufficient sugar to give household users more than 35 pounds per person in 1947 and have asked for our views regarding further increases in allotments for household and industrial users out of any additional supplies of sugar which may become available this year above the supplies as now estimated.

As you know, it has been indicated that current supplies of sugar should be sufficient to give allotments to the so-called percentage industrial users at the rate of 75 percent of their 1941 base use for the remainder of 1947, in addition to providing 35 pounds per person for direct household use. Current estimates of production, particularly in Cuba, afford some basis to hope that increased supplies above the 6,800,000 tons, which has been used for allocation purposes, might become available in 1947. If such additional supplies become available, it will be our intent to provide further increases in sugar rations for direct household use before giving further general increases to industrial users. However, there is one important qualification which should be stated in relation to this intent. Because of our desire to prevent the wastage of perishable agricultural commodities, it may become necessary to provide minor quantities of sugar for certain commercial uses to save such agricultural commodities. The total amount of sugar required for such emergency cases will be very small in relation to the 375,000 tons of sugar required to give an additional 5 pounds per person for direct household use. I am sure you agree with this general policy of so using the relatively small quantities of sugar required to save perishable agricultural commodities.

Our fulfilment of this intent will also be dependent upon the provisions of the legislation enacted for the continuation of sugar controls, particularly the provisions relating to sugar for new users.

Sincerely yours,

CLINTON P. ANDERSON,
Secretary.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALL in the chair). Does the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I did not understand the Senator's reference to 50 pounds.

Mr. FLANDERS. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] offered an amendment providing that no increased allotment should go to industrial uses until a total of 50 pounds per person had been given to household use, that being the normal prewar consumption of the American individual.

Mr. COOPER. That amendment is now pending?

Mr. FLANDERS. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. I noticed, during the thorough statement which has been made by the Senator, that the questions and answers have been directed to the source of supply for 1947. From reading the report it appears that in the year 1946 the supply amounted to 5,400,000 tons, approximately, according to one of the tables, and that the estimated sources of supply for 1947 amount to 6,800,000 tons, or an increase of 1,400,000 tons.

The Senator just stated that an increase of 5 pounds to each consumer would amount to about 325,000 tons; was that the figure?

Mr. FLANDERS. Three hundred and seventy-five thousand tons.

Mr. COOPER. The increase that has been granted, of 10 pounds, then, would amount to 750,000 tons, and according to the estimate there would still be a balance of some 650,000 tons.

Did the committee have any information as to whether or not that 650,000 tons would be used for the individual consumers, the housewives, whom all of us have particularly in mind, or would that go to industrial consumers?

Mr. FLANDERS. The supply of 6,800,000 tons is allotted in accordance with the 75-percent basic industrial allotment and the 35-pound household allotment. I do not have the figure at hand. I would have to figure it out again. But the prewar demand is figured at 6,700,000 tons. The increase in population requires an additional 800,000 tons, and the total needed to reach the prewar per capita is 7,500,000 tons, but there is now a deficit of 700,000 tons, which must be made up by the increase in the Cuban crop, sugar from other sources such as South America, possibly Philippine and Java sugar, and similar miscellaneous sources. Besides that there is an estimated quantity of a million tons needed to rebuild the stocks for safe decontrol. That leaves a deficit for that purpose of about a million tons. But all of these expected increases in production will go to meet that deficit and will be swallowed up by it. I am not sure that I answered the Senator's question.

Mr. COOPER. I probably did not make myself very clear. This was the point of my inquiry: In table 4 of the report, page 9, the recommended sugar allocations for 1947 for the United States are 6,800,000 tons. On page 4 of the report it is stated in the last paragraph that this represents an increase of 21 percent over 1946, which, roughly figured, would indicate that the allocation for 1946 was approximately 5,400,000 tons. That would mean that in 1947 there would be an increased allocation of 1,400,000 tons. The increase of 10 pounds to each housewife would use up 750,000 tons of that increase, leaving 650,000 tons; to which I have directed my question. Does the Senator know, or did the committee consider, whether that tonnage would be used for the individual consumer, or for the industrial consumer?

Mr. FLANDERS. There is an increase in allotment to the industrial consumer as well as to the housewife for this year. That is 5 percent, as I remember. There is a 5-percent increase in the allotment to the industrial user. That is from the basic 70 percent of his prewar use to 75 percent basic of his prewar use.

Mr. COOPER. Did the committee have any information whether or not it would be possible under the allocations to increase the allocation for the individual consumer to more than the 35 pounds?

Mr. FLANDERS. The sugar statisticians in the Department of Agriculture and the Secretary himself are hopeful that that may be done. They are very hopeful that 5 pounds extra may be allowed during the canning season, in which event it will be made available not by giving a new coupon but by moving forward to an earlier date the coupon which succeeds July 1, so that within that period the extra amount will be used up I think in 2 months instead of 3.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FLANDERS. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I may say to my friend from Kentucky that the amendment which I offered at the opening of my remarks meets with the approval of the Secretary of Agriculture and of my friend from Vermont, and it will take care of the situation he has in mind. If the supply increases a sufficient quantity will go to the individual consumer until his allotment of 35 pounds reaches 50 pounds, which is the amount estimated to have been used by the householder before the war. So, if adopted, the amendment, ought to safeguard that situation.

Mr. COOPER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FLANDERS. The additional 10 pounds, plus the prospect, under certain conditions, of still more than this will, I believe, lead toward a great improvement in the sugar distribution to the household, and at the same time tend to mitigate the hoarding complex when controls are finally removed.

Will these controls have to go to March 31, 1948, as the bill proposes? It is the hope of your committee and a hope based on conversations with the authorities involved, that if all goes well the available supplies may be such that the controls can be taken off a month or two earlier than the final date set by the resolution itself. Such action on the part of the Secretary of Agriculture will be obligatory since section 2 reads: "Prior to the expiration of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to remove any or all controls with respect to any product over which control is authorized by this act when he determines that the supplies of sugar are sufficient to warrant such action." The significant words here are "authorized and directed."

This leads us to a consideration of what is perhaps the most important element in this whole problem: What are the abilities, the purposes and the ruling ideas of the Secretary of Agriculture in whose hands the administration of this act is placed? This is a pertinent question. We have had so much experience with administrators who looked with affection on the idea of a controlled economy that we are gun-shy on the general subject of controls. Worse than this, we have seen perfectly respectable citizens, brought up in the atmosphere of free enterprise, succumb to the lure of controls when they were once given a hand in their administration. What is the record of this official to whom the administration of sugar controls is delegated?

It is not a bad record. It shows that his efforts since the day he became Secretary of Agriculture, have been clearly directed toward eliminating Government controls over the distribution of our food supply as rapidly as possible.

Speaking at an Agriculture-Industry Conference at Decatur, Ill., on September 20, 1945, soon after he became Secretary of Agriculture, Secretary Anderson said:

> I am glad to be able to report to you that the Department of Agriculture is clearing the decks by removing wartime controls as rapidly as possible. Many foods have been taken off the ration lists. Restrictions on the distribution and use of many commodities have been removed. Since VJ-day 25 war food orders have been lifted and those remaining will go at the earliest possible moment.

Six weeks later, speaking at Kansas State College—November 9, 1945—he said:

> The Department of Agriculture got into business in farm products in the depression and again in the war emergency it got into the food business in a big way. We want to get out of that business as quickly as possible and it will be a happy day for the Secretary of Agriculture when circumstances permit it. That is part of the future to which we look forward.

He has made many other public statements to the same effect.

A check-up on his record convinces me that Secretary Anderson meant what he said:

On July 1, 1945, a total of 92 War Food Orders were on the books. Included in this total were 16 orders on fats and oils, 10 on dairy products, 7 on fruits, 3 on grain, and 2 on sugar. The remaining 54 orders covered miscellaneous commodities, delegations of authority to the Office of Price Administration for rationing of food, requisitioning of foods, procedural regulations, and the like.

He immediately established the policy of terminating orders no longer needed for war or post war purposes. By January 1, 1946, in keeping with this policy, the number of orders effective had been reduced nearly one-half, to a total of 49.

The need for exporting huge quantities of foodstuffs in 1946, particularly grain, made necessary the issuance of several new orders, such as limitations on wheat and flour inventories; set-asides on flour, meat, and dairy products; and prohibitions against the use of grain in alcoholic beverages. The downward trend in the number of outstanding orders thus was interrupted in the summer of 1946. But by January 1 of this year the number of effective orders had declined to 20. On March 10, 1947, only 15 orders remained in effect.

His record in his recommendations to OPA on the removal of price controls is similar. He has consistently advocated the end of price controls and consumer subsidies at the earliest feasible moment, and has not hesitated to urge the raising of price ceilings when it was necessary to stimulate greater production.

Further proof is to be found in the fact that rationing of meat was discontinued in November of 1945, surely the earliest possible date, and rationing of fats and oils was terminated at the same time, even though they were recognized to be then in short supply.

Also, I am advised that the Secretary of Agriculture in August 1946 recommended to the Price Decontrol Board, that ceilings on beef be not restored after the price-control holiday last summer, but did recommend the reimposition of price controls on pork. I cite this to show he has tried to be discriminating, and I think the present pork prices indicate that he had facts behind his actions.

The Secretary and his Department are honestly loath to take on this job. It will get them no honor or glory. It will be full of headaches. To soothe the pain of one of the headaches involved, the committee has incorporated in section 3 (c) in connection with the transfer of personnel this provision:

> Any personnel so transferred shall not by virtue of their temporary employment in the Department of Agriculture acquire or be entitled to any right to employment in such Department in connection with the exercise of any function other than a function transferred under this act.

The purpose of the provision is obvious. It would be unfortunate if, in taking over such of the personnel of OPA into the Department of Agriculture, the Department would find itself with a new group of employees and officials possessed of seniorities and other rights in the Department superior to the regular organization. The provision is intended to be strictly just. It proposes to give to the various OPA employees all the rights, including veterans' rights, which they would possess had they remained in OPA until its dissolution. It gives them all these rights; no more, no less.

Let me, in closing, refer again to the all-important question of how much confidence we may place in the administration of the joint resolution by the Secretary of Agriculture. In my own mind this was a matter of compelling importance. The new administrator must be guided by the facts as they exist, by the best judgment he can bring to bear on the problems, and by a strong determination to end controls at the earliest possible moment. No temptation of power or of political advantage must sway his judgment to the slightest degree.

So important did I feel this question of the Secretary's character and abilities to be, that I sought for advice from a person whose judgment weighs heavily with me. I called ex-President Hoover on the telephone.

First, I inquired of him as to whether he felt that the domestic controls on sugar could be taken off at this time. His reply was that he did not feel himself sufficiently acquainted with the details of our present supply and future prospects to be able to answer that question. He was only sure that if domestic controls were removed, export controls must be continued.

I next asked him whether he felt I was safe in taking the advice of the Secretary of Agriculture as to whether controls should be lifted or continued. His reply was, in effect, that there was no one he knew of whose judgment would be better on this matter.

I finally asked him whether he would expect the Secretary to be moved by political questions or by any influences other than the best interests of the people of the country, as he saw them. His reply to this question was emphatically to the effect that Secretary Anderson was a man of complete honesty, as well as ability, and that the public good would be his guide.

This private telephone conversation with ex-President Hoover is divulged only because it has already been made public by a radio commentator and newspaper columnist who must have obtained his information through some telepathic means.

I have known Secretary Anderson for a number of years and during that time have formed a high regard for his character and abilities. Nevertheless, the responsibilities laid upon his shoulders are so serious that I felt the need to be confirmed in those ideas if he were to be convinced that the joint resolution before us is really in the best interests of the people of the United States. That telephone call to Mr. Hoover gave me, as an individual, that assurance. As a result I have no doubt as to the wisdom of placing this serious responsibility in his hands.

I therefore, Mr. President, commend this bill to the Members of the Senate as being worthy of their support.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, my first comment would be to express a word of very deep appreciation to my friend from Vermont for the very comprehensive and painstaking and thorough statement he has made. His presentation was well made. I think the Members of the Senate must appreciate the work he has performed in connection with this subject.

Now, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] to the first committee amendment, adding at the end thereof certain language which the clerk will read.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. On page 2, at the end of line 20, it is proposed to strike out the period, insert a colon, and the following: "And provided further, That refined sugar shall be allocated for home consumption at a rate of not less than 35 pounds per capita per calendar year, and any increase in the amount of sugar available for allocation in the calendar year 1947, over the amount recommended by the International Emergency Food Council for allocation to the United States for 1947, shall be allocated for home consumption until the allocation for such use equals 50 pounds of refined sugar per capita."

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, the pending sugar-control legislation is brought to the floor of the Senate by a favorable report from the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency. The vote was 10 to 3. It is now before the Senate. It is an important, far-reaching measure. Weeks of work have been done by the committee. It has finished its job and made its report.

I understand that an effort is to be made this afternoon by the opponents of the legislation to do something which in my judgment is wrong. I am informed that a motion is to be made to lay the amendment on the table. I decry that method of legislating. This important legislation is so far-reaching that a motion to lay the amendment on the table would be manifestly unfair. When a Senator votes to table the amendment, he automatically votes to throw on the scrap heap behind the barn all the efforts of the committee, and to refuse to consider the problem on its merits. It is a vote to repudiate the judgment of the President of the United States, who yesterday, in a nonpartisan manner, stressed the importance of this legislation to the American people. It is a vote to repudiate the leadership of the Committee on Banking and Currency and of the subcommittee.

According to Cushing's Manual, a motion to lay on the table is not debatable. If it is to be made, I ask Senators to vote it down, and to consider the proposal on its merits, whatever their vote may be on final disposition.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Will the Senator kindly explain his amendment?

Mr. TOBEY. I shall be very glad to do so.

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand, the purpose of it is to allow the housewife more sugar.

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Does the amendment guarantee the additional poundage or is it conditioned on greater production to be determined by the Secretary of Agriculture?

Mr. TOBEY. Let me explain. Realizing—and also hoping—that there will be an increased production of sugar, and that a greater available supply will come on the horizon sometime during the calendar year—perhaps tomorrow, or 3 months or 6 months from now—when and if that occurs, if the supply is greater than the normal supply which is now allocated to the commercial interests and the housewife, the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Anderson, is directed—it is mandatory—forthwith to allocate the excess amount and prorate it among the housewives of America. The amendment assures an allotment of 35 pounds, with a ceiling of 50 pounds, which is the amount per capita which was used by housewives before controls were established.

Mr. ELLENDER. In other words, 50 pounds is to be allowed only in the event production reaches a certain level.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. Would it not be better to enact legislation to make certain that the housewife will receive 40 or 45 pounds, rather than to make the increase conditional, as the Senator proposes?

Mr. TOBEY. It is certain that housewives will receive 35 pounds directly from the allocation.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is correct. The pending measure does give authority to increase the allowance from 25 to 35 pounds.

Mr. TOBEY. It is also certain that housewives and individuals will receive from 5 to 8 pounds more through increasing patronage of bakeries, restaurants, and hotels.

Mr. ELLENDER. Under the proposal now pending the housewife would receive 35 pounds.

Mr. TOBEY. And that is 40 percent more than she received last year.

Mr. ELLENDER. I understand; but would it not be better to adopt an amendment to guarantee to the housewife 5 pounds, rather than the 35 pounds proposed to be provided in the pending resolution?

Mr. TOBEY. Where would the Senator take the extra 10 pounds from, if increased supplies did not show up on the horizon?

Mr. ELLENDER. Let the Secretary wrestle with the problem. I am of opinion that production estimates for this year will be considerably increased.

Mr. TOBEY. That is an appealing argument, and I go along with the sentiment behind the suggestion. I yield to no man in my desire to take care of the housewives. But we must have a balanced economy. The business interests and the home owners are a composite of the people of the United States.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TOBEY. I was answering the question of the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator may ask his question. I am but clay in the potter's hands.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, what the Senator's amendment does is to make mandatory a distribution to the individual user—we call her the housewife—of 35 pounds.

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Prior to this time the allocation has been discretionary with the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. TOBEY. It has been a promise, but has not been translated into legislation.

Mr. WHERRY. With that observation, let me ask a further question: In answer to the distinguished Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], the Senator stated that his amendment did not mean granting the housewife an additional amount unless there was an increase in the supply from some source.

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator may be able to answer both questions at one time. Is it not true that in the past the industrial users of sugar have had a 10-percent preferential over the housewives? In other words, industry has been receiving 10 percent more, based on historical use, than has the housewife. Could it not be so arranged that in the future the housewives would be taken care of rather than industrial users?

Mr. TOBEY. I will say to the Senator it is quite correct that at the present time the industrial users of the country are receiving more than 50 percent and the housewives are receiving a little under 50 percent. That is the reverse of the situation which existed some years ago. I may at least make an answer which I hope will edify the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. I now address myself to the composite question posed by the three Senators——

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. Does the Senator intend also to explain the serious situation existing in the milk-producing sections of the country? The Secretary of Agriculture assured us that he would look after the milk producers throughout the country, so that supplies which have been wasted in the past would be saved this year. One of the main reasons for an increase in the sugar supply during the next few months is to take care of the milk producers in the West and in New England.

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct.

Mr. MAYBANK. That is where a large part of the sugar is going.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. Will the Senator from South Carolina repeat his question?

Mr. MAYBANK. At the hearings the Secretary of Agriculture assured the subcommittee that he believed he would be able to look after the milk-producing areas of the country in the next few months, and that by so doing large quantities of milk would be saved by conversion to condensed milk. It would be a great boon to the milk producers. I asked the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire if that was not one of the best uses of sugar. It is essential to the farmer and the dairyman.

Mr. FLANDERS. In the letter which I read from the Secretary, he called attention to the desire and intention to allocate sufficient sugar to prevent the spoilage of foodstuffs. He said that this would affect the amount which it would be proper to allocate to housewives, but that he would allocate all that was possible, with that reservation as to food spoilage.

Mr. MAYBANK. According to the testimony, the main question of food spoilage related to milk.

Mr. FLANDERS. That is the worst situation.

I should like to make one further point. Any mandatory provision we might place in this joint resolution for decreasing the amount of sugar that goes to industry in order to give more to the housewife would, I am sure, be most unfortunate, indeed, because it would reduce employment in the food-processing industry and would perhaps reduce it more in connection with the smaller and newer undertakings than in the case of older and well-heeled ones. So the amendment which the Senator from New Hampshire proposes, which would hold the industrial allotment steady and build up the housewife's allotment, is better than any proposal which would reduce the industrial allotment.

Mr. MAYBANK. Would it not also take away much of what the Secretary of Agriculture now contemplates giving to the dairy industry throughout the country?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understand, the parliamentary situation is that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire is offering an amendment to the committee amendment. Therefore, it is an amendment in the second degree.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALL in the chair). That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Therefore, it is not in order for me to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. TOBEY. I am sorry, but that is true.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield long enough for me to say that I should like to propose an amendment which contemplates what the Senator would like to have done, and I should like to have an opportunity to explain my amendment.

Mr. TOBEY. I will give the Senator the answer that Agrippa gave to St. Paul: "Almost thou persuadest me"—but not quite.

I have an answer to give to the three Senators who have asked a question. Then I shall be glad to answer the Senator's question. This is the answer:

I had considered the advisability of reducing the present industrial user's allotment to give more sugar to the housewife. Before drafting an amendment to accomplish this, I conferred with Secretary Anderson and Mr. James H. Marshall, Director, Sugar Branch, Department of Agriculture, to see what the effect of such a policy would be.

Secretary Anderson informed me that to withdraw, for instance, 5 pounds per capita of sugar for home consumption from the present allotments allowed to industrial users would mean a withdrawal of approximately 375,000 tons from the industrial users. That would mean that for the second half of this year, instead of obtaining 75 percent of their 1941 base period, industrial users would get between 50 to 55 percent of that base period allotment. 50 percent is the lowest that industrial users were ever reduced to throughout the whole rationing period, and that has occured for a very short period of time. When that did occur, several small sugar users were put out of business.

Secretary Anderson and Mr. Marshall pointed out the two main objections to such an amendment as is now proposed. The great majority of industrial users, while constantly requesting greater allotments, are satisfied that they are being dealt with fairly at the present time. They will cooperate, and cooperation of the industry goes a long way toward securing effective controls. Should this amendment be adopted, they will feel that they are being dealt with in an unfair manner and that will jeopardize the timely adoption of legislation and the effective administration of sugar controls.

Secondly, and this is the most important consideration, a large number of small industrial users will be put out of business with the serious effect that always has on our economy. It will mean reduction of employment. It will go contrary to the spirit of present-day legislation in aid to small business.

Let us not forget that industrial users are presently obtaining only 60 percent of the 1941 base period use. Several industrial users are rendering indispensable services. They are furnishing chocolate bars to the armed services and to the children of our country. Even bakers need a small amount for bread. Many couples are employed and must purchase their pastries, because they do not have the time for home cooking.

We must approach this problem of rationing, not from the demagog's viewpoint, but from the point of view of getting the utmost supply possible for the housewife consistent with the minimum needs of industrial sugar users.

Let us not forget that the people of the United States will get 35 pounds per capita as a minimum under the present bill, and all the sugar from hotels, restaurants, and all types of institutions, which amounts to another 5 pounds per capita.

From that aspect, it is true that the amount for home consumption is a little less than 50 percent. Conversely, it is true that commercial sugar users get a little more than 50 percent of the present supply of sugar. Before the war, the figures were reversed. There are no accurate figures available, but the Department of Agriculture believes that the best estimates are that a little more than 50 percent of the sugar supply went to home consumption.

The shift in figures can be explained as follows. The Department of Agriculture in making the allotments took notice of the facts that:

First. During the higher-income period that we are now in, there are many more persons purchasing pastries and sweets than in the prewar period.

Second. When the sugar allotment was, for a brief period of time, reduced to 50 percent of the current supply, a large number of small commercial users were put out of business.

Third. In the present food-scarcity period, it is wise to save all possible fruits, and commercial canners need a larger amount of sugar to do that, as they handle such a large bulk of food.

Fourth. Milk producers need four or five times more sugar than they did before the war, to preserve milk supplies. More people use canned milk for babies, and so forth, than they did before.

Fifth. The housewife does not keep a 15- to 25-pound supply on her shelves as before the war.

Mr. President, although we are advised to avoid vain repetitions, nevertheless I shall repeat something I said a while ago, for more Senators are now in the Chamber than were present at that time: I pointed out, for the benefit of veterans, this truth: Approximately 8,000 veterans have availed themselves of the benefits of the GI bill of rights, which the Congress passed, to start small sugar-using businesses, such as soft-drink businesses, ice-cream businesses, bakeries, candy businesses, some pharmaceutical businesses, or businesses involving the production of gelatin desserts, or other types of desserts. We must not yield to any parliamentary motion or procedure which will put them and thousands of other small commercial sugar users out of business.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has proposed an amendment based upon the thought that the sugar-rationing program will continue until March 31, 1948. There is considerable opinion to the effect that the pending measure will be amended so as to continue sugar rationing only to October 31 of the present year. The junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] and myself, who are on the subcommittee studying the sugar situation, felt at the end of those studies, and we still feel, that more sugar is available now than was available during any one prewar year. Accordingly, we drafted a measure to do away immediately with all sugar rationing, but to continue sugar-inventory controls. By way of a compromise, we agreed with a number of Senators on the other side of the aisle, and also with our Republican colleagues who differed with us, to draft an amendment providing for an October 31 end of sugar rationing. If that amendment prevails, then the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will be meaningless, for his amendment presupposes that rationing will continue until next March. If we vote to end sugar rationing as of October 31 of this year, then——

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a correction?

Mr. McCARTHY. I prefer not to yield until I conclude this part of my remarks.

Mr. TOBEY. Does not the Senator wish to be set aright?

Mr. McCARTHY. Of course. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator very much.

Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin has stated that my amendment presupposes that controls will continue until next March. My amendment presupposes nothing of the sort, I say to the Senator in all kindness. My amendment simply says that when, as, and if—whether it be in June, August, or September—there is any increase, the increase shall forthwith be passed on to the housewives. No date at all is set in the amendment.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, let me point out that the Senator's amendment provides for a 35-pound allotment for the year. If we end the controls as of October 31, then Mr. Dice, or whoever is administering the rationing program at that time, can allow any amount he wants to allow before October 31, and can say that they will receive the remainder after rationing is ended.

Mr. President, the Senator's amendment has considerable merit, but I believe we should not consider his amendment at this time. I believe he should wait and see whether we intend to end controls as of October 31 or as of March 31 of next year. I think the Senator from New Hampshire should wait, and should resubmit his amendment at the proper time, if necessary.

For that reason, Mr. President, I now move that the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire to the committee amendment be laid on the table until such time as it shall be properly brought before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wisconsin to lay on the table the amendment submitted by the Senator from New Hampshire to the committee amendment. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. TOBEY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the folowing Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] to the first amendment of the committee.

TRIAL PIECES OF COINS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, on Monday, when the calendar was called, the Senator from Nevada objected to two numbers on Calendar No. 36, Senate bill 565, and Calendar No. 37, Senate bill 566. I now ask the attention of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS]. At that time I was not fully apprised or informed as to the purport of those bills. Since that time I have become conversant with the meanings of the bills.

I now ask unanimous consent that I be permitted to withdraw my objection to Calendar No. 37, Senate bill 566, and also to withdraw my motion to reconsider Senate bill 565, Calendar No. 36. If there is no objection, I should like to have those measures taken up.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, that requires unanimous consent, does it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It does.

Mr. McCARRAN. That is what I am asking.

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, will the Senator restate his reasons for making the unanimous-consent request at the present time?

Mr. McCARRAN. When the calendar was being called on Monday, last, I objected to Calendar No. 37, Senate bill 566. Calendar No. 36, Senate bill 565, had at that time already been passed. I then moved to reconsider the vote by which S. 565 was passed. The bills pertain to silver, and I had not been advised as to the purport of them. Since that time, I have become conversant with them and I have no objection to their passage. I desire to withdraw my objection and my motion to reconsider.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada to withdraw his motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill (S. 565) to amend section 3539 of the Revised Statutes relating to taking trial pieces of coins was passed? The Chair hears none; the motion to reconsider is withdrawn, and the bill stands passed.

FINENESS OF SILVER INGOTS AND WEIGHT OF SILVER COINS

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, I also request unanimous consent to withdraw my objection to Senate bill 566.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nevada? The Chair hears none. The Chair now inquires if there is objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 566) to amend sections 3533 and 3536 of the Revised Statutes with respect to deviations in standard of ingots and weight of silver coins, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill as passed is as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 3533 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 346) is amended by striking out the word "three-thousandths" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "six-thousandths."

SEC. 2. Section 3536 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (U. S. C., title 31, sec. 349), is amended to read as follows:

"In adjusting the weight of silver coins the following deviations shall not be exceeded in any single piece: In the dollar, six grains; in the half-dollar, four grains; in the quarter-dollar, three grains; and in the dime, one and one-half grains."

CENTRALIA COAL MINE DISASTER

Mr. WHERRY obtained the floor.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. BROOKS. Out of order, I ask unanimous consent to submit a resolution, and I ask that it be appropriately referred.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the resolution will be received.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I should like to state that the resolution is concerned with the tragic explosion in the Centralia Coal Co. mine No. 5, announced in today's newspapers. From all the reports, 131 miners were trapped at the bottom of the shaft, 9 of them have been removed and are alive, 1 was removed dead, and 14 accounted for as dead. It is feared that the others may perish. If they do it will be the worst mining tragedy in the United States in 19 years.

This mine was under the operation of the Federal Government, through the Secretary of the Interior. It has been stated that there were many violations, not only of the Federal safety rules, but of the rules for mine safety laid down by the State of Illinois.

The resolution I have submitted provides that the Committee on Public Lands, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the mine explosion which occurred at Centralia Coal Co. Mine No. 5, at Wamack, Ill., on March 25, 1947, with a view to determining the cause of such explosion, and whether adequate inspection was being maintained. The committee shall report its findings to the Senate as soon as possible, including its findings as to the negligence, if any, of any agency or official of the United States in connection with the explosion.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am very glad to yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. I am very glad that the Senator from Illinois has submitted this resolution. When I picked up the newspaper this morning and read that a blast in a coal mine in Illinois had killed a large number of men, and that one-hundred odd more men were trapped, it concerned me, for it was a great tragedy. It is very important at this point to note that on November 4 to November 6, Mr. Frank Perz, a Federal coal-mine inspector, made an inspection of No. 5 Mine of the Centralia Coal Co. in Illinois, the mine at which the tragedy occurred. A report was submitted to the Coal Mines Inspector, Mr. Collisson, on November 26, 1946, and this report showed a widespread violation of the safety laws of the Federal Mine Safety Code.

The Krug-Lewis agreement was executed on May 29, 1946. The report of the inspector shows a wholesale infraction of the Federal Mine Safety Code, as a result of which, a death trap for some 130 men was created. To my mind, it is a disgrace for the Federal Government, in the operation of the coal mines, to permit a direct violation of all the safety codes to go on resulting in this great tragedy. I hold in my hand the recommendations of the inspector; first, his findings, and then his recommendations. They are amazing, and yet the man who assumed the great responsibility of properly and safely operating this mine, Mr. Krug, the Secretary of the Interior, is spending his time traveling all over the United States and all over the Pacific Ocean trying to build up a background for a Vice Presidential campaign. He is the man who, in great arrogance, a very short time ago, was reported as saying, "I don't care what the boys on the Hill do about appropriations, I can bring pressure enough to swing them into line."

That arrogant bureaucrat who heads the Department of the Interior is the man who today must assume the responsibility for this mine disaster because upon the basis of his inspector's report he could have ordered conditions corrected or closed the mine. At the present time he is in the process of removing the Director of Mines and putting in a man of his personal choice. The inaction of the Secretary or his representative preceding this great mine tragedy is a disgrace. The Senator from Illinois is performing a real service in demanding a complete Senate investigation. When the full story is told, it will be a tragic revelation of Federal bureaucracy at its worst. That is what we have in the operation of that mine in Illinois.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I want to thank the Senator from Nebraska for his indulgence. I also want to thank the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] and the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES] for their interest in the miners of the United States. It seems, however, that it requires the happening of a tragedy such as this to call the attention of the Members of this body and of the other House to the bleak sufferings of the miners of this country. Sometimes it seems we only think about them when something happens such as the tragedy which occurred yesterday in Illinois. But when some of us try to obtain a small appropriation in order to hire inspectors to inspect the mines of New Mexico, Colorado, Wyoming, Nebraska, or West Virginia, Congress appears to get into an economical mood, and individual Members of Congress seem to suffer because of the tremendous Federal expenditures which would be involved in such an appropriation.

Mr. President, I hope this tragic accident in Illinois will be a lesson to us all. I hope in the future it will not require a tragedy to make Members of Congress think about the miners. Only 2 or 3 months ago we were condemning the coal miners, at least some persons were condemning them, simply because they dared to express their rights as Americans. Then how our hearts bleed for them after they die in the guts of the earth. I hope this terrible tragedy will be a lesson to us all, and that the economically minded Senate will remember it when requests are made for appropriations to employ a few extra mine inspectors to protect the lives of miners.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. The speech just made by the able Senator from New Mexico might be appropriate, though I question it. It certainly is not appropriate in this instance, because I hold in my hand the report made by the Federal inspector to the Secretary of the Interior, about which nothing was done. So it does not do any good to stand on the floor of the Senate and blame the Republicans or the Appropriations Committee in this instance, because in this case the Federal inspector was paid, and there was sufficient money to send him to the mine to make the inspection. He was sent there, he went there, he made the inspection and submitted a report, but nothing was done about it. More appropriations in this instance would have done no good whatsoever.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield so I may make a reply to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. I did not condemn a particular party or any one individual. I was condemning the Congress of the United States. I do not care whether the blame for the accident lies with the Democrats or the Republicans. I am blaming the Congress for its failure to provide sufficient funds for inspection purposes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. In this instance I do not think the Senator from New Mexico should even blame the Congress of the United States, or any Member of it. The reason I say that is that I hold in my hand the report which was submitted by the inspector. If anyone is to be blamed in this instance it should be the administration. Blame those responsible for looking after the mines and the safety of the miners.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Whoever is to blame should receive the blame irrespective of party politics or party advantage. But I insist again that we should remember the miner at times other than when he suffers and dies.

Mr. CAPEHART. I agree with that statement. Not more than 10 days ago I read a letter which I received from the Secretary of the Interior, and a letter from the head of the miners' union, and asked Congress to take some action to bring together the miners, the operators, and officials of the Government to settle the mess we are in in respect to the coal-mining industry of America. I still think that should be done. Unless it is done I believe more accidents will occur. It is likewise true that the Federal Government cannot function without the continued operation of our major industries.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. We all regret the accident which happened yesterday in Illinois. There is no use in our trying to lay the blame for the accident on any particular party. We do not know what caused the accident. We do know that it is probable that if proper inspection had been made there would have been no accident in the mine.

Last year I introduced a mine safety bill which carried an appropriation of $5,000,000. The purpose was to arouse the industries of the United States to the need for reducing the accidents. The Committee on Education and Labor unanimously reported that bill. It came to the Senate floor. Objection was made to it on the floor, and it was never allowed to be voted upon in the Senate. A similar bill is now in committee. I believe if that bill is adopted it will result in reducing accidents in the United States, and greatly decrease the money losses which result from such accidents. The country is losing more than $2,000,000,000 a year by reason of accidents. Let us do something in the future about this problem; let us not argue about what has happened in the past.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MYERS. I have just taken from the clerk's desk the original copy of the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois, and I will say I am in wholehearted accord with the purposes of the resolution. Many miners have gone to their eternal reward while toiling in the mines. They have died in the earth, and their families have lost fathers or husbands or brothers. But in the face of such a great tragedy I do not believe politics should be allowed to enter into consideration of the question. Whether Federal inspectors, or whether Illinois State inspectors are at fault, is not the question before us. But now, simply because there has been a great mine disaster, because tragedy has entered the homes of many persons in Illinois, we find the Secretary of the Interior indicted, tried, convicted, and judged guilty right here on the floor of the Senate. Are we here to investigate this tragedy? I hope the Senate will adopt the resolution. Are we then going to have an impartial and a nonpolitical investigation? Or when an accident occurs, perhaps because an inspector has not performed his duty, or because someone in the Interior Department has not performed his, or even because the Secretary of the Interior may or may not have performed the duty devolving upon him, are we going to indict those individuals and try them the moment a resolution is submitted?

Mr. President, I say it is about time for us to forget partisan politics and to begin to get down to work for the people of America. There are tremendous issues pending before Congress. Why can we not debate them on their merits? The coal-mine accident presents to us a serious problem. Why not refer the resolution to the appropriate committee for proper action? I sincerely hope and trust that the Committee on Public Lands when it begins consideration of the resolution, consider it in the same frame of mind evidenced by some Senators before the matter is even before the Senate.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The allegation was made a few minutes ago that the funds appropriated for coal mine inspection for the current year are inadequate. I have just checked with the clerk of the Appropriations Committee, and I am advised that the Bureau of the Budget a year ago requested $1,178,000 to take care of coal mine inspections this year. The House increased that figure to $1,483,000, which figure was later approved by the Senate. So that actually for the current year there is available for coal mine inspection $305,000 in excess of the amount requested by the Bureau of the Budget.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am prompted to intervene to say that if I have correctly understood the Senator from Idaho, the information which he has just given to the Senate gives an incorrect impression. The Senate increased the fund available for coal mine inspection by $305,000 over that which was recommended by the Appropriations Committee because I had the opportunity myself to offer the agreement upon the floor of the Senate to increase that appropriation.

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the junior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB], and the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] all joined with me upon the floor in urging the increased appropriation. It was the Senate and not the House which increased the appropriation.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield

Mr. DWORSHAK. I received this information from the clerk of the Appropriations Committee of the Senate. I reiterate that the Bureau of the Budget requested only $1,178,000. On the floor of the House during the consideration of the bill that body adopted an amendment raising the sum of $1,178,000 to $1,483,000. When the bill was considered by the Appropriations Committee of the Senate I understand that a reduction was made, because the Bureau had not requested the additional amount; but that on the floor, as the Senator from Wyoming has indicated, the original House language providing $1,483,000 was approved. Thus the House and Senate figures coincided on this item and the final appropriation approved by the Congress provided $305,000 more than the Bureau of the Budget had asked for coal-mine inspection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. My point was to make clear that the Senate increased the appropriation above the amount reported by the committee. There was quite a lengthy discussion on the subject on the floor at that time. It is only necessary to refer to the RECORD to get the facts. I understood the Senator from Idaho to say that the increase had been made in the House above the Senate figure. If he did not make that statement, I misunderstood his remarks.

Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. REVERCOMB addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield, and if so, to whom?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield first to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, this is not a question of appropriations. That is beside the point. Let us keep the record straight. From November 4 to November 6, Mr. Frank Perz, a Federal coal mine inspector, made an examination of the mine in which the disaster occurred last night, Mine No. 5 of the Centralia Coal Co., in Illinois. He reported various violations of the Federal Mine Safety Code. The report was submitted to his chief, Capt. N. H. Collisson, coal mine inspector, on November 26, 1946. The report showed widespread violations. I am told that there were probably 57 different violations of the Federal Safety Code which was agreed upon in the so-called Krug-Lewis agreement.

What happened? The Federal Government, the Department of the Interior, headed by Mr. Krug, failed to do anything. Yesterday a great tragedy occurred. Men are dying. Women and children are left widows and orphans as a result, probably, of failure on the part of the Federal Government, which is operating the mines, to live up to the recommendations of its own inspector.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CHAVEZ. The Senator from New Mexico is not trying to accuse anyone connected with the Federal Government or any other agency who might have been responsible for the tragedy which occurred in Illinois. The point I was trying to make, and still insist on making, is that it requires a tragedy such as this to bring to our minds the trials and tribulations of those who delve under the earth for a living. If the Senator from Idaho, and other Senators, would only investigate the amount of money appropriated, in an effort to provide the necessary inspections for the protection of miners, and divide it among the mines of the United States, they would find that the Congress was very negligent, and that the amount was extremely insignificant.

I do not care who is to blame. Whoever is to blame in Illinois should be condemned. But we should not forget our own responsibility in the matter. We should try to think of the miner at other times than when he is to be buried.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I had not intended to speak upon this subject. A great tragedy has occurred in a coal mine. The question has been raised as to responsibility. Some question has been raised as to appropriations for inspection of mines by the Congress. I think the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. DWORSHAK] have made it quite clear that the Congress appropriated for inspection an amount considerably in excess of what was requested by the executive department.

I recall very distinctly the action taken by the Senate. I joined with the Senator from Wyoming and other Senators in urging an increase in the amount for Federal inspection of mines. I joined in that effort because it was a safety measure. It was a course which I have always felt I should follow and which I have always followed. Wherever the safety of a man is involved, no chances should be taken.

It seems to me that when we discuss what we have appropriated, that is somewhat aside the point here. Although we made available money in excess of that requested, we should bear in mind the situation which exists in this case, whoever may be at fault. An inspection was made, and a report of the inspection was made to the Federal administrator. The accident followed that report, which showed faults and dangers in the mine, dangers known to the Federal administrator.

I hope that this investigation will be carried forward. While it cannot relieve the distress which arises from this tragedy, it may be of some help in preventing similar occurrences in the future.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I do not want to beat my breast over the tragedy which has occurred. It is deplorable. We all regret it exceedingly and want to do what we can to prevent such accidents in the future.

I feel that the statement of the Senator from New Hampshire, that Mr. Krug is responsible for this mine tragedy, is political drivel. Mr. Krug is not operating the mines in fact. We all know that all the Government did was to run up a flag over the mines. The operators are continuing to operate the mines, and if anyone has been negligent it is the mine owners. We know very well that the mine owners are receiving the profits from the mines, and shifting to the Federal Government the responsibility of operating them, because the operators are incapable of reaching an agreement with their workers.

Frankly, I believe that the idea that the miners are working for the Government or that the Government is actually operating the mines is a farce. Let us not, for political purposes, try to make it appear that Mr. Krug should be there with his cap and miner's lamp on, seeing how the mines are going. Federal operation is only figurative.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I believe that the subject which has been brought to the attention of the Senate by the able Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] is so important that I now ask unanimous consent to suspend the rule and immediately consider the resolution in order that it may be adopted.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Michigan asks unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the purpose of suspending the rule and considering at this time the resolution submitted by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS]. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The resolution will be read for the information of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 98) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the mine explosion which occurred at the Centralia Coal Mine No. 5, Womac, Ill., on March 25, 1947, with a view to determining the cause of such explosion, whether all mine safety requirements and provisions were being observed, and whether adequate inspection was being maintained. The committee shall report its findings to the Senate as soon as possible including its findings as to the negligence, if any, of any agency or official of the United States in connection with such explosion.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, before voting I desire to say a word with reference to the resolution. I regret the awful tragedy which has occurred in my State. I think the resolution is perfectly appropriate and that an investigation should be made. However, I hope that while the Federal Government is now proceeding with such dispatch in making an investigation, the officials of the State of Illinois will also act with equal dispatch, because, if I correctly understand the situation, while there is a Federal Safety Inspection Act, its enforcement is left to the States. If I am not correct I should like to have someone like the able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB], who comes from a coal-mining State, correct me.

In the past, attempts have been made in the Senate and in the House to pass a Federal safety inspection law with teeth in it, making examination and inspection and the enforcement of safety rules definitely a responsibility of the Federal Government.

Such proposed legislation has been defeated in the past. I think I am correct in saying that the only power the Federal Government has at the present time is inspection, examination, and recommendation, and that the real power of enforcement, so far as any penalties are concerned for failure to maintain a mine in proper condition, is a State matter. If I am wrong in that statement I should like to be corrected.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I shall have to challenge that statement. Under the present situation it is my understanding—and I believe the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] is as familiar with the situation as I am—that while the mines are under the control of the Federal Government any measure of safety can be enforced by the Federal Government. The Federal administrator could have closed the dangerous mine. It is also my understanding—and I state this in reply to what was said about responsibility by the senior Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR]—that this report was made to the Federal department and could have been acted upon by the Federal department, and that no action was taken.

Mr. LUCAS. There can be no question that the agent of the Federal Government would make a report to the Federal agency which is handling the situation. But I should like to ask what the report shows as to recommendations in connection with the conditions found in this mine.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I have before me a list of the violations and conditions which were found, and the recommendations.

Mr. LUCAS. What are the recommendations? I should like to have the Senator read the recommendations. It seems to me that they are very important.

Mr. BRIDGES. One of the inspector's findings was:

> Unsupported loose roof and overhanging ribs and brows were observed along practically all of the room-entry and intermediate haulageways. And unsupported loose roof was observed along the roadways in a large number of working places.

The inspector's recommendation was as follows:

> The loose roof and overhanging ribs and brows along the room-entry and intermediate haulageways and along the roadways and working places should be either timbered adequately or taken down.

There are 30 or 40 findings in the report.

Mr. LUCAS. Let us take that one. To whom was that recommendation made?

Mr. BRIDGES. To the Federal Government.

Mr. LUCAS. Where is the authority for the Federal Government to carry out the recommendation?

Mr. BRIDGES. The Federal Government is operating the mine.

Mr. LUCAS. Of course it is. But can the Federal Government supersede a State law, for instance, with respect to examination and safety regulations?

Mr. BRIDGES. The Supreme Court of the United States says that the Federal Government has been operating the mines. I do not want to take issue with the Supreme Court.

Mr. LUCAS. I am raising the question because I think it is very important, in view of the wild or exaggerated statement made about my good friend Mr. Krug.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, it is my recollection that the law provided for Federal inspection, and certainly under Federal control the Administrator could act to the extent of closing down a mine and keeping men away if the conditions were found bad during the time of operation by the Federal Government.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator may be correct, and I shall not challenge the statement. But I know the situation before the Government took over the mines and I know the arguments which have been made upon the floor of the Senate regarding the Federal Government's taking over and having complete control and jurisdiction as to inspection and examination and putting some teeth into the law, making mines safe from a Federal standpoint. Such legislation has been defeated in the past.

Mr. REVERCOMB, Mr. BRIDGES, and Mr. FERGUSON addressed the Chair.

Mr. LUCAS. I will yield further to the Senator from West Virginia, because the Senator and I are talking business.

Mr. BRIDGES. I thought the Senator would yield to me, because he cut me off.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The Senator from Illinois is discussing the general proposal which has been before the Senate with respect to the Federal Government taking over the inspection of coal mines and taking them entirely away from State inspection. That proposal has been before the Senate in years past. I think it arose before I came to the Senate. The appropriation made last year and referred to by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] provided for additional Federal inspectors, and the laws as I understand them to exist today provide for Federal inspection by the Department of the Interior, and there is power to close a mine if it is in a dangerous condition certainly while under Government ownership.

Mr. LUCAS. I shall not challenge the Senator. I hope to look up the law between now and tomorow. But the Senator will agree with me that if we have the power to close a mine it is because the Government is at the present time operating the mines, and that is the only power we have.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I should want to consult the statute as to that.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MYERS. Of course, the Senator is perfectly correct in the statement that there is no power in the Federal Government to enforce recommendations made by mine inspectors. There is technically that power in the case of coal mines, because the Federal Government happens to be in possession; but I hope that no Senator is of the opinion that these violations began to occur only when the Federal Government came into control of these properties. Violations have been occurring constantly, but the Federal Government never had and does not now have, except by reason of its technical position, any power to enforce the recommendations of its mine inspectors. The Federal operation is technical. I think every Senator knows that we have argued for years as to whether the Federal Government should be given power to enforce the recommendations of its mine inspectors. The operators in many areas of the country, to use a common expression, can thumb their noses at the recommendations of mine inspectors, except now probably, because of the technical possession by the Government.

I agree with the Senator that technically the Government could close down any mine. But what I object to is that before we even vote on the resolution or any amendment and before any investigation is made, some Senators attempt to place the responsibility on the Secretary of the Interior, and talk about a Vice Presidential candidacy. I hope this resolution will be adopted unanimously. I hope the committee will conduct a full-scale investigation both as to State and Federal action, and as to who may be at fault. We cannot restore to their families the men who have lost their lives, but probably we can do something to prevent the occurrence of similar catastrophes. Let us, however, do it practically, let us do it decently, and let us do it nonpolitically.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Pennsylvania for his contribution to the discussion. He is absolutely correct.

One of the primary reasons for injecting myself into the debate was because we know definitely that previous to the time when the Federal Government took over the mines, the inspection and examination of mines with respect to safety features and the imposition of penalties for violation of laws or regulations were strictly a State matter, and a State matter alone.

Now the Federal Government has taken over the mines, and has had control of them for some months. As the able Senator from Pennsylvania has said, these violations undoubtedly have been going on for some time.

Mr. BRIDGES and Mr. REVERCOMB addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Illinois yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. LUCAS. I ask the Senators who have addressed the Chair to wait for a moment, please.

Mr. President, no doubt the violations have been going on for some time, as I have said. I venture to say that they were going on in the Centralia mine long before the Federal Government took it over—in view of all the violations which the able Senator from New Hampshire has pointed out were found to exist in that mine by the Federal inspectors.

But I wish to make the point that we do not want to leave the impression that during all these years the Federal Government has had under its charge the coal mine at Centralia, Ill. That is the impression which I am sure my able friend the Senator from New Hampshire would like to leave.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I asked the Senator to yield to me for a minute, but then he shut me off.

Mr. LUCAS. I did so because I was asking the Senator from Pennsylvania a question, and I was afraid I might have a little trouble with the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. I have just two questions which I should like to ask. One is this: If we do not have effective regulation of the mines now—and I ask this question because the Senator from Illinois has referred to political parties—what party is responsible; what administration has been in power for the last 14 years, with overwhelming majorities?

Mr. LUCAS. That would be a hard question to answer. [Laughter.]

Does the Senator from New Hampshire wish to propound another question now?

Mr. BRIDGES. Yes.

Mr. LUCAS. Does the Senator wish to propound a question equally difficult to answer?

Mr. BRIDGES. My second question is this: If a Federal mine inspector inspected these mines in early November and made his report to his chief in the Bureau of Mines in the latter part of November, is it conceivable to the Senator from Illinois that any responsible Federal official, knowing that those dangers and violations existed and having had them called to his attention, would permit men to operate or work in a mine in which those dangers were found by the Federal Government's own representatives to exist. To me, it is inconceivable.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I more or less agree with the able Senator from New Hampshire that the conditions were such that certainly whoever had the responsibility of enforcing the safety regulations and seeing that the mines were in safe condition should have done so. But before I give the Senator from New Hampshire a final answer, I desire to examine the report carefully, and find out from Secretary Krug or someone in the Department just what has been done with respect to that matter. After I have done that, I may have something more to say about it, tomorrow.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I merely wish to make this observation: There was a very disastrous mine explosion in my State, last year, which orphaned and widowed many persons, perhaps more than were affected by the grievous disaster of which we are speaking today. The mines were then in charge of the operators. I do not recall that any great hubbub was raised in the Senate in regard to that explosion, at the time when it occurred. Of course, the Federal Government was not even in technical charge of the mines at that time; and I suppose there was no disposition to criticize the operators. Furthermore, as I recall, the comment which was made regarding it revealed a conflict of authority, to some extent, between the Federal Government and the State government. The State governments heretofore have assumed primary responsibility for the enforcement of safety provisions for mines within their borders.

The Congress has provided modest funds—inadequate funds, I think—for the Bureau of Mines, in the Department of the Interior, to make inspections of the mines. That has been done for many years. All the Federal inspectors can do is make inspections. Conflicts have heretofore occurred between the jurisdiction of the Federal inspectors and the jurisdiction of State inspectors in regard to the inspection of mines. In any event, after the Federal inspectors have made their inspections, they submit their reports to the Department of the Interior. So far as I recall, the Department of the Interior has never had any authority to carry out the recommendations made by the Federal inspectors. The Department of the Interior has never been given by Congress any funds with which to install safety appliances, not even those recommended by Federal inspectors. It may be—and on this matter I am inclined to take the same position I have heretofore taken—that there is a Federal responsibility without regard to the question of technical operation of mines by the Federal Government in an emergency or on account of a strike.

When the investigation is made by the committee called for by the resolution—and I am sure it will be made, and I certainly want it to be made—I hope the committee will not only go thoroughly into the question of the responsibility for this particular disaster, but also will broaden the inquiry beyond that, and will report to the Senate and to the country regarding the inefficiency of mine safety appliances in mines throughout the United States. Regardless of whether such inefficiency is a responsibility of the States or of the Federal Government, I should like to have the committee report on the extent to which there is any conflict between the State authority and Federal authority in regard to safety conditions in the mines and the inspections made by mine inspectors.

I should also like them to report concerning whether the taking over of mines during an emergency, on the occasion of a threatened strike or during the existence of a strike, has resulted in the automatic withdrawal of the State authorities, who had a primary responsibility, from inspections and from enforcement of the State laws with respect to mine safety. I should like to have that done in order that we may determine the real responsibility which any State Government, not only of Illinois, but of Kentucky, West Virginia, Pennsylvania, and every other State, may be held to have for these matters in the future.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. In view of the fact that the Congress passed an act appropriating money so that approximately 40 additional inspectors, as I recall—making a total of 202 Federal inspectors—might be employed by the Federal Government to inspect the coal mines in the United States, does the Senator from Kentucky think there is a primary obligation on the States to inspect the mines, inasmuch as the Federal Government, acting through the Department of the Interior, had control of the mines, furnished the money for the inspections, and employed the inspectors? I wonder whether the Senator from Kentucky means to imply that the State had any inspection duty higher than that of the Federal Government, in view of the fact that the Federal Government provides for employing inspectors, and employs them for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. I was speaking of the responsibility of the State in a broad and general sense, independent of any operation of the mines by the Federal Government. I do not recall that Congress has given any greater authority to the Federal officers to enforce the recommendations for the installation of safety appliances in the mines while they are operated by the Government than they previously had.

A very proper question, it seems to me, is whether, notwithstanding technical Federal operation of the mines, which has extended longer than was expected, and longer than any of us desired, if the difficulty could have been composed before, the Department of the Interior had any funds with which it could, out of the Treasury of the United States, have installed safety appliances, or whether it had the right to reach into the treasury of the operating companies to carry out a recommendation made by a Federal inspector. Those are matters which I think should be looked into and reported to the Senate, so that we may know hereafter what the situation is, and assess the relative responsibility of both local governments and of the Federal Government, even during Federal operation, and certainly when there is no Federal operation.

Mr REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator from Kentucky yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I hope that out of the proposed investigation will come recommendations with respect to inspection. I do not know of any provision whereby the Federal Government might install appliances, but there is no doubt, is there, I ask the Senator from Kentucky, that the Federal Government could have closed down that mine once it found it was unsafe?

Mr. BARKLEY. I suppose the Federal Government could close a mine for any reason, but I do not understand that by reason of the Federal operation of mines the State withdrew from the exercise of the police power it has always had under the laws of the State.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The resolution authorizing the Committee on Public Lands to make an investigation of this unfortunate coal mine accident in Illinois is defective, as I have read it, in that it does not provide any funds to enable the committee to carry on the investigation.

The matter is of such grave importance, involving as it does weakness of State law and weakness of Federal law governing the inspection of coal mines, that I feel the committee should be authorized to spend a reasonable sum to conduct the investigation. Otherwise only a cursory and ineffective study can be made. Therefore, Mr. President, I intend to offer this amendment, adding section 2 to the bill in the usual form provided in such cases:

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

Before asking the Chair to put that amendment, however, I desire to advert to some testimony which was presented to the Committee on Appropriations last year when this matter was under consideration.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for June 19, 1946, on page 7140, shows that a committee amendment was presented on that date to the Department of the Interior appropriation bill, under the heading "Bureau of Mines," to strike out the appropriation which was passed by the House of $1,483,000, and insert in lieu thereof $1,178,000. On that day, acting on behalf of a group of Senators, including the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senators from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE and Mr. REVERCOMB], and myself, I resisted the committee amendment and urged that the 305,000 which was being stricken out should be restored to the bill. In support of that, I find that I had pointed out that there were some 3,100 coal mines in the United States, employing 25 miners or more each; and that the Bureau of Mines, which under the law is authorized to inspect these mines, had only 157 inspectors. The purpose of the amendment was to enable the Bureau to employ 45 additional inspectors. The committee amendment reducing the amount was rejected, so that the $305,000 was restored.

The Coal Mine Inspection Act was not enacted until 1941. It was approved May 7, 1941, and it amounts to little more than an authorization to the Bureau of Mines in the Department of the Interior to conduct investigations and inspections and to make reports. The law is chapter 87 of the Public Laws of the Seventy-seventh Congress, first session.

Dr. Sayers, who was at that time the head of the Bureau of Mines, was questioned by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN]. This appears on page 948 of the Senate hearings on the Interior Department appropriation bill for 1947:

Senator GREEN. What is the course of the report after an inspector makes it?

Dr. SAYERS. A copy of an abridged preliminary report is tacked up on a bulletin board outside the mine, within a short time (possibly within a few days) after the mine inspection has been completed.

Senator GREEN. Does it have to be approved by anyone?

Dr. SAYERS. Yes; it is approved by the engineer in charge of the district. Then another and more complete report is formulated for review by various supervising heads. The district engineer reviews it and then it is sent to Washington and again carefully reviewed. Copies of that final report, which is held to a reasonable minimum as to length, go to the State mine inspector, to the operator, and to the union, in its national, district, and local offices; in addition, a copy is retained at the district engineer's office of this Bureau and in the Washington office of the Bureau, and the copies in the Bureau's offices are at all times open to the public to read.

In this way they are all informed.

In addition, in order to comply with the law as to publicizing this report, it is abstracted and a news release is prepared and sent to the papers in the mine locality for publication and I assure you they are published regularly. In States where they have laws covering safety in coal mining, the State inspector of mines sees that wherever the law is being disobeyed as shown by Federal inspection reports, the offending mine is called upon to obey the law.

It will be observed from this that a difficulty is created by reason of the conflict of law. In some States there are effective mine-inspection laws, in some States the mine-inspection laws are very poor, and in some States there are none. So the problem of final enforcement in a State coal mine is always one of greatest difficulty, and heretofore, as one reads the testimony presented before the Appropriations Committee, it would seem that the reports of the inspectors had sanction only to the extent that publicity was given to the reports.

I feel that, great as this tragedy has been, it may prove to be the reason for an improvement of the law, both the Federal law and of the State law. In any event, it is clear, Mr. President, it seems to me, that the resolution ought to be amended so as to provide a sum of at least $5,000 from the Contingent Fund of the Senate, in order to carry on the investigation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, may I address a question to the Senator from Wyoming? The testimony he has read bearing upon the question of the appropriation deals with the subject of the inspection laws under the Federal Government in ordinary times, and by ordinary times I mean when the operation of a mine was in the hands of its owner. It did not deal with the situation when the Government had charge.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Oh, no; certainly not.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The question here raised is as to the power of the Government when it takes charge to close a mine upon a report made to it. The testimony read by the Senator from Wyoming deals with cases when a mine is in private ownership and private operation.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. That is correct. That is the only law we have. I might say that section 5 of title XXX of the United States Code, the original Bureau of Mines law, authorizes—

The Director of the Bureau * * * to prepare and publish, subject to the direction of the Secretary of the Interior, under the appropriations made from time to time by Congress, reports of inquiries and investigations, with appropriate recommendations of the Bureau, concerning the nature, causes, and prevention of accidents, and the improvement of conditions, methods, and equipment, with special reference to health, safety, and prevention of waste in the mining, quarrying, metallurgical and other mineral industries.

These reports, as the inquiry last year indicated, are made annually and in a complete form, but as I said, the law itself is defective in that it lacks the sanctions which would seem to be necessarily required to prevent the constant recurrence of these tremendous tragedies in the coal mines.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I feel, as do some of the other Senators who have expressed themselves this afternoon, that this is not the moment to decide the facts upon which the investigation is to proceed. I think the tragedy is an appalling one which requires Congress to make an investigation; certainly we desire that an investigation be made; but I have been interested in one or two observations which I think should be commented upon at this time.

In the first place, frequent reference has been made by some of those who have spoken to the alleged technical possession by the United States Government. I observe nothing in the statutes of the United States which refers to the possession which the United States Government has of these mines as being purely technical.

The Senator from Idaho said we all know that that is a method of conducting operations; that it is a technical possession only. If it is, Mr. President, I undertake to say that, as I understand the laws of the United States, the officials who have given back to anyone else the authority actually to operate these mines have themselves been guilty of violations of the laws of the United States. I know of nothing in the statutes of the United States which permits the President of the United States or any executive department of the Government to take merely a technical possession and then divest himself or itself of all responsibility, moral, legal, or otherwise, with respect to the purpose for which such possession has been taken.

It is my understanding that the possession of the mine in which this terrible disaster has occurred inured to the Government by virtue of the Smith-Connally Act. If I am in error on that, I shall be glad to be corrected.

I observe, Mr. President, by an inspection of that act at the moment, that it provides that the President is empowered to "take immediate possession of any plant upon a failure to comply with any such provisions, and the authority granted by this section for the use and operation by the United States."

I pause, Mr. President, to say that nothing is said there about any technical possession, about any technical operation.

The authority—

I read again—

granted by this section for the use and operation by the United States or in its interests of any plant of which possesison is so taken, shall also apply as hereinafter provided to any plant, mine, or facility equipped for the manufacture, production, or mining of any articles or materials which may be required for the war effort or which may be useful in connection therewith.

Then it proceeds, Mr. President:

Such power—

It does not say anything about a technical power—

Such power and authority—

It says nothing, Mr. President, about a technical authority—may be exercised by the President through such department or agency of the Government as he may designate, and may be exercised with respect to any such plant, mine, or facility whenever the President finds, after investigation, and proclaims that there is an interruption of the operation of such plant, mine, or facility—

And so forth. Mr. President, if the United States Government has taken possession of mines and facilities and then coolly disregards all of the responsibility, taking the position when a great disaster occurs involving the lives of a hundred or more men that all the responsibility it had was a little bit of a technicality which can be disregarded and thrown off upon the occasion of such a tragedy—I want to say if that is the position of the United States Government, Congress had better pass some further legislation, in my judgment, which will awaken the executive department of the Government to the fact that it does have, not a mere technical, but a legal and a moral obligation.

Mr. President, I shall consume but a very few moments more of the Senate's time. Some reference has been made to the question as to whether or not the Secretary of the Interior has any authority in connection with the operation of these mines to do anything. I have not had the time to make anything except a very cursory and hurried examination, and I am not undertaking to say that the language to which I shall call attention in a moment necessarily imposes any obligation upon the Secretary of the Interior. But I do say that the committee which I trust will be duly constituted in a few moments should take into consideration, among other things, the question as to whether or not the legislation to which I referred does impose an obligation on the Secretary of the Interior, and if it does not, that there should be sufficient new legislation recommended by the committee to impose such a responsibility upon some official at any rate, who shall have charge of the management of operation of such facilities.

I call attention, Mr. President, to 55 Statutes, at page 178, being a portion of the public laws enacted on May 7, 1941, and I quote this language from section 6:

The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the United States Bureau of Mines, is hereby authorized and directed—

* * * * *

(d) To expend the funds made available to him for the protection or advancement of health or safety in coal mines, and for the prevention or relief of accidents or occupational diseases therein, in such lawful manner as he may deem most effective in the light of the information obtained under this act to promote the accomplishment of the objects for which such funds are granted.

Mr. President, I call attention further, not, as I said, with a view of determining with any finality whether this language does or does not impose upon the Secretary of the Interior the responsibility to which I refer, but solely for the purpose of the committee taking this language into consideration with a view to recommending such, if any, additional legislation as may be needed.

I call attention to the fact that whereas the language which I have read refers to the expenditure of funds made available to the Secretary of the Interior for the protection or advancement of health or safety in coal mines, and so forth, in the act of Congress passed, and approved on July 1, 1946, namely, the appropriation bill for the Interior Department, and particularly the Bureau of Mines, there is appropriated $1,019,000 for various purposes, included in which is this:

For salaries and expenses necessary for the investigation and improvement of mine-rescue and first-aid methods and appliances and the teaching of mine safety, rescue, and first-aid methods; investigations as to the causes of mine explosions, causes of falls of roof and coal, methods of mining, especially in relation to the safety of miners, the possible improvement of conditions under which mining operations are carried on—

And so forth. In conclusion, Mr. President, I submit, first, that all the talk upon the floor this afternoon with respect to the United States Government, after having taken over a mine, having only technical possession and responsibility, is to my mind not founded upon any law, any section of the statutes, any paragraph, semicolon, or otherwise, in the statutes of the United States. If there is any conception on the part of the Federal Government that its duty is solely technical, one of two things should happen. Either the Government should have it called to its attention that its duty is not merely technical, or, if there should be additional legislation to make the duty other than technical, we should have such legislation.

Finally, as I have indicated, clearly from the excerpt which I have read from 55 Statutes, page 178, it has been the intention of Congress to place upon the Secretary of the Interior the privilege and the obligation to extend the funds made available to him for the protection or advancement of health or safety in coal mines in such lawful manner as he may deem most effective in the light of the information obtained under the act, to promote the accomplishment of the objects for which such funds are appropriated.

Finally, there is strong reason to believe that the language which I quoted from the appropriation act of last year may give him the authority to expend those funds. It it does not, Mr. President, we should have sufficient amplifying legislation to confer not only the power, but the duty upon him in the future.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. In connection with the legislation which the Senator proposes, does he not also believe that when the committee makes an investigation it should recommend to the Congress an appropriation of sufficient funds so that the widows and children may be properly taken care of in case the Government is to blame?

Mr. DONNELL. I think that is a subject well worthy of the careful and thoughtful consideration of the committee. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to offer an amendment to the resolution. I would not consume the time of the Senate even to offer an amendment, except for the fact that I think the resolution gives evidence of hasty draftsmanship. In my judgment it is not adequate to obtain all the facts which ought to be obtained if the investigation is to be made.

Personally, I do not believe that any person, agency, corporation, or other identifiable cause of this disaster should be overlooked or shielded. If this investigation is worth making—which I think it is—it ought not to be made with the purpose of shielding anyone, a Federal officer or otherwise.

In order that there may be sufficient background for the fullest possible investigation by the committee, I think a few additional words should be added to the resolution. In order that I may make clear what I have in mind, let me read the language of the resolution:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the mine explosion which occurred at the Centralia Coal Mine No. 5, Womac, Ill., on March 25, 1947, with a view to determining the cause of such explosion whether all mine safety requirements and provisions were being observed, and whether adequate inspection was being maintained.

After the word "provisions" I wish to add the words "Federal or local", so that that clause would read: "whether all mine safety requirements and provisions, Federal or local, were being observed, and whether adequate inspection was being maintained."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I think there will be no objection to the language, but before making a definite statement to that effect, I wish to express my great appreciation for the solicitude on the part of the minority leader that the resolution be all-encompassing. The wording of the resolution is:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the mine explosion which occurred at the Centralia Coal Mine No. 5, Womac, Ill., on March 25, 1947, with a view to determining the cause of such explosion, whether all mine safety requirements and provisions—

That certainly means "Federal or local," without adding the words "Federal or local."

I mention this point because I think it is very significant. For the past several months we have heard ringing through the halls of Congress the statement that the Federal Government has become all-powerful in the past 15 years and taken unto itself control of the economics and lives of the American people. Every time a Member on this side wishes to investigate something because the Federal Government has control of it, we hear the cry of "politics" coming from the other side. In the words "Federal or local" in the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky we see an emphasis of that attitude.

I think it is high time to call a halt to politics on the other side, or challenging those of us on this side because we would like to have an investigation made. The local authorities do not operate the mines. Congress did not have the local authorities take over the mines. The purpose of the resolution is to investigate the operation by the Federal Government, which Congress authorized. We do not limit the investigation. We say: "All mine safety requirements and provisions."

The addition of "Federal and local" does not change the scope of the resolution, no matter how much the minority at this moment seek a fuller investigation.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, during the entire discussion this afternoon I have not mentioned the word "politics." I do not know who injected politics into this discussion, if it has been injected into it. A narrow-minded man might be prompted or goaded to say that the mere introduction of the resolution, in view of the fact that the Federal Government is in charge of the mine, was prompted by politics. I make no such statement. I have not even countenanced or encouraged any such statement, and I do not think any such statement has been made. But I do not see how anyone who wants a full investigation can object to it being a full investigation, including an investigation of every person, every agency, and every governmental authority which had any responsibility, whether it be a Federal or local authority.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I agree with the able Senator from Kentucky that we want a full and complete investigation. Having that in mind, I moved to take up the resolution for immediate consideration, because I think it is vital that the men who are to do the investigating should be on the ground at the very earliest date following this great calamity. Knowing something about mines, I think that is a vital consideration.

The able Senator from Illinois [Mr. BROOKS] has provided for a full and complete investigation. I know of no words that we can add to the resolution which would require the committee to do more than make a full and complete investigation of everything connected with this subject.

The resolution provides that the committee shall make a full and complete investigation, including Federal agencies. I think the resolution as submitted by the able Senator from Illinois is complete. I have no objection to adding other words. The President pro tempore said yesterday that he was having lawyer trouble. It appears that we are having minority trouble here today in getting this resolution in satisfactory shape.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the language which I have suggested adds nothing to the scope of the resolution, the minority trouble about which the Senator from Michigan complains could be resolved by accepting the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have one other amendment which is in harmony with the one which I have just suggested. The last sentence of the resolution is as follows:

> The committee shall report its findings to the Senate as soon as possible, including its findings as to the negligence, if any, of any agency or official of the United States in connection with such explosion.

I wish to add certain language to that sentence. After the word "States" in the last line I propose to add the following: "or any State, Government body, or any other person or corporation."

So the findings of the committee may fix the responsibility anywhere it may properly lie, whether it be in a Federal agency, an individual, or corporation, or some other authority set up locally. It seems to me that if we are to ascertain the facts and fix the responsibility, it ought to be fixed where it belongs.

I hope the Senate will adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I did not have any objection to the other words suggested and I have no objection to the amendment now proposed. I merely wish to point out that this proposed amendment adds nothing to the resolution. The resolution calls for a complete and full investigation and a report of the findings to the Senate. That is all-inclusive. In addition, it includes the one agency of Government which has control, and not merely technical control, of the mines. If we are to put into the hands of the Federal Government the responsibility of controlling enterprise in America, I think the Federal Government should be responsible for its negligence, especially when it takes human life to the extent that it apparently has done.

I have no objection whatever to including the State government. It had nothing to do with operating the mine, so far as control of it was concerned, except official investigations which it may make of a corporation.

I accept the amendment.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. When can something be fuller than full?

Mr. BARKLEY. When it is superfull.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kentucky.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution as amended.

The resolution (S. Res. 98), as amended, was agreed to.

The resolution as amended is as follows:

Resolved, That the Committee on Public Lands, or any duly authorized subcommittee thereof, is authorized and directed to make a full and complete investigation of the mine explosion which occurred at the Centralia Coal Mine No. 5, Womac, Ill., on March 25, 1947, with a view to determining the cause of such explosion, whether all mine safety requirements and provisions, Federal, or local, were being observed, and whether adequate inspection was being maintained. The committee shall report its findings to the Senate as soon as possible, including its findings as to the negligence, if any, of any agency or official of the United States or of any State, governmental body, or any other person or corporation in connection with such explosion.

SEC. 2. The expenses of the committee under this resolution, which shall not exceed $5,000, shall be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate upon vouchers approved by the chairman of the committee.

AMERICAN POLICY AS TO GREECE AND TURKEY—BROADCAST OF HEARINGS

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, I should like to read an editorial from the Idaho Daily Statesman on the question of our policy in Greece and Turkey. The title of the editorial is "Give it to the UN." It reads:

GIVE IT TO THE UN

That the dead hand of the League of Nations—a hand weak, vacillating, unable to grasp a problem and settle it—should have stretched out from its grave and cast a shadow over the United Nations is an appalling fact.

In the Greek crisis we have evidence of that. The League was destroyed within itself because the member nations were steeped in an aura of hypocrisy toward humanity. International politics and fear of one another so effectively blanked the League that it became nothing more than a debating society with about as much power as a feather trying to resist a whirlwind.

The world has just reaped the whirlwind. The product of that catastrophe, that unbelievable failure of mankind to prevent mass destruction, is now fertilizing the bloody soil of Europe and the islands of the Pacific.

Now we have the spectacle of a United Nations organization, an organization of the great and the small powers, supposedly imbued with the power and the deliberating function sufficient to quell war or its breeding wherever it appears, standing apparently immobile in the Greek situation.

The United States, bless its heart, is going to put forth $200,000,000 as a starter to bail the Greeks out of their financial distress and will provide arms and ammunition with the avowed purpose of keeping communism out. The money is nothing. What's a mere $200,000,000 if it would stop the bloodspilling in Greece or anywhere else?

That's not the point. The fact is that this is a problem for the United Nations. If the UN could step in and push the Greeks about and kick out the border intruders who have kept that unhappy land in a state of war these long months past the peace that ended the recent great struggle, it would justify its existence.

It is a troublesome picture. Are the United Nations so far from anything resembling a general concord on the ideas of international justice and service to humanity? We are not so naive as to believe that the Golden Rule is uppermost in the minds of those who control nations. But, by the eternal god of truth and wisdom, when will the peoples of the world be freed of seeing bodies created to a tongue-whipping frenzy of brotherly love, only to have them bog down the first time something occurs that takes concurrent action and international guts?

President Truman, the chief executive of the United States, is represented as declaring that communism must be kept out of Greece. He chopped off a handshaking tour of the Spanish Americas to go back to Washington and implement his decision.

Anybody who can read the newspapers knows that communism means Russia. Anybody who can look at a map knows that the Greek nation and archipelago is the key to the Middle East, the Dardanelles—which Russia wants—and lastly, to India.

Russia is also a member of the United Nations. Now is the time to find out if the United Nations is something with iron in its veins. Now is the time to put the problem before that group of nations and hammer it until something happens. If a decision is born, that is better than nothing, whatever the decision. But if the United Nations pushes it around the table, if the problem of fratricidal murder in Greece under the guise of a struggle between monarch King George and the Communists is merely shoved aside—if nothing happens—then we know where we stand.

We can put on our hats and say, "Good day, gentlemen. Let's go home."

It is not a question of bailing out the British, who have been keeping troops in Greece and who have been putting a basis of pounds sterling under the drachma. Britain says she's broke and can't keep it up.

We could help a neighbor with a loan; we have a lot of notes in the Treasury which have remained unpaid as a reminder of that American willingness to give the other chap a chance.

It's this business of our saying we will keep—we must keep—communism out of Greece. Because the Greeks willy-nilly inhabit a strategic spot from the question of global war, that single point in the offer of help to the British puts us squarely into this proposition:

Communism means Russia. Are we beginning a long-range blocking of Russia outside of the United Nations? Are we committed to a policy of beginning now the frustration of what some believe is Russian domination of militarily valuable sections of the earth?

Give it to the United Nations first. Let the Russians speak in open meeting. Hammer the table in front of Molotov and Gromyko. Hear what they say. If they hedge, that's enough. If nobody backs us up, the UN is through, finished, wiped out, and humanity has been double-crossed again.

Maybe our State Department and our President are tired of sending notes and of watching UN excursions investigate conditions in nations where injustice is being done.

The time to have become tired was before this postwar foundation for the Third World War was laid.

Mr. President, I wanted to call this editorial to the attention of the Congress, and let Congress know that Idaho, a State which in the past has been considered somewhat of an isolationist State, feels, as represented by its largest newspaper, that we are bypassing the United Nations in the proposal to extend aid to Greece and Turkey.

I had another editorial from another paper in Idaho in the same vein, and I shall ask later that that be printed in the RECORD

Mr. President, I was happy to learn that two radio networks broadcast parts of the opening sessions of the hearings now being conducted by the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on the Greek-Turkish plan. This is a vital issue, and deserves full public attention. When I heard of these broadcasts I immediately wired the president of the National Broadcasting Co. to express my congratulations and my hope and confidence that he would in all fairness broadcast later sessions of the same committee, at which witnesses opposed to the State Department plan would testify. At the opening day's hearing all the witnesses were official witnesses, who appeared in support of the Government plan.

Today, when I queried the National Broadcasting Co. to find out what consideration had been given to my request, I was shocked to learn that while NBC had made an attempt in good faith to round out its presentation by making additional broadcasts on which opposition witnesses could be heard, they were refused permission to do so.

I was informed that NBC employees, assuming they had blanket permission to broadcast all of the hearings, had begun to extend their lines from the caucus room to the finance committee room. I understand that the hearings were moved from the caucus room to the finance committee room, for what reason I do not know, after the proponents of the measure being considered had concluded. For the opponents the hearing was moved to a different room.

When a question was raised as to permission to install the equipment in the caucus room, the matter was taken up with the committee clerk, who in turn approached the chairman. Last evening the chairman, according to NBC officials, refused permission to broadcast these other hearings.

I was also informed that the Mutual Broadcasting System, which also had broadcast Government witnesses on the first day, requested permission to broadcast the opposition testimony of Mayor LaGuardia, and was also turned down.

We all know that the Communications Act of 1934 enjoins upon radio broadcasters the responsibility to make well-rounded rather than one-sided presentations of public issues. In this instance these two networks made a very honest and commendable effort to do so. Yet it appears that they were frustrated in this effort, and that against their will they were limited to broadcasting only one side of the committee hearings.

Mr. President, I desire to raise the question as to why this action was taken. I believe that the broadcasters and the public are entitled to know why room could not be found in the Finance Committee room for two microphones and a small amount of equipment, which takes up less space than two chairs. This Greek-Turkish plan is probably the most momentous issue in the history of the United States. The public is entitled to hear all sides, and to make its decision. It is entitled to have full information.

I would appreciate it if the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee could clear up this matter for us.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. With the indulgence of the Senate, the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations would like to state to the Senator from Idaho that he sought the caucus room for all the hearings. He was unable to secure the caucus room for Tuesday and Wednesday, because the Committee on Armed Services had obtained it for their hearing on the merger.

The witnesses heard on Tuesday, without broadcast, were Government witnesses. The Government was cut off from broadcast just as much as anyone else when we moved to the room of the Committee on Finance, which was the only other room available. There was no intent or purpose to cut off anyone from any privilege.

The chairman of the committee is under the impression that he has gone to extreme lengths in connection with this issue, to obtain all the facts, publicly, that are possibly available. The room of the Committee on Finance is a smaller room, where it was not deemed feasible to set up the broadcasting apparatus. That inhibition ran against Government witnesses on Tuesday just as much as against any on Wednesday. If and when we can return to the caucus room the chairman of the committee will be very happy to have the broadcasting continued.

Mr. TAYLOR. I think the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations for his explanation. I sincerely wanted to know the facts of the matter. When I had called the broadcasters, they simply told me that they had been unable to broadcast the testimony of the opponents. I am happy to have had the explanation. That is all I wanted.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GURNEY. Due to the fact that the Armed Services Committee has now heard most of the top witnesses from the Army and Navy, I am sure we can hereafter take care of our hearing in a smaller room. Should the Committee on Foreign Relations or any other committee wish the caucus room tomorrow, or any day thereafter, I shall be glad to relinquish the room to whomever may want it.

BONUS ON WHEAT AND CORN

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the Senate has on its calendar Senate bill 669, to provide for the payment of a bonus of 30 cents per bushel on wheat and corn produced and sold between January 1, 1945, and April 18, 1946. To my mind, this is one of the most flagrant raids on the Federal Treasury that has been proposed in recent years.

I have before me some figures showing the benefits to the various States and how the amounts will be distributed. In the first place, this bill is supposed to cost approximately $377,000,000. Last year, taking the figures of the Department of Agriculture, the country produced 3,000,000,000 bushels of corn and 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat. Using these figures, it would cost around $1,200,000,000.

The bill was favorably reported from the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. I shall go through the list of States and show the Senate what each one would receive under the provisions of the bill.

The first State I shall mention is North Dakota, which, under this bill, would receive a little more than $55,000,000. The proportional part of what North Dakota would pay on that amount, under this bill, using the percentage of the taxes paid by the State, would be $420,000.

Kansas would pay a little less than $4,000,000 and receive $84,000,000.

Minnesota would pay less than $6,000,000 and receive $71,000,000.

Iowa would pay less than $4,000,000 and receive $153,000,000.

Illinois would pay less than $40,000,000 and receive $120,000,000.

South Dakota would pay approximately $420,000 and receive $51,000,000.

Missouri would receive $36,000,000 against a payment of less than $10,000,000.

Oklahoma would receive $29,000,000 and pay $3,000,000.

Tennessee would receive $21,000,000 and pay $3,000,000.

North Carolina would receive $18,000,000 and pay $10,000,000.

Mr. President, to indicate not only the raid on the Treasury but what Eastern States would have to pay, the State of New York would pay $75,000,000 and receive $9,000,000.

The State of Pennsylvania would pay $30,000,000 and receive $24,000,000.

The State of Delaware would pay $3,000,000 and receive less than $1,000,000.

I am not even trying to argue that the farmers were not misled by the officials of the Commodity Credit Corporation when they advised the farmers to sell their grain and at the same time assured them that there would be no increase granted in the price ceilings; but what can be said in the interest of the wheat and corn growers of the West can likewise be said of the eastern dairy farmer and poultry grower. The eastern farmers are just as much entitled to a subsidy payment on their crops as are the western farmers, and, if this bill is to be passed, the eastern farmers should be included. But the Federal Treasury cannot stand such raids as this bill proposes; our eastern farmers realize that and are not asking for any additional payments, but they are not going to sit idly by, nor are their representatives, and see the Treasury raided by some other group, whose claims are no better than theirs.

I intend to oppose this bill or any similar bill introduced into the Senate.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to say, first of all, that the Senator from Delaware has been absolutely unfair in his statement in reference to the bill. A similar bill was reported by a unanimous vote of the Committee on Agriculture at the last session.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. KEM. I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota if there were not two dissenting votes—the vote of the Senator from Illinois, who stands next to the Senator from North Dakota, and the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LANGER. The then Senator from Missouri, Mr. Briggs, voted for it at the last session. It was voted out, as can be proved by the chairman of the committee, the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS].

What are the facts in regard to the 30-cent bonus? I do not know why the question is brought up today. While the bill is on the calendar, no Senator has made a motion that the Senate consider it. But since it has been discussed, I should like to make absolutely clear the position of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mind you, Mr. President, the Department of Agriculture set the price at $1.38 a year ago. The ceiling price was $1.51. Ninety percent of that is approximately $1.38. The farmers relied upon that price. At the time of threshing we wrote not one letter but many letters to the Department of Agriculture. We wanted to know if that price was to be raised. We were assured by the Department of Agriculture not once but many times that the ceiling price would be left exactly where it was. At the same time a great many of the farmers who needed money badly were assured by the Government that the ceiling price would not be raised. Many thousands of them in Montana, South Dakota, North Dakota, and, in fact, all over the West took out CCC loans upon their wheat. Those loans were not due until April 1. What happened? All of a sudden it was stated that in England wheat and corn were needed. So before the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry there was produced letter after letter sent out by the Department of Agriculture calling some of the loans in January, some in February, and some in March. What could the poor farmers do? In the western part of my State the snow was 3 or 4 feet deep. The Department of Agriculture said, "Pay your note." The only way the farmer could pay it was by selling the pitiful amount of wheat he had. The farmers hired trucks to haul their wheat so that people in Europe would not starve. Those loans, mind you, Mr. President, were not due for a month or 2 months or 3 months; but, nevertheless, they were called in by the Government.

Then on the 18th day of last April, out of a clear sky, Mayor LaGuardia, who had been appointed head of UNRRA, and the new Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Anderson, got into an airplane and went to Climax, Minn., and Fargo, N. Dak.; and there they said to all the farmers who had not hauled in their wheat, who had not brought in this "mercy wheat," "We are going to give you 30 cents a bushel more because you did not care whether the people over in Europe died. Even though you kept it, we are going to give you 30 cents a bushel more."

So, Mr. President, the farmer who was not patriotic received 30 cents a bushel more than the farmer who was patriotic received.

All we are trying to do by this measure is to see that the farmer who was patriotic is treated on an equal basis with and just as fairly as a farmer who was not patriotic.

Mr. President, that is not all. Eleven Senators, including the then Senator Briggs, of Missouri, went to the Department of Agriculture on the 21st of April, and protested. We said, "It is not fair," and we asked the Department to be so kind as not to pay the additional 30 cents a bushel.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. LANGER. I decline to yield at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota declines to yield.

Mr. LANGER. As I was saying, Mr. President, we asked them to be so kind as not to pay the additional 30 cents a bushel. Mind you, Mr. President, the junior Senator from Nebraska made in that connection, before the Secretary of Agriculture, one of the best pleas I have ever listened to. Please bear in mind also, Mr. President, that in that delegation were both Democrats and Republicans. The distinguished Senator from Nebraska said this:

> We have in Nebraska thousands and thousands of cattle that are being fed corn in the feed lots, and there is only a 10-day supply of corn to feed to them.

He then cited the case of two farmers who were in partnership and who were feeding 7,000 head of cattle. He laid that fact before the Department of Agriculture and its Secretary, Mr. Anderson. He stated that in Nebraska there were thousands of farmers who had in the feed lots cattle for which they had paid big prices; and he stated that, among others, there were two farmers who had 7,000 head of cattle in the feed lots. At that time those of us in the delegation said, "The Government is going into the black market now and is paying 30 cents a bushel more than any farmer can pay to fatten those cattle." I myself said that to the Secretary of Agriculture, and so did other Senators.

But, Mr. President, what did the Secretary of Agriculture say? He said, "It is just too bad. The farmers who have bought those cattle will have to take a loss. The Government will pay 30 cents more, but any farmer who pays more than $1.20 will go to jail."

Mr. President, I ask any Senator whether my statement is correct. They will confirm what I have said. I shall be glad to yield to the distinguished Senator from Nebraska or to any other Senator who accompanied us over there. Eleven Senators, both Democratic and Republican Senators, attended that meeting.

Mr. President, on that committee last year there were economically minded men, men who did not want to waste a dollar of money belonging to the Government. When they investigated they found that on the advisory committee of the Department of Agriculture dealing with "mercy wheat" was a man by the name of Tom Campbell, who at that time had 400,000 bushels of his own wheat at Hardin, Mont. He did not sell it when the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] were begging the farmers to sell the wheat; but he kept it. However, he was a member of that advisory committee. Yet just as soon as the 18th day of April came he hauled in every bushel of that wheat and made a profit of $120,000. But the poor farmer who had only 1,000 or 3,000 bushels of wheat, and whose loan had been made by the Government, and whose loan had been called in, did not get a single penny.

On the subject of the cost, I hate to say that my distinguished friend, the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] is not correct; but the truth of the matter is that we received a letter on that subject, and it is in the possession of the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and we also had before the committee witnesses from the Department. That letter shows that the cost will be $331,000,000. That letter is signed by a responsible official of the Department of Agriculture.

Let me say, further, that when the witnesses were before the committee, we asked them to state the number of bushels that were sold by the farmers in each State, and we also asked them exactly what the payment of 30 cents a bushel would amount to.

Mr. President, I do not know why this matter was brought up today, out of a clear sky; but when the time comes and when this measure is before the Senate, at that time, I, for one, together with my distinguished colleague from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] propose to act together with various other Senators, including the senior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], who joined in that measure; the junior Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], I believe; the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD], the Senator from Kansas [Mr. CAPPER], and various other Members of the Senate, to bring the truth fairly and squarely before the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to say merely a few words in response to the statement which has been made by the distinguished senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER]. Let me state that the figures I have cited regarding this matter are, for the most part, taken from statistics published in 1946 by the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, I wish to say in reply that before the committee we had representatives of the Department of Agriculture; and at that time we had, and we have now, letters signed by responsible officials of the Department of Agriculture stating that the total cost will be $331,000,000.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am not questioning the information which the Senator received in the committee. It so happens, as the Senator knows, that the eastern section of the United States has only a very small representation on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. That fact has been pointed out several times. As we all know, there is only one Senator from the Northeastern States on the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry. So about the only way we can obtain desired information is by consulting the books or other publications.

Mr. President, all the figures are in the documents I have before me, and I think they can be fully substantiated. According to the Department of Agriculture, the United States produced 3,000,000,000 bushels of corn and 1,000,000,000 bushels of wheat during that period; and according to these figures, a payment of 30 cents a bushel for that production will amount to $1,200,000,000—unless it is proposed not to pay some of the farmers. However, if the payment is to be made to any, surely it should be made to all of them. If payment is made for all the wheat and corn which, according to the figures I have cited, was produced in that calendar year, the cost will be $1,200,000,000. On the basis of these figures, no other conclusion can be reached.

Mr. WHERRY obtained the floor.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. KEM. I wish to interrogate the distinguished Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] for a moment.

Mr. LANGER. I shall be delighted to have the Senator do so.

Mr. KEM. I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota whether he has in mind that since a similar bill was approved by the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry in the Seventy-ninth Congress, a very significant thing has occurred—namely, the election of last November—and that the then Senator Briggs of Missouri, to whom the Senator from North Dakota has referred as having voted for that bill, is no longer a Member of the Senate, and that this Congress has received from the people of the United States a mandate to stand firm against pork-barrel legislation, of which this measure is a flagrant example and also a mandate to balance the budget and to use every possible means to reduce the expenditures of the Federal Government.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, let me say to my distinguished friend the Senator from Missouri, if the Senator from Nebraska will yield for that purpose——

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Let me say to him that I do not know why former Senator Briggs is not now a Member of the Senate; but I do know that Senator LANGER, of North Dakota, who introduced this measure, is here, and I know that the measure has also been approved by various other Senators who likewise were reelected.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, in response to the statement of the distinguished Senator from North Dakota as to why Mr. Briggs is not here, I will say that Mr. KEM was elected in Missouri in his place by a majority of 60,000 votes.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR CONTROLS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. J. Res. 58) to extend the powers and authorities under certain statutes with respect to the distribution and pricing of sugar, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], adding at the end of the first committee amendment certain words.

RECESS

Mr. WHERRY. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, March 27, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 1947

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m.

Rev. W. Lowrey Compere, pastor, Northside Baptist Church, Jackson, Miss., offered the following prayer:

O God, our Father, we humbly and gratefully acknowledge Thy marvelous goodness to us. In spite of all our sins and shortcomings, Thou hast been gracious and merciful unto our land. May we prove worthy of the manifold blessings Thou hast bestowed upon us.

We pray now for the Members of this body as they deliberate today. Give them strength equal to their responsibilities, wisdom equal to the tremendous issues they face, and divine guidance equal to the decisions they must make.

May the righteousness that exalteth a nation prevail throughout this land of ours. May our people be true to Thee and to Thy great principles of human conduct, and may America fulfill her destiny in Thy great plans for the nations of the world.

These requests we make in the name of Thy Son our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

DIVISION OF EXPENSES

The sums appropriated in this act for the District of Columbia shall, unless otherwise specifically provided, be paid out of the general fund of the District of Columbia, as defined in the District of Columbia Appropriation Act, 1947.

SEC. 2. The restrictions contained within appropriations or affecting appropriations or other funds, available during the fiscal year 1947, limiting the amounts which may be expended for personal services or for other purposes involving personal services, or amounts which may be transferred between appropriations or authorizations, are hereby waived with respect to the foregoing items to the extent necessary to meet increased pay costs authorized by the acts of March 6, 1946 (Public Law 317), May 21, 1946 (Public Law 385), May 24, 1946 (Public Law 390), July 5, 1946 (Public Law 491), July 31, 1946 (Public Laws 567, 568, 577), and August 1, 1946 (Public Law 582), and other legislation enacted during or applicable to the fiscal year 1947 authorizing increased pay for civilian employees of the Government.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Speaker, this resolution has been reported by the Committee on Appropriations, providing for funds for certain agencies that need the money to take care of the pay increase provided for under Public Law 390 in the last Congress. These items, I might say, have been gone over very carefully, and only the undisputed items, which are absolutely necessary, are included.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution calls for $243,000,000. The big items involved are $176,000,000 for the Post Office Department and $48,000,000 for the Veterans' Administration. The other items are small and include items which the committee has examined very carefully and has found cannot be reduced. As a matter of fact, I do not believe that those items I have referred to can be reduced. They are based on the pay act, and most of the departments are absorbing the entire cost of the pay act. Many of the others we have had hearings on, and will come up in the deficiency bill which we hope to present to the House on Friday and take up the first of the week. The resolution comes here with the unanimous report from not only the subcommittee but the full committee this morning, and we hope that it may go through the Senate just as it is so that the agencies may be supplied with the necessary funds.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A NURSE'S VIEW ON COMMUNISM

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, this morning I obtained the opinion of a lady who is a registered nurse, and an experienced social-service worker, in regard to the President's plan for aid to Greece and Turkey. She said that she approved the giving of money, food, and other things to the people of these needy nations, but that to launch military campaigns, and by force or threat of force compel or attempt to compel the governments of these nations to become or remain democracies, would be doing exactly what we object to Russia doing. She said that she does not know just how far we should go in the expenditures of those moneys, but she does not think we should expend such enormous sums of money to combat communism elsewhere when we need to combat it very much in this country.

Tomorrow morning I hope to have another report for you.

Mr. ROONEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and to include in one a newspaper editorial and in the other a newspaper article.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

Mr. MASON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday, April 7, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the subject The Geneva Trade Conference Program.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next, following any special orders heretofore entered, I be permitted to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

OIL

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Hampshire?

There was no objection.

Mr. MERROW. Mr. Speaker, failure to adopt the President's program for extending aid to Greece and Turkey means that Soviet Russia with her foreign policy of expansion and aggression will control the Mediterranean Sea and the Middle East. It is perfectly obvious that this will imperil American oil interests in the Middle East. To prevent this we must be firm and resolute. During World War II great inroads were made on the oil reserves in the United States. In the event of future trouble the almost illimitable supply of oil in Arabia will be of paramount importance to our national defense. To protect our national interests and to help guarantee our security we must not allow the Middle East to be overrun by a power whose actions clearly indicate an unfaltering determination to dominate all the earth.

When in 1950 the proposed 1,000-mile, 30- and 31-inch pipeline, at a cost of $115,000,000 extending from Saudi Arabia through Transjordan, Lebanon and Syria to the Mediterranean, is completed the production of oil will be stepped up from 200,000 barrels a day to 500,000 barrels a day.

I, for one, do not wish to see the security of the United States endangered by the possible cutting off of this oil supply. We must prevent the Mediterranean and the Middle East from falling into the hands of a power who refuses to honor her agreements and whose policy is, through Moscow-dominated Communist parties, to control the entire world.

CUSTOMS BUREAU

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday there appeared in the Washington Times-Herald an editorial to the effect that by reason of the budget of the Customs Bureau being reduced, the staff at the port of New York had to be reduced from 840 to 100—that it was necessary to notify 740 of the staff at the New York port, including 600 veterans, of their dismissal.

This action on the part of the Customs Bureau is not understood. The Customs Service is receiving $3,165,000 more in 1948 than they received in 1947. In 1947 there was enough money to employ the necessary personnel at the New York port. In 1948, with more money, 740 have to be dismissed because there is not sufficient money. This does not make sense.

This matter should be checked into by the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and as a member of that committee, I am going to urge such action.

The Congress is appropriating sufficient money to carry on essential Govment activities. I believe it is imperative that the Congress follow through to see that the bureaus or agencies themselves do not sabotage the economic program. This action on the part of the Customs Bureau should be investigated, as well as like actions of other bureaus if they occur.

If any administrative or Government official is not efficiently and effectively carrying out his duty and responsibility, the matter should be brought to the attention of the Chief Executive of this Nation by appropriate action by the Congress.

FOR A FEDERAL SYSTEM OF TRAFFIC LAWS

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE. Mr. Speaker, they call us the United States of America, but when it comes to our prize product, the automobile, and the jungle of laws in the 48 States regarding traffic regulation, we appear to be the most disunited Nation on earth.

When drivers are not slaughtering others or themselves, they are being held up in every State across the Nation and summarily fined for infractions they did not commit by justices of the peace whose every whim is law.

We boast that we are the most peace-loving Nation on earth, yet the yearly toll of deaths and injuries on our highways reads like a major battle.

If you intend to make a transcontinental trip by car, you might just as well face the fact that each State you pass through, is like a separate nation in itself, with surprisingly different regulations concerning automotive traffic.

In this chaotic situation, even the best of drivers and the best of citizens will, unwittingly, break some traffic law, endangering the lives of others, or becoming one of the 6,500,000 people who pass through municipal traffic courts each year. And, as far as the justices of the peace are concerned, the national average of traffic convictions before such hit-and-miss authorities is 98 percent. With them, revenue comes before justice.

To bring this antiquated system into line with the needs of modern motorists, I propose that we establish a uniform system of Federal traffic laws, so that the motorist from Maine will know his rights and obligations in California because they are the same there as in his home State, and vice versa.

When you consider this question, just remember that the traffic flow on our major highways in 1946, passed the volume of 1941, which was the prior peak year. This increase came with 1,800,000 fewer vehicles in operation. It does not take much imagination to comprehend that the situation, bad as it is, will become immeasurably worse as the new cars start rolling off the assembly lines and onto the highways.

The bill I hope to offer to you will establish a uniform system throughout the Nation, based on the motor vehicle code and the model traffic ordinances developed after careful surveys, by the National Conference on Street and Highway Safety.

EFFECT OF REDUCTION OF CERTAIN APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to hear my colleague on the Republican side, who is a member of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, say he is going to ask the committee to investigate layoffs in the Customs Bureau. I had the same thought in mind, but being on the minority side I hesitated to suggest it to the committee because that will constitute an investigation of the action of the Republican Party in making available appropriations under the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill. When that comes up I intend to pursue it all along the line, in relation to all agencies, particularly as to the effect of the provision carried in the various appropriation bills compelling furlough leave, leave employees have earned in the past, to be paid out of fiscal year 1947 appropriations instead of 1948 funds. I hope my friend will request the chairman of the committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] to call a meeting of the committee at once, and I will join with him in having that investigation made forthwith.

PERMISSION TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BEALL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include some letters relative to Mason and Dixon's line and to extend his remarks in another instance and to include an article by Rev. P. J. Bradley, of Frostburg, Md.

THE COPPER SITUATION

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand a 600-page report from the Federal Trade Commission on the copper industry of the United States and the international copper cartels. The second part of this report deals with the copper industry and the concentration of control by the three dominant companies. No one can read this report and square it with the present inadequate supply of copper in this country and not be terribly concerned about what is going on.

Today I am introducing a resolution calling for an investigation by the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House to get the answer for the people, the investigation to follow this report and inform the people as to what is going on in the copper field, and which I suspicioned the other day when I raised the question as to the market price of copper and the manipulations of the market when the copper bill was under consideration on this floor.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. CRAWFORD asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include some editorials from a Panama newspaper.

DEBT AND TAX REDUCTION

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK], the whip of the minority, the gentleman who for the last 10 or 15 years has been so successful in guiding the legislative program of the administration through the House, and who perhaps has had more to do with the passage of legislation than any other man in the House, is more responsible for the laying of the foundation and the building of the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, and seventy-fifth stories and putting the roof on the structure which we now have, wants to investigate the governmental monstrosity that he has put up here in Washington. That is all right with me. He said he was going to ask me, as chairman of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Department, to investigate the action of the Customs Service. Just 1 week from today—and I recall that the minority withdrew a member of the committee and selected the gentleman from Massachusetts to go on the committee—there will be a regular meeting of that committee. If the gentleman will put his request in writing, we will start the investigation at once.

ANNOUNCEMENT

The SPEAKER. It is the desire of a great many Members that the tax bill be disposed of as promptly as possible tomorrow. Therefore, the Chair will not recognize any Member for 1-minute speeches tomorrow until after the tax bill has been disposed of.

INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX PAYMENTS

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I call up House Resolution 161 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments, and all points of order against said bill are hereby waived. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 6 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment. No amendment shall be in order to the said bill except the substitute amendment recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means now in the bill and such amendment shall be in order, any rule of the House to the contrary notwithstanding, but shall not be subject to any amendment except such amendments as may be offered by direction of the Committee on Ways and Means. At the conclusion of such consideration, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit, with or without instructions.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH], and at this time I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. Speaker, as you know, this is a closed rule. It waives all points of order. It grants 6 hours' general debate, after which the bill will be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule, amendments to be offered only by the Ways and Means Committee.

To the new Members today I would explain that since I have been in Congress, almost 15 years, every tax bill has come before the House under a closed rule. It may be possible that later on some of my good friends on the other side will emphasize the fact that this is a closed rule. So I want you to bear in mind the fact that under the able leadership of my good friends the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] and the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] for many years past, every tax bill that has come before this Congress has come under a similar rule to that under consideration here today.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman recognizes there is one important distinguished feature, however, that the full Committee on Ways and Means always asked for it on those occasions.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. That shows that the Republican members were ready to cooperate under those most trying times.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Yes. I will be happy to yield.

Mr. COX. As a member of the gentleman's committee, I want to say there is nothing extraordinary about the rule which he now presents. On every occasion heretofore, since I have been a member of that committee, a rule of this character has been requested on bills of the nature of the bill which the pending resolution proposes to make in order. The reason for requesting such rule and the justification of the gentleman's committee for always granting such rules has been that the bills are of such technical nature that they could hardly be well considered in any other manner. That is the position that I take. I have heretofore supported the granting of rules of this character. I can see no reason now for reversing the position that I have heretofore taken. I think it reasonable and fair and certainly it is consistent with the practice of this body that the gentleman should ask the House to adopt the rule which he now presents.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I thank my good friend for his contribution.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Surely, I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. RAYBURN. As far as I am concerned, I join with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Cox], and as far as I am individually concerned I shall not resist the rule. Fifteen Members on the Republican side have made the bill bad enough, and I fear if we turn it loose for amendment to 245 Members it may be impossible to write a bill.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. After 14 years' experience with bad bills, I think we are safe to proceed with this one. But I want to say further that the former distinguished chairman of the Ways and Means Committee was delayed and he called me on the telephone and asked me to convey to the Rules Committee that he favored this rule. The gentleman will recall that I conveyed that information to the committee.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, having in mind, as indicated by our distinguished former Speaker, that we all have different ideas in regard to our tax structure, when I heard that the Ways and Means Committee contemplated a 20-percent reduction across the board I wrote the following letter to the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee:

FEBRUARY 13, 1947.

Hon. HAROLD KNUTSON,
Chairman, Ways and Means Committee,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Within the next few days the Committee on Ways and Means will begin consideration of proposed legislation to reduce the burden of taxation that has been borne by the American people in recent years. Realizing that the time for hearings will be limited, I am addressing my recommendations to you, as chairman, for transmission to and consideration by the members of your committee.

I most earnestly urge that the committee, in their effort to prepare an income tax reduction bill which will be both profitable in result and equitable in imposition, give favorable consideration to my proposal for a reduction on a graduated scale of percentages.

As you and the members of your committee are aware, I have proposed a 20-percent reduction in taxes on incomes up to $2,500 per annum; 17 percent on incomes between $2,500 and $5,000; 15 percent on incomes between $5,000 and $10,000; and 10 percent on all incomes over $10,000 per annum. I believe this ratio would be most equitable to our taxpayers, and yet would work no hardship on our over-all economic situation. Cognizant of the complexities and the technical nature of tax legislation, I realize that the percentage figures indicated may be subject to variance as the judgment of your committee may determine.

While providing incentive, the plan I have proposed for a percentage tax reduction differentiation would tend to mitigate the greater comparative disparity in purchasing power of the lower income groups. In making this recommendation, I am more interested—and I am sure our people are more interested—in the load that is to be carried than in the vehicle that carries it. We now have a huge Federal debt. This debt must be paid to preserve the credit of the United States, and it can only be paid through taxation. Along with the determination of lowering taxes, must also come the actual reduction of Federal expenditures.

In the United States our legislation is made under a democratic system. Not everyone can have his way, but everyone can have his say. The meeting of minds is most surely to be reached through compromise. That is true democracy.

Being firmly persuaded that the principle I am advocating is perfectly sound and in the best interests of our country and the welfare of its people, I earnestly urge full and careful consideration of my proposal by your committee.

You will note in my letter to the chairman that I respectfully requested that the lower-income group receive a greater reduction than the higher-income group. I am happy indeed that the Committee on Ways and Means has seen fit to follow my suggestions.

Mr. Speaker, may I digress but for a moment and direct the attention of all members, and especially of my younger colleagues, to the great debt that we Congressmen and every American owe to these elder statesmen of the Ways and Means Committee, six of who have served this Congress more combined years than we have been a Nation. What a wealth of experience these men bring to this eightieth session of Congress. This bill is the fruit of their labors this session and represents the result of the wisdom these men have accumulated during their long years of service to our country. All honor to you, our elder statesmen—BOB DOUGHTON, HAROLD KNUTSON, DAN REED, ROY WOODRUFF, TOM JENKINS, JERRY COOPER, MILTON WEST, NOAH MASON, and all other members of the committee. As long as we are associated with such as these, we in this House cannot go far afield in legislating in behalf of our Nation's interests. How few of our constituency realize the long steady grind that goes on in our committees day after day, week after week, in honest endeavor to compound all differences and to perfect every bill before its presentation to this House. The record of the work being done every day by the House committees under the newly adopted Reorganization Act is one of which this body, this Nation can well be proud.

It is in full realization of all the foregoing that I am myself persuaded to lend my full suport to this bill as reported out of the Ways and Means Committee.

The bill, as reported, comes from the Ways and Means Committee with the unanimous support of the members of the majority party. It also has the full endorsement of all Republican members of the Rules Committee. It also redeems one of the pledges made by the Republican Policy Committee, appointed by our own honored Speaker, Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, then Republican leader of the House. This bill sponsored by a Republican House has been calculated not alone to reduce the tax burden upon all classes, but also to provide sufficient revenue to carry on all necessary functions of Government in keeping with the reductions in Federal spending as covered by the revised Republican Budget, which received overwhelming approval by this body.

Mr. Speaker, this bill is popularly known as a bill to reduce income taxes, but it is actually, and in fact, a bill which will determine the rate of taxes which all Americans of all classes will have to turn over to their Federal Government next year. It was the Seventy-ninth Congress, under a Democratic President, which actually established the high rates which now exist. Republicans are convinced that the present rates are too high. We desire to cut unnecessary Federal expenditures and pass these savings on to the taxpayer in the form of tax relief. Would any deny that our people are entitled to this relief?

To those of you who would say that this bill is not equitable or just in its rates to any one class I would say: These rates are more favorable to the lower-income group than any tax bill ever enacted by a Democratic administration.

Reconciling my own views as to what might constitute the best revision of our tax law, I ask every member on both sides of the aisle to support this rule. Let us in that way give our expression of confidence to those who labored so ardently in the committee in bringing out this bill.

Mr. Speaker, besides a reduction in taxes, we Republicans must cut down Federal expenditures if we are to have economic stability.

Viewing in retrospect the mushroom growth of our Government during the past 14 years—with its usurpation of many powers that formerly belonged to the States; with its octopus-like tentacles reaching into every phase of our economic, our social, and even our personal lives; with its tremendous drain on our Treasury, and the financial burden on our citizens—would it not be wise to stop for a moment and revaluate the purpose of government.

Government is not an end in itself—as many foreign ideologies hold—government is a means by which the governed should be aided in attaining their own ends. What a government does to help its citizens realize happiness, is good—because it serves its end. What a government does to impede the happiness of its citizens, is bad. In other words, a government is good only so long as there exists a proper relationship between the needs of the people and the functions of the government. Government in itself is restrictive. Some restriction is good, however, so long as it contributes to the happiness of a greater number of our people. But each function of government in excess of the need is an unnecessary restriction on the governed. The continued spread of government will cause further distortion between the purpose of government and the function of government. It might be well to examine in concrete terms this relationship between the functions of government and the needs of the people.

When I first came to Congress 15 years ago, there was a peanut vendor across from the White House. I believe his name was Nick—but his name is unimportant—he was representative of many small businessmen. So I am going to use him as my example in attempting to bring out the distortion now existing between the needs for government and the extent of government. It is not a true story, of course, but it might bring the problem into clearer focus.

In the dark days of the depression, Nick was selling peanuts at his little stand across from the White House. He was not making much money, but he was able to support his family and enjoy a few comforts. One day he was approached by an unemployed personnel assistant—who was also somewhat of a salesman. We will call him Frank. Frank became conversant with Nick, and soon had him convinced that his peanut stand could be expanded into a major enterprise—and Frank volunteered to do the job. Nick had not much money, but he had good credit. Visualizing himself as a merchant prince, he hired Frank and borrowed money to pay his salary. Frank then pointed out that he would need a classification specialist to group all passers-by under the proper heading—that is, "Customer," "Prospective customer," or just plain "Non-peanut-eaters." Nick approved the idea, borrowed more money to pay the classification specialist's salary, and kept on selling peanuts.

The three of them were standing on the street corner one day when it started to rain. Frank pointed out that an embryonic merchandising empire could not conduct business in the rain, on a street corner. You guessed it—Frank persuaded Nick to borrow more money to rent an office building—but Nick kept on selling peanuts.

As he was no longer under Nick's direct supervision, Frank took it upon himself to make all the decisions. He started out by hiring two secretaries, two building guards, and a janitor. This, of course, necessitated a pay-roll clerk to pay the salaries. By this time Nick had been persuaded to set up an unlimited checking account in Frank's name—so there was no trouble with financing the expansion. One employee led to another, and one function necessitated another—until finally there were several hundred employees serving the interests of Nick, the peanut vendor.

Further expansion of the enterprise was planned, and a meeting of the administrative executives was called to work out some of the details. Nick was hopelessly in debt, and he wanted to put an end to the venture—so he decided to stop selling peanuts long enough to attend the meeting. After the grandiose plans had been explained and discussed, Frank, the chairman of the board of directors, rose from his plush chair, and inquired: "Are there any objections to the proposed plan for expansion?" Nick, whose small frame was obscured by the immensity of the meeting room, rose from his hard wooden chair in the far rear corner, and in a weak voice replied, "I object. This foolishness has gone far enough. Your schemes have bankrupted me."

Nick's small voice was drowned out by the buzz of whispers around the room. Everyone was asking who the strange little fellow could be. But no one seemed to know—not even the members of the board of directors. Frank recognized Nick, however. He rose and explained to the assembly rather casually: "Oh, him! That's Nick, the peanut vendor. We don't have to pay any attention to him. He probably thinks he should have something to say about the operation of this enterprise just because he financed it."

You might think this chain of events too ludicrous to be within the realm of possibility—but the point is, gentlemen, that it is not only possible—it is what actually happened. That is exactly how the number of Government employees was doubled in the 7-year period from 1932 to 1939. In 1939 there were approximately 925,000 persons on the Federal pay roll. On VJ-day this number had increased to 3,650,000—an increase of nearly 400 percent since 1939—and about 700 percent since 1932. The functions of Government must be expanded in wartime; and increased personnel was probably necessary. My criticism is directed to the fact that now—more than a year and a half since VJ-day—there are still 2,250,000 individuals on the Federal pay roll. This is nearly five times the number of Federal employees in 1932. So you can see that the story is not as ridiculous as it appears.

The functions, the powers, the personnel, and the expense of the Federal Government have grown in just such a manner as Nick's venture—and the people of the United States, who are paying the bill for this purposeless monstrosity we call Government, apparently can not stop it. They are dissatisfied—but they can not make their voices heard. This Government has become a bureaucracy—and its bureaucrats have become so far removed from the control of the people, that they have apparently forgotten that the people exist. And when the existence of the people is forcibly brought to their attention, they can say with impudence: "Oh, them! They are merely the people of the United States. We don't have to pay any attention to what they want. They seem to think they have something to say about the operation of this Government simply because they pay the bills."

The operating expense of the Federal Government now exceeds $50 a month for every employed person in the United States. But the tremendous cost is not the most dangerous aspect of this monstrous governmental machine. The real danger lies in the fact that the machine has become a Frankenstein—so powerful that its maker no longer controls it—so powerful that it could destroy its maker. The Federal Government has become so immense—has assumed so many functions—and has become so far removed from the people—that it now threatens the freedom it was created to insure.

Hatton W. Sumners, a sincere Democrat, and formerly chairman of the House Judiciary Committee, summed up the situation perfectly. When announcing his intention of retiring from Congress after 34 years' service, Representative Sumners said:

> By ignoring principles and the lessons of history, and accepting the theories of men and political expedience for our guidance, we have made vassals of our States and dependents of our people.
> By concentration of governmental power and drafts upon the Federal Treasury, we have now a financially "busted," great piled-up mass of governmental confusion—beyond human comprehension—impossible of democratic control—extravagant—wasteful—inefficient—and by its nature, the instrumentality of favoritism, tyranny—oppression and corruption, and the destroyer of the self-reliance and self-respect and governmental capacity of the people—qualities without which no people can remain free.

These words of a great American sum up the real danger that now confronts us because of the huge Federal bureaucracy. Bureaucracy—by its very definition—means Government by administrative officers who are not subject to the common law of the land. Neither citizens nor Congress have recourse from their decisions.

These Government officials who have never served in an elective office can issue regulations with the effect of law. It is the duty of this Congress to get rid of these bureaucrats.

To allow this system to become more firmly entrenched means greater regimentation of the lives and affairs of all the people. The Senate Judiciary Committee has reported that 130 Federal bureaus and agencies are empowered to issue rules, regulations, and directives that have the force of law. It found that more than 100,000 such "laws" had been issued between 1933 and 1943. The committee estimated that it would require 18 months' work by a staff of experts to analyze only the most important classes of Executive orders and regulations, to determine whether they had any statutory authority and whether they provided necessary safeguards to the citizen. There lies the real danger of bureaucracy—the danger that the power of the people of the United States to govern themselves will be usurped completely by bureaucratic ukases.

I use the word ukase advisedly. In totalitarian Russia administrative orders, which have the force of law, are issued by bureaucrats similar to our own. Violations of these orders can carry penalties as severe as death, and yet the people of Russia have no recourse—no appeal from this arbitrary treatment—not even the protection of the courts. These administrative orders are called ukases. And ukase is exactly what I mean when I speak of the 100,000 orders and regulations issued by the bureaucrats now in control of our Government.

One of the most noteworthy developments in American life is the zeal with which machinery is designed and built by the Federal Government ostensibly to serve various public interests and undertakings, but in reality to control them. Perhaps in no other way is the decline of faith in liberty so clearly marked.

When anything appears to go wrong, or when any desirable movement seems to lag, a cry goes up for the creation of some new board or commission, and for an appropriation of public funds to maintain it in reasonable comfort. An infinite number of forms must be filled out and an infinite number of records must be kept, classified, and audited at steadily mounting costs.

So far as the Federal Government is concerned, there has been overcentralization for a long time past—overcentralization by assuming governmental functions that formerly, and rightfully, belonged to the individual States. Too many persons in the Federal Government are engaged in supervising, in inspecting, and in recording the work of other persons. There is too much machinery, and in consequence a steady temptation to lay more stress upon the form of government than upon its content and purpose. There are, in addition, too many laws and too many precise laws and not enough opportunity for those mistakes and failures due to individual initiative and experiment, which are the foundations of great and lasting success.

Another danger of the huge Federal governmental set-up is its exorbitant cost in the face of a huge national debt. Any excuse for expanding the personnel and functions of the Government passed with the cessation of hostilities. The time has long since passed when the emergency wartime functions of the Government should have been dispensed with.

There has been much double talk about liquidating wartime agencies. Actually, most of these wartime agencies with their functions, personnel, and funds have merely been transferred almost intact to regular old-line Government agencies.

For example, the Office of War Information, the Office of Inter-American Affairs, the Office of Strategic Services, and the Foreign Economic Administration were abolished sometime after the shooting war had ended. But these agencies were abolished in name only. In reality, almost all of their functions, personnel, and funds were transferred to the State Department. In August 1945, before the transfer was effected, the State Department had 11,188 employees. In March 1946 the State Department had 19,801 employees. This figure is interesting because it shows that State Department personnel increased in direct proportion to the decrease in personnel of the agencies which were supposedly liquidated. This is not an isolated instance—it is a general practice. The Senate Committee on Reduction of Nonessential Federal Expenditures brought out this point in a report on postwar Federal personnel. This report showed that personnel in emergency war agencies had been reduced nearly 100,000 in the first 6 months following VJ-day. But personnel in old-line Government agencies had been increased nearly 90,000 in the same period. According to the Senate committee, most of this increased personnel in the permanent agencies was occasioned by the transfer of functions from scattered war agencies which had been ordered transferred or liquidated.

For the entire period of our Nation's history, from 1789 to 1933, a period of 144 years, the sum total of all Federal expenditures, including the cost of World War I, was $110,896,000,000. At the rate of spending proposed in the budget submitted by President Truman to this Congress, this amount would not even pay the cost of government for 3 years.

In addition to the burden of meeting current operating expenses, the taxpayers of this country are also faced with a national debt which now stands at approximately $261,000,000,000. But the economic theorists in our Federal bureaus tell us that we have nothing to worry about. They point out that we have always had a national debt. They say a national debt is necessary to our economy. They admit that our national debt is bigger than ever before, but they contend that there are more people than ever before to pay the debt. The national debt can only be paid by the people. The only fair way to view this debt, then, is the burden it presents to each individual.

In 1790 the debt could have been wiped out had each living inhabitant of the United States paid in $19 to the National Treasury. After the War of 1812 each person would have had to pay in $15. Just after the Civil War the figure rose to $78; and after World War I, to $240. To extinguish the present national debt, each man, woman, and child in the United States would have to pay about $2,000. But every person in the United States cannot be classified as a taxpayer. The present national debt is more than $5,000 for every income taxpayer in the United States.

It has been our national tradition to pay down our war debts promptly. Our past record with respect to our national debt is good enough to encourage us, and poor enough to put us on guard. During the 155 years from 1792 through 1946, we have had 93 years of net surplus in our national budget, and 62 years of net deficiency.

Throughout our history, the greatest obstacles to national financial strength, and the most acute dangers of fiscal collapse have never been the result of inadequate or failing resources, but always the consequence of weak financial policies.

George Washington gave some good advice on the subject of public debt in his Farewell Address of September 1796. He said:

> As a very important source of strength and security, cherish public credit. One method of preserving it is to use it as sparingly as possible; avoiding occasions of expense by cultivating peace, but remembering also that timely disbursements to prepare for danger frequently prevent much greater disbursements to repel it; avoiding likewise the accumulation of debt, not only by shunning occasions of expense, but by vigorous exertions in time of peace to discharge the debts which unavoidable wars may have occasioned, not ungenerously throwing upon posterity the burdens which we ourselves ought to bear.

It is apparent that in the immediate past, this Government has ignored the advice of our founding fathers—and has completely overlooked the needs of the people. Under our present bureaucratic system, our citizens are ruled entirely inconsistent with the purpose of government. Our Government has become an end in itself—it is no longer a means by which the governed are aided in seeking their own end.

Radical newspapers, left-wing orators, and New-Deal propagandists have recently been sniping at the new Republican Congress. They say that the Republicans have not yet brought forth one piece of important legislation. It must be remembered that those propagandists visualize important legislation as that giving the Federal Government more powers to hire more people—and spend more money—and do more things that the people of this country can do for themselves—and do them better than the Government could.

The new Republican Congress is working to bring about a sensible government in the United States. Its work is to bring back into harmony the needs of the governed and the extent of government. The Republican Congress is working to make the Government of the United States consistent with the purpose of government.

In setting about this job of revaluating the purpose of government, careful study must be given to each individual function of each individual unit, in each division, in each office, in each bureau, in each agency of the Federal Government. Those functions which are good—that is, those functions which serve the needs of the people—will be retained. And those functions which exist for their own end—unnecessary functions, overlapping functions—will be cut.

It is the first duty of the Republican Congress to rip to pieces the superstructure of Federal Government—with its inefficiency, its waste, and its corruption—and reestablish a proper relationship between the Government and the governed, where a free people choose their lawmakers, and thereby protect themselves from arbitrary treatment by government.

Lindsay C. Warren, Comptroller General of the United States, has summed up the first duty confronting the Republican Congress. While testifying before a committee of the Senate some time ago, Lindsay Warren said:

> I am firmly of the opinion that if the present trend continues—that is, the creation of Government corporations—or if it is not curbed, we will soon have a government by Government corporations. A large segment of the Government is today operating independently of congressional control and free from accountability to the Executive. Indeed, this thing we call Government has reached such gargantuan proportions that it is sprawled all over the lot. It has become greater than Congress, its creator—and at times it arrogantly snaps its fingers in the face of Congress.

That is the way the Comptroller General of the United States defines the problem—and who should be in a better position to know the condition of Government than the person who audits its records? To solve the problem, Lindsay Warren advises:

> Duplications and overlapping are widely prevalent, and untold millions could be saved and efficiency increased to a high degree. Of course, there would be loud yelps and snarls, but that is always true when powers are curbed, consolidations made, or appropriations reduced or discontinued.
> The most necessary thing that I know of today along governmental lines is a thoroughgoing reorganization of the executive branch of the Government. It should be done scientifically, but once the decision is made, then a bush ax or a meat cleaver should be used. The only way to reorganize is to reorganize. It calls for great courage.

From this statement, you can see that it is not only Republicans who wish to set this Government on solid ground. It is a job for all patriotic Americans, regardless of their politics.

Well, gentlemen, there is the problem of this Congress—to give the people of the United States the kind and the amount of government they need, at a price they can afford to pay. It is going to be a big job—and we are going to have a lot of opposition from those who survive and prosper because of inefficiency in Government. But regardless of the obstacles, it is our job to eliminate these expensive functions of Government for which there is no excuse or purpose—and it is our duty to see that the people of the United States will be heard when they register complaints against the operations of the Government. After all, it is they who are paying the bill.

MOST DRASTIC GAG RULE EVER BROUGHT TO FLOOR OF HOUSE

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I shall not oppose this rule, notwithstanding the fact it is the most drastic gag rule that has ever been brought to the floor of the House. It not only precludes any Member from offering amendments to improve the bill, if the bill could be improved, but it also precludes reading of the bill. As I stated, no amendments may be offered. So I feel that the 6 hours' general debate as provided by the rule is merely that much time and talk wasted.

I fully appreciate the statement made by my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], my chairman of the Rules Committee, that he urged improvement of the original bill, known as H. R. 1, but by no means is it an A No. 1 bill even now. The gentleman says, and I know he means it, that he asked for elimination of the more drastic provisions and tried to improve the bill after having given it consideration and having heard from the people at home. I commend him for his efforts, although he still has not succeeded in bringing in a bill which could be considered a fair bill.

THIS BILL NOT COMPLICATED

Yes, Mr. Speaker; on technical, complicated revenue-producing bills in the past we have brought in a closed rule, prohibiting amendments; but there is nothing complicated about this bill.

Instead of the present 30-percent reduction for small taxpayers, this bill can be easily and reasonably amended to provide a 40-percent relief in the lowest brackets; a 35-percent reduction to those earning $5,000 to $10,000; 30 percent to those earning from $10,000 to $15,000; and so on.

Or better yet, Mr. Speaker, exemptions could be increased from $500 to $750 or $1,000, as provided in the Forand and Ergle bills.

This bill, as reported, is expected to reduce tax revenues, roughly, $3,800,000,000, but, due to retroactive provisions, will reduce by $5,700,000,000.

But 60 percent of this saving of almost $6,000,000,000 will go to only the top 4 percent of income taxpayers, while 96 percent of the taxpayers will have to share the remaining 40 percent of the savings.

We have to take a bill that has been rushed through by the majority and reported to the House after only 2 days of hearings, at which only two witnesses appeared.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. MICHENER. I am interested in the statement the gentleman just made that only two witnesses appeared. Since they were both Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury under the Roosevelt administration, I wonder if the gentleman questioned what they said.

SHOULD AWAIT MATURE JUDGMENT

Mr. SABATH. Well, they both, as I understood their views, felt that we should delay passage of a bill reducing our tax income by $5,880,000,000 until we can see whether it would be justified, and that we should first start to balance the budget and later reduce the indebtedness increased vastly by the last war.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I might say that they appeared in their individual capacities. No others of the public were permitted to appear and testify. They represented a tax association in New York. They are both very estimable men. I do not know how both of them have been politically, but I know one of them opposed the late President in 1940 and 1944.

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman for the explanation. I was under the impression that my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] had reference to the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue who both felt there should be no action at this time; that we should wait a little until we see where we are.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Then the gentleman has already named four witnesses who did appear.

Mr. SABATH. I meant two for and two against.

Mr. MICHENER. So at least four appeared.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; two for and two against.

Mr. MICHENER. May I say to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] that these former Assistant Secretaries of the Treasury, or Under Secretaries, I think they were called, were familiar with the situation, and as soon as they found where the tax plan was leading us they were brave enough to come back to the Congress and state that they had been wrong.

Mr. SABATH. Well, I understood the gentleman. Only two supporting witnesses appeared, as the gentleman from Massachusetts has explained.

Due to the interruptions, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein certain schedules and certain figures and articles, one appearing in the Chicago Sun.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. I want the RECORD to show that personally I respect both of these men. I was a member of the Committee on Ways and Means when they were Under Secretaries, as the gentleman from Michigan has said, but also, as I have previously stated for the RECORD—and I do not know about both of them, but I know one of them, and I liked them very well, I liked to see them; I have a friendship for them personally—one of them, I know, in 1940 and 1944, opposed President Roosevelt. But, I did not want the gentleman's very keen observation to remain in the RECORD without saying what the true facts are, and that from a committee, of which these two are prominent members, has emanated a very thick document on taxes, which I received a copy of and which I assume all the members of the Committee on Ways and Means received a copy of, and probably all the Members of the Congress. In any event, they are part of a tax committee located in New York and are making their recommendations having in mind that environment.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. HERTER. In connection with the remarks made by my colleague, I might add that a third Under Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Roosevelt, T. Jefferson Coolidge, a very distinguished constituent of mine, joined fully in the recommendations made by Mr. Hanes and Mr. Magill, and has so stated publicly.

Mr. SABATH. I presume these are able gentlemen, but they have not been free from service to special interests whose self-seeking propaganda and pressure brought about the adoption by the Committee on Ways and Means of this bill. They belong to and speak for those in the higher brackets who will be the chief beneficiaries of this bill.

WHY DO THEY NOW NEED FURTHER RELIEF?

This is not the first time that these persuasive gentlemen have been able to bring about substantial benefits to the wealthy and the powerful. In 1945 very substantial benefits in the way of carry-back provisions were given, and corporations were relieved of excess-profits taxes, all to the benefit of wealthy people. Approximately $9,000,000,000 in reduction of tax liability was accomplished making such changes in the wartime tax structure as was then deemed necessary. This, of course, is in addition to the six or seven billions of dollars in benefits which resulted from the tax-forgiveness features of the Ruml plan.

It is hard to believe, Mr. Speaker, that they now need further relief.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. If the gentleman will pardon me, I want to make an explanation.

Mr. KNUTSON. I think we need one.

Mr. SABATH. What does this bill do? I did not know whether I would get unanimous consent to extend my remarks and include therein some reports and statistics, so for the first time I have prepared my speech. I am not going to follow it because of the interruptions and because of my desire to answer any fair questions that may be put to me. I am going to disregard my prepared notes and proceed in my usual way to try to show that this bill will not give relief to the people who need relief most.

EMERGENCIES ARE NOT ALL PAST

I have felt and I still feel that the period of great emergency is not past. We do not know whether we can balance the budget within the tax revenues; we do not know if we can meet out of income the minimum needs our Army and Navy are seeking.

However, as long as the bill is here with all its imperfections, I cannot understand why, in the preparation of the committee report, you based your comparisons on the wartime revenue act of 1945 rather than on the more comparable act of 1939.

You know that the 1945 act was partial to big taxpayers and to corporations, and was unfair to the little people of small earnings.

You know that you, sir, and I now address myself to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, because of your strategic position at that time, forced the enactment of a bill not desired by the Democratic leadership.

It was their desire to give first and primary relief to the small taxpayers; but to get any kind of a bill through they were forced to yield to you.

I contend, therefore, that the instant bill, H. R. 1 as amended, should be compared with the 1939 statute rather than with 1945. In that way you will see more clearly how unfair this bill is to the little people of America, and how it favors the people with big annual incomes.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I insert the table from the minority report of the Ways and Means Committee which gives that comparison, and shows the inequities in percentage points of the present bill in relation to the 1939 schedule:

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, the courage I see displayed here on the floor here this morning by one who was so severely dealt with last Monday is something that commands my very great admiration.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I only yielded to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. COX. The gentleman misunderstood me, I wanted to praise and not damn him.

Mr. SABATH. I beg your pardon. I am afraid that again I failed to hear what the gentleman said. I am grateful to the gentleman for his kind words and his tribute. I am doing what I have to do.

And now I must return to the subject of my remarks.

Mr. Speaker, I have here a compilation showing the small savings to individuals with low incomes under this proposed tax bill.

For instance, a single man without dependents who earns $1,200 a year will find a saving of $11.40. At $1,500 a year he will save $28. At $1,800 a year he will save $45.60.

If, however, he earns $25,000 yearly his "take-home pay" after taxes will be increased by $2,816, while the man who earns $50,000 a year will have an extra $4,859 to spend.

A man who makes $500,000 a year will save $164,000.

But to make it clear I am inserting here a table showing the actual take-home pay under the 1939 Revenue Act and under H. R. 1 as revised, using a small number of specified incomes rounded off for ease in reading:

Original table showing "take-home pay" (spendable income) after paying personal income tax for a single person without dependents in 1939 and under H. R. 1 as amended, in 7 specified income grades

Income before personal exemption	1939 tax bil	Take-home pay after tax payment	Percent of income	Tax under H. R. 1 as amended	Take-home pay after tax payment	Percent of income
$1,200	$3	$1,197	99.5	$26	$1,174	96.1
$2,000	32	1,968	98.4	133	1,867	93.3
$4,000	104	3,896	97.4	471	3,529	88.2
$10,000	560	9,440	94.4	1,749	8,251	82.5
$25,000	2,804	22,196	88.7	7,266	17,734	70.9
$50,000	9,334	40,666	81.1	19,836	40,164	80.3
$500,000	305,224	194,776	38.9	342,704	157,296	31.5

Mr. Speaker, the following table shows what a family of four at various income levels now pays, what it would pay under the new Republican plan, the savings, and what the family paid in 1939:

Net income, before exemptions	Present tax	Proposed tax	Savings	1939 tax
$2,500	$95	$66.50	$29.50	None
$4,000	380	304.00	66.00	$12
$5,000	589	471.00	82.00	48
$10,000	1,862	1,490.00	372.00	343
$25,000	8,522	6,818.00	1,704.00	2,327
$100,000	62,301	49,841.00	11,560.00	31,997

To show the inequities of this tax reduction bill, I set forth a further table showing how a married couple with no children would fare under the revised income-tax reduction bill advocated by the Republicans. It clearly shows that the savings to the smaller taxpayers would be but a pittance as compared with the reductions allowed to taxpayers of higher income:

Gross income	Present tax	Knutson bill	Revised bill	Savings revised bill
$1,200	$38	$30.40	$26.60	$11.40
$1,500	95	76.60	66.50	28.50
$1,800	152	121.00	106.40	45.60
$2,000	190	152.00	133.00	57.00
$2,500	285	228.00	228.00	57.00

$500,000	407,464	----------	342,704.00	164,760.00

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. So, notwithstanding the efforts of my colleague the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. ALLEN], the chairman of the Committee on Rules, you see that it is manifestly unfair and the bill does not give the relief which the people are entitled to receive and justice would demand.

I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The gentleman complains about the treatment accorded to the lower income group. I cannot reconcile his reasoning with the facts of the situation. Under the present tax bill which was passed by a Democratic majority in the Congress, a man with a $2,000 income had to pay $285 in taxes. Under this bill sponsored by a Republican majority, the person who has an income of $2,000 does not pay $285 a year, but only pays $133 a year. Under the tax bill passed by the Democratic administration, anyone who earns $2,500 a year had to pay $380 taxes, and under this Republican bill, instead of paying $380, he pays $228. My question is: How can you say that this Republican Congress is not more fair to the lower income group than the tax bill now in existence which was passed by the Democratic Congress and under which they would have to pay twice as much? How can you answer that question?

Mr. SABATH. I explain that by saying that the last bill that was passed was a coalition bill and it was jammed through by the Republicans who forced the Committee on Ways and Means to report it. You know you really had control of that committee and you should not laugh.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is a reflection on the gentleman from North Carolina to say that the Republicans had control, and I resent it.

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman from North Carolina will explain that and he will give you the reasons why that bill came here. I am sure that he will not resent my remarks, for he knows I am right, and that no reflection against him is intended. He simply wanted some bill because of the urgency of the times; and, because you had almost as many members on that committee as the Democrats, he was obliged to yield and bring that bill in, not because he liked it, but because he was compelled to do so.

I should like most respectfully to suggest to my colleague the gentleman from Illinois, that he consult the tables showing the actual savings as shown in the minority report. Once more I invite attention to the fact that the $1,200-a-year man, under this bill now before us, would, if married but with no other dependents, save $11.40 a year; the $2,000-a-year man would save $57, more than 5 times as much; the $10,000-a-year man would save $436, or 40 times as much as the $1,200-a-year man; the $25,000 man would save $2,816, or 256 times $11; while the $500,000-a-year man saves $164,760, or 14,976 times as much as the $1,200-a-year man.

NEW DEAL BUREAUCRATS MADE COUNTRY PROSPEROUS

Yesterday, during debate on the appropriation bill, a good many gentlemen charged the New Deal and the bureaucrats with unspecified crimes which created conditions which, the gentlemen said, demanded improvement and reform.

May I not say to those gentlemen that under the New Deal and these bureaucrats, conditions are better today than ever before. Businessmen and the people generally are making more money than ever before.

The New Deal has done something in the interest of the people, in the interest of the masses. I know if you gentlemen will take the time to study the earnings of corporations and business in general, you will come to the conclusion, as I have, that they are more prosperous, that they have more money and are making more money than at any time in the history of our country.

PROFITS ARE INCENTIVE ENOUGH

The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] says these businessmen need incentive, and that is the reason we must reduce the taxes of these big companies, and big interests, or rather these big men. They do not need any further incentive, since, as I have said, they are making more money than ever before. I know they will be only too pleased if 1947 and 1948 are as profitable to them as was 1946. I hope prosperity will continue, but we should tax those who can best afford to pay. Why should we put such burdens on the little fellow who has an income of twelve or fifteen or eighteen hundred dollars, when you take into consideration the 60 percent increased cost of living since you came into power, which really takes away from them 60 percent more of their earnings. But earnings have stood still. These are the people who need and deserve relief. They cannot exist upon what they are earning.

BILL WILL BE PASSED

However, I realize that you have the votes and you will pass the bill without permitting any amendments to aid those in the lower brackets. Of course, I am sorry that you have that majority and that you can and will do as you please; but I feel you will come to regret it.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the majority leader.

Mr. HALLECK. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he is in favor of tax reductions.

Mr. SABATH. Not at this time and in this way. I feel we should wait and see how far we can go. You have always urged balancing the budget. I want to balance the budget. I do not want to do anything that would deprive you of the honor and credit of helping to balance the budget.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. I am glad to know of the gentleman's new-found conviction, that the budget ought to be balanced, because he and his party have gone along here for years with an unbalanced budget. We propose to balance the budget.

Mr. SABATH. And I am going to help you.

Mr. HALLECK. We are going to cut the cost of government and give the people of this country some much-needed tax relief and begin to pay on the national debt. We are going to do that. However, I would like to make this suggestion to the gentleman.

Mr. SABATH. Well, I yielded only for a question.

Mr. HALLECK. We will give you some additional time if you need it. I would like to make this additional suggestion, The gentleman has said he is not for tax reduction, at least at this time.

Mr. SABATH. Not at this time.

Mr. HALLECK. I have been reading the statements of people on his side, and, from all I can gather, they are not for tax reduction, with some possible exceptions. Now, that being true, it just strikes me that what you have to say about the kind of bill we have does not ring with that degree of sincerity with which the gentleman generally conducts himself.

EVERYBODY WANTS TAXES REDUCED

Mr. SABATH. I will say to the gentleman that this is the first time I have heard anyone say that no one wants tax reduction. My experience is that people at all times want tax reductions. If they did not have to pay any tax at all they would be still more pleased about it.

What I have in mind is that tax reduction should favor those who cannot afford to pay a heavy tax. We should not soak the poor and coddle the rich.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I wonder if the majority leader would not consent to the payment of these terminal-leave bonds in cash now and thereby reduce the public indebtedness? I should like to have an expression from the majority leader along that line.

Mr. SABATH. I presume he will answer the gentleman some day.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield, but I should like to get through.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I am surprised at the gentleman because he is not for income-tax reduction for the lower-income people.

Mr. SABATH. That is what I am fighting for.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. I had always felt that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] was more or less a champion of those people in his district with low income.

Mr. SABATH. Yes; I am and shall continue to be.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Here is a bill that cuts the taxes of the people of your district of low income, cuts them in half. Do I understand the gentleman to say he is opposed to cutting the taxes of the lower-income people of his district in half, thus reducing their taxes?

Mr. SABATH. I may say to the gentleman from Illinois that the people in my district are very patriotic people.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. And yet the gentleman does not want to cut in half the taxes of those lower-income people.

Mr. SABATH. I do; I do; that is what I am contending for, not only in half but to raise the exemptions.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The gentleman does?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Notwithstanding that, the gentleman is opposed to this bill.

Mr. SABATH. But this bill does not cut them enough.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. It cuts them in half.

SAVING OF 14 CENTS A DAY

Mr. SABATH. No, no. It does not cut them in half. It reduces them somewhat; but it still throws an undue burden on the people with small incomes. They are being taxed to death by the food profiteers, by the inflation encouraged and brought on by selfish business interests.

The savings under this bill to a single man without dependents and an income of $1,200 would be about 14 cents a day or $1 a week.

But the man with an annual income of $100,000 would save approximately $43 a day or $300 a week.

This bill would increase the take-home pay of a $1,200 a year man about 1 percent; but it would increase the take-home pay of a $50,000 a year man by almost 20 percent.

Yet this is the vaunted amendment for the benefit of the little man.

Mr. Speaker, under leave given me I am inserting at this point an enlightening editorial published this week in the Chicago Sun which points out that under this bill the higher the income, the greater the taxpayer's improvement of his position over the prewar Democratic revenue act.

A TAX-CUT JOKER SURVIVES

Having been spruced up a bit for the sake of public appearances, the Republican tax-reduction bill appears ready for passage in the House. Representative KNUTSON, who once roared that he would accept no alternative to his original proposal of a flat 20-percent cut for all taxpayers, has been gently induced to back down. As a result the new Republican plan is somewhat better than the old. But its central and gross inequity remains.

The main objection to the Knutson plan has always been that, under cover of what seemed to the uninitiated a rough justice, it undertook to carry out a deep and basic reform of the tax structure. Mr. KNUTSON pretended to be giving everybody the same break. The actual effect of his plan, however, was to reduce certain people's taxes far more drastically than other people's, in comparison with prewar distribution of the tax burden. This remains virtually unchanged in the plan now accepted by the GOP leadership.

Some might argue that such a fundamental change in the incidence of taxation is desirable. But if so, the bill should be debated on that issue, and the country should be told exactly what is being done and why.

The new House plan differs from the Knutson plan mainly in granting a tax cut of 30 percent to families in the lower-income brackets, while retaining the 20-percent cut for most of the others. The heavier cut would be extended to a family of four with a yearly income (before exemptions) of $3,300 or less; to a family of three with income of $2,750 or less; to a married couple with income of $2,200 or less, and to a single person with income of $1,650 or less.

From the viewpoint of sustaining mass purchasing power, the heavier cut in the lower brackets is a sound principle. But where 20,000,000 taxpayers would be so treated, nearly 33,000,000 would get the same flat-rate cut of 20 percent. It was in the broad range of the latter brackets that the Knutson plan's original inequities were most pronounced.

The following table shows what a family of four at various income levels now pays, what it would pay under the new Republican plan, and what it did pay in 1939:

Net income before exemptions	Present tax	Proposed tax	1939 tax
$2,500	$95	$66.50	None
$4,000	380	304.00	$12
$5,000	589	471.00	48
$10,000	1,862	1,490.00	343
$25,000	8,522	6,818.00	2,327
$100,000	62,301	49,841.00	31,997

A comparison of the proposed Republican plan with the taxes paid by each family in 1939 tells the story. At $4,000 of income, the family of four would pay 20 times what it paid before the war. At $5,000 it would pay 10 times as much. At $25,000 it would pay only three times as much, and at $100,000 only one and a half times as much. The higher the income, the greater the taxpayer's improvement of his position over prewar.

If the Republicans think such a change in taxation desirable, they should frankly say so and prove their case. They should explain why this method of tax reduction is more desirable than the fair and simple method of increasing everybody's exemptions by the same amount. But they ought to quit pretending that a flat-rate cut, even modified by a heavier cut in the lower brackets, gives the same treatment to everybody.

Due to the retroactive provisions of the bill the tax reduction will amount to $5,888,000,000. Of this amount 4 percent of the taxpayers will receive 60 percent of the reduction, amounting to $3,532,800,000, while 96 percent of the taxpayers will receive 40 percent of the reduction, amounting to $2,355,200,000, which is $1,177,800,000 less than the amount received by the favored 4 percent of the taxpayers. Can you Republican gentlemen on the other side honestly maintain that this is a fair tax reduction bill to the small taxpayers, or can you dispute that it is again a bill to give relief to the wealthy taxpayers?

Let me give you the facts again in a table showing the 1939 tax under a Democratic law and the tax under this bill:

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. The Democratic administration was the one which put those high taxes on the low-income people of the gentleman's district. Now we want to cut them exactly in half.

Mr. SABATH. The Democratic administration?

If you believe that the great mass of people who receive pennies in savings will not look to those who are receiving thousands, you are mistaken.

They will recognize that you have given the big boys the cream and them only the skim milk.

Because of the costly world war, this country owes about $260,000,000,000.

One-third of the outstanding bonds representing this debt is owned by individuals, and we should safeguard their interests against depreciation by further inflation.

As I have so often pointed out, 98 percent of business establishments are making their highest profits, and the country is more prosperous than ever before.

Now is the time we should be paying off the national debt, to keep those bonds safe and sound, and at the same time discourage more inflation by reducing the amount of money available for luxury spending.

This bill will do the opposite.

During the consideration of the appropriation bill yesterday, nearly every one of you gentlemen criticized the New Deal and bureaucratic spending; but not one of you said that the greatest war in the history of the world had been fought and won.

No one mentioned the fact that vast and useless expenditures had to be made because of delays in defense preparations.

I will concede, and have before said, that some departments recklessly expended the taxpayers' money; but most of these bureaucrats you condemn, and the beneficiaries and profiteers who accumulated millions upon millions in profits, were members of your own Republican Party.

I also heard several gentlemen plead for free enterprise.

Not during the lifetime of any of you has business ever been so free to enlarge their plants, their businesses, and their profits as under this New Deal you criticize so often and so pointlessly.

I remember how you shed crocodile tears for these poor businessmen and manufacturers when you were jamming through the Ruml plan, the carry-back tax-evasion plan, and the bill to repeal the excess-profits tax in the effort to aid big business in the reconversion period.

There was much talk that we might have eight to ten million workers out of employment.

I predicted then that there would be little immediate unemployment, and that business did not need these millions of dollars for reconversion because manufacturers and businessmen had been effecting reconversion for the preceding 2 years at Government expense.

I will venture to say that the vast majority of fair-minded and patriotic businessmen will disagree with the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] who feels that there should be no tax reduction at this time. This is evidenced by many letters which I have received from outstanding businessmen and, not wishing to encumber the RECORD, I shall insert as part of my remarks only one of them which I received from Mr. Edgar L. Schnadig, of the New Boston Store, of Chicago, which gives the honest businessman's viewpoint on the proposed legislation. It is as follows:

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: May I respectfully suggest that, if it becomes necessary, major consideration be given to reducing the tax of those in the lower income brackets (though myself one of those who profit by an across-the-border reduction of tax).

It is my considered opinion that the greatest benefit to our people and our country can come from reducing the tax in lower income brackets, even to eliminating it in the very low brackets. Not only will this improve purchasing power where it is most important, but it will also save a great deal of work for the Government and the employer.

EDGAR L. SCHNADIG

Now, Mr. Speaker, this bill is a political sop without much real meaning to the man in the lowest income brackets.

According to the committee report, a man with an income of $2,500 pays, at the present time, a tax of $95. Under this proposed bill he will pay a tax of $66. The saving will be $29.

Mr. McCORMACK. Is that a married man?

Mr. SABATH. Yes.

Mr. McCORMACK. That probably explains the difference.

Mr. SABATH. He will save $29. A married man with a $1,200 income will save only about $12. But the man with a $25,000 income will save $2,327, and the man with a $100,000 income will save 100 times as much in proportion as the man with the small income.

Mr. McCORMACK and Mr. CURTIS rose.

Mr. SABATH. I yield first to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Let us refresh our memories. It was only a few weeks ago that our friend the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] told us that unless there was a $6,000,000,000 cut in the President's budget we could not put through any tax-reduction bill. There has been no $6,000,000,000 cut. It is in conference. Nobody knows what it is now going to be. The chances are the real reduction will be less than a billion dollars. I am wondering just where this leaves my friend from Minnesota now. He said we could not have any tax reduction unless there is a reduction made in the President's budget. To date there has been none, yet we have this bill before us today.

Mr. SABATH. That is one of the reasons why I think this bill should not be considered or passed today.

I want to answer the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK], who called attention to the national debt and the budget deficit. Does the gentleman recollect that when we had a Republican administration and while President Hoover was in office there was a deficit of $5,000,000,000 one year? There was no preparation for war at that time and no amount needed for that purpose; still there was this deficit. I am satisfied that we can balance the budget now if we use good judgment in not reducing those in the high brackets to the extent which this bill does.

MILLIONS SPENT FOR RELIEF

Does he not realize that when the New Deal came into power we had about 18,000,000 people out of employment and millions of others in distress and in want. That it became necessary for us to provide for them and find employment for them, and feed them, which cost us millions upon millions, farmers and businessmen were on the verge of bankruptcy. Yes, and the banks, insurance companies, and railroads we were obliged to aid. We had to rebuild and reconstruct the destruction brought about by 12 years of Republican misrule and reckless administration which, though it has done nothing for the people the last years, in 1932 had a deficiency of over $5,000,000,000. Later on the greatest war in the history of the world required billions and it was impossible then to balance the budget. I concede that sometimes money has been recklessly expended. Today defense costs and veterans' benefits are tremendous.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Speaker, I am somewhat amazed and shocked at the figures that have been inserted in tables by the minority and the figures that have been used on the floor here today. Under existing Democratic law an individual with a $25,000 surtax net income pays about 51 times as much as the individual with a $1,000 surtax net income. Under H. R. 1, as amended, that man is required to pay 58 times as much as the individual with a $1,000 surtax net income.

Mr. Speaker, the figures cited and referred to are misleading and I am naturally very much surprised that the minority inserted them in its report.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. VURSELL] and ask unanimous consent that he may speak out of order.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, doubtless several Members of the Congress during the past 24 hours have heard over the radio of the Centralia coal mine disaster which, according to early reports, is second only to the Cherry mine disaster some years ago in Illinois which was regarded as the worst the Nation had ever experienced.

I take a minute's time to refer to this matter today because this mine is located in my home county of Marion at Centralia, Ill. It is operated by the Bell & Zollar Coal Co., of Chicago, Ill. It was a great shock to me to learn of this unfortunate occurrence and it comes close to home to me because I have known the majority of these men for several years. For this reason I want to make a report, giving the Members the latest information I was able to obtain over the telephone between here and Centralia, Ill., an hour ago.

Twelve men who came out early Tuesday escaped. Shortly after they came out the explosion occurred. Rescue squads were rushed in and have been working all night, encountering considerable gas which has retarded their efforts. One hundred and fourteen men are known to be still down in the mine some 3,000 feet back from the main entrance. In the rescue work so far, 14 men have been found, all apparently killed by monoxide gas.

Governor Green and his State Mine Director, Robert Medill, who flew to Centralia, reports that there may be some hope that out of the 114 men yet unaccounted for, some may be alive. It is agreed that there is very little chance that few, if any men out of this number will be rescued alive.

I make this report because the safety of working conditions for miners Nation-wide is the concern of Congress. You will recall that there is a Federal law which provides for certain standards of safety in mines and also provides for mine inspectors to assist in maintaining those standards. The Federal Government can only recommend the maintaining of these standards to mine managers and mine owners. There is no question but that conditions should be brought about either by the State or the Federal Government which will compel mine owners and operators to rigidly enforce better safety standards and working conditions for the miners. When the Government seized the mines some few months ago the question of better safety conditions had been agitated to the point where the Government was supposed to promulgate a certain code of safety standards.

It is presumed that Mr. Krug has laid down such standards, but evidently it had not reached the level of the Centralia No. 5 coal mine. This safety matter has been of deep concern to the miners because of the major loss of lives among their workmen.

There are two elements causing these disastrous explosions and fires in the mines. The accumulation of coal dust, because the mines are not kept properly cleaned up and rock dusted is the first element. The miners know that by the use of rock dust and proper cleaning up explosions can be held to a minimum. The next important matter is proper ventilation which would prevent gas from remaining in the mine which, when touched off, causes the explosion which invariably sets fire to the coal dust.

There should be one safety code for coal mine operations Nation-wide set up by the Government and which should be mandatory as to its enforcement in every mine in America. If we are to encourage young men to work in the mines in the future we must have better safety conditions regardless of the cost, because we must have the coal.

Statistics show that young men are not taking up coal mining as a vocation. Statistics show that the great majority of the men working in the mines today range from 45 to 70 years of age; in fact, the average age of the coal miners today is 50 years. No other industry approaches this high age average in America.

Mr. Speaker, when I was in Centralia during the holidays representatives of the men working in mine No. 5 called upon me to talk over the labor situation generally. The four of them were fine reasonable good sound citizens. They were entirely satisfied with their wages, but they stressed to me time and again the great necessity for better safety conditions to protect their lives. Naturally they wanted to go back to a shorter workweek rather than to continue 9 hours a day, 6 days, or 54 hours a week. In fact, Mr. Lenzini who was spokesman mostly for the representatives said, "Try as we will, we old men just cannot work 9 hours at this hard work." He said, "They can shorten the hours and get just as much coal produced because a part of our time is wasted because of exhaustion in the long hours." Ironically, this explosion occurred at the ninth hour of the day. Had they had even 8 hours their lives would have been spared.

Mr. Speaker, we are at a critical point at the present time on this whole coal mine set-up. We must make progress in the right direction in the future. And in this connection, I am rather sorry to note that Dr. Sayers, who for many years has been one of the ablest directors of the Bureau of Mines this Nation has ever had, is leaving the service. I understand that his leaving the service was brought about or encouraged by Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Krug. You may have noted recently that a Mr. James Boyd of Colorado has been appointed to succeed him as Director of the Bureau of Mines. My information is that Mr. Boyd has had very little experience, if any, in coal-mining operations and, in a practical way, it would seem to me such experience would be necessary in this important position. I further understand that the coal miners of America have been disappointed in the retirement of Dr. Sayers and have protested the appointment of Mr. Boyd.

Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the mining industry and the workers should be consulted and at least their reaction and opinion obtained before such an important decision affecting the coal-mining business and the miners of the Nation was taken.

Mr. Speaker, this disaster at Centralia must again call to the serious attention of the Members of Congress the necessity for better safety conditions in the coal mines of America.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Today will mark the beginning of a new period in our history. The Republican Party, with dogged determination, is going to set the economy of our country straight, once and for the first time in a period of 16 years. This House controlled by the Republican Party, will pass a new tax bill before the sun sets on the dome of this Capitol tomorrow night, which bill will balance the budget, reduce taxes, and pay substantially on our national debt. This is essential for our national security. The confidence of the people in their Government must be restored. A new philosophy of government is going to be initiated and that is that it is the people's duty and obligation to support its Government rather than the New Deal parasitic philosophy of the Government supporting the people.

It is charged that the Republicans made this promise to their people during the last campaign. I am sure this promise will be kept and will be the beginning of platforms on which a party stands rather than merely a platform on which a party runs and then abdicates once the people have fallen for it.

Yes, Members of the House, this is an all-important day in the history of our country, for it not only marks the beginning of a new philosophy of Government, but in so doing, it sounds the death knell of the New Deal's philosophy of "tax and tax and tax; spend and spend and spend; elect and elect and elect."

This tax program is not only essential for assuring an all-important high national economy but necesary to the maintenance of it. Even though the tax rate is going to be reduced, the resultant effect will be a greater national income and thereby more tax revenue.

I now predict a greater payment on the public debt in 1948 than has so far been suggested.

For political reasons, the New Dealers have set out to wreck this program. They are going to bend every effort to throw our Republican balanced budget out of kelter. They are now aware of the fact that the Republican Party has the "know-how," the will, and the determination to carry out their promise to the people.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I was away on official business and did not have the opportunity to vote in the Committee on Rules for this rule. If I had been present I would have supported the rule, because I am very much in favor of this tax-reduction legislation.

May I say to the House that I have just returned from a little swing through several States, where I found a great deal of interest among the members of both political parties in this legislation. The people of the United States want and expect tax reduction. They believe that this measure—and I talked to hundreds of them—is a fair one; that it does gives a "break," or an advantage, to the lower-income groups, and my party, as the sponsor of this legislation as it comes to the House, is receiving a great deal of credit for it.

I believe that this is the first tax-reduction bill, with the exception of the 5-percent cut of last year, that we have had before us, in many years. I know that many citizens of America are expecting to use the savings made as the result of our lowering taxes for the purpose of expanding their business, or for buying those things which they need for their homes. So, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the enactment of this legislation will be of great aid to the economy of the Nation and, in turn, will result in a greater national income which, of course, in the final analysis, will bring more tax revenues into the Treasury.

I question very much that this measure will greatly reduce our tax income; at least not anything like the estimates that have been given, simply because of the great incentive that its enactment will give business activity throughout our country. I hope that this rule and the tax bill will pass. I am certain both will.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am very happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois. I always yield to him.

Mr. SABATH. In view of the fact that the gentleman has been away from here, may I call his attention to the fact that this bill as reported, contains a retroactive provision, and it will go back to January 1.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Every bit of tax legislation has been retroactive. When you raised taxes it was always retroactive. I assure the gentleman that if he will check as closely as I did in his home city of Chicago he will find that his own constituents are very much in favor of this legislation. It grieves me to realize that the gentleman, much as I admire him, is making the mistake of opposing this bill. I hope the gentleman from Illinois will reconsider and join with us in giving tax relief to the people of his own State, especially those in the lower income groups.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I think the gentleman is justified in his hope that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH] may change his mind. I recall very well the morning when the gentleman opposed the loan to Britain, and he came in before the debate was over and inserted in the RECORD another speech in favor of it. So the gentleman does change his mind on occasion, and perhaps he will on this.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. SABATH. They say all big men or good men or sensible men sometimes change their views.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. That is the reason why I am hopeful the gentleman will change his mind before the roll is called.

Mr. SABATH. I do not think the gentleman was in my district. I think he was in the Blackstone or one of the other high-priced hotels, and they are high priced.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Of course, the gentleman was not in Chicago.

Mr. SABATH. If I had been, surely I would have tried, notwithstanding the report that I read about the gentleman as to his ability to get away with certain things.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I may say to the gentleman I was on State Street, which is in his district, and I found very many people there who were greatly interested in tax reduction, especially those in the lower income groups. I hope the gentleman will reconsider and join me in supporting this legislation for the benefit of the poor of his own district, as well as for those of the whole Nation.

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income tax payments.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 1, with Mr. CASE of South Dakota in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may need.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to discuss the provisions of H. R. 1, which was reported to the House by the Committee on Ways and Means on Monday.

The purpose of H. R. 1 is twofold:

First. To provide income-tax relief for all individual taxpayers who are still bearing the high and oppressive taxes of the war;

Second. To remove the deterrents to managerial efforts and to the investment of venture capital, which constitute so serious a threat to the maintenance of the present high level of production and employment, and to the business expansion of the future.

To explain how H. R. 1 accomplishes these objectives, I wish to divide taxpayers into five groups:

First. Those whose income—after deductions and exemptions—is $1,000 or less;

Second. Those whose income—after deductions and exemptions—is between $1,000 and about $1,400;

Third. Those whose income—after deductions and exemptions—exceeds $1,400 but is not in excess of about $303,000;

Fourth. Those whose income—after deductions and exemptions—is in excess of $303,000;

Fifth. Those individuals who have attained the age of 65.

The first group contains approximately 25,000,000 taxpayers. It includes single persons earning up to $1,667, married persons earning up to $2,222, and married persons with two dependents earning up to $3,333. Recipients of these small incomes have suffered most severely as a result of the rise in the cost of living during recent years. To them this bill brings a tax reduction of 30 percent.

The second group which consists of individuals whose income, after deductions and exemptions, is between $1,000 and $1,396, numbers around 6,000,000 taxpayers. The relief granted by the bill to this group ranges from a 30 percent reduction on a surtax net income of $1,000 to a 20 percent reduction at approximately $1,400.

The third group, consisting of taxpayers whose income, after deductions and exemptions, is in excess of $1,396 but not in excess of $302,396, includes 15,000,000 taxpayers. These receive a flat 20 percent reduction in the individual income tax payable under existing law.

The fourth group, which consists of taxpayers whose incomes after deductions and exemptions are in excess of $302,396, contains about 600 taxpayers. These receive a straight 20 percent reduction on the tax on the first $302,396 of income, and a 10½ percent reduction on the balance. Generally speaking, income in excess of $300,000 is unearned.

Estimates relating to the year 1945 show that salaries and wages made up only 5 percent of the total income received by those with net incomes of $300,000 and over and 79 percent came from dividends, interest, and from fiduciary sources, and 16 percent came from businesses and partnerships.

The fifth group receiving relief under H. R. 1 consists of taxpayers who have attained the age of 65. I have been particularly concerned over the plight of these individuals. Many of them, including retired school teachers, policemen, municipal workers, and others who have retired from private industry have as their sole source of livelihood, the small amount which they receive as a pension, annuity or retirement pay.

The incomes of such persons will not, in most cases, increase in an expanding economy, since many will be unable to engage in a gainful occupation. H. R. 1 allows to each taxpayer in this age group, an additional exemption of $500, making a total personal exemption of $1,000. This additional exemption will remove almost 1,400,000 taxpayers from the rolls.

Our committee provided an amendment to prevent this additional exemption from pyramiding where the pension, annuity or retirement pay was already exempt from taxation.

Under existing law, pay received by former Army and Navy officers retired by reason of military disability, annuities paid under the Social Security and the Railroad Retirement Acts, and a few other items are excluded from gross income.

The committee felt that the additional exemption granted to persons over 65 should be allowed only if they included in their income the first $500 of fully tax-exempt pensions, annuities and retirement pay. While this will not result in taxing income that is already exempt, it will prevent the recipient from getting a further benefit by applying the extra $500 allowance against taxable income.

The amendment does not require the taxpayer to include any part of his pension or annuity in his gross income if his income from other sources does not exceed $500. Veterans' pensions, which are exempt under the act of August 12, 1935, are not affected by this amendment.

H. R. 1 does not go as far as I would like it to go in providing income-tax relief. However, in view of the present high rate of Government spending and the magnitude of the public debt, the reductions in H. R. 1 are as great as I believe we can make at this time.

In the past few weeks, H. R. 1 has been criticized because some Members felt it did not provide adequate relief for the low-income groups. I believe that the bill, by allowing a 30 percent instead of a 20-percent reduction to the lowest income group, adequately meets any valid criticism from that angle.

Because most of the earnings in the low-income groups are required for food, clothing, and other necessities, our committee believed it proper and just to provide a larger reduction to that group than to the higher groups. This has aptly been termed a "cost-of-living allowance."

A table which I will insert at this point shows that 96 percent of the taxpayers have incomes under $5,000. This group receives about 80 percent of the net income but pays only 56 percent of the tax. The group above $5,000 has only 20 percent of the net income but pays 44 percent of the tax.

Of the tax reduction provided by this bill, 61 percent goes to persons receiving net incomes of $5,000 or less, and of this amount almost 71 percent goes to individuals with incomes under $3,000. This does not include the relief granted to individuals of 65 or over which is heavily concentrated in the lower-income brackets.

I cannot emphasize too strongly that if we are to give real relief to the low-income groups, we must not stop with tax relief in the bottom brackets. We must provide encouragement to business expansion and free competition.

By reducing the taxes in the middle and higher brackets, income is released for investment in new and expanding businesses, the managerial group is stimulated to greater efforts, low-income groups are benefited by a larger volume of output, more jobs, lower prices and reduced cost of living.

It is a blot on the present administration that in spite of all the lip service to the forgotten man under the New Deal the cost of living has risen over 60 percent since 1932.

In this connection, I have been advised by the Commissioner of Labor Statistics that—

The consumer price index for the average of large cities increased 42.7 percent between the average of the years 1932 and 1946, and 64.0 percent between December 15, 1932, and December 15, 1946.

H. R. 1 recognizes the importance of the cost-of-living factor by extending the 20-percent reduction to those who furnish the capital, material, and incentive for business production and expansion. Accordingly, under H. R. 1, 39 percent of the total reduction goes to the group with incomes of $5,000 and over.

The present tax rates have drastically reduced the spendable income of this group. I am inserting at this point a table which shows the spendable incomes of taxpayers receiving certain amounts of net income before exemptions under the rates now in effect and under those provided by this bill:

TABLE II.—Comparison between spendable income under present law and H. R. 1

Table II brings out the fact that although an individual with $1,000 income has 90½ percent of his income left after taxes under existing law, an individual with an income of $100,000 is left with only 36.5 percent, and an individual with $200,000 income with only 25.7 percent.

Tax burdens of this size are an obstruction to the development of our country. Confronted with taxes of this size young men who otherwise might accumulate capital to build up new and productive enterprises become discouraged.

Men of experience and ability fail to take on the added responsibilities which the full utilization of their capacities requires. Responsible officials in the Government itself are subjected to very severe burdens—witness the fact that the President of the United States, after paying his Federal and State income taxes and food costs in the White House, has a take-home pay of less than $5,000 out of a salary of $75,000.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. Briefly.

Mr. FORAND. Is it not a fact that the condition at the White House is unique and should be remedied by way of additional appropriations for expenditures of the White House which the President himself should not be called upon to meet?

Mr. KNUTSON. I dare say that if the gentleman would examine the whole picture he would find it full of unique situations such as I have just mentioned.

From the point of view of the effect of a tax on initiative and investment, it is the rate in the top bracket of the individual's income which is of critical importance. It is the additional tax taken out of the extra dollar of income that added effort or greater assumption of risk will bring in, that determines whether or not it is worth while to make the effort or incur the risk.

I will insert in the RECORD at this point a table which shows how much additional tax the Government takes out of additional income received by taxpayers at certain income levels under existing law and under H. R. 1:

This table shows that a man with a $32,000 income who receives a $6,000 raise in salary now has to return 62 percent, or almost two-thirds of his raise, to the Federal Government; a man with a $100,000 income who receives a $50,000 raise has to turn over approximately 85 percent, or $42,500, to the Government. This applies not only to salaries but also to earnings on capital.

Is there any wonder that business is having difficulty in getting executives to undertake new responsibilities, or in securing venture capital to expand old companies or create new ones?

Under H. R. 1 the rate applied to the extra $6,000 received by a man with a $32,000 income is cut from 62 percent to 49 percent. The rate in the extra $50,000 received by a man with an income of $100,000 is reduced from 85 percent to 68 percent. While the rates which remain are still very high, I believe that we are taking a step in the right direction.

The plan which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] has advocated, of allowing a $2,000 exemption to married persons, $1,000 exemption to single persons, and $500 credit for dependents, would remove 20,000,000 taxpayers from the rolls. It would cost nearly $6,000,000,000, and on top of that it would perpetuate the present system of discriminating against initiative, investment, production, and the creation of new jobs.

By providing practically no relief for investment in new and productive enterprises, it would confirm old ventures in their monopolies. Because of this, it would continue high prices and impose high living costs upon the less fortunate.

I, for one, will never agree that the boy in the foxhole should not have the same chance and opportunity as was afforded Cyrus McCormick and Henry Ford when they were young men. Anyone who knows the history of the Ford Motor Co. must realize that that company, as well as many other corporations, got its start through local capital raised in the local community.

There were 12 original Ford stockholders who organized the company in June 1903. At the outset, this company had patents worth $40,000, machinery worth $10,000, and contracts valued at $1,000. It was a small company with a small capital. Now it has grown to great proportions. It built up to its present size only because it was permitted to accumulate its earnings for expansion.

Let me say that neither Henry Ford nor any other man could start out today from scratch, as Ford did in 1903, and create an industrial enterprise that gives employment to several million, directly and indirectly, develop a new market for raw materials that runs into the hundreds of millions of dollars and at the same time build up a pay roll that runs into the billions of dollars, not to mention the fact that the automobile industry through the use of venture capital has pushed back the horizon way, way beyond where it had ever been. Today the American who has not seen at least one coast to this great and glorious country is a most unusual individual.

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DONDERO. I think the gentleman might well have added that he also provided transportation for the poor man, or the common man.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am glad the gentleman interrupted to make that observation.

All the industries that we have in this country were made possible by venture capital, capital that came from the brackets of $10,000 on up, but in the last 15 years we have been squeezing those taxpayers dry. There has been no venture capital. None of you can cite any new industries that have grown up in this country in the last 15 years. Had it not been for the war, our economy would have remained static.

Our present high taxes take away the incentive of the man in a small community to risk his capital. If the venture should turn out to be a success, his profit after taxes will be so small that in most cases the venture will not be worth the try. As a result, the small businessman must go outside this community to big business and large banks in order to secure venture capital. Eventually this results in taking control of local business away from the local community. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] or his colleague the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL], want to make it impossible for another Ford to rise in Michigan? If so, then they must not believe in free competition but in the continuance of monopolies.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I, of course, want to say that I am not going to interpose an obstacle to the rise of any individual who might become another Ford in Michigan. I have never done anything like that since I have been in Congress. But what I want to say to my friend from Minnesota is this: He just expressed the opinion that much of the venture capital came from the high brackets. Well, in the supplemental views of the minority in connection with the tax bill of 1945, signed by the present chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON], two paragraphs on page 40 of the report refer specifically to the fact that venture capital comes from the little fellow. How does the gentleman reconcile his reversed attitude now?

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, of course, "little" is a comparative term. Certainly, the gentleman would not contend that the bulk of venture capital comes from those below the $5,000 income group.

Mr. DINGELL. In these low-income groups the gentleman refers to?

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me say to the gentleman that I did not read the report when I signed it. As a matter of fact, I have no recollection of having signed it. Do you not see that the firm of DINGELL, ENGEL, and GORE do not want tax reductions? We do. The Republican Party promised the country tax reduction, and I hope we are going to be able to give it to them.

Few people today realize the burden of taxation which now falls upon the middle and high income groups. The Gallup poll published on January 24, 1947, contained some interesting information. People were asked what they thought the tax now is on an income of $10,000. On the average they thought it was $1,000 instead of $1,700. They thought the existing tax on an income of $50,000 was $9,000 instead of $24,000.

These same people were also asked what they thought the tax ought to be. On an income of $3,000, they thought it should be $50 instead of $131; on an income of $10,000, $900 instead of $1,720; on an income of $50,000, $7,500 instead of $24,000.

I am particularly concerned over the statement made by my Democratic colleague, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], several weeks ago, that in advocating a 20-percent reduction in income taxes, straight across the board, I was abandoning the ability to pay principle. I certainly hold no brief for the present confiscatory individual income-tax rates which were adopted by his party and not mine. While there was some justification for these excessive and discriminatory rates during the war, there is not the least justification for continuing them during peacetime.

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GORE. Does the gentleman want to forget that we have not yet paid the war debt? What is the gentleman going to do with the war debt? Is he going to transfer that debt to the low-income and middle-income groups?

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me say to my good friend from Tennessee that the time to have been concerned over that debt was when you were piling it up by taxing and taxing and electing and electing. That was the time to have expressed concern; not when the debt got to be so stupendous that it threatens the very solvency of the Republic.

I cannot yield any further. I was simply trying to set the gentleman straight.

I certainly hold no brief for the present confiscatory individual income-tax rates, which were adopted by his party, not mine. While there was some justification for these excessive and discriminatory rates during the war, there is not the least justification for continuing them in peacetime.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman has just made a statement that the tax bill was passed by our party and not his. That is in direct contradiction to the statement made to me in committee when he said we had a coalition government at that time.

Mr. KNUTSON. We did on certain occasions. It was not ironbound, I will say to the gentleman, neither was it founded on any treaties.

However, if the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] is of the opinion that the present progressive system is a fair measure of one's ability to pay, then a uniform percentage reduction will keep the share of the total burden levied on a particular taxpayer the same as at present. Thus, if A pays, under existing law, 10 times as much tax as B, he continues to pay 10 times as much as B after the uniform percentage reduction.

On the other hand, if we raise exemptions or reduce rates for one group in preference to another, the effect is to disturb the existing ratio. For instance, under present law an individual receiving an income of $50,000 pays a tax which is 27 times as high as that paid on an income of $5,000. Under a flat 20-percent tax reduction, the $50,000 man still pays 27 times as much as the $5,000 man. If, instead, exemptions are raised to $600, he will pay 28 times as much, and if exemptions are raised to $1,000, he will pay 31 times the tax paid by the $5,000 individual.

One more illustration will make my point quite clear. Under existing law the recipient of an income of $300,000 pays 255 times as much as the person with a $5,000 income. Under a flat 20-precent cut he will still pay 255 times as much. However, with an increase of exemptions to $600 he will pay 262 times the tax on a $5,000 individual, and with an exemption of $1,000 he will pay 294 times as much.

It has been estimated that on a full year's basis H. R. 1 will reduce revenues by approximately $3,800,000,000. But this is the most pessimistic side of the picture. It makes no allowance for the stimulating effect the bill will have upon production and upon the national income, out of which the taxes are paid. In answer to a question by my colleague, the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS], as to how long it takes for a tax reduction to be reflected in enterprise and job opportunities in this counery, Secretary Snyder said: "It could very easily come within a very short time." Upon further questioning the Secretary indicated that a "short time" might mean a "year."

In a press release in December I called attention to the fact that the reductions through the 1920's actually resulted in increasing instead of decreasing the revenues. I wish to insert in the RECORD at this point my statement setting forth the experience with tax reduction in the 1920's:

EXPERIENCE WITH TAX REDUCTION IN THE TWENTIES

In the period of the twenties, when the Republicans were in control, there were four reductions made in internal revenue taxes. The first tax reduction was made in 1921, when the country was in the depression of 1920–21. The reductions were made to relieve the people from the oppressive tax burdens of the First World War, in order to stimulate business recovery and employment. The acts providing for such reductions were the Revenue Act of 1921, applicable to 1921, 1922, and 1923, the Revenue Act of 1924, applicable to 1924, the Revenue Act of 1926, applicable to 1925, 1926, and 1927. The Revenue Act of 1928, applicable to 1928 and 1929, did not provide for any tax reduction but liberalized the earned income credit. However, House Joint Resolution 113 reduced individual normal taxes and corporate income taxes for the calendar year 1929.

The reductions made by these acts were very extensive. Individual income taxpayers were granted three reductions in normal tax rates, three reductions in surtax rates, successive increases in personal exemptions, a 25 percent reduction in 1923 income tax, payable in 1924, a credit for earned income and a maximum tax on capital gains of 12½ percent. The war profits and excess profits tax on corporations was repealed and practically all the war excise taxes were removed. Despite these reductions, tax revenues continued to rise so that there was ample surplus to provide for sizable reductions in the national debt.

The following figures taken from statistics of income of the Bureau of Internal Revenue show the increase in individual receipts for the calendar years 1921 to 1929, inclusive. The individual income tax receipts for 1923 were sufficiently large to permit a 25-percent reduction which accounts for the revenue figure of $662,000,000:

Calendar year:	Individual income tax receipts
1921	$719,000,000
1922	861,000,000
1923	662,000,000
1924	704,000,000
1925	735,000,000
1926	732,000,000
1927	831,000,000
1928	1,164,000,000
1929	1,001,000,000

Average annual receipts in the above table, for the first 5 years of the period, totaled approximately $736,000,000, while in the last 4 years of the period they totaled $746,000,000.

Corporate income-tax receipts during this period continued to rise, despite the reductions in corporate income tax. This is shown by the following table:

Calendar year:	Corporation income-tax receipts
1921	$366,000,000
1922	775,000,000
1923	937,000,000
1924	881,000,000
1925	1,170,000,000
1926	1,229,000,000
1927	1,130,000,000
1928	1,184,000,000
1929	1,193,000,000

Due to the slight business recession in 1924, there was a decrease in corporate receipts of $55,000,000, and a decline of $90,000,000 in 1927. But this was small compared to the decline in corporate receipts during the depression of 1919 to 1921, when the Government revenues were reduced by $378,000,000.

Total internal revenue receipts held to a steady level during this period, annual revenue surpluses were recorded and substantial reductions were made in the public debt as shown in the figures below:

Fiscal year	Total internal-revenue receipts	Gross public debt	Annual surplus
1920	$6,695,000,000	$24,299,000,000	$212,000,000
1921	5,625,000,000	23,977,000,000	87,000,000
1922	4,109,000,000	22,963,000,000	313,802,000
1923	4,007,000,000	22,350,000,000	310,000,000
1924	4,012,000,000	21,251,000,000	505,000,000
1925	3,780,000,000	20,516,000,000	251,000,000
1926	3,963,000,000	19,643,000,000	378,000,000
1927	4,129,000,000	18,512,000,000	636,000,000
1928	4,042,000,000	17,604,000,000	399,000,000
1929	4,033,000,000	16,931,000,000	185,000,000
1930	4,178,000,000	16,185,000,000	184,000,000

The experience in the twenties shows the fallacy of trying to secure revenue through continuing unfair and oppressive rates. We must remove the tax shackles in order that business may go ahead with full production, expansion, and employment.

Calendar year	Maximum rates		Receipts from individuals
	Normal tax	Surtax
	Percent	Percent
1921	8	65	$719,000,000

[1] Less 25 percent.

NOTE.—Tax credit of 25 percent provided in Revenue Act of 1924 applicable to 1923 liabilities.

The fact that tax reductions have a tendency to increase collections by raising national income can be illustrated also by the experience of the State of New York. This State reduced its tax on individual incomes by a flat 25 percent for the years 1941 to 1944, inclusive, and by a flat 50 percent for 1945. Another 50-percent cut has been recommended for the fiscal year 1946.

Nevertheless revenues have increased from $465,000,000 in 1940 to $682,000,000 in 1946, and a deficit in 1940 has given place to an unbroken series of surpluses, the largest of which occurred in 1946. In spite of the 50-percent cut, a surplus of $60,700,000 is estimated for the fiscal year 1947. I am inserting at this point a table which summarizes the New York experience:

TABLE IV.—New York State revenues, expenditures, and surplus, 1940–48

Source: This table was prepared by the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress on the basis of the Annual Report of the Comptroller for the fiscal year ended Mar. 31, 1945, p. 113, and the budget message of Feb. 1, 1947 (New York Times, Feb. 2, 1947, p. 48).

The experience of Australia in recent years furnishes additional evidence supporting my contention that an income-tax reduction fosters an increase in national income which in time tends to increase tax collections. Since the end of World War II, Australia has reduced its income tax twice.

The tax program which included the first of these reductions was estimated at the time to cost between £2,000,000 and £3,000,000. Instead the tax reductions were followed by an increase in revenues of £17,000,000.

Hence the Government was able to come forward with a proposal to reduce the income tax a second time with an estimated loss of revenue of £17,500,000.

At this point the leader of the opposition argued that no real tax cut was being proposed since the Government was merely distributing the surplus which it had failed to estimate in the previous year when the first of the two tax cuts was being made.

The method for reducing taxes used in H. R. 1 is by no means new, either in the history of Federal or State taxation. In the Revenue Act of 1945, the Congress adopted a flat 5-percent reduction in individual income taxes. In 1924, we had a tax reduction of 25 percent for taxes payable in 1924. Many of the States adopted the flat-tax-cut method as the easiest and fairest way of reducing taxes.

In his budget message of January 26, 1942, the then Governor Herbert H. Lehman advised the New York Legislature:

I recommend a 25-percent reduction in each individual's personal-income taxes payable this spring * * * I recommend a similar 25-percent reduction in each individual's income taxes payable in the spring of 1943.

This method of tax reduction was continued by Governor Dewey, except that in 1945 and 1946 he recommended a 50-percent instead of a 25-percent reduction.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. KNUTSON. I am glad to yield to the gentleman, a member of the committee.

Mr. LYNCH. I presume the chairman knows that when that recommendation was made we had a surplus in the Treasury of the State of New York. We have no surplus in the Treasury of the United States at the present time, and it is not likely we are going to have any.

Mr. KNUTSON. I do not think we will have a surplus in the Treasury until we have had a change of administration.

Mr. LYNCH. If you are not going to have a surplus in the Treasury, how do you expect to have debt reduction and how do you expect to balance the budget?

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, the gentleman knows, being a member of the great Ways and Means Committee, of which he is a very valuable member, that the receipts for this year will probably total two and a half or three billion in excess of the estimates.

Mr. LYNCH. Well, the gentleman knows that the gentleman at the other end of the Capitol in charge of the Finance Committee estimates that this bill will cost $5,700,000,000.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, I cannot be responsible for what they say at the other end of the Capitol.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I would like to commend the gentleman's reference to New York State and to say that the legislature for the past few years has come in at the last minute and passed a reduction bill, to which the gentleman has referred, and it has come more or less as a present to the taxpayers of the State. Therefore, after we have made out our income taxes, we divide the total amount by 2 or 4 and we have our reduction.

Mr. KNUTSON. On March 11 you made another 25-percent cut in the State income taxes of New York.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. I understand it is 50 percent.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am advised it is 50 percent. Why cannot the Congress do as much for the people of the United States as the Governor of New York can do for the people of that State?

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. The distinguished chairman made the statement that we would not have a surplus until there was a change of administration. Was that just about what the gentleman said?

Mr. KNUTSON. I think that is substantially correct.

Mr. COOPER. How much surplus did the gentleman's party turn over when they went out the last time?

Mr. KNUTSON. We did not turn over any.

Mr. COOPER. I did not think so.

Mr. KNUTSON. How much surplus did the gentleman's party turn over to us in 1921?

Mr. COOPER. There was a deficit then, when the gentleman's party went out.

Mr. KNUTSON. That is true. I grant that, and that deficit was due to the war that the gentleman's party promised to keep us out of back in 1916.

Mr. JENNINGS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KNUTSON. I yield.

Mr. JENNINGS. According to my reading of American history, the last time a Democratic President left a surplus in the Treasury when he went out of office was Andrew Jackson, of Tennessee, and that is so far in the distant past that the memory of man runneth not to the contrary.

Mr. KNUTSON. And they have been celebrating his birthday ever since as an outstanding and unusual Democratic President.

But let us keep this debate on a higher plane. I do not want any politics in this discussion.

Now, let us take another State. Maryland, under a Democratic Governor, reduced its taxes. You see I am willing to give credit no matter on what side of the aisle it goes.

Under Democratic Governor O'CONOR, Maryland reduced its individual income taxes by a flat 33⅓ percent in 1942 and later increased the cut to a flat 50 percent. Iowa has allowed a flat 50-percent cut in its individual income tax since 1942.

Our friends on the Democratic side may tell you that this is not the time to reduce taxes. We must wait until we know how much the Administration is going to spend, and what boondoggling will cost before it is safe to even think about reducing the tax burden of the American people. Yet when my friend from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN], offered an amendment to my bill to further reduce the tax burden of the very lowest income group, which will result in a further tax cut of approximately $380,000,000, what do you think occurred? Why our Democratic friends on the Ways and Means Committee voted unanimously for this amendment, voted unanimously to further reduce taxes by approximately $380,000,000, and yet they tell you this is not the time to reduce taxes.

I think one of the things that has kept you folks in power so long is your indifference to consistency—and it is a great gift sometimes.

I hope our Democratic colleagues will vote to give the country the tax relief that it needs and demands. I, for one, have never been in favor of deficit spending, and our study of the budget for 1947 and 1948 clearly indicates, the other end of the Capitol to the contrary notwithstanding—may I say parenthetically that I do not want to violate the rules of the House. Every building, of course, has two ends. I think this is the front end—but our study of the budget for 1947 and 1948 clearly indicates that there is ample surplus to provide both for tax relief and debt relief, even disregarding the impetus which H. R. 1 will give to the production of increased income.

I know there are some who advocate that all the surplus should be applied toward the payment of the national debt. But, I believe that a proper approach is to provide for both tax reduction and debt reduction.

In the President's budget message for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1948, it was estimated that the public debt at the end of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, would be $260,200,000,000, and that the cash balance at the end of the year would be $2,100,000,000.

It now appears that on March 20, 1947, the debt had already been reduced to $259,000,000,000 and that cash balance existed of $5,900,000,000.

After payment of Treasury notes and certificates maturing on March 15, 1947, and April 1, 1947, the Treasury cash balance should still be at least $4,000,000,000.

It appears that more of this cash could be applied toward reduction of the debt in the hands of the public. By the end of fiscal 1947, we should be well ahead of schedule in debt retirement.

This will necessarily reduce the interest charge now being borne by the Treasury with respect to the national debt.

I was deeply disappointed at the President's budget message calling for expenditures of $37,500,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948, which under his budget left practically nothing for debt or tax reduction.

Any novice should know that this is the most opportune time to provide for debt relief and tax reduction.

Tax receipts are at a high level and there is practically no unemployment. Indeed, it is most fortunate for the country that the Congress, and not the Executive, with his confused advisers, controls the purse strings.

Under the Reorganization Act passed last year, a committee of the House and Senate, composed of both the Appropriation and Tax Committees has called a halt to governmental waste and extravagance by putting an over-all ceiling on Federal expenditures for the fiscal year 1948 of $31,500,000,000.

Under the House action which approved the report of this committee a surplus of $6,800,000,000 exists even if the budget committee's estimate of receipts of $39,100,000,000 is used. If present levels of production and income continue, receipts will be substantially higher. They might reasonably be expected to exceed $43,000,000,000.

As I have indicated the estimated revenue loss from H. R. 1 is about $3,840,000,000. Applying this against the conservative $39,100,000,000 estimate of revenues used by the legislative budget committee we would still have $3,000,000,000 left for debt retirement or other purposes. With full employment continuing throughout fiscal 1948, as the Secretary of the Treasury indicated it would at the hearings on this bill, a surplus of $11,500,000,000 would appear. This would leave something like seven billion available for retirement and other purposes after giving full effect to H. R. 1.

Yes, this bill is fair, but it is only a start in the right direction. As we clear away the dead wood in the executive branch and restore efficiency in government there will be further tax relief. Remember, we are beginning to reverse a trend that has been snowballing for 14 years.

It is a fair bill because it recognizes that the "little fellow" is having a hard time. Sixty-one percent of the reduction provided goes to persons receiving net incomes of $5,000 or less, and of this amount 71 percent goes to individuals with incomes of less than $3,000 a year.

It is a fair bill because it recognizes the unfortunate situation of some of our senior citizens. It gives to taxpayers 65 years of age and older a special $500 exemption, making a total personal exemption of $1,000. Nearly 1,400,000 persons by that provision will be removed from the tax rolls. This is a practical way to attack the gloom of want that haunts some of the aged and infirm.

It is a fair bill because it will help resurrect for the rising generation—war veterans, youngsters going to schools, and others—an incentive to start a small business or enter the professions of law, medicine, and so forth, with the knowledge that they will have an opportunity in the well-proven American way to grow, contribute to their country, and provide jobs.

It is a fair bill because it puts the ax to punitive taxes designed by alien minds and whizzed through subservient Congresses—a tax program that fitted neatly into the New Dealers' master plan to put ceilings over all Americans and make of this a nation of automatons.

For these reasons tax reduction now is imperative. The people in last November's election made it unmistakably plain that they had had enough of the way the Government at Washington was being mismanaged, so they voted for a thorough housecleaning.

Until then they had enthusiastically borne the back-breaking taxes necessary to win the war. Remember those sky-high rates were imposed on the almost annual increases in taxes since 1933.

I hope the Democratic Members of Congress will join the Republicans in reversing the trend of higher and higher taxes, because it is the right thing to do.

For years we Republicans have been warning that the short-haired women and long-haired men of alien minds in the administrative branch of the Government were trying to wreck the American way of life and install a hybrid oligarchy at Washington through confiscatory taxation.

I am glad to see that President Truman by his recent order for a loyalty test of Government employees recognizes as sound the warnings by our Speaker MARTIN and other Republican leaders these many years against the un-American infiltration of the Democratic administration.

Let us all hope that the President will follow through in cleaning out these rascals. Let us also hope that the President, though he acted belatedly on his loyalty test, will see the wisdom of the Republican Party in giving the people immediate relief from a tax levy that cannot be defended in peacetime.

Through enactment of this tax bill our country will be strengthened for its heavy responsibilities in a troubled world. When Congress votes a reduction in taxes it will give new hope in all the peace-loving nations of the world. It will be an inspiration to those countries that are now struggling to reach the highway of prosperity and happiness because they know that their hope lies in a solvent and prosperous America.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will advise the gentleman from Minnesota that he has consumed 46 minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I shall endeavor to state my position in respect to the pending bill, as did my distinguished colleague from Minnesota, although he spent more of his time defending than explaining the bill. It will be my purpose to discuss the bill and its effects on taxation in the United States and not discuss tax laws in Australia, Czechoslovakia, and Spitzbergen.

Mr. Chairman, it is with considerable regret that I find myself unable to support the pending bill. I sincerely wish that it were a measure that I could support. During the years when I was chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, every effort was made to keep politics out of tax legislation. Revenue bills were drafted with the fullest cooperation with minority Members, and very rarely, if ever, was a tax problem decided along party lines. Instead it was our earnest effort to formulate fiscal policies and write our tax bills strictly on the merits of the issues as developed by the witnesses before the committee and the technical experts of the Treasury and the Staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. Moreover, it was our usual practice to set aside sufficient time for public hearings to enable all interested parties to present their views. Only after receipt of this testimony, and consideration of the advice of our technical experts in executive session, did we proceed to draft a tax bill.

The former well-known practice of the Committee on Ways and Means while under Democratic control is related in order to point out the drastic change in the origin and consideration of H. R. 1. This tax bill seems to be predicated upon promises made in the 1946 campaign rather than upon analysis of the fiscal and economic conditions necessary to be taken into account in formulating a sound tax policy.

But even more significant, and of real personal concern to me, is the precedent established by the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means in rushing through a tax bill without opportunity for adequate study and consideration by all the members of the committee.

While I have the greatest respect for my friend, the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, as well as all the members of our committee, I can only view with alarm this departure from precedent in precluding the full membership of the committee in the preparation of revenue legislation. This departure from precedent was carried even further by the majority membership of the committee in setting aside only 2 days for public hearings, and in hand-picking the only two witnesses permitted to testify, other than Treasury officials.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. My good friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], is always fair and affable and generous.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. But I do at this point want the RECORD to show that we did not bring any witnesses, outside of the Treasury, before the committee except two very outstanding Democrats, both of whom endorsed the action of the committee 100 percent.

Mr. DOUGHTON. If the gentleman was never more accurate in some of his statements or his consistency, I would pity him. I do not like to get into personalities, but I am reliably informed that the key witness, who was handpicked and brought here at the gentleman's invitation, is a registered Republican voter in New York City. I do not think that can be challenged.

Mr. KNUTSON. Well, he has seen the light, then.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am informed he never has voted, at least in the last 15 or 16 years, for a single Democrat. I do not know about the other one. If the gentleman challenges a statement of mine, he ought to be careful.

Mr. KNUTSON. I should gladly state that a reformed Democrat makes an excellent Republican.

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman means a renegade.

This exclusion, over the protests of the minority, of other witnesses fully as informed and learned in tax matters as the gentlemen selected is something entirely new in the history of the Committee on Ways and Means in recent years. Historically, it has become the custom of the House to entrust the drafting of tax bills to the committee on the theory that revenue legislation is too complex to be satisfactorily amended and perfected on the floor of the House, and because it was known that tax bills were reported only after the fullest, fairest, and politically impartial consideration by the members of the committee. Consequently, the practice of considering tax bills under a closed rule has developed. The bill, unlike any tax measure reported to this House in recent years during Democratic control, is, in my opinion, nothing more than a hurriedly conceived, untimely, discriminatory, and unsound patchwork of political expediency.

Mr. Chairman, to remove any possible doubt as to my views on tax reduction, let me say at the outset that the Democratic members of the committee have a clear and convincing record of reducing taxes when it is practicable to do so. I refer to the Revenue Act of 1945—the most recent major tax legislation passed by the Congress. The 1945 bill was designed to aid both individuals and business in the difficult transition from war to peace. It gave me great personal satisfaction to be able to aid initiating this first step to reduce wartime taxes and in reporting the bill to the House. That act made major reductions in both corporation taxes and individual income taxes, and a minor reduction in excise taxes. The excess-profits tax, capital-stock tax, and declared value excess-profits tax were repealed, and corporate surtax rates were reduced, with a net tax benefit estimated at that time at $3,100,000,000. Individual tax liabilities were reduced by an estimated $2,800,000,000, through an increase in normal tax exemptions, a reduction in individual income-tax rates and also removal of $12,000,000 low-income taxpayers from the rolls. In the field of excises, the use tax on automobiles and boats was repealed.

A good deal is said about low-income taxpayers and great concern is expressed for them. My friend becomes a fountain and his eyes become great rivers of water pleading for the low-income taxpayers, but he fails to remind you that in the 1945 bill we removed from the tax rolls 12,000,000 low-income taxpayers, while in the bill under consideration not a single low-income taxpayer is removed from the tax rolls, other than some of those over 65 years of age. I suppose they had John D. Rockefeller and Henry Ford, Sr., in mind when they made that reduction. We removed 12,000,000 low-income taxpayers from the tax rolls, those unable to pay taxes, but they do not remove a single one from the tax rolls.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. Does the gentleman believe it is a good idea?

Mr. DOUGHTON. It is not a question of what I believe, it is a question of what we know.

Mr. KEAN. Does the gentleman believe we should continue to take people off the tax rolls so that only a very few pay taxes?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I do not. We have already gone as far as we can at this time.

Mr. KEAN. The gentleman is criticizing us for not having taken people off the tax rolls.

Mr. DOUGHTON. When the condition of the Treasury and our national economy justify it then the first consideration should go to the low-income taxpayers.

Mr. KEAN. That is just what we have done here.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Oh, no.

Mr. KEAN. Oh, yes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Somebody spoke about the minority members voting for the amendment offered by my distinguished friend. We did that to reduce the inequities as much as possible, but the gentleman knows and my good friend from Minnesota also knows, the minority members voted against reporting the amended bill. We were trying to improve it some, bad as it was.

The estimated amount of the over-all tax reduction, which was spread over the entire tax structure, at present income levels amounts to a cut of $9,000,000,000. This should prove conclusively that we, the minority members, were interested in encouraging risk capital and business incentive in the difficult period of transition from war to peace, and we still are interested in these objectives.

And it also gives me much satisfaction to recall that the revenue bill of 1945 was drafted in the committee room with the full participation of all the members—majority and minority alike. As further proof of my sincere and earnest efforts to keep politics out of tax legislation—please indulge me for a moment regarding my record in this House on the Revenue Act of 1943. You will recall that the 1943 bill, which became law in 1944, was passed by both Houses of Congress after the usual careful consideration by the Committee on Ways and Means and the Committee on Finance. When presented for Executive approval, it was vetoed by the President because it did not carry as great increases as he had recommended. At that time I had a most unpleasant decision to make bu. the final answer was to support the work of the committee and the action of the Congress. I had to break with my own administration on that issue to support passage over the veto of the President.

It is because I see this splendid spirit of nonpartisan cooperation in the Committee on Ways and Means being destroyed that I feel it necessary to advise the House that H. R. 1 has not received the customary, careful, nonpartisan consideration, and should not be hastily passed.

Mr. Chairman, it has always seemed axiomatic that a person heavily in debt was expected to pay something toward his debts when he was able to do so. It had been my understanding that the same principles were applicable to Government.

A sound fiscal policy at this time calls for the following priorities: First, the budget should be balanced; second, a substantial payment toward debt retirement should be made; third, and only after fulfillment of the first two objectives, taxes should be reduced.

The majority report at page 1 states that—

> A reduction estimated at $3,800,000,000 is provided in this bill, leaving between $2,300,000,000 and $3,800,000,000 available for debt retirement.

Upon what assumptions do they give us these figures? Are they reliable assumptions? Certainly not.

Section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, enacted with a bipartisan support, prescribed the method for establishing a legislative budget. It provides that—

> If the estimated receipts exceed the estimated expenditures, such report shall contain a recommendation for a reduction in the public debt.

No mention in the act is made of tax reduction. It is significant that this act of Congress fixes joint responsibility, a responsibility rejected by the majority in its headlong dash toward tax reduction.

At the present moment the conference committee on the legislative budget has had but one meeting, at which exactly nothing was accomplished, and I seriously doubt whether anything will come from a subsequent meeting, if one is ever held.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I am glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. Am I to understand that the gentleman objects to the treatment we have given to taxpayers in the lower brackets?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No. If this bill is enacted, of course, I am glad if they are benefited, but my point is that the complaints are not coming from those in the lower brackets. I have not heard a word of complaint from those who pay a small amount of taxes to help defray the expenses of the war and pay some of the interest on the national debt. The complaints I have had are from those in the high income-tax brackets. That is where you will find that the complaints originate.

Mr. KEEFE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to my distinguished friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. KEEFE. In the consideration of this tax bill, has the gentleman received any evidence which convinces him that in the present fiscal year the budget will be balanced and that revenues will exceed expenditures by nearly $2,000,000,000?

Mr. DOUGHTON. No. There is some estimate of that kind, based on the highest possible revenue receipts and the lowest expenditures. It is based on revenue receipts of January 1947, which none of us can give any assurance will be maintained. That is what it is based on.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Will the gentleman please state his question again?

Mr. KEEFE. As the gentleman well knows, I may say I have always taken the position that there should be a balancing of the budget first, then debt retirement, then tax reduction. I would like to know from the gentleman whether or not it is not true that in the current fiscal year 1947, we will not only have a balanced budget but in addition will have created a surplus sufficient not only to provide for some debt retirement, but also to provide for tax reduction.

Mr. DOUGHTON. No one can answer that question. The gentleman thinks it answers itself and that is the reason he asked it, I think; but no one can tell. It is mere guesswork. I say that the estimates made, upon which the gentleman bases his statement that we will have a surplus, are estimates of the highest possible receipts that anyone can imagine and the lowest possible expenditures. They take both extremes, the extremes on receipts on the one hand, the highest they can get, and disbursements on the other hand just as low as they can get them. Now, I will ask my friend if he thinks it is safe to legislate on that hypothesis.

Mr. KEEFE. May I ask the gentleman this question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Certainly.

Mr. KEEFE. The gentleman says this bill relates to fiscal 1948.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes.

Mr. KEEFE. As I understand the bill, it proposes to relate back to January 1, 1947. Is that not right?

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes. It is retroactive and that is one objection I have to it. It makes it that much more difficult. But you cannot tell, and the gentleman knows you cannot tell, what will be the situation within the next few months. It will change, perhaps very greatly. The estimates in the last 2 months have varied something like $2,000,000,000. They may go down within the next 2 months. Is that not a possibility?

Mr. KEEFE. Yes; I think it is. The whole situation is based upon projecting into the future the estimates which are based upon trends.

Mr. DOUGHTON. May I ask the gentleman this question? Does the gentleman think it is best to proceed recklessly in such matters, or cautiously?

Mr. KEEFE. I believe we should proceed cautiously. And the reason I have asked the gentleman the question is because, sitting on another committee that has to provide appropriations, we have had certain testimony as to the ideas of expenditures and the ideas of revenue receipts. I may say to the gentleman it has been my understanding from the proof that has come before the committee on which I serve that the Treasury itself has boosted its estimates as to revenues by over $2,000,000,000, and in addition to that, that we will have a balanced budget in the fiscal year 1947.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Let me ask the gentleman this question: He accepts this estimate of the Treasury of the receipts for 1948. Now, is he willing to accept the estimate of the Treasury on the budget, and the expenditures that will be necessary?

Mr. KEEFE. No; I am not willing to.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Of course not, because that disproves the gentleman's position.

Mr. KEEFE. I am not willing to do that.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Of course not. Why do you take the other, then?

Mr. KEEFE. Well, because——

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman must have undergone a change of heart, because I had reason to believe about 10 days ago that the gentleman was definitely opposed to any tax reduction or tax bill at this time. I say, I was led to believe that.

Mr. KEEFE. Now, the gentleman wants to be perfectly fair, I assume.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Yes; I do. The gentleman will not deny that, will he?

Mr. KEEFE. I shall not deny any such statement. I have been quoted publicly in the press and have talked on the radio and everything else, so the gentleman is not expressing anything new as to the gentleman's attitude based upon the real value of a 20-percent cut across the board.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I have great admiration for the gentleman.

Mr. KEEFE. Will the gentleman give me this information——

Mr. DOUGHTON. I will if I have it; yes.

Mr. KEEFE. I am only asking for information, that is all I want.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Perhaps I can give the gentleman information. He is already gifted with understanding, but if I can give him information I will be glad to give him any I have.

Mr. KEEFE. Does the gentleman understand that the reason we claim a balanced budget in 1947 is because of the rescissions that have been made in appropriations plus an unexpected increase in our revenues?

Mr. DOUGHTON. The gentleman talks about rescissions. We are not through with appropriation bills. I think those rescissions the gentleman talks about are more in imagination and extravagant claims than they are in reality, in my opinion. I will get to that a little later.

Mr. KEEFE. I am not talking about reductions in appropriations, I am talking about rescissions, which are quite a different thing.

Mr. DOUGHTON. All right. What does the gentleman mean by rescission?

Mr. KEEFE. I mean the rescission of an appropriation, the canceling of an appropriation that was available for expenditure in 1947. Many of those we rescinded.

Mr. DOUGHTON. What has that got to do with this tax bill?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield that I may ask the gentleman from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield.

Mr. KEEFE. What is the gentleman's question?

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. I wish to ask the gentleman from Wisconsin when he talks about balancing the budget and bringing in a surplus of some $2,000,000,000 to apply against reduction of the public debt, whether the gentleman is agreeable to paying off the terminal-leave bonds if the boys want them now and thus reduce that much of the public debt?

Mr. KEEFE. I am not answering that question now because I do not think that is a matter that is before the Committee at this time. We have voted the gentleman's bill and it is now the law; and I voted for it.

Mr. ROGERS of Florida. But the gentleman will admit that these bonds are a public debt and that they are drawing 2½-percent interest. Will not the gentleman agree that this is a debt that should come before bonds held by people who do not want to part with them?

Mr. KEEFE. I do not think that is a question that is before the Congress.

Mr. DOUGHTON. A direct answer to the question the gentleman has asked as to the balancing of the budget and having a surplus is Section 138 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 for which most of you voted but I did not. It was of course a sugar-coated proposition to increase the salaries of Members but I do not object to that. It was a bi-partisan measure. But this Legislative Reorganization Act prescribed a method of establishing the legislative budget. It provides:

> If the estimate of receipts exceeds the estimate of expenditures, such report shall contain a recommendation for a reduction on the public debt.

No mention whatever is made of tax reduction, not a word. It is significant, I think, that this act of Congress places joint responsibility on the Committee on Ways and Means for debt retirement and that responsibility is now met by the majority by rushing headlong into tax reduction first before they get the legislative budget. Our first responsibility should be the fixing of the limit expenditures, yet the majority party rushes headlong into tax reduction without waiting for the report of the committee. The only budget guide we have is the recommendation sent down by the President. This bill is brought out here, notwithstanding, and hurried through. Now, the majority must be afraid of the report. They do not know what the report will be, they do not know what the budget is going to be, they cannot tell. My good friend from Wisconsin cannot tell. He has labored earnestly, I have no doubt, and I have great respect for those on this side of the House too who are trying to cut down the debt by eliminating unnecessary expenditure of public moneys. I am just as earnest in that as he is so long as proper regard can be had for essential Government services needed by the American people or in their behalf. Up to the present moment the committee of conference on the legislative budget has had but one meeting since we appointed conferees on March 3. What happened since then? The conferees have had but one meeting and absolutely nothing was accomplished. Why not wait? Is not some criticism justified for rushing this tax reduction bill through before we know what the recommendation of this committee is going to be and what will be the size of the budget we may expect for 1948? I would like for some Member to answer that question.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina is recognized for 10 additional minutes.

Mr. DOUGHTON. So to date we have only the President's budget estimates to guide us. Now, I am for every economy measure that can be made consistent with maintenance of the essential functions of Government and fulfillment of our present and prospective international responsibilities and commitments. But can anyone honestly contend that he thinks it practicable, in view of the requirements for relief for devastated areas, not included in the budget, of the amounts recommended by the President for aid to Greece and Turkey, and the active consideration of legislation for benefit payments to agriculture of some $300,000,000, which does not appear in the budget—can anyone actually be so unrealistic as to assume that the amount of the President's budget can be reduced by $6,000,000,000 or even $4,500,000,000, as recommended by the Senate, or even below the President's estimates. I repeat that I am for economy—I voted for the $6,000,000,000 cut in the estimate of the President—but certainly my eyes are not closed to the changes that have come to pass since then.

There is a strong possibility that even the amount included in the President's budget may be exceeded when all of the appropriation bills for the fiscal year 1948 have been passed.

Would it not be far better for the majority and for the entire country to relieve them of their campaign pledges than to plunge our Nation into so hazardous a fiscal policy as H. R. 1 must entail?

In order to reach their conclusion that it now is possible to reduce taxes and to balance the budget, the majority members of the Committee on Ways and Means use as the basis for estimated receipts for fiscal year 1948 the current high rate of income payments to individuals—the highest in our Nation's history. In contrast, they close their eyes to the facts of life in a war-torn world and to our obligations as a victorious power, and profess to believe that the drastic cuts of $4,500,000,000 to $6,000,000,000 still are attainable. Assuming the highest national income and a minimum level of expenditures obviously unattainable, the majority eke out a bare $3,000,000,000 for debt retirement in the event H. R. 1 should be enacted.

On the precedent of the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill, as it passed the House, the $37,500,000,000 requested by the President would only be cut to $36,000,000,000.

The start has been made on the precedent of the first appropriation bill passed by the House. I have not considered the one acted on yesterday. All those 65 years of age and those who have paid taxes through withholding or otherwise would have to have refunds, and that was not estimated in the present budget; not taken into consideration at all. A lot of these things open our eyes, and I think we had better look and listen and think as we go along before we just go blindly ahead and take the responsibility for action. The credit of the Government and the solvency of the Government and the interest of 85,000,000 bondholders are all involved. There is something more than politics involved in this, or redeeming campaign promises.

A total of a billion dollars not included in the President's budget, for relief, aid to Greece and Turkey, and additions to the farm program would raise the total expenditures for 1948 to $37,000,000,000. The most recent estimates for the Treasury Department are for a revenue yield of $39,000,000,000, in which event $2,000,000,000 would be available for debt retirement in 1948 under the present law. Passage of H. R. 1 would reduce revenues by approximately $4,000,000,000 and would leave us with a deficit of $2,000,000,000 and nothing to pay on the debt.

Where are the spokesmen for better business in government? Who are the reckless advocates who would speed us toward insolvency—when the war-incurred debt is over six times the prewar level? Are these the same Republicans who prate about a solvent America? Is this the party which pledged itself in its 1944 platform in these words: "We shall reduce that debt as soon as economic conditions make it possible." Does the majority now propose to break faith with the 85,000,000 war bondholders to grant special consideration to the 48,000,000 taxpayers?

I submit in all sincerity, if under the highest national income in our history, tax reduction is given priority over debt retirement, when can we hope to begin payment on the public debt? I submit that sound fiscal policy for the American Nation at the present critical hour is but poorly served by the determination of the majority to slash blindly at the Government's revenues as is done in H. R. 1.

To date, hopes of a balanced Federal budget still are but hopes. Only when payments are made on the debt from the proceeds of taxation will we be able to feel that the Nation actually is on its way out of the fiscal wilderness into which the war plunged us.

The majority, in their ill-advised rush to slash taxes at this time, find themselves making contradictory assertions in their report on H. R. 1. As I have indicated, their conclusion that we can both balance the budget, pass H. R. 1, and still make a payment of $3,000,000,000 on the public debt, is based upon an assumption of a level of expenditures that cannot reasonably be realized. It also assumes that the national income will remain at the January 1947 peak—the highest in history.

A recession of business, as I will mention later, was mentioned by one of the key witnesses called by the majority before our committee. He said a recession was not at all improbable. When the Democrats are in power and business is bad, they call it recession, and the Republicans call it depression. When the Republicans are in power and business is bad, they call it recession, and the Democrats call it depression. That is the difference.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman will recall that both the distinguished witnesses we had before the committee, former Under Secretaries of the Treasury, Mr. Magill and Mr. Hanes, ventured the statement that there was probably a recession ahead of us, and being good Democrats they used the word "recession." Of course, if the Republicans were in, they would call it a depression. At any rate, what I was trying to say was that they both said positively that a tax reduction at this time might avert a recession, or at least soften the blow.

Mr. DOUGHTON. They labored trying to justify their position. I have never seen a man labor as Dr. Magill did. He first talked the round system and then the flat. When they pinned him down and made him do it—you had to pin him down and make him do it—he would talk about a depression, and he would also say that if you could only do one, make a reduction in the debt or reduce taxes, you should have debt reduction. But this bill is predicated on the other assumption of continued high levels of income. Certainly if you pass this bill, you get tax reduction, whether you get any debt payment or not. You just reverse what Dr. Magill's philosophy was; the record shows that.

I cannot yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. KNUTSON. I will give the gentleman additional time. I will give him anything I have.

Mr. DOUGHTON. I hope the gentleman will agree to an extension of time for debate tomorrow so that we can have more time for Members who desire to speak.

Mr. KNUTSON. Certainly we do not want to deprive the House and the gallery of this great spectacle.

Mr. DOUGHTON. These hypotheses developed on page 7 of the report, however, are controverted on page 11 by the argument there made that the passage of H. R. 1 is necessary to provide additional spendable consumer income and incentives for business expansion because of the fear of a recession.

If a recession is feared by the majority, then how can they advise tax reduction based upon the peak levels of national income? Is not this the most reckless sort of fiscal management and almost certain to result in a further deficit?

If we enact H. R. 1, it means that we are departing from a policy of safety and fiscal prudence. The sound and intelligent policy briefly is this: To balance the Federal budget not in theory, not in expectation, but in undeniable fact; when revenues are sufficient to balance the budget and have produced a surplus of revenues over expenditures, to apply that surplus first and foremost to reduction of the public debt; after payments of substantial amount have been made on the debt from surplus revenues, to determine from careful and thorough study of the national economy and of the entire tax structure, including excise, estate and gift, and corporate income taxes, what downward revisions of taxes could and should be made.

Has the budget been balanced? No Member of this House can answer that question in the affirmative.

No report has reached this House on the legislative budget called for under the Legislative Reorganization Act.

Only a beginning has been made at completing congressional action on the appropriation bills for the fiscal year 1948.

The level of the Government's tax collections at the present moment is high; employment remains most satisfactory; the national income is unprecedented. Yet doubts still cloud the future for the average man. Yes, even the majority of the committee have their doubts for they speak about a recession and their key witnesses at the hearings expressed fear of a possible recession. On the other hand the fabric of wholesale and retail prices is yet far from stabilization; inflation threats still confront us at almost every turn.

I am mystified as never before in my long experience in the halls and chambers of this Capitol that under circumstances such as now prevail over the Nation and the world, men with a record of having cried loudly in days gone by for conservative fiscal policies should at the moment be pursuing a course so plainly unsound.

The majority expresses the hope—and that is the best case that possibly can be made of it—that the budget will be balanced; they also express the hope that a payment of some size or other can be made on the public debt. The minority, however, calls upon the Congress to pause and reflect. In view of present uncertain economic conditions and the great uncertainty of the amount of expenditures for 1948, especially when we consider the size of the public debt, it is our view that tax reduction at this time, as proposed in the bill under consideration, cannot be justified.

Tax reduction should not be made without an over-all study and revision of the entire tax structure. The Secretary of the Treasury recently called the attention of the Committee on Ways and Means to 16 important items of postwar tax revision which have been under study. They include issues recognized by both sides of this House as vital. Among them are such issues as the overhauling of our schedules of excise taxes; the removal of inequities in the treatment of family income under the individual income tax; allowances for life insurance premiums and other forms of savings, also under the individual income tax; the double taxation of dividends under the corporate and individual income taxes; the averaging of incomes over good and bad years; the taxation of American corporations doing business in foreign lands.

Substantial losses of revenues may be involved in any attempt to solve the problems of tax reform which these issues present. H. R. 1, with its heavy cut into the present yield of the individual income tax, may, and probably will, if it becomes law, preclude indefinitely any further reduction, and so make it impossible to carry out any equitable, comprehensive tax revision.

The point is, Mr. Chairman, that nobody knows with any reasonable degree of certainty what our expenditures will be; nor what the revenues for 1948 are likely to be. A $10,000,000,000 drop in national income would reduce revenues by $3,000,000,000, and a $20,000,000,000 income drop by nearly $6,000,000,000. When we consider that the highest prewar national income was somewhat less than $100,000,000,000, some reduction from the 1947 level of $166,000,000,000 appears not unlikely. It is important to bear in mind that even a $10,000,000,000 decline in national income would wipe out entirely the margin which the majority contends would still be available for debt retirement under H. R. 1, assuming a five and one-fourth to six-billion-dollar cut in the President's budget, which I do not believe possible of realization.

When the state of the Government finances clearly warrants tax reduction, downward revision of the individual income-tax rates merits the fullest consideration. But the broad field of the individual income tax presents many important opportunities for revision and improvement, wholly aside from the question of rates. H. R. 1 has been written without reference to faults of the present law outside the rate schedules—and wholly, of course, without reference to challenging demands for excise-tax adjustments and far-reaching changes in the taxation of corporations.

In conclusion, the passage of H. R. 1, in my opinion, would be a great mistake, for this bill embarks upon a reckless, ill-timed, and ill-considered fiscal policy. It cuts taxes at a time when the public is best able to pay, and when any possible budgetary surplus should be applied against the public debt. Only when the budget has been balanced and a substantial amount set aside for debt retirement, should we consider tax reduction. And when that happy day arrives, whether later in this session of Congress or at some later time, instead of concentrating solely on rate reduction in the individual income tax, let us proceed to make a careful and comprehensive study of the Federal tax structure to provide the most equitable, permanent, peacetime tax law possible. Taxpayers confronted with the obligation of repayment of a $260,000,000,000 national debt are entitled to the most equitable and the soundest fiscal structure in our power to devise.

We should, therefore, recommit H. R. 1 for further study by the Committee on Ways and Means. We would do well to heed the admonition contained in an editorial in the Washington News of March 21, 1947, which stated:

Taxpayers in all brackets would be much better off if Congress held to the present tax rates this year, and used all surplus revenues collected to start paying off the public debt. With prices and living costs still rising, due largely to the Government's continued spending of borrowed money, this is no time to cut taxes. Now may be a good time to start working on a sensible tax cut to become effective next year, after the budget has been balanced and prices stabilized.

We certainly do not know, at present, enough about the subject on which we are attempting to legislate. We should defer action on tax reduction until more of the appropriation bills are acted upon by the Congress—both House and Senate. Until we know more about the consequences of the action the Congress will likely take respecting foreign commitments and obligations, we should not take precipitate action that might throw the budget out of balance for 1948 and would certainly make any substantial repayments on the public debt impossible.

[From the Washington (D. C.) News of March 21, 1947]

TAXATION FOR VOTES ONLY

House Republican leaders have agreed on a tax reduction bill. It provides:

A 30-percent cut for those with taxable income up to $1,000, comprising—and not by coincidence—the largest number of voters.

A cut of 20 percent for the next largest number of voters, those with taxable income between $1,000 and $302,000.

And 10.5 percent for the handful whose income is above $302,000 and who are presumed to vote Republican anyway.

This bill, if passed, will diminish the Government's revenues by $3,840,000,000 at a time when the Government's debt is $260,000,000,000, when the budget is still unbalanced, when demands for national security expenditures at home and around the world are rising.

Taxpayers in all brackets would be much better off if Congress held to the present tax rates this year, and used all surplus revenues collected to start paying off the public debt. With prices and living costs still rising, due largely to the Government's continued spending of borrowed money, this is no time to cut taxes. Now may be a good time to start working on a sensible tax cut to become effective next year, after the budget has been balanced and prices stabilized.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Post of March 23, 1947]

ILL-TIMED TAX RELIEF

The revised Knutson tax-reduction bill reported out by the Ways and Means Committee is an improvement over the earlier plan to make a uniform 20-percent cut in taxes for all but a very few rich taxpayers. The present bill would provide a substantial measure of relief for individuals in the low-income tax brackets without dropping millions from the tax rolls by liberalizing exemptions. For the time being, retention of a broadly based system of income taxation affords much-needed popular support for retrenchment that will make it feasible to increase personal exemptions at a later date, despite the resultant large loss of revenue.

Bad timing, however, remains a formidable objection to the Knutson bill. From present indications the measure will be railroaded through the House this week before the House and Senate have reached an agreement as to the amount of over-all reductions in expenditure to be aimed at. The House and Senate are also at odds concerning the question whether debt reduction should take priority over tax reduction. The Senate has already allocated $2,600,000,000 of the expected 1948 surplus to tax reduction. Since enactment of the Knutson bill would result in an estimated revenue loss of $3,800,000,000 during the next fiscal year, the possibility of combining these two objectives seems remote. Moreover, the Knutson bill makes the proposed tax reductions retroactive to January 1, 1946, thereby taking a substantial slice out of the revenues of the current fiscal year. Probably the result would be to dash the hopes recently voiced by Secretary Snyder of achieving a balanced budget for the fiscal year 1947.

We had supposed that the Republicans were even more eager to balance the budget than to provide tax relief. At any rate, promises of tax reduction have always been predicated on a balancing of the budget. Yet Speaker MARTIN has indorsed the Knutson bill in toto and is urging its passage as evidence that the party is keeping faith with the American people.

We trust that the Senate will be less rash and take cognizance of Representative DOUGHTON'S warning that "we very easily could get into the red" if Congress votes for tax reductions without adequate knowledge of expenditure requirements. There is a good chance that the Senate will at least insist on dropping the retroactive feature of the Knutson bill. And it is to be hoped that it will delay final action on the rest of the tax-reduction program until more information is available concerning the Government's future commitments. By making tax reduction a partisan issue the Republicans have been tempted to act precipitately and have forfeited an opportunity to present the people with a balanced, well-timed system of tax relief that would have earned them the thanks of all the people.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is unnecessary for me to say that we are here to consider H. R. 1, a tax reduction bill. I realize that it comes as a shock to my New Deal friends on my right, because for the last 14 years they have been accustomed to bringing in, in a great majority of cases of 17 total tax bills, bills to raise revenue. Apparently, it has become a habit to spend and tax and spend.

My background is a little different, of course, than some of those who are here. I came here as a young Congressman nearly 30 years ago, just after the First World War. I remember very vividly the conditions that prevailed in this country at that time. In the first place, the labor situation was quite desperate. It was estimated at that time that some six or seven million people were idle. There was no smoke coming out of the chimneys of the factories of this country. My town is a small town. The men in it were idle. Not only that, but soup kitchens were being erected to take care of the people. An election came along, much like the one we had in November. The people realized that we had been on a great spending spree during the war. They realized also that except for that war, the First World War, things were bogging down completely before the war came along to open up the factories to manufacture war materials. They made up their minds it was time for a change and they made a change.

There were some very able men in the Wilson administration. I do not think anyone will question the ability of Secretary Carter Glass or Mr. Houston, and certainly they would not question the ability of Mr. Coolidge. Those men were recommending, as a postwar proposition, a terrific retrenchment in governmental expenditures. I remember the loud howl that went up as a result of it, but the Republicans cut to the bone. It was a tough job. They thought we were going to ruin the country because we were cutting so deep. They said we would not be able to pay anything on the national debt, that we would retrench so much it would ruin the country. I remember it very well and there are a few men here today who will remember the opposition of the Democrats to the program of tax reduction. But after the retrenchment and during the retrenchment, when the new Congress came into power, taxes were reduced. They were reduced moderately, as they are in this bill. The stimulation to business enterprises was almost instantaneous. Almost overnight the factories started to open. Furnaces that had been dead were again supplied with coal, and it was not long before you saw idle men starting back to the factories. I am telling you they were a happy lot. There was one tax reduction and that was the effect of it. The revenue increased, for some reason or other, and it increased to a very marked degree. That was in 1921. And, much to the surprise of everybody, the budget was balanced in 1921. Then they reduced taxes again. The reduction in 1921 was for 1922 and 1923. Then another bill came along reducing taxes in 1924. Of course, they were not paying taxes currently then, and they reduced the taxes by 25 percent, applicable to 1923. Still the revenues increased. It became possible to pay a billion dollars on the national debt as a result of increased revenue from lowering the taxes, not only a billion dollars one year but it kept up every year over a period of 10 years. That was not all. Industry increased, labor's wages increased, farmers who had been bankrupt down in the Southwest came to Washington to thank the President of the United States for what he had done for the farmers. That was true of four governors from the deep South. They were not worried about tax reduction, not at all; they were getting all the benefits of tax reduction. The tax was reduced four times, again in 1926 and again in 1928. Still the revenue increased. And every year from 1921, of course, the budget was balanced and there was a surplus for debt reduction.

And you recall that we had the program of building the hospitals for the soldiers of World War I, and we carried on housing projects without the Government interfering with it, and we built units enough to take care of everybody. We did not have any of these controls that create scarcity of materials, not at all.

We have now come down to the question following this war after having the experience of lowering the taxes and paying a billion dollars a year on the national debt for 10 years, reducing the national debt from $20,000,000,000 to $10,000,000,000——

Mr. CLARK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. In just a moment. I wish to proceed. I will yield a little later, but I have very little time.

Times were splendid in this country. There never were 10 years in which this country enjoyed such wonderful prosperity as we enjoyed then, with wages up, not down. The people have again registered their will that the Republicans take over in the hour of the Republic's peril. I realize that our background as a party is considerably different than the one on the other side. The Republican Party can never be charged with having overlooked the necessity of protecting this Republic. The Republican has never been a party of slavery and it is not going to be a party of tax slavery. Physical slavery is one thing, but tax slavery can become almost as bad. We had to carry on a great fight, a deplorable fight in order that millions might not be enslaved. We must now see to it that we are not enslaved by a tax system that is crushing to hope or incentive. The tax load during the present war has become unbearable. Men are not going to have any initiative to go into enterprise if 85 cents out of every dollar they earn is taken from them by the Government.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. In just a few minutes.

Many a GI has already tried to start in business but he has found it useless under present conditions. Let me illustrate my statement that these high taxes are sapping initiative. A man earning $12,000 a year pays almost 50 cents out of every dollar to the Government. He really does not have any initiative to earn any more because if he gets up in the high figures paid managerial experts who are responsible for creating pay rolls, taxes will take 75 cents out of every dollar he earns.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield, but I would rather not.

Mr. KNUTSON. It might be well to call attention to the fact that over half of the States have income-tax laws of their own.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me now?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes; I will yield.

Mr. LYNCH. The gentleman has described the glorious days from 1920 to 1928 but forgot to go on. I wonder if he would describe 1929, 1930, and 1931?

Mr. REED of New York. Yes; I will be very glad to mention them. It is a fact that there was a world-wide depression at that time. I do remember that it became necessary for Mr. Hoover to borrow $2,000,000,000, and it was all in recoverable loans, and every dollar of it was recovered under the New Deal; but every dollar of it was spent by the New Deal and never applied to the discharge of those debts. You boondoggled it away. That is the way you have operated all the time.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. No; I cannot at this time.

Mr. DINGELL. They did not recover the Dawes millions. Those were stinking dollars, too.

Mr. REED of New York. They restored all of the banks to solvency.

Speaking on the question of incentive to go into business, I received a letter which I will put in the RECORD. It comes from a Democratic city; it comes from the State of New York; it comes from the member of a prominent firm. This gentleman states:

DEAR SIR: Let an old line, anti-New Deal Democrat, who never voted for Roosevelt on any of the four occasions when he ran for President, tell you how the present income-tax dispensation works out in his particular case, resulting in diminishing returns for the Government:

1. Weary of working largely to turn my earnings over to the collector, my firm's partnership articles have been amended, effective January 1 of last year, so as to cut in two my share of the firm's net profits, the other one-half thereof being apportioned, by way of bonus, among those employees whose income-tax brackets are lower than mine.

2. When asked some time ago in a questionnaire put out by the magazine Fortune as to whether I would work 2 or 3 hours per day longer if it would result in doubling my income, the answer was emphatically in the negative, on the ground that any such increase would go mainly to the tax collector.

3. As a voting trustee of stock in a corporation which operates at a loss, I have declined to accept remuneration, and am rendering my services free of charge, since a large percentage of such compensation, if paid to me, would be diverted to the Public Treasury from the corporation which has no taxable net income.

4. For the same reason, I function biennially without compensation as a member of an examining committee of a tax-exempt corporation.

5. Before last year's first break in the bull market, I could have realized a profit of some $44,000 on securities purchased in the past few years, but as $11,000 would have gone to the collector under the guise of an income tax on capital gains, I will hold the securities until they go below the prices which I paid for them before submitting to any such extortionate tax.

6. This week I shall be in receipt of a quite substantial sum upon the retirement of preferred stock of Electric Bond & Share, with an inevitable capital-gains tax to pay next year on the transaction. The problem of what to do with the proceeds of the retirement I am solving by leaving the same on deposit in my bank account where my bank will probably loan it out at seven-eighths of 1 percent. Certainly there is no incentive for me to try to invest the proceeds in other securities yielding the current low return, and whatever small income may accrue to me from reinvestment would be to a great extent handed over to the tax collector. So, what's the use?

Perhaps a revenue-minded tax court, circuit court of appeals, and Supreme Court will hold me to a tax on what might have been payable to me under items 3 and 4 (above), on the theory that the power to command income creates a tax liability (Harrison v. Schaffner, 312 U. S. 579, 582).

Or on the ground that the dominant purpose of the income tax is "the taxation of income to those who earn or otherwise create the right to receive it and enjoy the benefit of it when paid" (Helvering v. Horst, 311 U. S. 112, 119; Com'r v. Tower, 327 U. S. 280, 283).

Such being my situation, it is likely that there are many others similarly situated who, but for the existing tax rates, would be disposed to invest their funds and direct their business activities in such a way as to contribute toward the increased production which the country's economic well-being so sorely needs.

Do not stop to reply to this letter.

Yours truly.

Of course, I have removed his name. I shall write to him, however, even though he does not ask me to do so. The last speaker was worrying much about this question of reducing expenditures and complaining about the ceiling that has been fixed. I am not going into that in great detail, but let me say that I hold in my hand print No. 2 of the Postwar Economic Policy and Planning Committee, under House Resolution 60. There are some very eminent citizens on this committee, including Members of the House. I certainly have great respect for all of them: Mr. Cooper, Mr. Walter, Mr. Zimmerman, Mr. Voorhis of California, Mr. Murdock, Mr. Lynch, Mr. O'Brien of Illinois, Mr. Fogarty, Mr. Worley, Mr. Gifford, Mr. Reece of Tennessee, Mr. Welch, Mr. Wolverton, Mr. Hope of Kansas, Mr. Wolcott, Mr. LeFevre, and Mr. Simpson of Illinois.

Then, they had some of the very ablest economists, a large number of them: Mr. Marion B. Folsom, director of staff; Henry B. Arthur, economist; and A. D. H. Kaplan, economist. Mr. William Y. Elliott, Mr. Edwin B. George, Mr. Robinson Newcomb, Mr. Theodore W. Schultz, Mr. Vergil D. Reed, Mr. C. A. Sienkiewicz, Mr. Lloyd A. Metzler, Mr. Robert J. Landry, all consultants.

I find in here some very interesting material where that committee recommends the retrenchment of expenditures down to $30,000,000,000, and payment on the public debt and the reduction of taxes. Now, that committee, I thought, was worthy of following. I studied these reports from end to end because of the high character of the men on here and the economists which they had, and I knew that there were no more able men in the House than these men, and that they were selected for their ability and high character.

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. WORLEY. I believe, if the gentleman will read that report carefully, he will find that the committee recommended that the budget be balanced before any tax reduction was made.

Mr. REED of New York. I do not have the time to read it here on the floor for the RECORD but I will ask unanimous consent when we are in the House, as part of my remarks, to insert the material to which I have referred.

Be it enacted, etc., that this act may be cited as the "Individual Income Tax Reduction Act of 1947."

SEC. 2. Reduction in Normal Tax and Surtax on Individuals.

(a) Reduction in normal tax on individuals: Section 11 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the normal tax on individuals) is hereby amended by striking out "5 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "24 percent", and by adding at the end of such section a new sentence to read as follows: "If aggregate of tentative normal tax and tentative surtax is not more than $279.17, see section 12 (i), and if more than $250,000, see section 12 (g)."

(b) Reduction in surtax on individuals: Section 12 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to the rate of surtax on individuals) is hereby amended by striking out "5 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "24 percent."

Section 2 (a), (b), Internal Revenue Code 11; Internal Revenue Code 12 (b): The Revenue Act of 1945 granted a 5-percent reduction. The further reduction of 20 percent granted by the bill, applied to the tax now in effect, makes the aggregate deduction 24 percent. Five percent plus 20 percent multiplied by 95 percent equals 24 percent.

(c) Tentative tax more than $250,000: Section 12 (g) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to tax on large incomes) is hereby amended to read as follows:

"(g) Tentative tax more than $250,000: If the aggregate of the tentative normal tax under section 11 and the tentative surtax under subsection (b) of this section is more than $250,000, the combined normal tax and surtax shall not be less than such aggregate reduced by the sum of (1) 24 percent of the first $250,000 thereof plus (2) 15 percent of the amount thereof in excess of $250,000, but in no event shall the combined normal tax and surtax exceed 76½ percent of the net income of the taxpayer for the taxable year. In the application of this subsection, the combined normal tax and surtax shall be computed without regard to the credits provided in sections 31, 32, and 35."

Section 2 (c), Internal Revenue Code 12 (g): Two hundred and fifty thousand dollars is the existing tax on a net income (after credits) of $302,395.61. The 15 percent reduction includes the 5 percent reduction granted under the Revenue Act of 1945 and the 10.526 percent reduction under the bill. Five percent plus 10.526 percent multiplied by 95 percent equals 15 percent.

The lower percentage of reduction allowed where the tax is $250,000 or more prevents the tax burden under the bill from falling below what it was in the prewar period 1936–39.

The existing tax burden is limited to 85½ percent of the net income. The bill reduces this limit to 76½ percent. This 76½ percent is arrived at by reducing the existing 85½ percent by the same percentage thereof—10.526 percent plus—as is applied in reduction of the existing tax in these high income brackets—$302,395.61 and above.

The credits provided in sections 31, 32, and 35 of the Internal Revenue Code are, respectively, for: Foreign taxes; taxes withheld at the source—on tax-free covenant bond interest and on payments to nonresident aliens; and taxes withheld at the source on wages.

(d) Tentative tax not more than $279.17: Section 12 of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"(i) Tentative tax not more than $279.17:

"(1) If the aggregate of the tentative normal tax under section 11 and the tentative surtax under subsection (b) of this section is not more than $200, the combined normal tax and surtax shall not be greater than such aggregate reduced by 33⅓ percent thereof.

"(2) If the aggregate of the tentative normal tax under section 11 and the tentative surtax under subsection (b) of this section is more than $200 but not more than $279.17, the combined normal tax and the surtax shall not be greater than such aggregate reduced by $67.

"(3) In the application of this subsection, the combined normal tax and surtax shall be computed without regard to the credits provided in sections 31, 32, and 35."

Section 2 (d), Internal Revenue Code 12 (i): Thirty-three and one-third percent is the sum of 5 percent—the reduction already in effect—and 28½ percent—the 30-percent reduction under the bill applied to the existing basis of 95 percent.

Two hundred dollars is the tax on a net income of $1,000—after credits—before either the previous 5 percent reduction or the reduction under the bill.

Two hundred seventy-nine dollars and seventeen cents is the amount of which 24 percent is $67. This $67 is 33⅓ percent of $200—the tax on $1,000 before any reduction.

A reduction of 24 percent based on $279.17 amounts to $67. Since $279.17 is the tax—before any reduction—on $1,395.85, the effect of Internal Revenue Code 12 (i) (2), proposed to be added by section 2 (d) of the bill, is to give a net income of that amount the same reduction as a net of $1,000. Otherwise, the reduction for net incomes between $1,000 and $1,395.85—the exact figure is $1,395.83⅓—would be less than the reduction for net income of $1,000.

(e) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments made by this section shall be applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. For treatment of taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, see section 6.

Section 2 (e): The effect of this subsection and of section 6 is to make the reductions under the bill effective January 1, 1947. If that date falls within a taxable year—it would rarely do so because there are only a very few individuals on a fiscal-year basis—the tax under the bill is the sum of proportionate parts of tax under existing law and the tax under the bill. The apportionment is on the basis of the number of days of the taxable year which are governed by the old law and the number which will be governed by the new.

SEC. 3. Individuals With Adjusted Gross Incomes of Less Than $5,000.

(a) In general: The tax table in section 400 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to optional tax on individuals with adjusted gross incomes of less than $5,000) is hereby amended to read as follows:

(b) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendment made by this section shall be applicable with respect to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. For treatment of taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, see section 6.

Section 3: Adjusted gross income is gross income minus business deductions and losses from the sale or exchange of property.

Section 400 of the Code contains a table which sets forth the tax payable on specified adjusted gross incomes of less than $5,000. The number of adjusted gross-income brackets so specified is 139. Below $3,000 the range in each bracket is $25; for $3,000 and above, the range is $50.

The amounts of tax shown in the table have been computed on the basis of the standard deduction—10 percent—of the mean adjusted gross income in the bracket. The table obviates the need for itemizing deductions—that is to say, it provides a short form of return for the taxpayer. Its use is optional with the taxpayer.

The new table is to be effective January 1, 1947, and the same provision is made for fiscal-year taxpayers using the short form of return as for those who compute their tax on the basis of itemized deductions.

SEC. 4. Additional Credit Against Net Income for Normal Tax and Surtax

(a) Exemption for age: Section 25 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to credits against net income for normal tax and surtax) is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and by adding after subparagraph (C) a new subparagraph, to read as follows:

"(D) If the taxpayer has attained the age of 65—

"(i) an additional exemption of $500;

"(ii) in the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, an exemption, in lieu of the exemption provided in clause (i) of this subparagraph, of $500 for each spouse who has attained the age of 65, and whose gross income (computed without regard to section 22 (o)) for the taxable year is $500 or more;

"(iii) for limitation on exclusion from gross income of retirement pay, etc., see section 22 (o)."

Section 4 (a), Internal Revenue Code 25 (b) (1) (D): This provision allows a new credit against net income for normal tax and surtax purposes. This credit will be allowed only to individuals at least 65 years of age on the last day of their taxable year. In the case of a joint return, the credit will be allowed to each spouse who is 65 years old or more and whose gross income—without regard to certain exclusions—is $500 or more.

To prevent aggravation of the existing discrimination, for Federal income-tax purposes, in favor of certain pensions, annuities, retirement pay, old-age and survivors' benefits, and similar payments excluded from gross income, this new exemption will offset such excluded payments—with certain stated exceptions—to the extent of its amount, $500.

(b) Determination of age: Section 25 (b) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "For the purposes of paragraph (1) (D) the determination of the age of an individual shall be made as of the last day of the taxable year."

Section 4 (b), Internal Revenue Code 25 (b) (2): Internal Revenue Code 25 (b) (1) (D), referred to here, is the new provision for the additional $500 exemption for individuals 65 years of age or over.

(c) Limitation on exclusion from gross income of retirement pay, etc.: Section 22 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to gross income) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"(o) Retirement pay, etc., of individuals 65 or over: If an individual entitled to the exemption provided in section 25 (b) (1) (D) (relating to individuals who have attained the age of 65) receives during the taxable year any amount (other than a lump-sum benefit) as pension, annuity, retirement pay, old-age or survivors' benefit, or similar payment, with respect to services rendered by him or another person, and the whole of such amount would, but for this subsection, be excluded from gross income, then only the excess over $500 of the aggregate of such amounts shall be excluded from gross income, despite any provisions of this title or of any other law. This subsection shall not require the inclusion of any such amount as gross income unless the gross income, computed without regard to this subsection, is $500 or more. This subsection shall not apply—

"(1) to amounts excluded from gross income under section 22 (b) (5); except that this subsection shall apply to amounts received as a pension, annuity, or similar allowance for personal injuries or sickness resulting from active service in the armed forces of any country, unless such amounts are also excluded from gross income by a provision of law other than section 22 (b) (5); or

"(2) to amounts excluded from gross income under section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to safeguard the estates of veterans derived from payments of pension, compensation, emergency officers' retirement pay and insurance, and for other purposes,' approved August 12, 1935, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 38, sec. 454a); or

"(3) to amounts excluded from gross income under section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll, designated as "the Army and Navy medal of honor roll," and for other purposes,' approved April 27, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 38, sec. 393)."

Section 4 (c), Internal Revenue Code 22 (o): This provision requires that pensions, annuities, retirement pay, old-age or survivors' benefits, and similar payments, now wholly excluded from gross income, be included in the gross income of an individual entitled to the new exemption of $500, to an amount not in excess of $500 in the aggregate. The effect of the provision is to offset the new exemption by the existing exclusion, the maximum offset to be $500.

To prevent the inclusion of amounts now excluded from operating to require the filing of a return where none is now required, no such inclusion will be required unless the gross income is otherwise $500 or more.

But there are certain payments now excluded from gross income which will not be affected by the new limitation on excludibility. These payments are of three kinds: First, pensions, annuities, and similar allowances for disability incurred in the active armed service of any country, unless such allowances are excluded by some provision other than Internal Revenue Code 22 (b) (5); second, payments to or for the account of a beneficiary under any act relating to veterans—excluded by section 3 of the act of August 12, 1935; and third, payments to persons on the Army and Navy medal of honor roll—excluded by section 3 of the act of April 27, 1916.

(d) Technical amendment: section 22 (b) (5) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to exclusion from gross income of compensation for injuries or sickness) is hereby amended by striking out "and amounts" and inserting in lieu thereof: "and (except as provided in subsection (o) in the case of individuals 65 or over) amounts."

Section 4 (d) Internal Revenue Code 22 (b) (5): This provision qualifies the exclusion of armed service disability payments under Internal Revenue Code 22 (b) (5) in accordance with the new subsection (o), added to Internal Revenue Code 22 by section 4 (c) of the bill.

(e) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments made by this section shall be applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. For treatment of taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, see section 6.

Section 4 (e): This provision makes the new exemption effective January 1, 1947, and provides for its proration in the case of a taxable year beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947.

SEC. 5. Reduction in Withholding of Tax at Source on Wages.

(a) Percentage method: Section 1622 (a) and section 1622 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to percentage method of withholding) are hereby amended to read as follows:

(a) Income taxes: Section 108 of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by striking out "(d)" at the beginning of subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "(e)," and by inserting after subsection (c) the following:

"(d) Taxable years of individuals beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947: In the case of a taxable year of an individual beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, the tax imposed by sections 11, 12, and 400 shall be an amount equal to the sum of—

"(1) that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1946, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year prior to January 1, 1947, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year, plus

"(2) that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1947, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year after December 31, 1946, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year."

Section 6 (a), Internal Revenue Code 108 (d), (e): The present Internal Revenue Code 108 (d) is relettered as (e), and a new subsection (d) is inserted. This new subsection (d) provides, in effect, that if the taxable year of an individual begins in 1946 and ends in 1947, his tax liability for that year shall proportionately reflect the tax reduction effective January 1, 1947. That result is accomplished by computing a tax under existing law, a tax under the bill, taking a fraction of each tax and adding the fractions together. The denominator of each fraction is the number of days in the taxable year. The numerator of the fraction applicable to the existing tax is the number of days in the 1946 portion of the taxable year; the numerator applicable to the tax under the bill is the number of days in 1947 portion.

H. R. 1, as reported Mar. 24, 1947

Reduction	Taxable returns affected	Tax reduction
30 percent	24, 596, 302	$877, 000, 000
30 to 20 percent	6, 555, 257	365, 000, 000
20 percent	15, 531, 673	2, 411, 000, 000
20 to 10.5 percent	567	43, 000, 000
Total	46, 683, 799	3, 696, 000, 000

In addition to the above reduction, the $500 exemption for persons 65 years of age or over is estimated to result in a further reduction of $140,000,000.

The total reduction under the bill, therefore, is estimated at $3,836,000,000.

Turn over then to page 16. I am not going to read it all but I am going to put it in the RECORD a little later, together with the bill, so that any time you want to answer any questions—and I know that these are worked out accurately—you can write to your people and know that you are giving an accurate explanation of the bill. You will find this explanation on pages 12, 14, 15, 16, 19, 21, and 23, and then again a little farther over, one on page 22 and another on page 29, and those I am going to put in the RECORD.

One of the fine things about this bill is that it is going to do in a measure what the tax bills did for the Republic after the First World War. We are going to begin to supply venture capital. I think a great many people are not aware of the extent to which venture capital is necessary to create industry. In Gastonia, N. C., a survey was made of that city and all its industries. It was made by the United States Chamber of Commerce and another organization studying these affairs. Much to my surprise I found, on going through the whole list of industries, that it requires an investment per man in a barber shop of over $2,000. That is the investment to give one man a job. They went along up to three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine thousand dollars per man. One industry in Gastonia, N. C., required an investment in order for a man to have a job of over $48,000.

What I want to point out here is that it works two ways. We are releasing the $3,800,000,000, which can properly be called an increase in the pay of the people who earned that income, or you can put it another way and say that much of it is going to be released as venture capital, it is going into industry, it is going to create more pay rolls; and more pay rolls will create more revenue to the Government, and the income from more property will be available to be taxed. That is the reason we are going to get more revenue from tax reduction. Then later on, when we frame a new tax bill, a long-range tax bill, further reductions can be made, because we will soon see the effects of this bill and we will go on paying on the national debt substantially, as well as relieving the people of this terrific war-tax load.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. ROBSION. I wish to commend the distinguished gentleman from New York for his very clear understanding and fine presentation of the tax bill. They say history repeats itself. The gentleman referred to the proceedings of the House in 1921 in writing a tax bill. Does not the gentleman see the parallel between what happened on the Republican side in 1921 and what happened on the Democratic side and what is happening now? They contended then very much what they are contending here today, and the Republicans are contending now what they contended then. The Republicans in 1921 still had the high wartime taxes, about the same period of time after the war as this is after the war, when we still have our high war taxes. The gentleman took the floor at that time with others and claimed that a tax-reduction bill would open up business and bring in revenue, which turned out to be so.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank my distinguished colleague.

Mr. ROBSION. There was no effort made at that time to reduce what was then regarded as and was the greatest national debt this country had ever had. We did not talk about paying the national debt but to reduce taxes and encourage business and create jobs and prosperity and bring in more revenues. That is the very thing that happened, and that is what the gentleman says is going to happen now.

Mr. REED of New York. Speaking frankly, I would say if I were new in the Congress and had not been here at the time taxes were cut in the twenties, and the same arguments had been put out against reducing taxes and the same forces had been at work as are at work here trying to frighten the people and frighten the Congress, I might have felt some hesitation. But after the experience of the twenties, I feel no hesitation in cutting the taxes now.

We all know, as a statesman once put it, I think it was Edmund Burke, that Anglo-Saxon liberty was fought out on the battlefield of taxation. What we do here means everything in maintaining the liberty of the citizens under a free-enterprise system. We have to keep in mind what these high taxes can mean to the Government because it has been said, and truly said, that the power to tax is the power to destroy.

I remember in 1938 the Congress passed a bill over the protest of the Republicans who were then in the minority. That was the tax on undistributed profits. Anyone who cares to do so can read the minority report on that bill in which we predicted a tailspin in business with accompanying unemployment as a result of such legislation. Only a small part of the roots of that cancer still prevail in our Internal Revenue Code. But it had to be removed in order to restore the confidence of the people generally and the confidence of business people in particular so that they could at least have the benefit of the so-called seed corn to create new industries and expand old ones. There is an example of an unwise piece of legislation which in a short time deprived the country of venture capital which is absolutely necessary to keep the country prosperous and to keep existing industries in operation so that they could expand and have ever-increasing pay rolls.

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield.

Mr. ROBSION. Our Democratic friends realized that and brought in a bill to repeal that legislation.

Mr. REED of New York. Absolutely.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to my distinguished former chairman of the Ways and Means.

Mr. DOUGHTON. May I apologize to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] for taking up his time. There is no abler member of our committee and no finer gentleman than the gentleman from New York, my good friend [Mr. REED]. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] in his statement said, and we all think it is true, that we have practically full employment and production is at a high peak. The only trouble now seems to be with reference to the material and manpower to implement what industry we already have. If by this law we release risk capital and increase our industries, and now we are speaking of 1948, where are we going to get the manpower and where are we going to get the material to implement these new industries if we are already up to the maximum limit?

Mr. REED of New York. I am not at all disturbed by that situation. In the first place, it will not be so very long before we are going to have an outpouring from the colleges and schools of our soldiers who were away during the war fighting for their country and who are now trying to make up time getting their education. They will be wanting jobs. By the time this tax bill gets on the books I hope this Republican Congress will have removed all of the bureaucratic obstacles which now are a country-wide hindrance to production so that the materials can begin to flow. They have been strangled by the legislation coming from your party, and the result is, of course, we are short of material. Whenever you start to regulate, as has been done heretofore, you begin to throttle production. Production has been effectively throttled. When you once begin to give free enterprise a chance by lowering taxes and by releasing these strangleholds on our economy, then the country will go forward as it always has under a Republican administration.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER].

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I request that the Chair advise me when I have consumed 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, it had been my hope that the Republican majority now in control of both Houses of Congress would adopt a sound fiscal policy, and place the welfare of the country ahead of politics. But it soon became apparent that this hope was not to be realized. It is clearly apparent that purely political considerations have guided the majority in bringing the pending bill, H. R. 1, to the House and urging its passage.

Nine of the ten minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means have joined in a minority report on this bill, to which I invite your attention. I believe this report contains ample reasons for opposing the pending measure.

It should be remembered that one very important tax-relief bill has already been enacted into law since the close of the recent war. The Revenue Act of 1945 reduced wartime taxes by about $9,000,000,000. It made considerable reductions in corporate taxes and individual income taxes, and some reductions in excise taxes. Its main purpose was to ease the transition from wartime to peacetime economy of the country. This transition was made with far less decline in business activity than had been anticipated. Any further tax reduction at this time to stimulate business activity cannot be justified. Business conditions are now the best we have ever known in the history of this Nation. In 1946 employment was the highest in the history of our country. Some 10,000,000 of our returning veterans had received employment in civilian activities by the end of 1946. Production reached the highest point in peacetime in the entire history of the Nation, being 50 percent greater than the last peacetime year, 1939, and only about 15 percent less than the highest point reached during the war. Our national income is the highest in all history. It reached $165,000,000,000 in 1946, and the estimate is for an even higher national income in 1947.

With those favorable conditions existing, it is certainly the proper time to give attention to our national debt. Therefore, the minority has taken the position that the first objective to be accomplished is the balancing of the Federal budget, which has not been balanced since 1930. Then, it is our position that after that there should be substantial payment on the national debt, and then, if our situation justifies it, a reduction in individual income taxes. Not only that, but a complete review of our entire tax structure, as has been done in the past when the matter of tax relief was given consideration. The cost of World War II was an enormous sum. From 1939 to 1946 our Federal expenditures amounted to more than $400,000,000,000 and we know that during a good part of that time 96 cents out of every tax dollar that was collected was for the cost of the prosecution of the war. We now find that we have a national debt of $260,000,000,000. We have 85,000,000 individual bondholders in this country. Certainly we realize that there is an obligation that we owe to those 85,000,000 bondholders. We take the position that during the war when patriotic fervor was up to such a high point and we made the appeal to the school children and all the people of the land to buy war stamps and war bonds, we now owe the obligation to them to see to it that that investment in their Government is always sound.

So I take the position, as does the minority on this occasion, that the first obligation of the Congress is to see to it that this Government of ours follows a sound fiscal policy. I have never known of but one way to discharge an honest debt, and that is to pay it. The best time to make a payment on a debt is when you have the money, and it so happens that the Government at this time because of the favorable business condition existing in the country is in a position to look forward to the balancing of the budget with greater encouragement than we have ever looked before, and at the same time to be able to pay a substantial amount on the public debt.

It must be remembered that we have much heavier expenses to meet than we ever had before the recent war. The Federal budget for the fiscal year 1947 embodies a very important and what might well be considered a permanent change from prewar conditions. This 1947 budget includes three items, the largest three items in the budget, which alone amount to more than three times the total expenses of the Federal Government before the war. It includes about $15,000,000,000 for military expenditures, which is about 12 times the prewar level. It includes about $7,000,000,000 for veterans' benefits, which is about 12 times the prewar amount. It includes about $5,000,000,000 for interest on the public debt, which is about 5 times the prewar requirements. It is interesting to observe that in the 1948 Federal budget to which attention is now being given, the last two items remain about the same and the item for military expenses is reduced to about $11,000,000,000, which will still be about 9 times greater than the prewar level. We are unable to know at this time what our budget situation may be by the end of the year. We know the changes that have occurred in a little more than two months of time that have elapsed since the President's budget was submitted to the Congress.

We know that the present Democratic President of the United States, looking to the welfare and the interests of this country of ours, has found it necessary to recommend a rather large additional expenditure, including about $400,000,000 for the Greek and Turkish situations. The last Republican President, Mr. Hoover, has, during that period of time, recommended to the Congress in appearance before standing committees of this House that some $400,000,000 plus be used to help care for the starving and destitute people of the war-torn countries of Europe. Therefore, it can be seen that something approaching a billion dollars has been requested during the short period of time that has elapsed since the President's budget was submitted to the Congress.

It is impossible for us to know now just what these budget requirements may amount to, but it does occur to me it is the part of wisdom to proceed cautiously and not to rush in here and purely for political considerations reduce taxes and thereby endanger balancing of the budget and run the risk of not being able to make payment on the public debt of the country.

If the time comes, and we hope it will come soon, that we can be able to make a reduction in taxes in this country, certainly I would welcome the opportunity to vote for tax-reduction measures. I am sure we all feel that way. We want to give tax relief to our people as soon as possible, but we should not embrace an opportunity to do that until it is in keeping with sound fiscal principles that are in the best interests of the fiscal affairs of the Nation.

The pending bill, H. R. 1, cannot be defended upon the essential basis of fairness or equity. I simply invite your attention to the chart appearing on page 35 of the report accompanying this bill. How anybody can examine that chart appearing on page 35 of this report and feel justified in voting for this measure is more than I can understand.

Some gentlemen say that if your present graduated-tax system is fair and sound, it is likewise fair and equitable to reduce that by a definite percentage, as in this instance 20 percent. If that is sound, if they can sustain that proposal, why is it that they have three different graduations provided in this bill? Simply because a position of that kind cannot be justified; it cannot be sustained.

Now, what has happened? Our distinguished friend, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, first came forward advocating a 20-percent reduction in individual income taxes straight across the board from top to bottom of the income-tax schedules. That was his position, so announced. Then the light of day was turned upon the proposal, and it was seen it could not be justified. What would it have meant? It would have meant that some of the wealthiest taxpayers of this country would have been paying less taxes than they paid in 1939 before the war.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

You will see this chart on page 35. It shows the line 1939 and the original proposal of a 20-percent reduction straight across the board, and from top to bottom shows that that would reduce the high income taxpayers below the 1939 level. Then the gentleman from Minnesota revised his plan and provided that above $302,000 the percentage of reduction would not be 20 percent, as he had promised, straight across the board, but would be 10½ percent, and if you will notice what that curve does, that curve brings the 10½-percent application right back down to about the 1939 level. That means, then, that these high-income taxpayers under this pending bill will be relieved of the increases that were necessary since 1939.

But look what happens to the low-income taxpayers. See how high and how steep the curve goes with respect to them, and then if you get yourself a real strong magnifying glass and look carefully enough you may be able to find where this 30 percent comes in in the dotted line down there. It is so infinitesimal, it is so small that you almost have to have a magnifying glass to be able to find it.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CHELF. First of all, I am for reducing taxes, but not at the expense of the Army and the Navy. As the gentleman knows, to show my good faith on the subject, I have a bill in now to raise the income tax bracket exemptions for the little fellow to $2,500 on single persons and $5,000 on married folks. I condemned on the floor of the House not very long ago this particular bill as being a rich man's bill, and I repeat that charge today. It is a rich man's bill—if there be any doubt, look at the chart of this so-called 30 percent cut. A man who has an income of $1,200 a year gets a measly credit of $12, a saving of $1 a month, less than the cost of a carton of cigarettes. The man that has a $2,000 income saves $57 a year, which is less than $5 a month, yet the man that has a $250,000 income saves over $38,000, and the fellow or corporation that has a million-dollar income saves $110,000. How are you going to justify that before the people of this country? So, I am against your bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, the trouble with the gentleman is that his figures are not correct.

Mr. COOPER. I appreciate the contribution by the gentleman from Kentucky.

But, Mr. Chairman, the whole point is, after our good friends of the majority on the committee found that even after the bill had been doctored and changed, after the original 20 percent across the board from top to bottom had been altered to the extent that it should apply only up to about $302,000, and from there on the reduction should not be 20 percent, but 10½ percent, then further realizing that they were not doing anything to speak of for the little man, they were not giving proper relief to the man in the small-income tax bracket, then they had to have a meeting of their own with the Republican steering committee of the House, and they then finally came forward with this great 30-percent idea: Give the little man some benefit and some relief, and give him 30 percent instead of 20 percent for the $300,000 man or 10½ percent for the million-dollar man.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Is it not a fact also that this small 30-percent crumb was not granted to the low-income taxpayers until it was obvious that a revolt was threatened on the majority side, and they could not pass the bill without it?

Mr. COOPER. Well, there is some indication of that.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Everybody knows it is true.

Mr. COOPER. At any rate, at the last moment they made that change, which does not amount to enough to really call it a change. It is not worthy of it

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COOPER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. JONES of Alabama. Is it not a fact that if this bill is enacted, the inflation caused by its enactment will wipe out the so-called savings of the little folks?

Mr. COOPER. Well, there is danger of that, but the main point is that any one of you who votes for this bill, thinking that you are providing relief for the little fellow, you just go home and try to find that fellow who is able to find what relief you gave him. He will never be able to find it under this bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 3 additional minutes.

Instead of giving thorough and careful consideration to tax relief on the basis it should be given, to see whether the fiscal condition of the Government would justify it, they bring in here a political gesture and ask the Members of the House to pass it in the name of tax relief, and try to claim that real consideration has been given to the low-income taxpayers. By the time he worries himself half crazy trying to figure out the application of the notch provision in this bill, he will be criticizing every man who ever claimed he was giving him any relief under this measure. The idea of having to provide a complicated notch system to give the little man some tax benefits. The effective way to afford tax relief for the little man is to increase the exemptions. Under the Revenue Act of 1945, by increasing the exemptions, and two other definite changes that were made in that measure, 12,000,000 of our low-income taxpayers were relieved not only from paying a tax but from having to file a tax return. As the situation now stands, a single man making $10 a week or a married man making about $20 a week has to file a tax return to his Government. Think how low that carries you down among the wage-earners in this country, $10 a week, yet he has to make a tax return, and with just a few dollars more than that he has to pay a tax to his Government. So the position we take on this side is that this is not an opportune time to provide for tax relief, until we know more about the requirements of our Budget and more about our international requirements and that when the time does come to give tax relief, we should really advise the tax structure of this country and afford relief that is worthy of the name.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, it is perfectly evident from the statement just made by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, Representative COOPER, neither he nor his party desire to give any relief, regardless of age or income, to anybody. All they want to do is to continue the New Deal program of spending, taxing, and sometimes electing on that theory.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF].

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Chairman, I have read the report of the minority on H. R. 1 with considerable amusement and some amazement. Rarely have I seen a document so thoroughly permeated with a Micawber-like attitude toward the finances of this country, and so thoroughly laced with peculiar statistics. According to the minority the fact that our economic system is now operating well removes all necessity for making provision that it shall continue to do so in the future. Yet the President's economic advisers recently warned us of the grave danger of a recession during the fiscal year 1948. This warning was repeated recently by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the Department of Agriculture. We hear similar words of caution continuously from economists and professional business analysts. Yet the minority goes blithely on its way, assuming that the full employment of today will automatically recur in the future, and that the problem at hand is not the avoidance of a recession, but the checking of an inflation which gives every indication of having spent its main force. Apparently the minority thinks it is time enough to take action when a recession is already upon us.

One of the major political planks set out in the minority report seems to be that debt retirement is more important in all cases than the preservation of a prosperous and fully employed America, which is what we mean by a "solvent" America. We are all aware of the size of our present Federal debt, and the need for its reduction. We are planning for a reduction, but we are unwilling to ignore the fact that there is also a need for a relief from the stultifying effects of the individual income tax rates. In our judgment, this tax reduction is just as important at the present time to the preservation of a solvent America as the retirement of the national debt.

The minority argues as though the enactment of H. R. 1 would preclude debt retirement. They base this conclusion in part on an estimate of receipts of $39,000,000,000, which is the figure used in the legislative budget, and which allows for a possible recession during the fiscal year 1948. Yet they contend that we face an inflation, not a recession. If this forecast is correct, the estimate of receipts ought to be substantially larger. Forty-three billion dollars would be a conservative estimate.

On the expenditure side the minority assumes that the reduction which Congress will make in expenditures set out in the President's budget can be no greater percentagewise than the percentage reduction in the appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments. I suspect they really must know better than this. Everyone must realize that these particular appropriations contained a large proportion of the fixed obligations of the Federal Government. They include such items as $5,000,000,000 for interest payments, and the expenditures necessary for tax refunds.

Let us take for a moment the most conservative reduction in the over-all expenditures which either House of Congress is now considering, the Senate proposal of a ceiling of $33,000,000,000. Let us compare this to receipts of $43,000,000,000, which represents a conservative estimate, if the minority is correct, in forecasting a continuation of the present level of employment. On this basis there would be $10,000,000,000 available for debt retirement and tax reduction. Certainly the moderate tax reduction proposed in this bill would leave ample room for substantial debt retirement.

Much of the minority's difficulty appears to arise out of its assumption that the transition from a wartime to a peacetime economy has been completed. The minority also assumes that our economy will continue to prosper under the handicap which the existing rate structure of the individual income tax imposes upon the free flow of venture capital and the exercise of managerial initiative. The transition to a peacetime economy has not yet been completed. Expenditures have not yet reached their postwar plateau, and the tax system has not yet been corrected to remove the deterrents to a fully employed economy which were necessitated by the extreme financial pressure imposed by the war.

The minority contends that even if this were the time for tax reduction, H. R. 1 is not a fair means of distributing relief. They call the 30-percent reduction for those in the lowest income bracket mere sugar coating. Yet I recall that the minority voted unanimously for this feature of the present bill. Moreover, I do not believe that a provision which brings a 30-percent reduction to the 24.6 million taxpayers receiving taxable incomes of $1,000 or less and constituting 52.7 percent of the total number of income taxpayers can be dismissed as mere sugar coating.

Even more perverse is the minority's inability to understand the effect of a uniform percentage reduction in the amount of the tax due upon the rate of progression under the individual income tax. Elementary arithmetic will tell you that if a man is paying 10 times as much tax as his neighbor and their taxes are both reduced by uniform percentage, the first individual will still be paying 10 times as much tax as the second. This is what progression means. Let me illustrate this with two specific cases. Under existing law, a single person with a net income of $300,000 before personal exemption pays a tax which is 255 times the tax paid by a single individual with a net income of $5,000 before exemption. Under the tax reduction of 20 percent provided by H. R. 1 for incomes of these sizes, the individual with a $300,000 income will still pay 255 times the tax paid by the individual with a $5,000 income. Similarly, under existing law an individual with a net income of $50,000 before exemption pays 27 times the tax of the $5,000 individual. Under the rate reductions provided by H. R. 1, the individual with a $50,000 income would still pay 27 times the tax imposed on the individual with a $5,000 income.

The minority seems to believe that a reduction of a uniform number of percentage points will maintain the existing scale of progression. The absurdity of this can be shown by the following illustration: A single individual with a net income of $100,000 pays a tax under present law which is four and two-tenths times as great as the tax paid by a single individual with $2,500 of net income.

If a 20 percentage point reduction were to be made, the individual with a $2,500 income would pay no tax at all, while the individual with $100,000 of net income would still have an effective rate of around 44 percent. Whereas under existing law the man with the $100,000 net income pays four and two-tenths times the tax of the man with the $2,500 net income, the 20 percentage point reduction makes his tax infinitely larger than that of the $2,500 individual. Clearly a change of this sort will alter the rate of progression embodied in the existing law.

The minority alleges that the special exemption of $500 provided by House Resolution 1 for persons who have attained the age of 65 is merely another "sop" to the lower-income brackets. The minority maintains that age is not related to ability to pay, that the $500 exemption constitutes class legislation, and above all that it represents an innovation. If legislation is bad because the ideas embodied in it are innovations, then most of the changes made in the income tax since its inception in 1913 are tarred with the same brush.

The special exemption for the aged is justified by the fact that as a group persons over 65 are handicapped in an economic sense. While the minority report states that age alone is not a factor in determining ability to pay, the next sentence which follows this statement contains an admission that this group is a handicapped one. That this is a fact is indicated by the heavy concentration of small incomes in this age group. The Congress has already recognized the economic handicaps of this age group in the social-security legislation enacted in 1935. Moreover, it is clear that the events of the past few years have borne with unusual severity upon persons over 65. Unlike younger people, they were not able to adjust themselves to the rise in prices and the tax changes of the war period by accepting full-time employment at prevailing high rates of wages.

The minority's belief, that the $500 exemption sets a pattern for discrimination in favor of particular groups, is contrary to fact. By granting full exclusion to particular types of income, such as the annuities received by railroad retirement and social security beneficiaries, and the retirement pay of former Army and Navy officers retired by reason of medical survey, existing law has already established a discrimination against recipients of other types of income. This fact was taken into consideration in drafting H. R. 1. The $500 exemption has been set up in a manner which tends to reduce existing discrimination among persons who have attained the age of 65, but who receive different types of income.

The minority suggests that if relief is to be granted to persons who have attained the age of 65, it should also be extended to individuals who are physically handicapped irrespective of age. It is worth pointing out that the blind already receive a deduction of $500. If it should prove possible to set up a working definition of a crippled person, an extension of a concession to persons in that category similar to that provided to persons of 65 or over in H. R. 1 would be a logical and desirable procedure.

In several places in the minority report a plea is made for postponing action on a tax reduction. It is contended that no action should be taken until the conferees have agreed upon a ceiling on expenditures, until all appropriations have finally been made, and until the Treasury Department has time to study fully and report upon some twenty-odd complicated and controversial subjects. These are stalling tactics only. With respect to the ceiling on expenditures set by the legislative budget committees, I should like to stress the relatively small area of disagreement which remains between the House and the Senate conferees. It is only a choice between a ceiling of $31,500,000,000 and $33,000,000,000. Either way, as it is set forth in the majority report, there will be sufficient funds available for the tax reduction proposed under H. R. 1 and for debt retirement.

The argument that tax reductions should await final action on appropriations is indeed a strange one. I fail to recall that the Democratic majority has followed this procedure during recent years. The tax reduction in the Revenue Act of 1945, for example, was enacted even before the President's budget had been submitted.

The minority makes the further point that the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 which set up the procedure for establishing expenditure ceilings, made specific provision for a recommendation by the budget committee concerning appropriate reductions in the public debt, but that "No mention in the act is made of tax reduction." Does this mean that the minority believes no tax reduction should ever be made, or does it suggest that the framers of this bill were already aware of the fact that the House Ways and Means Committee and the Senate Finance Committee were already charged with responsibility for tax legislation?

I think we all are obligated to the minority for including in its report certain very illuminating tables and charts. Chart 1 on page 35 compares the tax burden under present law and H. R. 1 with that which existed in 1939 at various income levels. In its report the minority seems to think that this chart shows that the lower income groups do not fare as well as they should under this bill. Yet it is clear from Chart 1 that under H. R. 1 an individual with a net income of $60,000 is still paying 22 percent more than he did in 1939, while an individual with a net income of $2,000 is only paying 7 or 8 percent more than he did in 1939.

Chart 2 on page 37 adds nothing to what has been presented in Chart 1, as can be seen by holding chart 2 upside down and looking at it in a mirror.

Table IV of the minority report shows spendable income remaining after taxes under present law and under H. R. 1. It also shows the percentage increase in spendable income resulting from H. R. 1.

The point the minority is trying to make is that H. R. 1 increases disproportionately the spendable income of the higher income groups.

In reality this is nothing but a statistical trick. This can be shown by representing spendable income by X and taxes by Y. When Y is already small, relative to X, a decrease in Y could have only a small effect on X. This is what is happening under H. R. 1 in the lower income brackets and accounts for the small percentage increase in spendable income. If Y is large in comparison to X, a decrease in Y will of necessity have a substantial effect on X. This, in effect, is what is happening under H. R. 1 in the higher income brackets, and accounts for the large percentage increase in spendable income.

To show the absurdity of the minority's table, it is only necessary to consider the case of a person with a net income of $500. He at the present time pays no tax and, therefore, when a tax reduction is made there is no increase in his spendable income. Thus, in his case the increase in spendable income resulting from the enactment of H. R. 1 must of necessity be zero. Thus, a uniform increase in spendable income would require payments on the part of the Federal Government to those in the lower income groups.

Reference to table 5A in the majority's report will show that even under H. R. 1, a person with a $10,000 income retains only 81 percent of it after paying his income tax; a person with an income of $30,000 retains only 67 percent; and a person with an income of $100,000 retains only 49 percent. On the other hand, a person with a net income of $600 retains almost 98 percent after the reduction provided in H. R. 1.

The minority has characterized H. R. 1 as economically unsound and inequitable. I am afraid that the facts of the matter demonstrate that my Democratic colleagues are in error on both counts.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL].

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I wonder how many of my colleagues remember that fanciful era when a man could print up fancy imitations of securities and peddle them under equally phony prospectuses to unsuspecting widows? Eventually we woke up to the fact that there was nothing in the American system of free enterprise which licensed swindlers. Under a Democratic administration we outlawed securities swindling.

What, in good conscience then, can we say about H. R. 1? Here is a $4,000,000,000 swindle which will prove to be a scaffold built by you Republicans which will be used by the irate electorate to hang you, come next election day.

H. R. 1 started out with beguiling simplicity to do justice to all downtrodden taxpayers. It would give each a 20 percent flat reduction in his income tax.

It did not take long for even responsible members of the majority party in this House to recoil from this arithmetical fraud.

H. R. 1 has had some decorations added to it since, in the hope of its sponsors to disguise its wickedness. Reneging on some of their millionaire patrons, the sponsors of this bill now offer only 10½ percent cut in the top income brackets.

But you and I have worried more about the little fellow—the fellow that might use his tax cut for household necessities and for plain everyday groceries.

The sponsors of H. R. 1 held out for a long time, but now they have some bait for the little fellow, too—it might be swallowed if not examined too closely. The bill now proposes a 30 percent reduction for the man with less than $1,000 income over and above his exemptions and deductions. The most wicked thing about this bill is its deceitful appearance. If you do not think about it, this bill sounds almost decent. A 30 percent cut for the little fellow, a 20 percent cut for the middle fellow, and a 10½ percent cut for the big fellow.

I may add here parenthetically that the 30 percent added to the 20 percent is like adding an extra 10 percent to near nothing. It still constitutes near nothing in the total amount of additional groceries.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAND. The magnanimous gift that is made to the little fellow is represented by this bill which shows a married man with no dependents whose income is $1,200 a year will have 22 cents a week less tax to pay. He can buy a package of cigarettes every week now.

Mr. DINGELL. That is correct; and that is the sum total of his relief. But the illustration gets worse, I may say to the gentleman from Rhode Island, as you go up the ladder. When you get to the million-dollar per annum income taxpayer that is when the illustration is really beautiful and worth while to the recipient. That is the element for whom this tax bill is being enacted.

Mr. FORAND. I do not have the million-dollar income in this table, but the man with a $300,000 income would get a relief of $902 each week.

Mr. DINGELL. That is correct. That is per week.

Mr. FORAND. That is as compared with the 22 cents a week for the little fellow.

Mr. DINGELL. I will cover that in my remarks if the gentleman will indulge me.

But let me tell you, the American people are not dumb. They know, and you know, that you cannot eat percentages. Any child in elementary school can tell you that percentages mean nothing unless you relate them to something. But what happens when you use these nice-sounding percentages? What happens to the oily promises of justice with which this bill is annointed?

I would like to give you a few illustrations. Strip the bill of its complicated arithmetic, and here is what happens:

The little man with the big family who now pays $100 of tax will save, under this bill, the magnificent sum of $30.

The man who now pays $1,000 in tax will save, under this bill exactly $200 or 6⅔ times as much.

The man who now pays $10,000 in tax will save, under this bill the sum of $2,000, or 66⅔ times as much.

The man who now pays $100,000 in tax will save under this bill, a mere $20,000, or 666⅔ times as much.

The man who now pays $1,000,000 in tax will save, under this bill, approximately $150,000 or 5,000 times as much.

Now, I ask the House, tell me what justice lies in the fancy percentages of H. R. 1? Thirty dollars saving for the little fellow. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars saving for the big fellow. Five thousand times as much for the big taxpayer.

But I beg the House not to misunderstand me. This is not the only deceit in H. R. 1. Why is this bill before us at all? Are we so free of debt, so rolling in surpluses, that we must hasten to slough off our revenues?

Oh, no. We have a war debt of $260,000,000,000. Is costs us $5,000,000,000 in interest alone to carry that debt. The sponsors of H. R. 1 are willing to let that debt and those interest charges run on. They are willing to trade a deceitful income tax cut now for the privilege of paying extra taxes the balance of our lives and the lives of our children so that the interest on the public debt may be prolonged.

Times are prosperous now. Now is the time to pay on the national debt to maintain Uncle Sam's credit rating and the value of the outstanding bonds. Now is not the time to cut taxes, much as each of us may desire it. Even if H. R. 1 were rewritten so that the tax cut was spread about in some semblance of fairness, no thinking man should vote for such a bill before he considers the future.

I say, and I doubt if any will dispute me, this tax cut will cost the taxpayers money in the long run.

The little fellow who is going to be saved the grandiose sum of $30 by this bill is the fellow who in a few years should be exempted from paying any income tax at all. That can be done when the national debt is whittled down to some extent. But instead, the price of his $30 saving, if this bill is enacted, is that he will probably have to keep on paying taxes the rest of his life so that he can pay the interest on the public debt that could be paid off now.

The pity of the whole thing is that the little fellow probably will get no benefit even now for his $30 saving from H. R. 1. The inflationary fires that already threaten our homes will be fanned by this bill. This bill will free nearly $4,000,000,000 of money for bidding up the prices the people have to pay. Last week the price of bread went up. If we would only let them, rents would go through the roof. Clothing is up. Everything seems headed in the same direction.

If this inflationary legislation should cause an increase in the cost of living as little as 60 cents a week—60 cents a week, I repeat—it will wipe out the generous $30 tax saving which H. R. 1 holds out to him.

There is one more aspect to H. R. 1 upon which I cannot refrain from speaking. You and I and everyone has complained bitterly for many years about the complexity of the tax laws and the tax forms. We have seen with dismay the inequalities that exist in particular situations. We have waited with ill-concealed impatience for the day when some committee of the Congress would sit down and, in the name of sanity, overhaul our tax laws to make them simpler and more fair.

You do not have to be a Philadelphia lawyer to know that H. R. 1 is not the answer to this prayer. In their haste to distribute rewards to their millionaire patrons, the sponsors of H. R. 1 have only further complicated the tax laws and forms. They have frozen the many inequities that cry for remedy.

When, during the war, we needed every dime to fight for survival, tax laws had to be tuned to high revenues. We could not afford the nice adjustments which would solve and simplify every problem.

If we could spare the revenue now, you would think the committee would look to these grievances first. Should we enact H. R. 1—which I hope never comes to pass—we will not be able to afford the revenue loss that will be necessary to work justice and simplicity.

Many of you have heard the learned leaders of the majority jibe at the complicated task of filling out a tax return. I ask them how much simpler the task will be if H. R. 1 becomes law.

They will not answer. They dare not answer. Under this bill, they must know, there are four computations where two now suffice.

We have heard the distinguished members of the appropriations committee talk in this House scarcely a week ago about reducing Treasury expenditures. This bill increases Treasury expenditures by complicating the computations that have to be made.

When we debated the Treasury appropriation bill, we were told that large savings could be made because legislation was expected materially reducing the number of taxpayers and the number of tax forms. This bill does not eliminate a single taxpayer or eliminate a single tax form.

When we debated the Treasury appropriation bill, we were told that the Treasury could reduce tax refunds by $800,000,000, another glaring fraud of course. This bill increases tax refunds by more than a billion dollars and the amount of the refund to the average small taxpayer will not be worth much more than the check paper it is written on, and the cost of the refund to the Treasury will, in many instances, exceed the refund itself.

The most damaging document against H. R. 1 even in its present amended form is the statistical form prepared by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation by direction of Chairman Knutson. I invite your careful study of this data and of the tables contained in the majority and minority reports. You will be stunned by impact of the facts presented as you realize who will be the beneficiaries. I will include some tables to give graphic illustration to statistical facts and I would like to refer to some of the tables which the Republicans do not dare to use or even refer to after ordering their preparation. But these graphs, tables and factual figures cannot be ignored for they will follow you like your shadow and will haunt you to and beyond your political grave.

I urge you to study all the tables but above all else concentrate upon table 8, page 23, and table 4, page 38, covering take-home pay; they are an encyclopedia of valuable information.

The graph on page 35 is a most informative bit of evidence offered in condemnation of H. R. 1 even with its many amendments and changes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself five additional minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer now to one phase of the discussions that we heard so much about in connection with the statistical data prepared by the staff of the Joint Committee on Taxation. This appears on page 12, table 13. You have heard much said about how these taxes in the past have stifled initiative, how they have reduced to almost abject poverty the man in the upper brackets.

Let us look at this table: In 1933 the number of persons in the net-income class $100,000 to $300,000 amounted to 1,779. In 1947, after a steady climb through the years, and mind you, this is 2 years after the war, too, it had grown to 8,096.

The $300,000 to $500,000 net-income class grew from 141 in 1932 to 555 in 1947—that is, 2 years after the war. The $500,000 to $1,000,000 net-income class grew from 81 in 1933 to 287 in 1947.

The $1,000,000 and over net-income class grew from 50 in 1933 to 80 in the year 1947.

In nearly every instance, Mr. Chairman, I respectfully call your attention to the fact that these classifications have grown consistently as the income-tax rate rose. Therefore, there was no such thing as a depressing effect as the result of taxes paid by the taxpayer. I submit the detailed table No. 13 of page 12 of the report:

TABLE XIII.—The number of taxable individual and fiduciary income-tax returns with net income over $100,000 by net income classes, actual for 1933–44 and estimated for 1947

[1] Estimated.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. FORAND. I simply want to call the attention of my friend to the fact that in 1942 when we were actually at war there were 40 taxpayers in that income-tax group of a million dollars or over and that has actually doubled in 5 years so that now it is 80.

Mr. DINGELL. I am cognizant of that fact. It is absolutely correct.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONRONEY. I think the amazing thing about the gentleman's statement is the vast increase shown which I think he said was from some few hundred to 8,000 in the $100,000 to $300,000 bracket. I wish when the gentleman revises his remarks, since the $100,000 figure undoubtedly represents the annual income of those who became millionnaires in the interim period, he would compute all of these figures so that the Congress might have some idea of how many new millionaires have been created as the result of World War II and the income they have made therefrom.

Mr. DINGELL. I do not know whether I can go into all that, but I will say that I have cited, as my friend understands, net income, which, of course, in every instance means that after all statutory exemptions, deductions, and allowances have been made, tax is paid upon the residue, that is the income-tax classification. So it points well in the direction of created millionnaires. In that particular classification of $100,000 to $300,000 net income, the number has increased during the period from 1933 to 1947 from 1,779 to 8,096. That is not bad at all when you think of how they fared under this depressing, restrictive, corrosive, and abusive tax system.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. FORAND. Is it not a fact that table refers simply to net taxable income from the $100,000-and-up class and that the total shows that there will be in that group 9,018 taxpayers whose net taxable income will be over $100,000?

Mr. DINGELL. That is right.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. Is it not also true that most of the money made by these factories was made under the system practiced by the administration and that the cost-plus contracts were responsible for it so that as a matter of fact these large profits were the result of the way the people were permitted to operate and profiteer in many instances under the Government control and regulation during the war? I know cases, and the gentleman does, where the Government took all the chances and the manufacturer took all the profits. Now, we want somebody to take chances, and you cannot do it unless you reduce some of these taxes.

Mr. DINGELL. Those incomes were permitted to grow up under the system, as the gentleman referred to it, during the war, but I remember only too well as we repealed certain restrictions in the Walsh-Healey Act and other acts on this floor, that the gentleman's party voted almost as a unit to abolish those restrictions. I know, too, what happened when those people came before the Committee on Ways and Means with regard to amortization and with regard to renegotiation and how they howled and how they scowled about the restrictions of the administration. I remember one distinguished citizen who came there along with others, and they all wanted to know what will be the amount of profit before we start producing for the national defense.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. MICHENER. The gentleman is certainly correct in what he has just said.

Mr. DINGELL. I would not want to be incorrect or refuse my good friend from Michigan, because I say to him most sincerely that I have a very high regard for him.

Mr. MICHENER. I thank the gentleman. That is very nice. But you referred to repealing restrictions under the Walsh-Healey Act. I take it the gentleman has reference to the portal-to-portal bill which recently passed this House, because that is the only law which has in any way affected the restrictions of the Walsh-Healey Act. That was necessary because of the very things that were being done then.

Mr. DINGELL. Now, I appeal to my friend, let us not inject any portal-to-portal here. That had nothing to do with the wartime profits. Let us deal here with wartime profits. It is conceded that in spite of all we tried to do to skim off the excess profits and with all that has been said about abuses of the taxpayer by the tax laws of this Democratic administration, the incomes of the taxpayers have grown consistently as the tax rates have been pushed upward by necessity. The repeal of excess profits and the forgiveness under the Ruml plan vigorously pushed by the Republican Party helped to swell the number of these high-bracket taxpayers.

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. LYNCH. Our distinguished friend from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] has stated that these 9,000 people who have incomes of over $100,000 were the result of the controls. I wonder what would have happened if we had had no controls.

Mr. DINGELL. God Almighty only knows what would have happened then.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. MONRONEY. And the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] failed to mention that the famous Ruml plan, the $8,000,000,000 booby trap which was rushed through here by Congress with the support of his party, helped make many of those wartime millionaires.

Mr. DINGELL. It had much to do with the increase in the 1947 returns and the raising of those classifications to astronomical proportions.

Now, if you will permit me, I would like to touch on one or two other things.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has again expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman three additional minutes.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to particularly plead with the membership of the House to make a very careful study of this table on page 23 of the report before you vote tomorrow. It will astound you if you can possibly digest the inequities contained in the chart. Of a total amount of 46,683,799 taxpayers, 44,817,360, or 96 percent, will get 54.2 percent of the benefits under this bill. On the other hand, the 1,866,439 taxpayers, or 4 percent, will receive 45.8 percent of the benefit. If this is justice and equity in a tax bill, I do not know the meaning of the words; and, as I have said here repeatedly, I have only been on this committee now for 14 years, and this just does not make sense or reason nor can I square it with my conscience when I look at the amount of benefit that is given the big fellow as compared with the individual who is trying to feed, clothe, educate, and bring up as decent citizens a family of two or three or more children. It is unbelievable that the majority would come in here with a bill of this kind and try to jam it down the throats of the membership.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DINGELL. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Does the gentleman mean to tell us that these little-income groups would be better able to feed and clothe their families without tax reduction?

Mr. DINGELL. I mean that if you give them what amounts to about 22 cents a week, which is about the price of a package of cigarettes where you have a State sales tax, which the gentleman so ardently advocates, that it would not do him any good, and he could just as well do without one package of cigarettes per week as a tax concession.

I close as I started, by saying this bill is a $4,000,000,000 swindle. I beg you to send it back to the committee with instructions to give it as decent a burial as fits the deceitful environs from which it sprang.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand now?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota has 1 hour and 28 minutes remaining. The gentleman from North Carolina has 1 hour and 19 minutes remaining.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD immediately following the speech of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS].

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I am very much amused by the various excuses that my friends on the right give with reference to certain phases of this bill. My good friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] devoted most of his time to the 30-percent reduction. He said in effect that it was iniquitous. Yet he and every member of the committee, both Republicans and Democrats, voted for that 30-percent reduction.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. FORAND. We voted to try to help the gentleman's committee perfect a bad bill.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. That is as good an excuse as you can make. The gentleman does not dispute the fact that he voted for the 30-percent reduction.

Mr. FORAND. I will help perfect a bad bill every time.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. While we thought the committee bill was bad, at the same time we tried to make it a little more palatable.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes; the gentleman wants to get in out of the rain. There were two amendments added to the bill. One was the 30-percent reduction for the lower-income groups and we all voted for it; and the other was an amendment giving some more favorable consideration to those above 65. I hope I might discuss that further. We all voted for that. Not a single person voted against those amendments. I think all the Republicans and many of the Democrats are going to vote for this bill tomorrow.

You know, I was also very much impressed, as I said before, with what the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] said about how iniquitous this legislation was and how terrible it was going to be.

Do you know all we do in this bill, and let me impress this on you: All we do in the bill is to reduce the taxes as they are now levied by a bill that the Democrats themselves passed. The Democrats and New Dealers passed all the tax laws we are operating under. They fixed the schedules and the different gradations of taxes. We do not tear the structure down nor do we change the classes. All we do is to reduce the taxes of every single taxpayer in the United States and we do it just as methodically and scientifically as the present law was built.

Mr. COOPER. The gentleman voted for every one of them, too.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Yes, I did; but I say it is their bill. What do we do in this bill? We do just two things. You cannot find fault with our perfecting your bill. Every piece of legislation under which we collect taxes now was passed under a Democratic administration. We come along and we say that we have just come out of a war. We say it is time to reduce taxes and we tell the people we are going to reduce taxes. We proceed to reduce taxes by taking 20 percent off of everybody up to those who make $300,000 or more, and we take off 10 percent from them. In addition to that we go back and say instead of making it 20 percent across the board we will do something for the small taxpayer. What do we do? We give them all a 30-percent reduction. Thirty percent on what they are now paying. Mr. Chairman, how much of a reduction do you expect to give an individual? Someone stands up here and says "Isn't it awful that somebody only gets 22 cents a week of a reduction." If he only pays taxes at the rate of 70 cents a week, 22 cents a week would be a pretty good reduction. You cannot attack the fairness of any reduction plan if it reduces in the same proportion that it built up. If the man who pays $2,000 in taxes is not given any better rate than the man who pays $30 then there should be no accusation of unfairness. In this bill the man who pays two thousand is not given the same rate as the $30 man. The $30 man is given a 30-percent reduction while the other man is only given 20 percent. You cannot in fairness take all the income that the wealthy man has. We already take more than 80 percent of what he has. On the other hand we cannot take all the small man has. We are, in this bill, reducing the taxes of all as equitably as possible.

If we confiscate all the income of the so-called rich we would not have very much compared to the volume of taxes collected. Seventy-five percent of all the taxes collected are below the $10,000 level. It is the great middle class that pay the taxes.

What do we do for them? In 1945 we passed a tax-reduction bill. We voted for it and the Democrats voted for it. What was the result? We took 12,000,000 in the lowest brackets off the tax rolls. Twelve million people went off completely. How many people are affected by this 30-percent reduction? Eighteen million and six million more who are covered by the notch to which I shall refer—a total of 24,000,000 people get from a 20- to 30-percent reduction. That is quite a reduction for that class of people. If a man only pays about $10 a year in taxes, how much of a reduction can he expect? He gets a 33⅓-percent reduction under the new computation. That is a pretty good reduction. If you want to give him some more why do you not vote some more? Why did you Democrats not offer a motion in committee to make it 40 percent? No one rose up and said, "Let us make it 40 percent." You all voted for the 30 percent, every last one of you voted for the 30 percent, and you were glad of that opportunity. I am glad you had that opportunity.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. No. I prefer to continue as my time is short.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman better not.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I shall yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the chairman of my committee first.

Mr. KNUTSON. We have listened to the minority speakers and one would think they were in favor of taking all taxpayers off the roll and paying them a bonus on top of that.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I now yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. FORAND. I will tell the gentleman why we did not offer anything in the committee, because of the way the committee was ridden by the one man. We did not stand a chance, and I will tell you more if you want to hear it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am sorry that the gentleman is aggrieved. It is almost childish to think that one man dominates the whole 25 members of the committee. I am sure that the gentleman from Rhode Island was not dominated.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman knows that is true.

Mr. KNUTSON. It is not even childish.

Mr. FORAND. The record does not prove I am childish.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I am glad I yielded to the gentleman, but I cannot yield any more.

Let me talk seriously about this matter. This is a very important matter, my friends. We are going to make a decision tomorrow whether we are going to reduce taxes before we provide for any debt payment. That is an important question. Now, I acknowledge and I admit that is an important matter; that is an important proposition. There are many fine gentlemen on my side of the aisle who have maintained consistently that we should pay something on the public debt before we reduce taxes. Very well. If you would stand adamant on that proposition and say you will never vote for a reduction in taxes until we pay the debt, why you will be here for fifty years, because we will not pay this debt in less than 50 years. It is so colossal we cannot pay it very soon.

Now, why have we not paid something on the debt? Well, the Secretary of the Treasury can pay on the debt any time he wants to if he has the money. I understand that there are probably $2,000,000,000 of cash available that the Secretary of the Treasury could pay now on the public debt. We in the Congress can not pay the debt. We can just pass legislation. We can pass legislation instructing him that the next time a certain issue of bonds comes due that he must retire them if he has the money, but we leave that to him, and he has plenty of money down there today that he can pay a substantial payment on the debt if he wanted to do it. But, apparently his policy is not to do it, not to want to retire the debt now. He said he does not want to reduce taxes now. What does he want to do?

Well. now, then, listen to me. It has been brought out here that we reduced taxes at a certain time last year. Someone said we reduced the taxes because an election was imminent; we reduced the taxes because an election was coming on; and so and so forth. But would it be wrong for me to say that the Secretary of the Treasury is waiting for next year, in 1948, when he will come forward and recommend a reduction of taxes, and the President will come on and recommend a reduction of taxes? They will most surely do so. Now, we can do this tax reduction today, gentlemen; we can reduce the taxes today, and we can pay on the debt today. Why do we not pay on the debt? I said before that is up to the Secretary of the Treasury. My good friend, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] said that the conferees having to do with the fixing of the budget had not reported yet; the gentleman and I and 18 others are on that conference committee. It has not, and it has not brought back a final report, but it will do so shortly. It must certainly recommend some figure between six billion and four and one-half billion. The 108 Congressmen making up this Budget Committee brought back a report here and they have recommended a reduction in the budget of $6,000,000,000, and the House has accepted it, and most of you voted for it. It passed overwhelmingly in this House. We cut the budget down $6,000,000,000. Why, the President himself recommended that we cut the budget to some extent; I mean, his figures show it. The President's budget figures show what? They show a figure of thirty-eight and nine-tenths billion as probable receipts and he recommended expenditures of thirty-seven and one-half billion. That leaves a balance of one and four-tenths billion right there in the President's own figures.

Now then, what did the committee of 108 recommend? What did you adopt? You adopted these figures. You said in effect that we are going to have an income of $39,100,000,000.

Well, this same committee fixed expenditures at $31,500,000,000. You take $31,500,000,000 from $39,100,000,000, and there is $7,600,000,000 that we have already found in this Congress by an overwhelming vote. Now then, if we pass this bill, it takes $3,800,000,000 off of taxes, and that leaves over $3,000,000,000 for payment on the debt.

Now then, in addition to that, let me say this: The President, when he sent his budget up to us, gave no consideration to the $1,300,000,000 that we have saved since that time. Here is a saving of $1,300,000,000 which resulted when we reenacted the statutes applicable to excise taxes. You put that on the President's balance of $1,400,000,000 and that gives you $2,700,000,000. What are you going to do this year?

These experts that we have here, they are not Democrats or Republicans; they are career men. They tell us we are going to have an intake of $42,100,000,000. If we have an intake of $42,100,000,000 and can spend only $31,100,000,000, because we have agreed that that is all we are going to spend, then we will have $11,000,000,000 to work on. Suppose you take $1,000,000,000 of that off and let them have a leeway of $1,000,000,000. Let us bring it down to $10,000,000,000. It looks very much as if we are going to have $10,000,000,000 to work on this year. Then why wait? Now is the time to reduce taxes. The taxes under this bill are reduced absolutely percentagewise, accurately, definitely, and fairly. If you want to say, "Well, here is a $5 man, he only gets so much," if you want to give him more than 30 percent that is all right, but you can never fix it so we will not have small taxpayers. That will never happen.

The argument has been made in the committee and in the press that we can forgive the first part of 1947 and commence to collect the taxes in July of 1947. You know what the trouble with that would be. If you are going to divide the year 1947 administratively it is almost impossible to do so, I am informed. Further, there are many people who make all their money in the first part of the year. All their earnings accrue in the first 6 months of the year. If you forgive these, then you have forgiven all of their tax. Then take the farmer, the cattleman, for instance. He makes all his money in the fall of the year. If you forgive the first part of the year and assess the full percentage on the last part of the year, then you are making the cattleman pay on the full income but you are forgiving the man who operated in the first part of the year; that is not fair, it is not just, and it cannot be done administratively, except at a great deal of trouble, neither can it be done equitably. For that reason, I do not want anybody to be swept off his feet by an argument, however plausible it might appear to him, that he may see in the newspapers.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I agree with the gentleman. It would simply mean an additional chapter of economic bullwhipping to our people, who have had enough of that kind of stuff.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Exactly. It would just be a matter of impossible bookkeeping to whoever would participate in it.

To the new Members of Congress and those of you who have not given much attention to tax laws, I am sorry to say that this bill is like all other tax bills in that taken literally and by itself you cannot learn much about it. In fact many of us who have had a great deal of experience in handling tax bills are not much better off than you are if we take this bill literally. However, I want to say that those responsible for the drafting of this legislation have adopted a plan that will not be complicated to follow if one would take the time to understand just what the plan is.

For instance we have talked a great deal about a 30-percent rate on those whose taxable income is $1,000 or less and a 20-percent rate on those whose taxable income is greater than $1,000. But strange as it may seem neither the figures and words 30-percent cut and 20-percent cut do not appear anywhere in this bill. In fact the $1,000 net income which seems to be a very important figure is as a matter of fact not the important figure because neither the 20 percent nor the 30 percent apply to the $1,000. These percentages apply to the tentative tax that must be paid by the individual. For instance, the real figure that plays an important part in these computations is a figure that, without this legislation, would be the tentative tax of the taxpayer. For instance the tentative tax is established by computing 20 percent (which is not the 20-percent cut that we refer to) on the net taxable income whatever it may be. If it is $1,000 the tentative tax is $200. If it is only $500 the tentative tax would be $100 and if it is $2,000 the tentative tax would be $400. Under the bill which we passed in 1945 a deduction of 5 percent was allowed on the tentative tax in the three cases above given, 5 percent of the $200 or the $100 or the $400 referred to would first be taken. In the $200 case 5 percent would be $10. That $10 would be deducted from the $200 and would be $190. That would be the present tax payable under the present law.

Under the bill which we are considering today we are allowing a 30-percent deduction on this $190. This would amount to $57. We would then deduct this $57 from the $190 which would leave the figure $133. That would be the tax in this case that would be required to be paid under the bill now under consideration. In that case the reduction would be $57.

This bill under consideration provides a 30-percent deduction on the tentative tax in all cases where the taxable income was $1,000 or less. If a man's taxable income was $1,001, the rate of reduction would only be 20 percent. If we were to go through the same arithmetic with this sum as we did with the $1,000 we would find that the man whose net taxable income is $1,001 would be compelled to pay $19.15 more than the man whose taxable income was $1,000. In other words, for having the one extra dollar he would be penalized to the extent of $19.15.

I am glad to say, however, that in this bill proper language has been provided to guard against that inequality. That is what is referred to in tax language as a notch. The language in this bill provides that a sliding scale should be established to operate upon net incomes between $1,000 and $1,395.83. It is at this last-named figure that the notch will run out. The formula established is to ascertain the tentative tax just as we did in the other example, that is, take 20 percent of any figure between $1,000 and $1,395.83 and take 20 percent off of that amount so as to establish a tentative tax. Then deduct from that $67 and the remainder would be the actual tax to be paid under the present law.

Let us apply the arithmetic to this sum of $1,395.83 by taking 20 percent of it. The result would be $279.17. By subtracting $67 from this sum the balance would be $212.17 and that would be the tax payable under that net income.

Therefore on all net incomes above $1,395.83 the tax would be found by taking 20 percent of that amount which would be the tentative tax, and then taking 24 percent from the tentative tax, which would be the tax under the new bill. The reason for taking the 24 percent, as provided in this new bill, is that 20 percent taken after the 5 percent has been taken is the same as taking 24 percent. By doing this, the one computation is saved. For instance, 5 percent from 100 is 95 and 20 percent of 95 is 19. And 5 and 19 make 24.

I am sorry that I cannot go further into detail in explaining this notch transaction, but I wish to compliment those who have devised this plan, because it works out very accurately with the result that everybody is treated alike.

I sincerely hope that this legislation will pass and that it will not only be a great satisfaction to the overburdened taxpayers of the country, but I hope it will act as a stimulant to business and a stabilizer to our economy.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS. Mr. Chairman, I am very definitely in favor of H. R. 1, which is now being considered by the House, and support it with enthusiasm. This bill not only relieves the payers in the lower-income brackets of considerable tax burden but it also will stimulate the flow of risk capital to finance an expanding economy in the country.

Too much emphasis cannot be placed on the need for a stimulus to our expanding economy in order to meet the ever-present threat of inflation. I hope this measure will pass by a large vote and that there will not be too much delay before it is enacted into law. Any delay would be detrimental to the best interests of the country because at this time it is especially necessary that our financial house be put in order by the reduction of taxes as well as by the reduction of unnecessary Government expenditures.

I am taking this opportunity, however, to direct the attention of the Members of this body to serious departure from the doctrine of separation of powers in our Government. It is the unnecessary and unwarranted delegation of legislative power to the Executive without adequate safeguards or standards to insure that the will and intent of the Congress is observed. This fundamental error will be repeated until Congress asserts and equips itself to perform once more the legislative function, rather than permitting it to go by default, sometimes misnamed delegation, to the executive departments.

I am sure that every Member of Congress from time to time has found a constituent confronted by a Federal law, usually of a regulatory or tax character, which was "legislated" by some executive agency, rather than the Congress of the United States. It is appropriate that, with a new peacetime Congress and a new legislative reorganization act, we stop and take stock of these situations. They cannot be allowed to increase without a serious danger to the integrity of the Congress and our particular form of government to which rule by executive decree is abhorrent.

We all recognized that during the war period a variety of emergency regulations were necessary to mobilize our national efforts for the conflict. The delegation of the power to legislate by the Congress to executive agencies in such a situation may be a necessity. Likewise there are many problems of Federal Government in which the delegation of a legislative power may be necessary to a smooth and efficient functioning of the Congress and the other branches of the Government.

Recognizing these realities, I have come to the view that we have gone much too far in turning over our responsibilities for legislation to the executive departments and agencies and that this unchecked practice has resulted in a large number of unnecessary abuses. We must renew our vigilance to place severe limitations upon this delegation of legislative power where it is not necessary or where it has been subject to abuse.

I wish to give point to my remarks in this connection by citing a particular example which, however homely and specialized, illustrates the general problem.

Some time ago some of my constituents pointed out to me that an excise tax, originally imposed as a luxury tax on toilet articles, was being applied in such a way as to make taxable medicinal preparations which arguably were beyond the purview of the taxing act. In this particular case, a product known in common parlance as baby oil and lotion was the subject of a tax under section 2402 of the Internal Revenue Code (26 U. S. C. A. 2402). The provision of the statute read:

SEC. 2402. Tax on toilet preparations:

(a) Tax: There is hereby imposed upon the following articles sold at retail a tax equivalent to 10 percent of the price for which so sold: Perfumes, essences, extracts, toilet waters, cosmetics, petroleum jellies, hair oils, pomades, hair dressings, hair restoratives, hair dyes, aromatic cachous, toilet powders, and any similar substance, article, or preparation, by whatsoever name known or distinguished; any of the above which are used or applied or intended to be used or applied for toilet purposes.

Although it seemed to me that the language of the statute would deny any attempt of Congress to tax baby oil as an article similar to the specific products mentioned because of its medicinal character and limited use to newborn infants, I decided to check my layman's impression with the authorities.

First, I sent a letter to 3,262 hospitals in the United States which reported more than 100 births annually, enclosing a card with the following questions:

1. Is baby oil or lotion generally used for newborn infants in your institution?

2. Is baby oil or lotion generally considered by your staff a necessity in the care of newborn infants?

3. Is the use of baby oil or lotion generally recommended by your staff to mothers when they leave your institution?

These questions were framed to ascertain whether the medical profession considered baby oil or lotion a medical necessity in the care and treatment of infants or whether they classified this article as a cosmetic or a luxury. The card provided also a place for the signature and position of whoever answered for the hospital. The replies came in promptly and in volume, and no card was listed which was not signed. In all, 2,640 replies have been received and the questions were answered as follows:

1. Is baby oil or lotion generally used for newborn infants in your institution?

Yes, 2,512; no, 121; no answer, 7.

2. Is baby oil or lotion generally considered by your staff a necessity in the care of newborn infants?

Yes, 2,496; no, 138; no answer, 6.

3. Is the use of baby oil or lotion generally recommended by your staff to mothers when they leave your institution?

Yes, 2,416; no, 166; no answer, 58.

These replies clearly indicate that doctors consider baby oil or lotion a necessity in the care of newborn infants and whose judgment could be better? Certainly not the employees of the Internal Revenue Department who insist that the parents of babies must pay a tax on this important medication.

Next, I reported my findings to the Treasury Department, requesting their consideration of the removal of baby oil from the class of taxable products in the light of the information I had made available to them or which they could obtain by checking my sources.

The reply was that—

> There is no provision in the present law under which a baby oil * * * or other product used as an adjunct to the toilet or in the care of the body, may be exempt from the tax because it may be considered a necessity or may also have or be held out to have a medicinal value.

Leaving to one side the questionable character of this opinion of the Bureau of Internal Revenue in the light of decided cases by the higher Federal courts—borrowing the words of Justice Cardozo see, for example, Sharp & Dohme v. Ladner (82 F. 2d 733 (CCA Pa. 1936)—this experience has convinced me that a serious abuse of the doctrine of separation of powers is involved and that steps should be taken by the Congress at the earliest moment to correct this and similar abuses.

Certainly, it is delegation running riot, in the famous case outlawing the NRA, for the Congress of the United States to leave it between the Bureau of Internal Revenue and the courts to determine what products are to be the subject of an excise tax. Yet, in practice this is what has happened with Congress listing a few specific articles as taxable and delegating to the Executive the power to tax hundreds of other products which it may determine as included in the language any similar substance, article, or preparation, by whatsoever name known or distinguished. The only standard imposed is that the product so declared be used or applied or intended to be used or applied for toilet purposes. That is either poor legal draftsmanship or a deliberate effort to pass over to the Executive determinations of tax policy, general and specific, that Congress ought to make as the representatives of the people elected for that purpose.

I have no objection to the levy of an excise tax on the specific products named in section 2402 of the Internal Revenue Code; nor would I have any objection to the extension of that levy on many additional items which Congress, after adequate study, sees fit to determine as within the general category of toilet articles and, hence, properly included along with perfumes, cosmetics, hair oils, pomades, toilet waters, hair dressings, hair dyes, aromatic cachous, and toilet powders. I am not even sure how I would vote upon a proposition to broaden this category of product subject to excise taxes in this field to include certain particular products which were primarily medicinal in their nature and should be considered as necessities. Nor would I ask this body to pass a special legislative exemption for a product because it happens to be manufactured in my district. But I do seriously object to the loose inclusion of an omnibus category of items which are to be declared taxable by the Bureau of Internal Revenue merely because it feels that they are similar to the products named. Such a practice results in the passing over of such questions of policy as the one involved here: Will the Congress levy a sales tax on a medicine which is a necessity for every family with an infant; will Congress tax a necessary medicine as it taxes a cosmetic? These are questions for Congress to decide; not the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

This may be considered by some as a minor matter; limited to its specific sphere, it is minor; but the general principle of preserving a separation of powers is as important as our form of Government. Hence, I urge the Ways and Means Committee at an early date to present the Congress such measures as will cure existing situations and guard against future developments of this character. No matter how much we may choose to pass the buck to the executive departments to determine how and in what manner the laws we pass shall be applied, we should not continue a system of taxation by administrative decree.

One may read the cases in which the Federal court has reviewed the application of this act and see the extent to which this general delegation can be pushed without judicial check and how the courts, without too much success, have strained to develop judicial standards in lieu of the absence of legislative standards. In this situation Congress abdicated its proper responsibility; it delegated its legislative power without adequate standards or direction; it perpetrated, as a practical matter, a modern application of the principle of taxation without representation, which we thought we had rid ourselves of as early as the Declaration of Independence.

How can we, with the necessary conviction, perform the much needed function of policing arbitrary and unwarranted abuses by the executive agencies when, as a Congress, we give them a blank check to determine what is to be taxed? I submit that one of our first tasks of this Congress in dealing with the taxing and revenue laws is to locate every instance in which the power to tax and to determine what is to be taxed has been delegated in general terms, to initiate those studies necessary to a legislative determination by Congress rather than some employee of the Bureau of Internal Revenue, and finally to inaugurate those practices and procedures of legislation which, whatever else they accomplish, at least result in taxing those things the legislative body determines should be taxed and omitting those things from taxation which a wise national legislative policy would exempt from the taxing power.

It is only by a studied and undramatic effort to do the job we are elected to do rather than pass it over to the Executive that the integrity and efficiency of the legislative process will be maintained. Let the Congress recapture its responsibilities and call a halt to the process of government by executive decree, lest our system of government lose yet another hallmark that distinguishes it from the totalitarian states.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER].

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. JENKINS] has just made what seems to me to be an unanswerable argument in favor of the passage of this bill. There was no rancor, no acrimony, no political bias. In short, as a member of the tax committee for many years, he speaks from experience and his remarks do and should carry weight.

The debate has demonstrated that the membership of the House may be divided into three categories so far as this bill is concerned:

First. Those who believe that tax reduction at this time will be advantageous not only to the recipients, but to the general economy of the country, and who accept this proposal as the most likely tax aid at the moment.

Second. Those who are diametrically opposed to any tax reduction until the budget has been balanced and a substantial payment made on the national debt.

Third. That part of the minority which views with suspicion any legislation which seems to have the united support of the majority. This might be called a politically partisan group.

Mr. Chairman, no one likes to pay taxes, yet without taxes the Government cannot operate. In the final analysis, it is just a question of how the taxes are to be levied. I have always entertained the view that the bulk of the taxes should be borne by those most able to pay. This does not mean that because a man starts at the bottom in economic life and by hard work, frugality, and fair dealing succeeds financially, he should be punished, because he has contributed to the success of the country and has furnished jobs, employment, and a livelihood to many of his fellow citizens.

I hope there are none among us who would demagog and insist that the large income taxpayer is not paying at least his fair share at this time. When we recall that the tax collector takes as much as 86 percent of the taxable income of those in the highest brackets today, we must wonder just what the incentive is, inspiring these taxpayers to continue to risk their capital and hazard what they have in order to pay more taxes. It may be popular in certain quarters to demagog, but in peacetime consideration must be given to any policy that makes for more employment, more production, and more pay checks at the end of the week. The free enterprise system has made the payment of very large taxes possible. We must not destroy that system.

The Chairman, this bill does not provide a 20-percent reduction straight across the board. It does provide a 20-percent reduction of all who pay taxes, but it provides a 33⅓ percent reduction for those with the smaller incomes. The principle of ability to pay finds expression in this bill. If we delay the reduction of income taxes until the national debt has been paid, it will mean paying the present rate of taxes for more than a hundred years, because no one conceives that the present debt will be liquidated before that time, if the obligation created by the debt is honestly met in accordance with the American way of doing things. Our bonds always have been and always will be good so far as repudiation is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, the members of the Ways and Means Committee have presented an admirable report accompanying this bill. Anyone reading that report must be convinced of the soundness of this proposal. I came to Congress at the close of World War I and participated in tax reductions between 1920 and 1930. On August 31, 1919, the national debt was $26,000,000,000. This was reduced a billion dollars a year until 1929, yet the economy of the country improved, the incomes increased, and as income increased there was more income to tax and the Treasury was the beneficiary. This was history repeating itself, and I predict that the reducing of these taxes will be most beneficial not only to the small taxpayer in the amount of money he is relieved from paying to the Government, but also because of the additional business resulting from the use of money invested in industry rather than being sucked from industry and expended by wasteful administration of government.

This is not a political bill, and it is to be regretted that so much political heat has been generated by those who are apparently more inclined to think in terms of politics than in terms of the welfare of the country. This group, however, should not and will not dominate. When the final roll is called, if I do not miss my guess, this bill, as written, will receive an overwhelming endorsement by the House, all this criticism and political harpooning to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS].

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, ordinarily, one desires to place himself with the group recommending tax reductions. This certainly is the desire of every Member of Congress, I am sure. It is proper that we be favorable to the interests of taxpayers at all times when circumstances will permit. Therefore, I wish that I could appear today advocating some type of tax reduction. However, I have been unable to justify in my own mind any action other than that of opposition to this bill. Perhaps the reasoning that prompted this result may be of interest to you as you struggle with the problem of determining your own action on the roll calls to follow.

In the past I began thinking in terms of reduced Government expenditures, balanced budgets, and debt retirement. During the war I longed for the moment when circumstances would permit a discontinuance of staggering wartime expenditures and sacrifices. I longed for the time when circumstances would permit expenditures of Government to be less than receipts of Government. I longed for the day when circumstances would permit the Government to begin substantial yearly repayments of the amounts it had borrowed from its taxpayers and other citizens.

During the adjournment of the Congress I began to think in terms of the immediate arrival of that day. My Republican colleagues had been elected to congressional leadership on the apparent promise of a balanced budget, debt retirement, and tax reduction. I recalled their party platform of 1944, which, in part, says:

> We shall maintain the value of the American dollar and regard the payment of the Government debt as an obligation of honor which prohibits any policy leading to the depreciation of the currency. We shall reduce that debt as soon as economic conditions make such reduction possible.

The present Congress convened amid the shouts of my colleagues announcing a drastic reduction in the President's budget requests. The Legislative Budget Committee wielded the ax—$6,000,000,000 in reductions would be accomplished. I need not take your time now to discuss what has happened to the legislative budget. There is no legislative budget to look to in determining possible expenditures of Government for the fiscal year 1948. All that remains is the President's statement that budgetary needs will equal thirty-seven and one-half billions. The loss of the legislative budget would not be so alarming if we could find evidences of its presence in the workings of the Appropriations Committee. It is alarming, however, when we seek a trend indicating its presence in the appropriations rooms, and do not find even the trend.

What is the record? Have we discarded the idea of accomplishing such reductions in expenditures as are necessary to balance the budget, provide repayments on our debt, and provide tax reductions?

The House has considered two supply appropriation bills. The sharp ax, of which we have heard, was not used. The dullest of pocket knives appears to have been the weapon to which my friends had easiest access. Reductions so far, if they are to be considered as a pattern by which the remaining supply bills, including Army, Navy, veterans, and farmers, are to be "butchered," mean a total cut in the President's thirty-seven and one-half billion dollar request of one and one-half billion dollars. Instead, therefore, of spending thirty-seven and one-half billion, we will spend in fiscal year 1948 thirty-six billion, judging by the record so far made.

The highest estimate of tax return on present rates is thirty-nine and one-tenth billion. This would mean a surplus in fiscal year 1948 of three and one-tenth billion. That would be a worthwhile repayment on the public debt. It might be sufficient even to allow some reduction in some of the admittedly unjust excise taxes.

Under our present procedure, however, it is not to be used for these purposes. This surplus is to be returned to the taxpayers and we are to continue in fiscal 1948, with our Republican friends in control of Congress, the policy of deficit financing which they have in the past so deplored. If this is not a true statement of facts, I challenge any Member of the majority, in his own time, to show the House and the country how you will cut the President's budget so as to provide for both this tax reduction and substantial debt retirement. Where will you cut? Will you cut the Army and Navy? If so, how much? Will you cut the veterans? If so, how much? Will you cut the farmers? If so, how much? Unless these facts are developed in this debate, we can only assume you will not cut enough to provide for both H. R. 1 and debt repayment. We must also assume that the sponsors of H. R. 1 are more interested in political expediency than in maintaining a sound fiscal policy by Government. "Only a solvent America can help meet the postwar problems of the world." Those are not my words. They are yours in the supplemental views of the Republican minority on the revenue bill of 1945. Did you mean then by "solvent America" an America borrowing money to meet current expenses in peacetime?

No, Mr. Chairman, the facts are not on the side of those who sponsor this discriminatory patchwork of political duplicity. Your own majority report indicates the struggles you had in trying to write something to justify reducing taxes now.

Your report assumes a reduction in the President's budget of either $4,500,000,000 or $6,000,000,000. It assumes continued high employment, high national income and high capacities to pay taxes. But you give as one of the reasons for passing this bill the prediction that a recession will occur in late 1947 or 1948 and taxes must be eased for that occurrence before its appearance. For how much recession are you legislating? Will not the anticipated revenues on which you attempt to justify this legislation then be considerably less? Or do you reason, as has been your party's fault in the past, that these tax savings given in the upper brackets will trinkle down to the jobless through the generosity of the managerial brains?

I have read your report where you state in effect that these tax savings of approximately $111,000 on each net income of $1,000,000 will be used to create jobs for the jobless, to produce additional goods at a time of shrinking purchasing power and market. You reason that these tax savings in the upper brackets will save us from depression by merely being utilized to produce more goods at a time when restricted markets cause lessening of national income. This type of reasoning generally occurs when one counts votes as he considers legislation. I trust my friends will advise us as to the reason for the illogicalness of their report. Perhaps my friends have not recovered from the shock of finding themselves in position of leadership. It is to be assumed that tax reduction could not be delayed for fear that the idea would be forgotten later by this new inexperienced Ways and Means Committee leadership as it struggles to produce a program of work.

Let us now turn to the assumption of our friends on the majority that there will be sufficient reductions in expenses for both tax reduction and substantial repayment on the public debt. One already knows from what has been said the type of assumption I think this to be. However, if we do cut taxes, we should be concerned as to how we do the job. Should not our handiwork still permit of adequate revenues after its enactment? Should it not be equitable in its treatment of different income groups? Should it not be so written as to help maintain large consumer markets so essential to high-level production and employment? Should it not provide for simplicity in administration and in compliance? Should not the responsible committee be concerned over the reaction of all segments and individuals to its handiwork? Should not the committee consider reduction of individual rates together with all other taxes so as to avoid possible defeat of its purpose by overlooking some other deterrent to incentive.

Mr. Chairman, H. R. 1 does not qualify by these standards.

The sound approach to this whole question of postwar tax revision is to make a comprehensive study of the entire Federal tax system, including individual taxes, corporate income taxes, estate and gift taxes, and excise taxes. Such a study should aim at equitable adjustments, incentive effects, and sound economical administration under peacetime conditions. If your committee had proceeded in this direction, it would have saved you many of the pitfalls you will find in the pathway of support of H. R. 1.

Many amendments are needed to the Revenue Code as a result of the accumulation of many structural, administrative, and procedural tax problems arising since the Revenue Act of 1942. These amendments have not been passed because they would have resulted in substantial loss to the Treasury in wartime. The passage of H. R. 1 prevents the committee approving these amendments.

The Treasury and the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue are now, and have been, studying such problems as the double taxation of dividends, the treatment of family incomes, and many others, including wartime excess rates. Excise taxes as a class fail to meet the standard of ability to pay. We should review these taxes and revise many of them before we finally pass back to the taxpayer his reductions. They certainly are not less important than the reduction of the tax on a million-dollar income by $111,000.

Even if we are to reduce individual income-tax rates without such a study, the pattern of H. R. 1 is unsound.

The majority report asserts that the same percentage cut of tax liability is equitable on the assumption that the present burden of distribution is equitable. Nothing could be more fallacious. H. R. 1 completely destroys the present system of progression in the individual income-tax rates and seriously undermines the ability-to-pay formula that has been in our income-tax structure since 1913. Income tax is based on a technical system of percentage points in each tax bracket of income. Thus, a 30-percent reduction of a 20-percent tax rate in the first half of the first bracket is a reduction in rate of only 6 percentage points, but a 20-percent reduction of an 80-percent tax rate is a 16-percentage-point reduction in rate. Even a 10½-percent reduction of an 80-percent tax rate is an 8.4-percentage-point reduction in rate. It is, therefore, very obvious that a flat across-the-board percentage cut, or a modification thereof as proposed by H. R. 1, actually cuts the top-tax brackets for more steeply and thereby reduces the progression in the top brackets and gives rise to the feeling on the part of those in the low brackets that we have abandoned the formula of ability to pay.

In addition, H. R. 1 reduces the wartime percentage point rates of taxation in the higher brackets by a greater percent that it reduces them in the lower brackets. Those in the upper brackets, therefore, are relieved of their responsibilities to repay the war debt by a greater percent than are other taxpayers. For example, a married person with no dependents and a net income of $4,000 would pay almost 10 times as much tax under H. R. 1 as in the prewar year 1939. A person with a net income of $5,000,000 would pay less than 1 percent more taxes than in 1939. It is interesting to study the chart on this point, which, by inadvertence I feel sure, is not included in the majority report in support of H. R. 1.

The unfairness of H. R. 1 can also be seen by comparing the reduction in effective rates as between single persons, married persons with no dependents, and married persons with dependents. Let us assume a net income before personal exemptions and see what the reduction in the effective rate for each group is. At $2,500 the effective rate for a single man is reduced by 3.04 percentage points; for a married man with no dependents the effective rate on the same amount is reduced by 2.28 percentage points; for a married man with two dependents the effective rate on the same amount is reduced by 1.14 percentage points.

Let us take $5,000 net income before personal exemption. For the single man the effective rate is reduced by 3.69 percentage points; for the married man with no dependents the effective rate is reduced by 3.19 percentage points; for the married man with two dependents the effective rate is reduced by 2.36 percentage points. The sponsor of H. R. 1 will have the effective rate on his salary reduced by 5.08 percentage points, while the married taxpayer with two dependents will have the effective rate on his $12,000 reduced by 4.18 percentage points. All of this is set forth in the tables accompanying the majority report.

It is my understanding that certain of those sponsoring H. R. 1 are single. I do not object to them looking after the interests of single taxpayers, but ordinarily, in the past, we have shown greater concern over the married taxpayer with dependents on the assumption that his burdens are heavier. It will be said that these facts are true because the married man with dependents pays less tax—therefore, 20 percent of his tax is less. Yes, that is true, but the fact still remains that H. R. 1 gives tax relief without regard to the need for tax relief.

Furthermore, H. R. 1 increases spendable income in a manner not calculated to ease any possible shrinkage in purchasing power by providing greater increases in the higher brackets. For example, it would increase spendable income after taxes for a married person with no dependents with a net income of $1,200 by 1 percent; with $6,000 by 4.2 percent; with $100,000 by 34.2 percent; with $1,000,000 by 69.2 percent. To say the least, this does not mean two cars in every garage of those in the lower brackets. Their income cannot be increased by greater amounts because the report of the majority points out it is necessary for large percentages to be given in the upper brackets so they can speculate. I assume this would also mean speculate in the markets. New speculators could bring on another situation such as we had last fall in portions of the agricultural produce market. This is certainly not the type of broader markets nor incentives I desire created by tax reductions.

Such reductions as are made by H. R. 1 in the tax liabilities of those in the upper brackets cannot be used to create new jobs now. This objective of the bill is defeated by present full employment, scarcity of raw materials, and other deterents to incentive in the law and not covered by this bill. No more automobiles can be produced by such reductions. No more washing machines, radios, houses, or other items now scarce, because of shortage of materials and labor, will be available by the passage of H. R. 1.

Simplification of tax returns has been the great desire of the public since the material increase in the number of taxpayers occurred. Even now, in spite of the withholding system and the supplement T-tax tables, technicalities of filing income-tax returns and estimates are confusing. Our present forms and instructions reflect the provisions of the Individual Income Tax Act of 1944, which had simplification as the sole objective. Our wartime experience with a broad-based income tax has clearly indicated the need for tax-return forms and instructions which are easily understood and which require the minimum number of computations. Instead of providing for greater simplicity, H. R. 1 will further complicate the law and confuse the millions of taxpayers.

H. R. 1 splits the first surtax bracket into three smaller brackets: Under $1,000, $1,000 to $1,396, and $1,396 to $2,000. This increases the number of withholding rates to four from the two provided by present law for the first bracket. I wish we could be assured that this will not perplex the taxpayer as he attempts to estimate his tax and file his return, or the employer as he attempts to determine where to place the employee for withholding purposes.

Today a taxpayer itemizing deductions or claiming the $500 standard deduction computes his tentative tax from a combined normal tax and surtax table shown in the instructions of Form 1040. The tentative tax so determined is reduced by 5 percent in all instances. This reduction requires but one line on Form 1040, and because of its application to all taxpayers is not susceptible to misinterpretation.

Under H. R. 1, the same taxpayer would determine his tentative tax from a combined normal tax and surtax schedule as under present law. Unlike present law which provides only one rule for tax reduction in tentative tax, however, the reduction in tentative tax under H. R. 1 would be made on the basis of four rules varying with the size of the tentative tax and would probably require four lines on the return form which would read somewhat as follows:

1. Enter 33.5 percent of your tentative tax, if your tentative tax on line 6 is not in excess of $200 _____
2. Enter $67, if your tentative tax is in excess of $200 but not in excess of $279.17 _____
3. Enter 24 percent of your tentative tax, if your tentative tax on line 6 is in excess of $279.17 but not in excess of $250,000 _____
4. Enter $60,000 plus 15 percent of the excess of your tentative tax in line 6 over $250,000, if your tentative tax is in excess of $250,000 _____

Aside from the complications just outlined, the taxpayers of the country will be mystified by the 33.5-percent reduction in tentative tax which mathematicians indicate is equivalent to a 30-percent reduction in present law liability; the 24-percent reduction which is equivalent to a 20-percent reduction in present law liability; and the 15-percent reduction which is equivalent to a 10.5-percent reduction in present law liability.

Taxpayers with tentative taxes between $200 and the magic figure of $279.17 will receive an apparent reduction of $67.00 under H. R. 1. The actual reduction in present law liability, however, is only $57.00, for taxpayers with tentative taxes of $200, and decreases to $53.04 for taxpayers with tentative taxes of $279.17.

The report of the majority states that the same type of reduction as that provided by H. R. 1 could be accomplished by changing the rate schedule, and indicates that it will probably be desirable to consolidate the percentage reductions in the rate schedule ultimately. In the meantime, however, the majority gives the following justification for the weird and incomprehensible computations outlined. Quoting from page 14 of the committee report:

> Your committee believes, however, that percentage reductions are more readily understood by the public, and, therefore, should be used for a reduction made during the year it becomes effective.

Does the majority contend that this type of simplicity in the interest of politics will create greater taxpayer morale and cooperation so that cost of administration by the Internal Revenue Service can be reduced, as we have already directed?

Splitting the first surtax bracket and the resultant lowering of the wage level at which graduated withholding rates become operative would increase both the number and amount of refunds due to overwithholding. It has been estimated these refunds will be increased by $1,900,000,000. Moreover, employers using the percentage method of computing the amount of tax to be withheld from salaries and wages would be faced with added computations because of the four withholding rates and brackets entering into the calculations as compared with two under present law.

Is it logical to claim soundness for a bill causing these results and necessarily providing for greater costs of administration?

Certainly the Congress cannot so claim. The House on tomorrow, I hope, will return this bill to its author, the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, with the recommendation that he change his ideas on taxes.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN].

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, we must balance the budget. We should in the next fiscal year make a substantial payment on the national debt.

It was with these facts in mind that I have given careful study to our financial picture.

The Government revenue for the next fiscal year was estimated by the President at $39,200,000,000.

His budget calls for expenditures of $37,500,000,000.

The surplus, according to the President's figures, will thus be $1,700,000,000.

The House has said that they can cut costs by $6,000,000,000.

The Senate has said that they can cut costs by $4,500,000,000.

A mean between these figures would be $5,250,000,000.

Adding this amount to the surplus shown by the President's figures gives a net saving of $6,950,000,000.

Deducting the $3,800,000,000 of possible reduction in taxes through the present bill, we will have available for debt reduction or other emergencies $3,150,000,000.

But history has shown that a reduction in taxes does not result in an equal reduction in revenue.

The Secretary of the Treasury also testified that at present the national income is running on the annual basis of $175,000,000,000 rather than one hundred sixty-five billion, as per his January estimate.

If this rate continues during the next fiscal year, the revenue should be closer to forty-three billions than $39,000,000,000.

There seems to be ample room for a balanced budget, a substantial payment on the national debt, and tax reduction.

The next question which faces us is: Is tax reduction advisable at this time?

If the threat of inflation was as great as it appeared to be a year ago, there might be some question as to whether we should reduce taxes now.

But in spite of a few sharp increases during the past few months, it does seem that we are scraping the top in prices.

There has been a considerable drop in the price of luxury items, which fact usually foreshadows a general price decrease. And buyers are demanding quality and known brands.

Inventories are increasing at the rate of about twelve billion a year. Sooner or later buying power generated by the desire to accumulate inventories will cease and orders will only be given as consumers purchase goods.

Effects of this tax cut will only show in the economy in a year's time. There should be no shortages of goods by then.

To argue that we should not reduce taxes now owing to the dangers of inflation, as is suggested in the minority report, does not seem to me to be valid.

During the hearings the Secretary of the Treasury agreed that we should cut taxes at some future indefinite date. In fact he indicated close agreement with the theory behind this bill, for he said to me—and it appears on page 73 of the hearings—I quote:

> I am heartily in accord with your notion that we must put the incentive in there to get that extra effort. We must bear in mind that the men who give the greatest employment must be given consideration, too, in arriving at that.

But he did not want to make the cut now. He testified that he wanted to wait until such time as we start suffering from bad business conditions and unemployment.

But Mr. Roosevelt's former Under Secretary of the Treasury, Professor Magill, testified that there would be a lag between the date of tax reduction and any stimulation resulting therefrom, of at least a year.

What would you Democrats do about the man who loses his job during this lag? Would you start another WPA?

I say let us do our part now to see that this man does not become unemployed.

Of course, spenders never want to reduce the revenue. It will give them less money to squander.

Our opponents say they hope to make a tax cut at some future date, which they keep indefinite. When will this be? Are they waiting for some time when it may be more politically advantageous?

The time for tax relief is now.

The next question is, In what manner should these cuts be made? We should try to remove as far as possible the burdens where they strike hardest, and at the same time forget politics and try to pass the type of legislation which will in the long run provide the greatest incentives, stimulate the economy, increase the national wealth, improve the standard of living of our people, and give the greatest possible employment at the highest possible wage.

The present bill does this.

Through the amendment which I introduced in committee, which was unanimously supported by all members of the Ways and Means Committee—both Republicans and Democrats—26,000,000 of the lowest-income group, with net taxable income of under $1,000 will receive a 30-percent cut in their taxes.

Those who will get this full 30-percent cut are single persons with gross income of about $1,650; married persons without dependents with income of about $2,200; married persons with one dependent with income of about $2,750; and married persons with two dependents with gross income of about $3,300.

Through the notch provision which was necessary so that there would not be a substantial difference in tax reduction between those whose incomes were $999 and those whose incomes might be $1,001, an additional 6,000,000 taxpayers will receive reductions of between 20 and 30 percent.

Thus, 31,000,000 out of our estimated 48,000,000 income taxpayers—over two-thirds—will receive a reduction greater than 20 percent.

Such discrimination in favor of the small-income group is thoroughly justified today. It is they who are suffering most from the high cost of living, for they must spend practically their entire income on the necessities of life.

And, though it is true that their spendable income has been reduced by taxes in the past few years by a much smaller percent than those who earned more, the few dollars which they pay are often a greater burden than thousands of dollars may be in the higher brackets.

The bill provides that all other taxpayers, until you get into the very high income group, have a flat 20 percent reduction.

This is fair, for outside of the special benefits for the low-income group, such a cut will in no way change the percentage of the burden carried by each individual.

It continues in full effect the percentages of the present tax bill. Everyone must put the same proportion of ingredients into the cake, only the cake is smaller.

Our opponents are making much of a table in which they show only a small increase in spendable income in the lower brackets resulting from the enactment of the pending bill.

There is an old saying that liars figure and figures lie. The figures they present are but a statistical trick. When taxes are already very small, relative to spendable income, a decrease in taxes of course can have only a very small effect on spendable income.

If taxes are large in comparison to spendable income, a decrease in taxes will of course have a substantial effect on spendable income.

To show the absurdity of their argument, let us consider the case of the 20,000,000 wage earners who today pay no income tax.

For instance, a married man with two dependents having a net income of $2,000 at present pays no tax and, therefore, when a tax reduction is made there is no increase in his spendable income. In his case the increase in spendable income resulting from the pending bill is zero.

Would the Democrats pay him a Government bonus to provide a uniform increase in spendable income?

If you applied the same trick figures to the Democratic reduction made in 1945—it gave incomes of $500 only one-half of 1 percent increase in spendable income; while it gave the $10,000 income man 5½ percent, and the $100,000 income man 21 percent; while the $750,000 income man, about whose welfare it is evident the Democrats must have been much concerned, received a 68-percent increase in his spendable income.

Our opponents seem to criticize any reductions for the managerial class. But isn't it true that it is chiefly through their efforts that others find employment? What good does it do to raise a man's exemptions for income-tax purposes, if while doing so you take away his job so he has no income; or, by contracting the economy reduce his pay.

We must not handicap too greatly the man who provides the jobs, that provide the income, that provide the tax, which is the Government revenue.

Today at an $18,000 income the Government takes more than half of any extra dollar earned by any individual. Previous to the war even after the "soak the rich" tax bill, this figure was at an income of $74,000.

I think this $18,000 executive is entitled to real consideration. He is the man who is coming up in the world. He may be the assistant vice president of a great corporation. He may be the vice president or president of some small business, striving to grow.

It is these young men of unusual ability and drive upon whom we must rely to build up this country and keep our economy functioning in the highest gear in future.

If we take more than half of every extra dollar he earns, he will have little incentive to put that extra drive and push into his work which will result in more employment and better wages for his employees.

Under the pending bill this 50 percent take of any added dollar earned will not become operative until you reach an income of $32,000.

It might be of interest to read to you here the figures as to what an extra dollar of earnings are worth to a married man with two dependents, at various income levels under the present law.

If he has a $4,000 income an extra dollar of earnings is worth 81 cents.

If he has an $8,000 income an extra dollar of earnings is worth 75 cents.

If he has a $16,000 income an extra dollar of earnings is worth 59 cents.

If he has a $32,000 income an extra dollar of earnings is worth 41 cents.

If he has a $64,000 income an extra dollar of earnings is worth 29 cents.

If he has a $128,000 income an extra dollar of earnings is worth 15½ cents.

I repeatedly asked the Secretary of the Treasury, as may be seen in the hearings on page 72—What percentage of income take by the Government did he feel would prevent an individual from adding to the national wealth by giving that extra effort or working that extra hour, which would result in further employment of labor? He refused to answer.

I think he realized that if he did answer it would have been embarrassing to the tax theories of certain gentlemen on his own side of the aisle.

In order to fulfill our obligations, we must keep the national income high. It is only through the foresight and initiative of those who are rising to positions of responsibility that this can be accomplished.

Those in the higher income groups must rightly shoulder the largest part of the tax burden. But we should not at this time too greatly increase their proportion of the load.

In a world where Communism is on the march, this Nation must be strong—strong economically as well as militarily. Tax reduction at this time will help make it so.

I have been asked to explain those notch provisions so I have put them on the board. My writing is not very legible. If we did not have the notch provisions, this is what would happen. The man with a $999 income has a basic tax of 20 percent, or $199.80. The reduction under this bill is 33.5 percent, or a net reduction of $66.93. The basic tax being $199.80, the reduction of $66.93 would bring a total tax of $132.87.

The man with the $1,001 income would pay a 20-percent basic tax of $200.20. The 24-percent reduction would be $48.04. Two hundred dollars and twenty cents less $48.04 would give him a tax of $152.16, which as you can see would be manifestly unfair as compared with the man who had an income of only $2 less. So we give him a straight $67 reduction. Sixty-seven dollars off the basic tax of $200.20 gives him a tax of $133.20, which compares evenly and fairly with the man with the income $2 less, $132.87 against $133.20

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am wondering whether the gentleman thinks that a person in that income bracket would ever be able to understand that formula sufficiently to make out his own income-tax return, or would he have to hire a tax expert to make out his return, which would probably cost him as much as he would save in taxes.

Mr. KEAN. They do not have to understand any formula.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Let me say to the gentleman from Pennsylvania that that would be all worked out in the table.

Mr. KEAN. That would all be worked out in the table.

Mr. KNUTSON. All Republicans can read.

Mr. KEAN. I remember during the First World War when we were over in France and I was being instructed in artillery the French tried to teach us, and they put a long table of logarithms before us. We tried to understand it, but the average American candidate for officer there just could not understand at all what was going on. Then we were just shown a table and we worked from the table, and the Americans made better artillerymen than the French ever did.

All the taxpayer will have to do is work from the table.

Now, I want to show you what you do as you come out of the notch. The figure for coming out of the notch is $1,395.83. I give you as an illustration the man with a $1,395 income and the man with a $1,400 income to show what happens as you come out of the notch; 20 percent of $1,395 is $279; 24 percent of $279, which is the reduction, is $66.96; $279 less $66.96 makes $212.04. You get $212.04 as his tax, but you find that if it had been reduced by $67 he would pay 4 cents less, and so you find that as his income is under $1,395.83 it is provided that he shall make use of the notch. But take the man who earns $5 more, the $1,400 man, when you figure the 20 percent basic tax it is $284, and 24 percent of that is $67.20. You will note that the reduction is more than the $67; it is $67.20. This proves that he is correctly out of the notch and his tax is $212.80.

That is probably as clear as mud.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I think the gentleman has made a fine contribution. It is too bad it cannot be shown in the RECORD just as he has put it on the blackboard.

What attention was given by the committee to the question of average family income? I believe these tables deal with individual income, but getting over into the realm of the family, was any study made of the average family incomes of this country under present conditions?

Mr. KEAN. What is the average family income today? That was not brought up in the hearings.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Now we are down to where there are many members of families who are working, and a lot of them draw very high wages and salaries. After all, you come back to the family unit where father, mother, and children are involved.

Mr. KEAN. I have heard that the average family income has increased by about $1,500 over the last few years.

Mr. CRAWFORD. I have been informed by one of the most highly respected research institutes in this country that the average family income is about $4,500, and we have 75 percent of the families with incomes in excess of $2,500 per year and probably not over 3 percent have incomes around $1,000 per year. I wonder if any study has been made of that by the committee in connection with the question of tax reduction.

Mr. KEAN. The higher the income, the better I like it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield five additional minutes to the gentleman.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. With reference to the point raised by the gentleman from Michigan about family income, it is my belief that the figures cited by him are based upon the fact that more members of the family are working.

Mr. KEAN. That is right.

Mr. CURTIS. So the chances are that they all come within the class of less than $1,000 taxable net income.

Mr. KEAN. They will all be benefitted by this 30-percent amendment. That is why we figure that 31,000,000 taxpayers will come under it. Thirty-one million taxpayers constitute two-thirds of all the taxpayers in the United States who are going to benefit by this provision.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. May I have the gentleman's reaction to this problem: I, as an individual, receive so much income per year. The first thing I have to do is to meet soul and body expenses, that is, the necessities which I cannot reduce. Then suppose I move into a bracket where I can spend some money and save some money as well. Then I move into a bracket where taxes have to be paid.

If I understand the discussion here this afternoon, the philosophy of those who support this bill is to the effect that the thing to do under our type of economy is to keep taxes so low that there will be a spendable income over and above expenses for the actual necessities of life so that that spendable income can be used in the consumption of goods and services and thereby maintain an economy in this country and have people employed producing goods and services and create business and increase the total national income and help to employ others.

Mr. KEAN. That is right. I was just going to refer to that.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. That is exactly where our philosophies clash.

Mr. KEAN. That is right.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman goes on the supposition that you must give relief to the big fellow.

Mr. KEAN. I am not talking about the big fellow.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman goes on the supposition that you must give relief to the big fellow and that that will bring about prosperity.

Mr. KEAN. Who does the gentleman consider to be a big fellow?

Mr. DINGELL. Our philosophy is just the opposite. We believe that if you make the little fellow's income sufficient, he will buy the things that the big fellow will produce.

Mr. KEAN. The big fellow will not produce unless he has some incentive.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman's definition of a big fellow is one who has a thousand dollars in the bank.

Mr. KEAN. I do not know what the gentleman's definition of a big fellow is.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEAN. I yield.

Mr. CRAWFORD. My friend the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] must certainly argue that the majority of goods and services purchased are purchased by the little person.

Mr. DINGELL. Absolutely.

Mr. KEAN. They certainly are.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Therefore, you must reduce taxes on the little person so that he will have some income which is spendable so that he can buy goods and services.

Mr. KEAN. That is right.

Mr. CRAWFORD. So how in the name of common sense can you argue against this bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CAMP].

Mr. CAMP. Mr. Chairman, our most distinguished former chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON], veteran expert on taxation who led us through the difficult war years, has stated in his speech that our first concern should be to balance the budget; second, to make a substantial payment toward debt retirement; and third, to consider tax reduction. Indeed, not only do such wise leaders as he support that program but the Legislative Reorganization Act, which all of us on both sides of the aisle so heartily supported, prescribes the same procedure. It must, indeed, be disappointing to the country to find the majority here today abandoning the principles of the Reorganization Act and embarking upon a course of tax reduction before any appropriation bills have been passed and before it can be known what the budgetary requirements are. Especially is this true when we consider our international responsibility.

We have just concluded the most expensive war of history. In this great struggle we have sacrificed not only thousands of the flower of our youth but we have strained our natural resources and our financial strength to an extent far greater than the American people yet realize. In dollars the war has cost more than four hundred and thirty billions, of which two hundred and sixty billions is represented by the greatest debt any nation ever amassed. It is true that financial institutions, insurance companies, and the like hold a part of the bonds representing our national debt, but there are 85,000,000 individual citizens of the United States who are holders of these bonds and many of them made great sacrifices to make this investment in our national security. It is the duty of this Congress to preserve the credit of the United States, and in order to do that interest on the public debt must be met promptly and regularly, and payments on the principal must be made whenever the financial condition of the country permits. A most important and significant fact is the low interest rate being paid on this debt at the present time. We cannot hope to keep it at this unprecedented low rate indefinitely. It is the part of wisdom to reduce this debt in these flush times.

I am wondering what the thoughtful veterans of the late war are thinking of this proposed action of the majority to reduce taxes before balancing the budget or making a payment on the national debt. In a recent address, Gen. Omar M. Bradley, one of America's most distinguished soldiers and now Chief of the Veterans' Administration, stated that within 10 years war veterans and their dependents will number about half the population of this country and thus will have to shoulder the major tax burden. If payments on the national debt are postponed, it will mean that these veterans, many of whom gave five of the best years of their lives in arduous military service, will shoulder also the burden of paying off the national debt.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMP. I yield.

Mr. KEATING. As a veteran of both wars I can tell you what they think because I have had many letters from them. They say we should reduce taxes now.

Mr. CAMP. Regardless of the debt? Is that what they say?

Mr. KEATING. Not regardless of the debt at all.

Mr. CAMP. Wait a minute. Do they tell the gentleman that we should reduce taxes without making a payment on the national debt?

Mr. KEATING. That we should make a payment on the debt and reduce taxes, which we are going to do.

Mr. CAMP. That is fine and that is the point I am making. There is not a man in this House who wants to see taxes reduced any more than I do. There is not a man in this House who will vote to cut expenditures wherever possible more than I will; but I will not consent to the passage of such a bill as this reducing our revenues by $4,000,000,000 or more when the budget has not been balanced, when the appropriation bills have not been passed and when no one, even the best experts, can tell whether we can meet this year's expenditures or not.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. CAMP. Yes; I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman's argument, as I interpret it, is in favor of sound-money government.

Mr. CAMP. Absolutely.

Mr. McCORMACK. And this bill under consideration reported by the Republican majority is a repudiation in the light of the present national debt and the world conditions of the course we should take to assure our people sound-money government.

Mr. CAMP. Certainly. The gentleman from New York in answering my question a few minutes ago spoke of the letters he has received. I receive letters too, and I receive them from men in all walks of life. They are more concerned about building a sound fiscal policy than they are about taxes; and of all the letters I have received not one person has asked for tax reduction before that has been done. I feel sure that every Member of this House regardless of party is as anxious to see taxes reduced as is the author of this bill.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an observation?

Mr. CAMP. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The gentleman from New York may have received a lot of letters from veterans asking for a reduction in taxes, but I believe some of those veterans may have the impression that this bill will give the low income groups some relief. Instead, if they knew that the $5,000 income man would get a reduction of probably $10 or $15 in his tax they would not be so anxious to have tax reduction.

Mr. CAMP. They do not understand, of course they do not.

Mr. EBERHARTER. They think they will get a big tax reduction whereas the bill will not give the low income group much if any tax reduction, and this is the group that hits most of the veterans.

Mr. CAMP. Of course.

Experts tell us that our national income this year will be $165,000,000,000, the highest in all history. Congress, therefore, not only has a solemn obligation to our 85,000,000 individual bondholders and to our war veterans and their dependents, but it now has an opportunity to demonstrate its determination to keep faith with them by making a beginning in debt reduction.

The Secretary of the Treasury in appearing before our Committee on March 13 of this year made this statement:

> We should take full advantage of our present opportunities. It may be that in the future there will be years when it will be unwise to try to retire any part of the debt. If, however, we reduce the debt as rapidly as we can in good years, there will be less cause for concern if we have to omit debt retirement in some future year.

When the revenue bill of 1945 was reported, the Republican minority in their supplemental view said:

> Only a solvent America can help meet the postwar problems of the world.

In the 1944 platform of the Republican Party, they made this pledge:

> We shall maintain the value of the American dollar and regard the payment of the Government debt as an obligation of honor which prohibits any policy leading to the depreciation of the currency. We shall reduce that debt as soon as economic conditions make such reduction possible.

Have the Republicans forgotten these statements? For the Congress to fail to balance the budget and make some reduction in the public debt this year would be deplorable. The 85,000,000 bondholders and the veterans have a right to expect it. If we pass this bill today, reducing as it does the Federal income by nearly $6,000,000,000, not only will it be impossible to balance the budget, but we cannot even make a token payment on the public debt.

I feel sure that every Member of this House, regardless of party, is as anxious to see taxes reduced as is the author of H. R. 1, now under consideration. I certainly yield to no one in this desire. Indeed, it is no new proposition, and the Republican Party cannot claim any originality in it. The present administration began to reduce taxes immediately after the cessation of hostilities in 1945. The Revenue Act of 1945 was designed to aid both individuals and corporations in the difficult transition from war to peace. A tax reduction amounting to nearly $9,000,000,000, at current income levels, was applied in making these changes—12,000,000 of the lowest income taxpayers were relieved of all taxes. Corporate taxes were reduced greatly. The excess-profits tax, capital-stock tax and declared value excess-profits taxes were repealed, and corporate surtax rates were reduced. Normal tax exemptions were increased to surtax levels and individual income-tax rates were reduced. The use tax on automobiles and boats was repealed. This relief was granted promptly, and further relief was contemplated as soon as the budget could be balanced.

This bill has not had proper consideration and study, and is not a fair sample of the usual work of the great Ways and Means Committee. It comes to this House after only 2 days of hearings, with only two witnesses besides the representative of the Treasury Department appearing before us, and these two witnesses were hand picked by the proponents of the bill. In considering it in this ill-advised and untimely manner, we are simply shooting in the dark. The only information before us as to our budgetary requirements for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, is the report of the Budget Commission accompanying the President's message, and according to this information these requirements amount to $37,500,000,000. Although we can look forward in 1947 with great confidence in the vitality of the American system of free enterprise, knowing that during the year just passed civilian employment was at an all-time high and that more than 10,000,000 demobilized veterans have returned to civilian life and to civilian jobs, and that total production has reached a new peacetime high, being 50 percent above that of the year 1939 and only 15 percent below the wartime peak, yet the highest estimate so far made of the Government's revenues is only about $38,000,000,000, or practically the same as the budget requirements. To reduce these revenues by $6,000,000,000, as proposed in this bill, in such an ill-timed and ill-advised manner, is most deplorable and the people of this country, when they understand it, will condemn such action. Editorial writers all over the country who understand this situation are condemning such action, and I wish to quote in full two such editorials:

[From the Washington Post of March 16, 1947]

Chairman KNUTSON's prediction that the Ways and Means Committee will act next Thursday to report out his bill calling for an immediate 20 percent "across the board" reduction in personal income taxes, after only 2 days of hearings, warrants Democratic charges of steam-roller tactics. The bill stands condemned because of the indecent haste with which it is being rushed through the committee. The House and Senate have not yet agreed as to the amount of over-all reductions in expenditures that is to be their goal. And when they do, the figure will be highly tentative. For, as Secretary of the Treasury Snyder has testified, it is "impossible to foresee what the requirements of peacetime public expenditures will be." The outlook is even more uncertain as regards our defense expenditures, including recommended unbudgeted outlays for Greece and Turkey. To try to rush a tax-reduction bill through the House in these circumstances discredits its sponsors.

This is no time for tax cutting. With the economic outlook promising and the national income at a high level, existing taxes can be borne with much less hardship to individuals and to business than would normally be the case. If we ever intend to reduce our huge national debt, now is the time to begin. If the debt is reduced as rapidly as possible in good years, there will be less reason to feel concerned if debt retirement is suspended in some future less prosperous year.

The Knutson bill is not only ill-timed; it is also open to criticism for offering a flat 20-percent reduction of income taxes paid by persons with net incomes below $303,000. For the 1,100 income-tax payers above this dividing line, tax cuts would be graduated down to a minimum of 10.5 percent. Exemptions for taxpayers over 65 years of age would also be raised by $500, regardless of the size of the incomes of these aged persons. Concerning the latter extraordinary proposal, Secretary Snyder stated emphatically that it would be unfair to increase exemptions of this particular group without giving relief to many other special groups with low incomes. Many aged persons are very well off, indeed, and in no need of special dispensations.

Although believing that substantial tax relief for upper-income groups is imperative to stimulate the spirit of enterprise essential to economic progress, we think Secretary Snyder is right in saying that the Knutson tax bill "gives too little reduction to lower incomes and relatively too much to higher incomes." For instance, a married person with no dependents and a net income of $1,200, now paying a tax of $33, would be taxed $30 under the Knutson bill. A married man with a $50,000 income, on the other hand, would have his $24,795 tax reduced to $19,836, and the tax on a $100,000 income would be cut from $63,128 to $50,502.

In view of recent sharp declines in the purchasing power of the dollar, the case for tax relief of individuals in the low-income brackets has been greatly strengthened. Effective reductions in tax rates for the low-income groups could be made without cutting them off the tax rolls.

A final strong objection to the Knutson bill is that it deals with only a part of the tax system. When the time is ripe for tax reduction, a comprehensive revision of the tax system should be undertaken, covering excise, corporate and other taxes as well as the individual income tax. That is the only way in which we can hope to work out a well-balanced tax system that will give due weight to rival claims for tax reduction.

[From the Washington News of March 17, 1947]

America's taxpayers have just gone through the agony of settling up last year's income tax, estimating this year's tax and paying the first quarterly installment of all in excess of the withholding.

It has been painful, but those who are wise have made their plans for this year to conform to the tax rates now in effect. They would like to believe, that come next March, the country will face a brighter prospect, and they a lighter burden.

But the political tactics of the House Republican leadership, in driving for a hurry-up vote on a 20 percent across-the-board cut in this year's income taxes, raise doubts that anything at all in the way of tax legislation will be accomplished in this Congress.

If the Knutson tax cut is passed by the House, it is not likely that it will be approved by the Senate. Even if it is, it surely will be vetoed by the President—and the veto will be sustained. For the country is overwhelmingly behind the President's sound insistence that a balanced budget and public debt reduction must come first.

Representative KNUTSON and those who vote with him, in their drive for political recovery of the GOP, underestimate both the intelligence and patriotism of taxpayers. For a majority of taxpayers well know that even the heavy exactions they have just paid are less onerous to them than the inflated living costs which stem from the Government's continued deficit financing.

The Knutson Republicans could better serve the country by working this year to reduce public spending and the public debt. And by working now on a broad tax reform, eliminating double taxation and other inequities, and making the lower rates applicable to next year's business and income, to the end that people may plan ahead with hope and confidence. Representative KNUTSON, et al., apparently don't think so, but they probably could even get more votes that way.

Back some 18 years ago some of our leaders of that day grasped the idea that prosperity and the distribution of money and buying power was subject to the laws of gravity and flowed downward. When the great depression began they figured that if they could enrich the people in the upper-income levels, they would distribute it on down to the lowest reaches of our population. Is that the idea underlying H. R. 1, the bill now before us? If so, it is a most deceptive proposition. At first glance this bill has a fair appearance. But if we examine it closer, we find it to be most fallacious and most unfair. There are 48,544,600 income taxpayers in the United States. Of this number, 46,801,800 persons have net incomes of $5,000 or less, and this group of smaller taxpayers pay 55.5 percent of the total income tax paid to the Government. The other group, whose net income is $5,000 or more, numbers 1,742,800, and they pay 44.5 percent of our income taxes. This bill increases the spendable money or buying power of the large group of more than 46,000,000 small taxpayers only a very small amount. The increase of their buying power under this bill is illustrated as follows:

For a married person with no dependents, with a net income of $1,200, it is increased 1 percent. If his net income is $6,000, his buying power is increased 4.2 percent. But in the upper brackets, a person with a net income of $100,000 has his buying power increased 34.2 percent while the person with a net income of $1,000,000 is increased 69.2 percent.

If the object of the bill is to insure prosperity, the old elephant has overlooked some important facts:

Those 46,800,000 with incomes of $5,000 or less must buy 50,000,000 or more pairs of shoes each year and a like number of hats; they must buy 100,000,000 shirts and 100,000,000 pairs of socks, and other clothing and food in comparative quantity. One of those people consumes as much or more food as those in the upper bracket for, of course, they are the working people and require more food. When they have buying power and are at work, they will consume the products of the American farm and factory and the profits from their purchases will reach the high brackets, as they always do. If we can keep this group of people employed and prosperous, we need have no fear of those in the upper bracket.

Any sound approach toward postwar tax reduction should include a comprehensive study of the entire Federal tax system including individual income taxes, corporate income taxes, estate and gift taxes, and excise taxes, and such a revision should aim at equitable adjustments, incentive effects, and sound administration under peacetime conditions. During the war it was necessary to extend personal income taxes to millions of very low income taxpayers. There was little time to consider the inequities and discrimination under the lax laws which have been revealed under actual experience in tax administration. Single men whose net income is over $500 are required to pay tax. Married men with no dependents, whose net income exceeds $1,000 are required to pay these taxes. I contend that relief should first be extended to these low-income-tax groups not in the manner of a percentage cut, but that exemptions should be raised.

During the war years, in our effort to pay at least half the cost of the war as we went along, taxes were imposed wherever possible, with the result that many unjust and unequal taxes were levied. Many businesses are today stalemated because of these taxes. I am informed, and I think reliably so, that the fur industry and many other businesses like table cutlery, small items of jewelry, watches, and so forth, are being heavily retarded by these excess taxes. Any effort to reduce taxes should consider all these items. For instance, when a woman buys the cheapest-grade handbag, say, for $3, she pays a 60-cent Federal excise tax. The tax on telephone calls, telegrams, railroad tickets, and many other excise taxes of that character fall very heavily on people who are not able to pay them.

There are many technical administration and procedural tax problems that have been accumulating during the war years. The last major substantive revision of the Internal Revenue Code was made in the Revenue Act of 1942. Many amendments should be made to this act. All of these amendments will result in substantial losses in revenue, but these amendments should be considered whenever taxes are reduced. Any income-tax advantage enjoyed by community-property States by allowing husbands and wives to split their income equally should be nullified. Other tax problems are now under study by the Treasury Department or the joint committee staff, such as a double taxation of dividends, the tax treatment of cooperatives, taxation of American corporations doing business abroad, provisions for accelerating a more flexible depreciation allowance, allowing the taxpayer with fluctuating income to average the incomes of good and bad years in fixing tax liability, the treatment of capital gains and losses, an allowance for life-insurance premiums, and other forms of saving under the individual income tax. All these matters should be considered when tax reduction is contemplated. If, however, only individual income tax is to be considered, H. R. 1 is most unfair and discriminatory to taxpayers in the lower bracket.

In the low-income groups will be found millions of so-called white-collared employees—school teachers, clergymen, shopkeepers, salespeople, bookkeepers, barbers, clerks, and professional or semiprofessional workers, not to mention small farm operators, mechanics, janitors, caretakers, skilled, and unskilled laborers, many of whom are self-employed individuals. Most of these people are not organized and none of them have experienced any measurable wartime prosperity. The purchasing power of their dollar, however, has shrunk by more than 40 percent below 1939 levels. With the heavy rates of taxation now in effect, and with living costs constantly increasing, these groups have either been reduced to a substandard of living or are rapidly approaching that level. Any tax relief granted should first consider this group and should be in the form of higher exemptions.

The special exemption of $500 for persons over 65 years of age is a feeble attempt to improve the burden distribution under H. R. 1. The position of elderly persons with low, fixed incomes is undoubtedly an important factor to be considered in any program for postwar tax revision. However, the special exemption for the aged ignores the need for substantial income tax relief of other low-income taxpayers. The special exemption for the aged might set a precedent for similar treatment of other physically handicapped groups. Claims are already being made for exempting the incomes of teachers, veterans, the partially and totally disabled and other groups. It would be difficult to justify favored treatment for one particular low-income group as against all the others; or to discriminate against a disabled person 60 years of age, while allowing an additional exemption to a healthy person over 65 still actively engaged in his business or profession.

Under present law, it is advantageous for married couples to file separate returns only if their combined surtax net incomes exceed $2,000. The split bracket provided under H. R. 1 will make it profitable for husbands and wives now filing joint returns to file separately when their combined surtax net incomes are between $1,000 and $2,000. For example, a husband and wife, each with a net income of $1,500, would pay a tax of $190 each under present law if they filed separate returns, and a total of $380 if they filed joint returns. Under H. R. 1 as modified by the committee, they would be required to pay a tax of $133 each if they filed separate returns; however, if they filed a joint return, their total tax would be $304, or $38 more than their taxes on separate returns. The same tax savings under H. R. 1 would accrue to a married person residing in a community-property State, even if his spouse receives no income. The shift from joint to separate returns resulting from the split bracket would increase the number of returns substantially, thus increasing the work load on the Bureau of Internal Revenue despite a cut by the House of $30,000,000 in its budget for the fiscal year 1948.

When the time is right for tax reduction, the whole problem of incentives and the supply of venture capital will merit broad and careful consideration. The problem is not merely one of the individual income tax rates at the higher income levels, or of the individual income tax as a whole. It includes other phases of the Federal tax structure and many features of the individual income tax not treated under H. R. 1. Premature reduction of individual income tax rates on the scale provided under H. R. 1 may, in effect, prejudge these important questions and prejudice the development of a sound postwar tax system.

In the face of all these reasons against this ill-advised, ill-timed and considered bill, reducing the revenues of the country in this year when the national income is at its highest peak, almost $6,000,000,000, before the budget is balanced and without making any payment on the national debt, why do the majority insist on its passage? Is it because it proposes to make income-tax reductions effective retroactively to January 1, 1947; that taxes at the present rate are now being withheld from the salaries and wages of our people, and those whose income is other than salaries and wages are making quarterly advance payments at the present rate and if this bill becomes law, next year after income-tax returns are made on March 15 the Treasury will owe these taxpayers a refund and the Treasury Department will send refund checks to the 48,544,600 taxpayers of the country in 1948 during the election year? If that is the reason, they are grossly underestimating the character and patriotism of the American people.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS].

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, if our country is to prosper under a system of private enterprise, it is necessary that we reduce Government expenditures, balance the budget, make a payment on the national debt, and reduce the tax burden on the people. This is an interrelated program and, in considering this tax bill, I think it is important to give attention to the other factors.

Figures and estimates are not always reliable but the information comes to me from the staff of our Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation that if present income and business trends continue throughout the next fiscal year that begins in July we would collect, under existing rates of taxation, $42,000,000,000. The House has voted a budget ceiling of $31,500,000,000, but let us take a more pessimistic view of it. Let us err on the conservative side.

Suppose existing rates would only produce $40,000,000,000 in revenue instead of $42,000,000,000, and suppose that our expenditures are held, not at $31,500,000,000, but at $33,000,000,000. It leaves a spread of $7,000,000,000. In all probability, the eventual loss in revenue by reason of the reductions made in this bill will not equal or exceed one-half of that spread of $7,000,000,000.

The Democratic-controlled Seventy-ninth Congress voted $9,000,000,000 in tax reduction. In other words, it was anticipated that the cuts to be made would amount to a loss of revenue of $9,000,000,000. However, due to the higher national income than was anticipated, the actual loss would probably not be more than half that amount.

Repeatedly our Federal Government has had the experience of actually increasing revenue by lowering rates. I do not believe that theory should be relied upon to the extent that we would be in danger of deficit spending or in danger of not being able to make a substantial payment on the national debt, but I submit that it is a principle that merits some consideration.

If we are to proceed under the system of private enterprise, we must have a vigorous forward-moving economy. A high national income with moderate rates of taxation will produce more revenue than a low national income with exorbitant rates. In that connection, I am very much in accord with the expression of the Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Snyder, and I refer to the following colloquy, as shown by the hearings:

Mr. CURTIS. The burdens of the Federal Government will be very high for not only this generation but for several generations.

Secretary SNYDER. That is right.

Mr. CURTIS. Now the individual without a job, what his taxes might be if he had a job is purely academic; is it not?

Secretary SNYDER. I think we can agree on that.

Mr. CURTIS. Then is not the criterion that this committee must adhere to: What tax structure will produce the maximum enterprise and the maximum number of jobs?

Secretary SNYDER. That is it without a question. I recommend just such a thing. I recommend that very principle in my statement.

There are many well-meaning individuals who are of the opinion that there should be absolutely no tax reduction. I respect their views. It should be borne in mind, however, that we are going to move into an economy far different from our war economy. For several years Government purchases have been taking the greater portion of the output of our mines, forests, factories, and farms. The ordinary incentives and the usual causes and effects have not been the impelling forces in our wartime economy.

Our tax rates are at a very high point. If these high tax rates would prove to be disastrous to our economy as we come to the end of the period of big Government purchases, some of the individuals who now advocate no tax reductions might be the first to blame the Congress for its lack of foresight. I think you might be interested in something else Secretary Snyder had to say as shown by the hearings. I said to him:

Now, Mr. Secretary, we have agreed that the maximum amount of enterprise and the maximum number of jobs was a very important principle to be applied in recommending taxes. How long does it take for tax reduction to reflect in enterprise and job providing in the country?

Secretary SNYDER. It could very easily come within a very short time.

Mr. CURTIS. It does take a little time, does it not?

Secretary SNYDER. It takes a year, probably, yes.

Mr. CURTIS. That leads us to the conclusion that in any action taken to reduce taxes, we should keep in mind the job opportunities that would result not now but next year, the year following, and throughout the years, by reason of the enterprises it started, is that not true?

Secretary SNYDER. Certainly it is true, and that is the very basis upon which we are considering these taxes, as the prospect for next year.

What we do here today will not be pleasing to the critics of the Eightieth Congress. Anything the Eightieth Congress might do would not please them. The loyal opposition, consisting of the PAC, the administration, the minority in Congress, and a score of left-wing writers and commentators, have made their position well known. They are opposed to corrective labor legislation. They are opposed to the elimination of waste in Government. They are opposed to a reduction in the size of our Government. They are opposed to a cut in the budget. They are opposed to a reduction in the tax load of our citizens. In the great battle of the people versus a grasping, growing, burdensome government, they have cast their lot against the people.

This tax reduction bill, as it comes from the Committee on Ways and Means, provides for a 30, 20, and 10½ percent reduction in taxes. Those individuals, whose surtax net income is $1,000 or less are given a 30-percent reduction in taxes. The reduction is then graduated downward and, beginning at about a $1,400 surtax net income, it levels off at 20 percent. The people in the extremely high brackets of over $300,000 receive a 10½ percent reduction.

Let us consider what we mean by surtax net income. That means the amount of income after all deductions and exemptions have been figured. In the case of the typical American family, where the taxpayer has a wife and two children, if his wages or income amount to $3,300, he is first allowed 10 percent as a blanket deduction. His personal exemption and his exemption for dependents amounts to $2,000. Thus, his surtax net income is $1,000.

This group gets a 30-percent reduction in taxes. In this particular bracket you will find the people who must toil and earn their living. You will find the operators of small farms and businesses. The figures show that more than 24,000,000 taxpayers fall in the category of having a surtax net income of $1,000 or less. This is approximately one-half of the taxpayers in the United States. In other words, H. R. 1, as amended, grants to one-half of the taxpayers a reduction of 30 percent in taxes.

An individual with a surtax net income of $1,000, under existing law, pays $190 tax. Under H. R. 1, he gets a reduction of $57, or he pays $133. This is a reduction of almost $5 per month.

Much argument has been made to the effect that instead of applying a percentage reduction, the personal exemption should be increased. From one standpoint, that is very desirable. It should be borne in mind, however, that to raise the personal exemption from $500 to $600 would remove over 4,000,000 taxpayers from the tax rolls. To raise this exemption to $700 would remove almost 10,000,000 taxpayers.

A proposal has also been made that a married couple be granted a $2,000 exemption, a $1,000 exemption be given a single person, and a $500 exemption for each dependent. This would remove 20,000,000 taxpayers from the tax rolls. It would result in a loss of revenue of $5,500,000,000.

It is not a question of whether or not the Congress would like to remove these people from the tax rolls but it is a question of whether or not it can be done. It cannot be done until we are able to put into effect a greater degree of government economy than we are at present. It may be surprising to learn that the individuals, whose net income is under $5,000, receive 79.6 percent of the national income. Under present law, they pay 56.3 percent of the tax burden. Under H. R. 1, as amended, they will pay a little less than 56.3 percent.

The individuals receiving over $5,000 income receive 20.4 percent of the national income. Under present law, they pay 43.7 percent of the tax burden. Under H. R. 1, as amended, they would pay that amount or just a little more.

A great many tables have been used in this debate and by writers and commentators on the subject of taxes. They have tried to infer that the principle of H. R. 1 is unjust and unfair. Much has been said about the percentage increase in spendable income that a taxpayer would have after this bill becomes a law as compared with the present. It has been suggested that a small taxpayer might have the spendable portion of his income increased only a little over 1 percent. Let us analyze that.

If the head of the family of four is making $2,500 a year, after his exemptions and deductions are taken out, he pays about $50 Federal income tax. If we were able to relieve him of his entire tax burden, we would only increase the spendable portion of his income 2 percent.

Our present tax structure has been changed many times since 1932. The relation of the tax burden for any particular income level, as compared to other levels, is the responsibility of the party that has controlled the Congress throughout these many years. Let us see how H. R. 1, as amended, affects the relationship.

Under existing law, the individual whose surtax net income is $25,000 pays 9.2 times as much as the individual whose surtax net income is $5,000. Under H. R. 1, he will still pay exactly 9.2 times as much.

Under existing law, the individual whose surtax net income is $50,000 pays 24.4 times as much tax as the individual whose surtax net income is $5,000. Under H. R. 1, he will still pay exactly 24.4 times as much.

Let us take another case. The individual whose surtax net income is $100,000, under existing law, pays 25.5 times as much as the individual whose surtax net income is $10,000. Under H. R. 1, he will still pay 25.5 times as much.

Under existing law, the individual who makes $50,000 pays 10.2 times as much as the man whose surtax net income is $10,000. Under H. R. 1, he still will pay 10.2 times as much.

In other words, the ratio remains the same. If any particular group of people in America are paying more than their share of the taxes, it must be borne in mind that that ratio was established in the existing law enacted by Democratic Congresses.

Under H. R. 1, the existing ratios are changed in but one place. That is in reference to the small taxpayer. We do change the ratio for the benefit of the people of low incomes. For instance, under existing law, the individual with $5,000 surtax net income pays 5½ times as much tax as the individual with a surtax net income of $1,000, but because of the additional cut that we give the lowest bracket, the tax on a $5,000 surtax net income is 6.3 times as much as it is on a $1,000 surtax net income. Likewise, under existing law, the tax for an individual with a surtax net income of $10,000 is 13.2 times the tax for an individual with a surtax net income of $1,000, but because of the preference in H. R. 1 for the lowest bracket, the tax on the $10,000 sum is 15.1 times the tax on the $1,000.

In the case of the individual with a surtax net income of $25,000, he pays, under existing law, 50.8 times as much as the individual with a surtax net income of $1,000. Because of the benefits of the 30-percent reduction that is given to the lowest bracket under H. R. 1, the tax on the $25,000 is 58 times as much as the tax on $1,000.

I want to mention something about the provision in H. R. 1 in reference to persons over 65 years of age. This is inserted in the bill to meet a number of problems. Some of the people who draw retirement benefits are required to pay income taxes on those benefits. Other benefits are exempt from income taxes. This problem has been before the Congress many times. In connection with tax-exempt retirement benefits, we must not lose sight of the fact that many of our citizens who reach old age receive no retirement checks, must still toil and not only pay their own taxes but added taxes because the neighbors are exempt from taxation.

In order to be fair to our aged, including those who receive no retirement benefits, H. R. 1 gives an additional personal exemption to those over 65 of $500. If they avail themselves of this additional exemption, they cannot take any other specific tax exemption that they might receive in connection with their retirement benefits.

Perhaps there are arguments against this idea but we must bear in mind that these aged people face many problems. They face the hazard of ill health. Continued employment is uncertain. Opportunities for new jobs and promotions are very few. A majority of the Committee approved this additional consideration for those over 65 and it is in the bill today.

Mr. Speaker, in these troubled and complex days, the problems that face this Government are really beyond description. It is my hope and prayer that when all the deliberations are over and the discussion is ended, the course that is charted is the one that is wisest and best for our Republic. I have no desire that any other course be followed.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER].

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, there are two basic reasons for passing H. R. 1, and passing it quickly. We should do so, first, to remove, at least to a very large measure, the threat to private initiative and new investment which stems from continuation of the enormously high wartime tax rates. Private initiative and new investment, of course, are restricted by such burdensome rates, and, as they are restricted, America's traditionally high level of employment is jeopardized. Lower taxes mean more jobs. But they mean much more than that, too, and that brings me to the second basic reason for wholeheartedly supporting this measure: namely, tax relief is necessary, particularly for people in the low-income groups, to enable them to meet, partially at least, the higher cost of living. By giving them this relief—nay, by increasing their take-home pay, which is what this tax measure means to them—we enable them to maintain consumer purchasing at a higher level, and thereby give more stimulus to employment and to business activity. Indeed, it is the surest way to maximum employment and business activity.

I pass the question of the effect of tax reduction on private initiative and the free enterprise system, Mr. Chairman. I wish to advert directly to my second reason for supporting this measure. The bill provides the greatest amount of tax relief for people in low-income groups. For instance, all individuals with net incomes of $1,000 or less are given a 30-percent reduction. Most of the others will get a 20-percent saving. That is as it should be. I need not emphasize the enormous increase in the cost of living since the outbreak of war. It has been more than 50 percent, and this, of course, has confronted the low-income person with prodigious problems. It has been particularly hard upon the white collar workers receiving relatively low incomes. For example, school teachers, whose difficulties constitute one of the most pressing of State and municipal problems today. But office employees and many other groups of average Americans are in the same difficulty. Their salaries and incomes did not increase during the war period in anything comparable to the rate of advances given wage earners in factories. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, it is entirely fitting that the very low income group receives some preferential treatment. This bill seeks to do that by giving the 30-percent reduction for those with net incomes of $1,000 and below, a sliding reduction between 20 percent and 30 percent for those in the groups between $1,000 and $1,400, and 20 percent which will apply to most of the rest of the American taxpayers.

All of us, of course, would like to reduce taxes still more, but we cannot, at least for some time. But let us keep one thing clearly in mind: The American people are firmly of the opinion that the Federal budget must be balanced and that some attempt must be made to start paying off the gigantic national debt, the interest on which alone costs more than the whole Federal Government did before 1933. Let us be clear in our minds about this, too: It is impossible to reduce taxes still more or to shift the burden more completely to the upper income group as long as our National Government expenditures run between thirty and forty billion dollars a year, four times the level of prewar years. All groups in the Nation must pay for big government, and the bigger the government, the more the lower income groups must pay. It is idle to talk about paying the costs of the gigantic Federal bureaucracy by a "soak-the-rich" tax policy. If we took all the income of the so-called rich, it would by no means be adequate to pay the costs of the Federal Government. This year, under the existing tax law, Government experts tell us there will be 46,683,799 taxpayers; 96 percent, or 44,817,360 of those taxpayers have net taxable incomes of $5,000 or less. Furthermore, they tell us that of an estimated net income of $114,293,000,000, 79.6 percent or $91,010,000,000 is accounted for by people with incomes of $5,000 or less. That leaves only $23,283,000,000 as the total income of persons having an individual income of $5,000 and above. Furthermore, under the present law the people with incomes of $5,000 and less pay 55.7 percent of all individual income taxes. This percentage would be lowered to 54.2 percent by H. R. 1. The point is inescapable, namely, you cannot run big government, such as we now have in this country, without the low income people paying the big share of the cost. People with large incomes simply do not have enough money, even if you took all of it from them, to pay for the luxuries of this enormous Government.

I mention this for a specific reason, Mr. Chairman. We here will take a step toward providing some tax relief for the lower income people in particular. But all parts of the population will get some relief. The point is this: Additional tax cuts, which we all desire so greatly, cannot be made until we cut back much farther the wasteful and expensive big Government which has been built up in Washington in the past 14 years. This, the people must keep clearly in mind, for the more they ask from their Government, the more functions and services they seek from this prodigious bureaucracy, they must pay for it, and pay dearly, for no further tax cuts will be possible if we do not reverse the movement of the past 14 years. Indeed, taxes undoubtedly will have to be increased again if we continue to expand the services and functions of the National Government.

Now, sir, the same observations can be applied in respect of the provision providing an additional $500 exemption for persons 65 years of age and over. It is a well-known fact, Mr. Chairman, that most people at that age are living on their pensions, income from savings, and the like. They have been very hard hit by a 54-percent rise in the cost of living since 1939. Consideration of the revision of our social security laws which would increase financial benefits to old people has been delayed by the war and the uncertainties of the postwar period. So, we owe it to our senior citizens to make more adequate provision for them, in one way or another. Pending further action on social security benefits and other readjustments, the present bill will offer some special relief to those so justly entitled to it. The bill, as amended, would prohibit the abuse from the operation of the $500 exemption provision by those people who already have special exemption because of the nature of their incomes. Certainly, this tax provision cannot be seriously attacked as setting up a preferential group to receive Government benefit. It will scarcely be maintained that it provides adequate relief for them but at least it is a step toward correcting a maladjustment which is bearing so heavily upon our senior citizens, many of whom gave splendid service during the war effort by continuing in their jobs beyond their retirement age, or by coming out of retirement to help the war effort.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from California [Mr. BRADLEY].

Mr. BRADLEY of California. Mr. Chairman, I cannot speak for other Members of the House but I know that the voters of the Eighteenth District of California elected me November 5 on a platform which advocated, among other things, a balanced budget, elimination of much of the octopus of New Deal bureaucracy and a reduction in income taxes.

Insofar as it is within my power I intend to live up to every part of this platform.

We, in the House, have voted to slash $6,000,000,000 from the proposed budget; day by day we are chopping off entrenched bureaucrats through refusal of funds to continue their tactics of smothering individual freedom; and, now, by this bill which we are considering today, we are going to give that tax reduction which is so badly needed and so well deserved.

Mr. Chairman, the American people of my district want to reduce the public debt—they want to strengthen the dollar and so destroy the tendency towards inflation—but, right now they need their earnings for purposes other than for the support of a government which, during the past several years, has performed on the theory of "Tax and tax, spend and spend, elect and elect." My constituents are the kind of people who cannot be fooled all the time by even the most magnificent flow of distorted facts from a multitude of administration propagandists. My constituents have seen through the smokescreens thrown up to stave off defeat at the next elections. They see through opposition efforts to prevent the Republican Party from delivering the goods it promised—the goods which the American public has bought and paid for—the goods, which include a substantial tax reduction for every income taxpayer.

No tax bill is perfect. No tax bill ever will be perfect. Yet, this bill does a lot of things I like. The 30-percent slash on small incomes makes me very happy. Through it, the man with just $1,000 taxable income will have $57 more of his earnings to spend on his wife and kids. And that $57 is not chicken feed out in California where the cost of living has gone up just as it has here, and where we want people to live as Americans should live—not crowded together in hovels like sheep in a cattle car.

Then this $500 exemption for those good senior citizens who have had 65 birthdays roll around. It means at least $90 a year additional for every such person who has a taxable income of $1,000.

Let us look at the civil-service annuitant and his wife, retired after long and faithful service, both well along in years and getting about $2,200 per annum. These people have been praying for some magic which would give them an exemption of around $1,200 a year over and above their regular exemption as man and wife. And here, praise God, we hand it to them, for when they add their $500 each to their family exemptions, and then add in other deductible items such as taxes, contributions, and so forth, they will find themselves tax-free.

The big-income man will get his cut, too—in a lesser degree, but sufficient, I hope, to release capital for investment and to show that the party in control of this House is not imbued with loyalty toward any one financial level of our people, but rather, that it goes all out to give a break to every American.

Mr. Chairman, this is a good bill. Let us pass it with a resounding majority so America can see exactly where we stand and how we live up to our promises.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. COLE].

Mr. COLE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, no one but the financial wizards of the New Deal could "reduce" the Government debt $20,000,000,000 and by the same transaction increase its liabilities.

This is the administration which objects to the Republican proposed tax reduction bill on the theory that they should first have the opportunity to reduce the debt.

Judging by past performance, if we permit them to perform these mystic rites of financial mumbo-jumbo, we may find our debt burden doubled.

As an example of sorcery, witness the Victory Loan.

The war ended in August 1945, and the drive for this loan was opened in October of that year. No sound reason existed for this additional burden upon the gigantic debt load. This is evidenced by the fact that, as a result of the loan, on February 28, 1946, the Treasury had a cash balance of $26,000,000,000. Also, added to our debt burden were $20,000,000,000 long-term, 2½ and 2¼ interest bonds.

Now, what did our bright scholars do?

They "reduced" the debt by paying off in cash $20,000,000,000 of short-term securities bearing interest at seven-eighths to 1½ percent.

Our wizards of debt reduction, therefore, borrowed money from Peter at a high rate of interest, to pay Paul to whom we owed money, but who was willing to continue the investment at a low rate of interest.

Our Government is worse off than if there had been no debt reduction.

This costly sleight-of-hand is characteristic of those who now say, "Let's not have a tax reduction. Give us the money and we will manage the debt."

The term, I advise, is "mangle the debt."

The administration has glibly talked of debt reduction for months, but not one sound plan has been presented by them for debt reduction.

With some humility, I am here to suggest a plan for the consideration of Congress.

The national debt can be paid—but not with hopes alone. It can be paid only with money—and plenty of it.

Practical debt retirement cannot now be accomplished at a cost of less than $5,000,000,000 a year paid on the principal. Any sum less than this amount will rapidly create a permanent debt of almost $250,000,000,000, for which $5,000,000,000 must be paid each year in interest.

A policy of forgetting about debt retirement will be very easy to adopt after July 1, 1947, for, by that time, much of the surplus cash in the United States Treasury will have been used to remove the twenty billions from the postwar debt peak of $280,000,000,000. Unless additional funds are made available for this purpose not later than September 15 of this year, debt reduction will cease, for all time.

Forgetting about postwar debt reduction has been tried before by other nations, but not by the United States. Fighting wars on credit has long been a habit of modern nations, but, so far, the United States has not subscribed to the European practice of waging the next war before making a substantial payment on the debt created by the one most recently concluded.

How constant debt is associated with constant wars is shown by the experience of Great Britain. The English people have had a funded debt ever since 1695, and the cost of settling the affairs of Europe and the world have kept this debt on the rise ever since William III's time. By 1793, it stood at about $1,300,000,000, at a time when the United States owed eighty millions. In 1820, after settling the accounts of the Napoleonic Wars, Great Britain owed more than $4,000,000,000, and this debt remained at substantially the same level until 1914. World War I brought a British peak debt of more han $38,000,000,000, and World War II has raised the British debt to beyond $100,000,000,000. A constantly rising public debt is not unique to Great Britain; it is typical of most modern nations, and has frequently been flaunted as one necessary aspect of the process of becoming a great power.

But a rising public debt has not always been eagerly acclaimed in the United States. Indeed, the debt remaining from the Revolution and the War of 1812 was marked "paid in full" in 1935. Half the Mexican War debt was paid before the clouds of the Civil War approached, and nearly two-thirds of the Civil War debt was paid by 1893. After World War I, the $26,000,000,000 debt was reduced to sixteen billions in 1930.

Today the United States has an equally favorable opportunity.

If Congress chooses, the present national debt of $262,000,000,000 can be cut in half by 1975.

And if the present debt is ever to be reduced at all, the choice must be made quickly.

For the national debt is not a lump sum which one may whittle at as he wishes.

It is a complex assortment of installment payments. In effect, the United States has agreed to pay so many remittances a year toward the remaining costs of World War II. And it can pay these remittances only when the installments fall due.

These installments are of many different types. On July 1, 1947, our $260,000,000,000 debt will include about forty billions which will probably never be paid; these are in Government trust funds and currency. The fifty billions in savings bonds will remain relatively constant; in prosperous years, at least, redemptions will be balanced by sales and accrued interest. The floating debt will also include as much as $47,000,000,000 in low-interest—1 to 1½ percent—securities subject to annual redemption or renewal.

But the real challenge of our national debt will lie neither in the forty billions used for various Government services, nor in the ninety-seven billions which can be redeemed on short notice. The real test of debt payment will come in the handling of the remaining $123,000,000,000. For, if this portion of the national debt is not paid off as each separate issue falls due, payment of the unredeemed part will be postponed for as long as 20 years.

In 1999, not very many persons will wish to be taxed to pay off a debt which was accumulated in 1946. Theoretically, there is no statute of limitations on the payment of public debt such as often affects the payment of bad private debts. In practice, however, no nation has yet asked its citizens to pay off through taxation, the debt incurred in earlier generations. In most programs of debt retirement, each generation of citizens pays off only that portion of the public debt which it accumulated for its own purposes; inherited debt is either carried on the books forever or repudiated outright if it becomes too burdensome.

For this reason, Congress should and can take immediate steps to halve the present debt within 20 years.

It has the power to do so. And it must do so at once, because $4,000,000,000 of the one hundred and twenty-three billions is tied up in long-term bonds, maturing during the 1948 fiscal year, and must be paid as they fall due or become perpetual debt.

Unless a substantial sum is set aside from 1948 revenues, these bonds will not be paid off. Three billion dollars must remain in the Treasury cash balance at all times to take care of continual debt transactions, and only the cash in excess of this amount can be used to cut down the size of the total debt. On July 1, the excess cash may amount to more than $3,000,000,000; but it can melt away by September 15, unless Congress deliberately provides for a surplus of revenues during the 1948 fiscal year.

In the coming fiscal year, it is already apparent that an effort will be made to secure a surplus of about $5,000,000,000 to be applied on the reduction of the national debt.

If Congress sets aside at least $5,000,000,000 each year to retire the Federal debt, that debt will be more than halved by 1975. It might be well for Congress to provide that the budget include each year, a sum of $10,000,000,000 for paying the interest on the public debt and a portion of the principal. Each year, it could enforce debt retirement by lowering, as provided in the fiscal provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, the legal limit of the national debt. As the debt declined, the interest charges would also drop, and a larger portion of the remaining debt could be paid each year.

Such a program would, by no means, rule out tax reductions.

Nor is it necessarily incompatible with the present tax bill offered by the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee. Tax reduction is imperative. Our people are weary of the burden, and are entitled to relief. The details of timing, percentage, and exemptions have been agreed upon by the committee. While I do not agree with all these details, particularly with the retroactive and percentage features, yet, if we are to have relief, we must accept the best judgment of our committee.

That judgment includes a considered opinion that this tax bill will produce forty-one billions of revenue. The thirty-one and five-tenths billion budget, recently adopted by the House, provides for the five billion interest on the debt. Thus, my plan will only require five billion of the surplus and leave four and five-tenths billion for cushion and emergencies.

I am introducing a bill which, if adopted, will, for the first time, fix a definite, sound policy of debt reduction. Generally, it will require the payment of $10,000,000,000 on the principal and interest of the debt each year.

In addition, the Treasury will be required to pay, in cash, the long term securities the year in which they mature or are callable.

Allowing for the prospective 1947 cash balance of $6,000,000,000 (half of which must remain at hand for current needs), I have computed a schedule showing results of my plan in a period of continuing prosperity. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that this schedule be included in the RECORD immediately following these remarks.

Mr. Chairman, the best laid plans of men for reduction of expenditures and taxes will be of little value unless this plan I have outlined or a similar one is adopted.

We may permit the willy-nilly haphazard confusion in the management of the debt without specific directions or certainty of funds. Or, we may set up a definite fiscal policy for an orderly and economic retirement of the debt.

The first choice involves the freezing of our public debt at the present level, the second gives positive hope of placing our economy upon a sound financial basis.

The American people expect this Congress to bring order out of chaos, to restore sanity to Government.

I offer these suggestions as my contribution toward the achievement of this goal.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LYNCH].

Mr. LYNCH. Mr. Chairman, I wish to make my position on tax reduction crystal clear. I believe that when we have balanced the budget and made a substantial reduction in the national debt, we should give a reduction in taxes to those who are least able to carry the burden. I believe that such reduction can best be effected by increasing the tax exemptions.

I cannot support the tax bill presently before us for consideration. The tax-reduction plan embodied in this bill was conceived in political expediency, nurtured by political demagoguery, and delivered to you today in political desperation. It was conceived in political expediency for the reason that it was intended only as a preelection vote-catching device. No thought had been given to the finances of the Government, but it was popular before November 5th last to promise that taxes would be reduced. It was popular to try to make the people forget the financial obligations that the most terrific war in world history had forced upon them, and it was popular to tell our American people that the Democratic administration that had guided the country through the world's worst financial depression and emerged triumphantly as still a free, democratic government and had, likewise, guided the country through mankind's worst war and emerged triumphantly as still a great, free, democratic government, was responsible for the staggering debt burden that the war of the Four Freedoms entailed. Political expediency, it was, and of the rankest kind.

There can be little doubt that the tax-reduction plan contained in this bill was, likewise, nurtured by political demagoguery. Under the guise of tax reduction it was intended as a windfall for the rich and a hand-out for the poor. It was intended to bring the tax in the highest brackets down below prewar levels, but the tax of the little man in the lower brackets was to be kept substantially above prewar levels. The vigorous opposition of the minority brought these facts to light, with the result that a sugar-coating—a 30-percent tax reduction for those with incomes of $1,325—was devised in order to make the whole bill more palatable.

The more the American people pondered over the inequities and injustices of H. R. 1, the so-called Knutson bill, the greater has become their indignation, when they realize that under this bill the spendable income of a married person, without dependents, and with an annual income of $1,200 is increased just $11 or 1 percent, while the spendable income of a married man, without dependents, and $500,000 annual income is increased from $92,536 to $157,926 or 70.7 percent.

Note the contrast: The increase in spendable income per annum for the little man is $11—22 cents a week, 3 cents a day—not enough to pay for a Republican newspaper in New York City.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. KEAN. Let us look into that matter a little. You are talking about a married man with no dependents with $1,200 income. Do you mean net taxable income?

Mr. LYNCH. Net income before personal exemptions.

Mr. KEAN. You did not say that.

Mr. LYNCH. Net taxable income. With an income of $1,200 of the person cited without dependents this bill will give him a spendable income increase of $11 per annum, which is 22 cents a week or 3 cents a day, which is just enough to buy a postage stamp.

Mr. KEAN. What increase in the spendable income would it amount to if there was no tax at all?

Mr. LYNCH. When you take away the tax, of course, you increase the spendable income.

Mr. KEAN. It would only amount to 2 or 3 percent if it were removed entirely, would it not?

Mr. LYNCH. When you take away the taxes, you increase spendable income by so much.

Mr. KEAN. Yes; by about 2 or 3 percent.

Mr. LYNCH. By whatever is the amount of the tax. This is the time to increase the spendable income of the little man.

Mr. KEAN. Absolutely.

Mr. LYNCH. This is not the time to increase by tax reduction the income of the big man. This is the time to increase the income of the little man who has not got enough to buy the necessities of life, the cost of which has increased so much since the end of the war when all controls were removed. I say, if we are going to have tax relief, that tax relief should be given to the small man. The best way to do it, in my opinion, is to increase the exemptions, but if you take it your way and give the 30-percent increase, you give the small man of $1,200 net income before personal exemptions an increase in his spendable income of exactly 3 cents a day. That is the Republican generosity of the day.

Mr. KEAN. Or a one-third reduction in his taxes.

Mr. LYNCH. That is the Republican generosity of the day. As a matter of fact, the distinguished chairman of the committee, in giving this concession of 3 cents a day to the man with a $1,200 income, indicated the generosity of the Republican Party to the low-bracket taxpayer. I just want to say that the great heart of Minnesota opened with generosity when the chairman agreed to accept this amendment.

The American people will be outraged when they learn that the income tax of the $4,000 per year married person, without dependents, will, under H. R. 1, as amended, be increased over his 1939 tax by 970.5 percent, while the income tax for the married person, without dependents, with a $5,000,000 income will be increased over his 1939 tax by only nine-tenths of 1 percent. Is there any wonder that there were only 2 days of public hearings? Is there any wonder that representatives of labor, agriculture, small business, pensioners, and white-collar workers were flatly and unprecedentedly denied by the majority the opportunity to appear in opposition at the hearings before the committee? The majority had, of necessity, to invite the Secretary of the Treasury to testify, and he testified vigorously in opposition. The Commissioner of Internal Revenue had, of necessity, to be invited to testify as to the technical difficulties of the original H. R. 1.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. I yield.

Mr. EBERHARTER. I just wanted to observe that the Commissioner of Internal Revenue did not have an opportunity to testify as to how difficult it may be to administer this particular act that is before us today. We have no word from him in any shape or form as to how difficult it may be to administer these notch provisions and various other differences between this bill and H. R. 1 as originally introduced.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LYNCH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED of New York. Commissioner Nunan was questioned on that subject and said it would not require more than 60 days.

Mr. LYNCH. No. The gentleman is in error.

Mr. REED of New York. Oh, we are always in error.

Mr. LYNCH. I think the RECORD will show that the gentleman is in error.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two additional minutes.

Mr. LYNCH. I think the gentleman will see that Commissioner Nunan referred to the original bill. We did not have these amendments under consideration at that time.

Amendments to the bill were voted without any knowledge as to the technical difficulties involved, except that it was conceded that the difficulties that the taxpayer and employer would meet would be greatly enhanced. But speed was of the essence—rash preelection promises had been made, when the Republicans did not think they would control the Congress and have the responsibilities that go with that control. Each day has brought greater criticism on a do-nothing Congress. The fiasco of the excise tax bill, when the majority in newspaper headlines promised reductions and then extended all excise taxes with the exception of those on foreign air travel and on certain fur-trimmed garments. Today, in political desperation, this bill is brought forth in the House—the majority must get off the spot their preelection promises and postelection braggadocio have made so uncomfortably hot.

Mr. Chairman, other than the Secretary of the Treasury and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, only two witnesses were permitted to testify—those two were specially selected for their known views in favor of the 20 percent cut across-the-board—one a member of a well-known law firm in New York that represents a Wall Street clientele and the other a director and head of personal trust department of the Bankers Trust and also a director of the Hearst Co., United States Lines, American Airways, American Superpower Co., and other large corporations. In brief, their testimony was that a reduction in individual income taxes was necessary as an incentive for business and an incentive to the individual. Those arguments are transparently fallacious. Today the national income is at its all-time peak, approximating $165,000,000,000; industry is in as high production as the scarcity of material and labor will permit; unemployment is at a low ebb; the financial reports of corporations show substantial increases over the lush year of 1945—business needs no incentive, it has all the incentive to a high production that scarcity and high prices can possibly give.

In the column Business Briefs of the Washington Star of March 21, last, there appears a note that business loans climbed $193,000,000 in the week ended March 12 to the unprecedented total of $10,995,000,000 which was $3,509,000,000 above a year ago. That certainly does not show that business needs an incentive.

In the New York Herald Tribune of yesterday there appears an article to the effect that the volume of outstanding bank loans in the United States increased more than $5,000,000,000 in 1946, which is the largest gain reported for any 12-month period since 1919–20, when a similar expansion occurred. That certainly does not indicate that venture capital needs an incentive.

One of the witnesses was particularly concerned that young men in his law office and elsewhere getting $8,000 or $10,000 a year would lose their incentive to work if these taxes were continued longer. I asked him point-blank if he knew of any such men whose ambition had thus been thwarted and he said no. This gentleman quite understandably boasted of his Scotch thrift, so I imagine that taxes or no taxes, incentive or no incentive, he saw to it that the young associates in his law office turned out the work. I asked him if he knew any man getting $3,000 a year or $20,000 or $25,000 quitting his job because the taxes were too high and his answer was in the negative. He did refer, however, to a man, well over 70, who had an income that put him into the top brackets, who finally decided to quit—I suspect, however, that old age and an accumulated pot of gold had more to do with the retirement than present-day taxes.

Not one sound argument has been presented for the passage of this bill. Not one shred of credible evidence has been adduced to support the bill. It goes contrary to every sound principle of taxation—it is in direct opposition to every sound principle of business.

It is not sound policy to reduce the revenues of the Government when we do not know what the budget is going to be and if the majority cannot agree amongst themselves in the future better than they have in the past—we won't know what the budget will be for a considerable length of time. It is not sound policy to reduce the revenues of the Government, not only when we do not know what the budget will be, but when we also do not know what the appropriations will be.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. LOVE].

Mr. LOVE. Mr. Chairman, it is with a pleasing satisfaction that I rise at this time to speak in support of the amended H. R. 1. I shall vote for this bill. Many of my colleagues are well aware that I have been working for an immediate income tax relief that will be fair to taxpayers in all brackets. I forthwith urge all my colleagues to vote for this bill in its amended form.

One of the first steps toward a strong government is a sound fiscal policy. It is gratifying to know that we are making that step. For the first time in many years the income of our Government will be more than its expenditures. We shall not only balance the budget but we plan to pay a substantial sum toward the national debt and also cut personal income taxes as provided in this bill. Regardless of what anyone may say, I submit that this is a turn in the direction of prosperity.

Prosperity is the result of an incentive for investors to enter business coupled with adequate living conditions of the working people. I have never favored the theory that a person should be taxed for all he made over $25,000. I believe such a theory hurts business and curtails employment. I hope the time may come when an investor may be able to keep half of what he makes regardless of the amount.

Therefore, I say that this bill will be a great incentive for investment and create many new jobs. For a stronger reason, I am for this bill because it gives a 30 percent tax reduction to more than 25,000,000 taxpayers of the lower income groups and a reduction of between 20 and 30 percent for an additional 6,000,000 taxpayers. This is what I have been fighting for. This is the best part of a good tax reform, in my opinion. The man or woman who struggles for the necessities of life should be the first to have the most tax relief.

I am speaking in particular of workers with small incomes who need bread and butter and substance for their families, also the many office workers, store clerks, and school teachers and like groups who have not benefited from increased salaries, yet who have paid income taxes with money that should be used for the bare necessities of life. I am also for this bill because it increases exemption by $500 to more than 3,000,000 taxpayers beyond the age of 65 years.

Yes, I am for this bill not only because it will be an incentive for business, but, in particular, because it gives substantial tax relief to more than 31,000,000 people in the low-income brackets.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. GILLIE].

Mr. GILLIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this tax-relief bill. It will come like a breath of fresh air to the millions of taxpayers who have been stagnating under the heavy burden of taxation necessitated by 14 years of New Deal extravagance. It was inevitable that the Republicans should sponsor tax reduction and reverse the policy of the administration which has been choking the initiative and incentive of our people with oppressive taxes. This bill permits the small wage earner to catch his tax breath. It will provide a shot in the arm to our free-enterprise system. Tax savings can be diverted into business and investment channels. The time-honored desire which has stimulated our people into new fields of endeavor is given new challenge. Punitive and restrictive tax policies are being revoked. This is a step in the right direction.

It often has been said that the power to tax, is the power to destroy. That is what the past tax policies have been doing. By increasing the tax load during the last four administrations, taxation has become a monster frightening the future of our Nation. Since the end of the war, it has been a factor in discouraging the start of small businesses and halting the venture of individuals into new fields of endeavor. With increasing costs under the inflation brought about by the wasteful expenditures and controls, the small-income family has been faced with a serious dilemma as to how to feed and clothe its members. This bill will help offset the higher cost of living. It will permit an expanding economy. It provides a fair shake for all of the taxpayers, affording the greatest relief to the lower-income brackets. Moreover, it will take care of those persons over 65 years of age who are living on pensions, annuities, and retirement pay.

It also opens the door for slashing needless Federal expenditures, balancing the budget, and creating income for the reduction of the terrific national debt which the people demand and we must have for a sound, growing Nation.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY].

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, during the 2 days' hearings that were granted on this bill, which I consider of the greatest moment of any that has been considered by the House in the past several years, we had witnesses from the Treasury Department and the Internal Revenue Bureau, and witnesses whose principal business interests were on Wall Street.

I wonder if the committee during that time had occasion to glance at the report of the Committee on the Public Debt. It is a great booklet. It was the last thing prepared by the late Brig. Gen. Leonard P. Ayres, one of the greatest statisticians of all time.

THIS STAGGERING PUBLIC DEBT

It is a study I think the Members on the Republican side of the House might well look into. It is revealing, and maybe it might cause them to forego their longing, as we Democrats are willing to forego our longing, to hand out on a silver platter a tax reduction at a time when the national debt exceeds any debt ever carried by any principality, democracy, or kingdom in the world's history.

On the front page of this debt study we see that the public debt now totals $7,009 per family, which figures out on a per capita basis of $1,981 of public debt for every person in the United States.

EIGHT TIMES GREATER THAN 1920

This is eight times greater than it was at the end of World War I when the public debt was $240 per capita, or 25 times greater than during the Civil War when the national credit virtually collapsed.

Measured by our national income the national debt is now 180 percent of our national income and bear in mind our national income is at an all-time high point. Please bear in mind that despite our record-breaking national income, the debt has never before exceeded 52.2 percent of national income—and this after the Civil War. After World War I the then high public debt was 41 percent of national income.

I have heard many members of the Republican Party stand up on this floor in 1939 and 1940 and tell us at that time it was dangerous to our system of free enterprise, our capitalistic system, to carry a public debt of $45,000,000,000.

WHERE IS THEIR LOGIC NOW?

I wonder how with any logic or reason these same men on the Republican side can now ignore the danger of a public debt that is some 600 percent greater than it was at the time those speeches were made and come in here today with a $260,000,000,000 debt asking for a tax reduction.

Oh, this debt book I think you Republicans could well study because I believe you will find in there something that might cause the hair to stand up on the back of your neck some night and make you wonder what will happen if the interest rate on this public debt ever gets back up to its historic normal figure between 4 and 5 percent.

It is now the lowest in all history—2 percent.

HISTORIC RATE BETWEEN 4 AND 5 PERCENT

The interest rate, and you can see on this chart, has been around 4 and 5 percent on an historic basis. If the interest rate on this staggering public debt goes back to normal, your debt service alone for interest will be $10,000,000,000.

Yet now, with the national income at an all-time high point, you refuse, you decline to reduce by any definite amount this staggering public debt.

DEBT CORNERSTONE OF CAPITALISTIC SYSTEM

This public debt is the cornerstone, the keystone of our free enterprise system that we have and must continue to make work. Without the public debt being safely handled, without the confidence of the people of this country in these bonds that have been issued by the United States, then your capitalistic system is in grave danger.

If you will study the decadence of all the older countries of Europe you will find that the loss of confidence in the debt structure of their country preceded their inflation and collapse in almost every instance.

Yet now you Republicans are refusing to pledge any payment on this public debt, but you do pledge $3,330,000,000 tax reduction despite this staggering national load of a $260,000,000,000 war debt.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I want to say to the gentleman that he has lodged a perfect indictment against his own party and his own boss.

Mr. MONRONEY. The gentleman knows very well that more than $20,000,000,000 of the $260,000,000,000 debt was created by anything other than the war. He knows that as well as I do, and yet he voted for every one of these appropriations that took the debt up from $45,000,000,000 to $260,000,000,000, and I ask the gentleman to affirm or deny that.

Mr. REED of New York. All that you have done since you came into power is to rob the people of $3,000,000,000 by reducing the value and the purchasing power of the dollar.

Mr. MONRONEY. Will the gentleman get on the subject?

Mr. REED of New York. All you have done is to vote debt after debt, to pile up one debt upon the other, all the time you were in power. You doubled the debt.

Mr. MONRONEY. I have but a limited amount of time. I ask that the gentleman be specific.

Mr. REED of New York. You kept piling up the debt and you voted for every inflationary measure of the Government that would create that debt.

PREWAR DEBT, FORTY-FIVE BILLIONS

Mr. MONRONEY. The gentleman knows very well that the public debt was less than $45,000,000,000 when this country started preparing for war, and he and the members of his party voted unanimously to put that debt up to $260,000,000,000, and I challenge anyone here to deny it. You know very well that you helped to fight this war with money as well as boys, and if you did not appropriate that money the war would still be going on, and the gentleman knows that.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I think the record will show that most of the Members on this side of the aisle voted to stop giving lend-lease to Russia after Germany was defeated, and that most of the Members on the other side voted to continue that expense.

Mr. MONRONEY. The gentleman knows very well that the debt has been reduced since the end of the war with the balance on hand in the Treasury balances, and yet they say that the Democratic Party created this $260,000,000,000 debt when you know it is absolutely not true.

FINANCIAL INTEGRITY FIRST

The first duty of Congress is to maintain this Nation's financial integrity. How we handle and retire this war debt is the cornerstone of our free-enterprise system.

The House majority has refused to earmark one thin dime for debt retirement even though the Members in the other body have insisted on earmarking, by unanimous consent, over $2,600,000,000 toward debt retirement.

I say even if the present Knudson tax-relief bill were an equitable bill—which I do not think it is, I think it is a relief bill for the rich—I would still be against it. This is no time to cut nearly $4,000,000,000 out of Uncle Sam's income when our war debt is greater than any debt that has ever been carried by any people ever on the face of the earth.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, it was not created by any political party except your own.

Mr. MONRONEY. Does the gentleman deny that it was necessary to vote large sums for the conduct of the war?

Mr. REED of New York. And I will give the gentleman another example.

Mr. MONRONEY. Will the gentleman deny that it was necessary to appropriate large sums of money for the conduct of the war?

Mr. REED of New York. Why, bless your dear heart, you armed Japan or you would not have had a war in the Pacific, and you would not have had Pearl Harbor. Your party did that.

Mr. MONRONEY. Will the gentleman answer the question? He has failed to deny that his party voted the necessary funds as far as the conduct of the war was concerned.

Mr. REED of New York. Every life and every dollar that the Pacific war cost you voted for. You armed Japan.

Mr. MONRONEY. I refuse to yield further. The gentleman knows and every member of his party knows that outside of $20,000,000,000 of this debt, the balance is entirely war created, and the gentleman's party, I am proud to say, was patriotic enough to vote for the creation of the debt to arm our men overseas. Now you come in and say it is a New Deal debt.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONRONEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. The position taken by the gentleman from New York and others like him would, if carried to the final conclusion, indicate that they must be sorry they won the war.

Mr. MONRONEY. Or at least that they would have refused on second look, perhaps, to vote for money to carry on the war.

Mr. REED of New York. You armed Japan and you armed Yugoslavia, and now you come in and send our boys, their blood, our money, and our treasure to try to lick the fellow you armed.

Mr. MONRONEY. I think I might add, inasmuch as the gentleman makes this remark, that with world affairs in the condition they are I think it is a very poor time for this Congress to show reluctance in raising the necessary funds to keep this country strong.

Out of your appropriation bills as reported by Republican controlled committees 40 percent of which have been passed, you have cut less than $125,000,000.

You are not going to get your promised $6,000,000,000 saving out of the 60 percent remainder of that amount because the Army, the Navy, and the Veterans' Affairs appropriations comprise 85 per cent of the remaining amount.

I do not believe even the gentleman from New York would care to cut national defense at this time.

It seems apparent to me that the only safe, sane and responsible way for Congress to handle this momentous question is for us to wait and see if these nebulous promises of $6,000,000,000 economies will be effected—and then consider debt reduction first and then tax reduction.

To cut taxes before effecting budget savings—actual, not promised—is an irresponsible and dangerous procedure with our present staggering war debt confronting us.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. LEFEVRE].

Mr. LEFEVRE. Mr. Chairman, I have thoroughly read H. R. 1, the tax bill presently before us, and also the committee report. I can assure you I favor the passage of this legislation and know the American people are waiting anxiously for this Tax Reduction Act of 1947. It is very amusing to sit here in the House and hear the Democrats oppose this bill. As one very able Republican member of the committee stated, they hate to break away from their old formula—to tax and tax, spend and spend, and elect and elect. The Democrats can say all they want to and oppose H. R. 1 to their hearts' desire here on the floor of the House, but when voting time comes I feel very confident a great majority of their number will be voting with the Republicans. They know what this country needs; they know also what the people want, and they will be on the band wagon when the roll is called. No one likes any sort of taxes, that is admitted. Here is a bill reducing taxes, helping those in the lower brackets by 30 percent and the great majority of taxpayers by 20 percent. This helps all the taxpayers, who have willingly supported the wartime tax bills throughout that trying period.

The existing taxes have been a real threat to individual initiative and certainly have strangled venture capital. To create new jobs and a high level of employment, tax relief is one of the most important measures for this Congress to put through. There is a group I wish might have been helped further and that is the group living on pensions, annuities, retirement pay, and so forth. Those who have reached the age of 65 years or more do get a further exemption of $500.

However, I realize there are others in this category very worthy of extra consideration and who have had and still are having a difficult time living on a small fixed income. I believe this is a matter that surely will receive further consideration by the committee.

There is no doubt in my mind that every American citizen, receiving a fair income by wages or salaries, earned through business or investments, should help pay the costs of running our Government. This direct interest in our fiscal matters is bound to make our people government conscious. When every American citizen is conscious as to what our Government is costing and what is expected of it in these very unsettled times, we are bound to have the greatest possible efficiency in government, and maintain that leadership so necessary today.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN].

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, the Democrats of the House have certainly repudiated their old policy that they sang from shore to shore not so long ago, that we owe the debt to ourselves. I am glad they have abandoned that idea. I never accepted it as a lasting policy when it was put out by them.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY] made another point that intrigues me. He said they are willing to give up their longing. I wonder what longing he is talking about. If it is a longing for spending, I have not seen much evidence from the Democratic side of their willingness to give up that longing in connection with appropriation bills. If that is the longing they are willing to give up, it will be an innovation. In the 8 years I have spent in these halls, I have not seen any longing for saving and cutting down expenditures on the part of the Democrats in the House of Representatives.

Mr. Chairman, the Revenue Act of 1945 established individual income marginal tax rates ranging from 19 percent to 85.5 percent. In my opinion those rates are too great a burden for our economic stability. The income tax reductions provided by the bill, H. R. 1, now under consideration reduces the percentages so that the marginal rate of individual income tax will range from 13.3 percent up to 69.2 percent.

Whatever else is said about the reductions provided by the Knutson bill, H. R. 1, the percentage reductions stand at exactly 30 percent for the first $1,000 of taxable income, and 20 percent for all those earning more than $1,395.83. Persons earning between $1,000 and $1,395.83 will receive a flat $57 reduction under present taxes which of course protects them against unfair discrimination and brings about a gradual adjustment of the percentage reduction between the bracket entitled to 30 percent reduction and the bracket entitled to 20 percent reduction. All persons having income in excess of $302,000 receive a reduction under H. R. 1 of about 10½ percent on the surtax net income in excess of that amount. This schedule of reductions strikes me as being fair and equitable and brings about a much better balance in our personal income tax structure than we have under present law.

The provisions of the bill, H. R. 1, are much superior to any other proposal that has come to my attention. In the first place, the highest percentage of tax reduction is given to the low income group and the lowest percentage is given to the high income group.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman has raised a very interesting point that has been overlooked by all the speakers on the other side; that is, that we are giving 30 percent tax reduction to those with a net income of $1,000 or less, then the reduction is graduated up to the net incomes of $1,395, and we are only giving 20 percent and 10½ percent to the high income groups.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. That is right. I thank the gentleman.

This schedule continues to extend the burden of supporting our Government to 47,644,600 individuals and gives each and everyone of these taxpayers a very real reason for critical observation of careless and extravagant expenditures by our Federal Government, and yet extends these 47,000,000 people badly needed relief. They should not be forced to pay present exorbitant income taxes one year longer in order to let a spending, wasteful, National Administration learn how to look at accumulated tax revenues without spending them. Sixteen years of reckless spending by the Democrats now in Federal office does not give the taxpayer much hope that this extravagant Democratic administration will change its spending habits as long as funds are made available to them.

Any observer of procedure to date in the Eightieth Congress knows that the Democrats are opposing economy in our appropriation bills, and if huge tax funds remain within their reach I predict that the economy in Federal spending that our Nation needs so badly will be put off from day to day, month to month and year to year until the taxpayers themselves take matters in hand and put an end to this wild spending record of the Democrats.

I have read with great care the views of the minority members on the bill, H. R. 1, and about all that these nine Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means say is that it is unsound and inequitable and reckless to reduce taxes before they and the Democratic administration have accumulated surpluses. From their record of the past 16 years I do not care to postpone tax reduction that long. I do not even want to postpone tax reduction until the voters have had the opportunity to kick the spenders out of control of our Federal Government. The people of our Nation vigorously support the proposal to force a program of economy upon President Truman and his Democratic spenders. We need not and, in fact, we must not give them unbridled spending freedom for the closing months of their administration. The time for tax reduction is at hand, and I predict this Republican Congress will give Mr. Truman and his spenders their answer by the passage of this bill.

While the minority Democratic members of the Committee on Ways and Means criticize the bill, H. R. 1, at every turn, they make no recommendation of any plan for tax reduction. However, I am greatly interested in the fact that one of the minority members of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND], introduced a bill, H. R. 2577, on March 17 calling for the exemption of $700 for each taxpayer, $700 for the spouse of the taxpayer, and $700 for each dependent of the taxpayer. When this plan was first brought to my attention it sounded reasonable enough to merit the careful study and analysis which I proceeded to give it. My greatest concern was in the matter of the effect of such a plan upon our ability to maintain the American free enterprise system in business, agriculture, and industry.

My brief analysis of the effect of such plan shows not only a reduction of more than $3,000,000,000 in tax revenues but a surprisingly small total sum of personal incomes left available for investment purposes. For example, I separated those earning more than $25,000 of surtax net income from those earning less than that amount. I have also separated income subject to normal tax and surtax from income subject to tax on long term capital gains. Under the tax schedule proposed in the Forand bill the combined normal tax and surtax reduce a $25,000 income to $15,357. Furthermore all of the earners of more than $25,000 in our entire country taken together would have only $1,033,000,000 left of their earnings in excess of this $15,000 average income after taxes. It is estimated that the recipients of capital gains income in our entire Nation will have a total of $928,000,000 after payment of their capital gains taxes. These two sums added together total less than $2,000,000,000 potentially available for new investment. Not all of this $2,000,000,000 would be made available for investment and I submit to you my view that even though every penny of this new money were invested in business, agriculture and industry, it would not provide adequate new capital to uphold a national income of $165,000,000,000 beyond the time when present reserves of investment capital are exhausted.

Every wage earner in our Nation is so dependent upon our maintenance of a good level of national income that I know he will not want Congress to enact any legislation that will cripple business, agriculture, and industry in the maintenance of a good level of national income under a free enterprise economy. The Knutson bill here under consideration today is a sound step in the direction of preserving a sound free enterprise system for our Nation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. MARTIN] has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman one-half minute.

I just wanted to call to his attention some figures that I think are important. During the next 15 years we are going to need about $280,000,000,000 in venture capital in order to keep our economic structure operating fully. That will amount to $18,600,000,000 a year in venture capital over a period of 15 years. I just wanted to make that observation because it fits in with what the gentleman suggested.

Mr. MARTIN of Iowa. I appreciate the gentleman's remarks very much because it does fit in with discussion and illustrates very effectively our need of the passage of the Knutson bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has again expired.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, in 5 minutes you cannot say very much, but I want to call to the attention of the House and the people of this country some things I have been thinking about this afternoon after listening to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] make his observations earlier in the day. You know, the Republican Party apparently is not satisfied to let well enough alone. At a time when you had 60,000,000 unemployed, when the corporations of this country, after having paid their taxes, had more money left than they ever had before, we now find what they want to go back to. I did not think they would have the nerve to come out and tell us what they really had in their minds, but when you figure that H. R. 1 was given the rather dubious honor of being the first bill introduced in this Congress, we can accept that as their pattern.

The gentleman from New York harkened back to 1921, 1923, and 1925 as the time when they came in here and cut taxes and provided what he said was incentive capital.

He said that we had an unprecedented prosperity, that there was a smile on the faces of the workers, that there was laughter in the land. All right. I well remember that period. That was the time when Andrew Mellon condescended to come down here from Pittsburgh, Pa., and we all know that three Presidents of the United States served with distinction under Mr. Mellon.

And I will say this further thing to you—let us pursue the record. Why did the gentleman from New York stop coming? He did not come up from the 19th day of October 1929. Oh, no, you bet he did not. His voice became strangely silent because he knew that then the assembly lines would turn into soup lines, the smiles be frozen on the faces of the unemployed workers, and the laughter turned to cries of hunger.

Yet that is what he wants to go back to. I venture to say this to you as to your vote here tomorrow—I am not kidding myself, this bill will go through—I will tell the gentleman from New York, and he well knows it, the people of this country are going to say when this bill passes that the shadow of Andrew Mellon once again walks the halls of the Congress of the United States, bringing in its wake the same chaos that existed back there between 1929 and 1933.

It was not only the poor people of this country who were affected by that Mellon tax bill back in those days, it even reached up to the high industrialists of this country. They were praying to Almighty God that some hand would rescue them from the millions of unemployed in this country and the chaos which was wrecking them. Then that calm voice on March 4, 1933, when the empire of the Insulls and the Charlie Mitchells was crumbling about their heads, that calm voice reassured the people of this country when it said: "The only thing we have to fear is fear itself."

There has been a lot of laughter about this bill here, but there is nothing that should cause laughter to the people of this country because the same thing will happen to you that happened back there when the Mellon tax policies were pursued during those years from 1921 to 1929 to which the gentleman from New York, the gentleman from Minnesota, and the majority over on my left want to return.

I say to you when you have 60,000,000 people gainfully employed, when the factories of this country are making more than they ever made before, for God's sake let us leave well enough alone. I do not want any more Mellon tax bills.

I am going to vote against this bill for another reason: You cannot cut your taxes here like you are trying to because when you bring in your Agriculture appropriation bill next week or the week after you are going to cut Soil Conservation, and my friend the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KEEFE] will be delighted if it leaves out the $75,000,000 for the school-lunch program. Oh, yes; he wonders how he got to be as big as he is because they did not have a school-lunch program back in his day. I will say to him that the school-lunch program is the first line of defense. All you have got to do is to look at the number of rejections at the reception centers of this country during 1940 and 1941 when we were trying to get ready to fight. Maybe if they had had a school-lunch program long before that time there would not have been so many people rejected for physical ailments.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I certainly listened with a great deal of interest to the young man from Oklahoma. He has made a very impassioned address, but apparently he is not familiar with the historical events. He apparently was rather young in the days to which he referred. I remember very well the stockmen out in his Southwest were not even a jump ahead of the sheriff in 1920; but under the policies set in motion by a Republican Congress the farmers sent their own representatives here to thank the Republican Congress and President for helping them out of their situation. He has forgotten all that. That is usually the way when somebody gets help.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. No; I cannot yield now. When some people get help, they soon forget. Ingratitude is not an uncommon human trait. But during those days we further developed this country. The Democratic Party, just previous to that time, had taken us into a war under the theory that they would keep us out of war. They got us into that mess, and they worked themselves then as they are working now, into a free-trade policy. The time will come, if they ever do get in power again, which I doubt very much, because the people have learned their lesson, when they will have learned the terrible consequences of their misguided policies. They have learned how to go out and arm the enemies, then turn around and use our finest manhood and our money to fight and to win the wars against the dictators of the world. I want to say that I am glad the gentleman has spoken here because now we have taken his measure and we will know just exactly how to handle him.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I remember those days in 1921, 1922 and 1923 and I also remember those days in 1930, 1931 and 1932. Then the cattle men were selling good steers for 3½ cents a pound and hogs for even less than that. We were selling our cotton at 4½ cents a pound. There were 14,000,000 people who were willing to work with their hands to make a livelihood for themselves and their families walking the streets of cities and towns, the highways and the byways of the country with nothing to do. I remember when 6,000 banks and trust companies closed within a year. I remember when businesses went to the wall.

I wonder if the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] remembers those delectable and glowing and happy Republican days?

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAYBURN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. I remember those days very well, I may say to the gentleman from Texas, and I know that we were coming out of a world-wide depression in very fine shape. I remember that a group of your leaders was called to the White House when Mr. Hoover was President to see if they would cooperate. You informed him you would not cooperate to save this Republic, that you would not get in office if you would cooperate and you were not going to do it.

Mr. RAYBURN. The only constructive measure that it was proposed passing during that time was the Reconstruction Finance Corporation measure and that had the support of the Democrats.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CASE of South Dakota, chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income tax payments, had come to no resolution thereon.

THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following communications:

THE NATIONAL ARCHIVES,
Washington, March 19, 1947.

The Honorable JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: The act of July 9, 1941, establishing the National Archives Trust Fund Board (44 U. S. C. 300aa-300jj), provides that the Board shall be "composed of the Archivist of the United States, as chairman, the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, and the chairman of Senate Committee on the Library." In view of the reorganization of the committee system of Congress and the disappearance of the House and Senate Committees on the Library, I am at a loss to know who the other members of the Board now are.

I shall apreciate it very much, therefore, if you will inform me as to what Member of the House of Representatives, if any, may be considered to be legally qualified to serve as a member of the National Archives Trust Fund Board. The Board has certain responsibilities with reference to trust funds deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and it is necessary for it to take formal action from time to time.

Sincerely yours,

SOLON J. BUCK.

MARCH 22, 1947.

Hon. SOLON J. BUCK,
The Archivist of the United States,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I have before me your letter dated March 19, 1947, in which you request information as to what Members of the House of Representatives, if any, may be considered to be legally qualified to serve as a member of the National Archives Trust Fund Board.

Section 300f, title 44, United States Code, provides as follows:

"There is created a National Archives Council composed of the Secretaries of each of the executive departments of the Government (or an alternate from each department to be named by the Secretary thereof), the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Library, the chairman of the House Committee on the Library, the Librarian of Congress, the Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution, and the Archivist of the United States. * * *."

Section 300bb, title 44, United States Code, referring to the National Archives Trust Fund Board, reads as follows:

"The Board is hereby created and established, to be known as the National Archives Trust Fund Board, which shall consist of the Archivist of the United States, as chairman, and the chairman of the House Library Committee and the chairman of the Senate Library Committee."

Rule XI (1) of the rules of the House of Representatives provides in part as follows:

"All proposed legislation, messages, petitions, memorials, and other matters relating to the subjects listed under the standing committees named below shall be referred to such committees, respectively:

"(e) Committee on Post Office and Civil Service:

* * * * *

6. The National Archives."

Section 224, Public Law 601, Seventy-ninth Congress, known as the Legislative Reorganization Act, under the heading "Transfer of functions," reads as follows:

"The functions, powers, and duties imposed by statute, resolution, or rule of either House of Congress on the effective date of this section on a standing committee of the Senate or the House of Representatives (or the chairman thereof) are, insofar as they are consistent with this act, hereby transferred to that standing committee created by this act (or the chairman thereof) to which is transferred the legislative jurisdiction over the subject matter to which such functions, powers, and duties relate; except that the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service of the Senate and the chairman of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service of the House created by this act shall be members of the National Archives Council."

There is no question, of course, as to the membership of the chairman of the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service on the National Archives Council.

Inasmuch as the jurisdiction over the National Archives has been placed in the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service it would be my opinion that the chairman of that committee would now be a member of the National Archives Trust Fund Board.

Very truly yours,

JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.

SENATE

THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, March 24, 1947)

The Senate met at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father, that we stand to join our hearts in prayer is our acknowledgment of our great need of Thy guidance. We know that by ourselves we are not sufficient for these days, or for problems beyond the measure of our best wisdom. We are finding out that government of the people by the people is not good enough. We pray for government of the people by God. As this Nation was founded under God, so we confess that our freedom, too, must be under God. Then, and only then, shall we achieve the peace we seek and the righteousness which alone exalteth a nation.

Hear our prayer, O God, and grant unto the Members of this body Thy guidance, we humbly beseech Thee in Jesus' name. Amen.

PREVENTION OF DISCRIMINATION IN EMPLOYMENT

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, out of order, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill and request that it be appropriately referred. In doing this I want to state the reasons for and the purposes of the bill.

It will be called, if enacted into law, the National Act Against Discrimination in Employment. It is not an FEPC bill, and I should like to have that definitely understood. It proposes to establish a new approach for handling the problem of discrimination in employment—discrimination because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry.

Heretofore, as I understand, legislation on this subject which has been proposed in the Congress of the United States has contained a large measure of legal compulsion. I do not believe in legal compulsion in dealing with problems of this kind. It is necessary to have a certain amount of it—a minimum—otherwise, no attention whatever is paid to that which the legislation attempts to do. To that extent this bill has a minimum of legal compulsion, with minor penalties.

What this bill does do is to make a new approach—an approach by mediation, by conference, by conciliation—in the handling of these problems, and in dealing with this particular problem which has to do with discrimination in employment this particular step is mandatory in the bill. Moreover, the bill provides for a broad educational approach in handling this immediate problem through the establishment of local, State, and regional advisory and conciliation councils for the purpose of enabling the localities voluntarily to settle questions of this kind.

This bill, I might say, is patterned to a considerable extent after the New York State statute, which was enacted 2 years ago and which has been working very effectively in New York. Recently the report for the year 1946 was issued by the New York State Commission Against Discrimination, and that report shows that 752 cases of this kind came before the commission during the year 1946, and that of those 752 cases not one went to the courts—not one. A large majority were thrown out because they were inappropriate; in about one-third there was evidence of an act of real discrimination, and every single case in that third was resolved by conference, conciliation, and persuasion.

In this connection I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD at this point an editorial recently appearing in the New York Herald Tribune, commenting upon that record.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PROGRESS AGAINST PREJUDICE

Two years ago the Legislature at Albany was arguing the establishment of the State commission against discrimination, first agency of the kind in the United States. There was a good deal of head shaking, and many a sincere voice was raised that no amount of law would eliminate prejudice. One remembers well the misgivings at that time, but there was also great hope. And now, as the commission reports on its 1946 activities, it is a pleasure to hear again that the hope was justified.

In this year the commission had 752 cases before it involving allegations of bias in employment practice, 448 dealing with Negroes, 118 with Jews, and so on down the list of groups. Of the cases disposed within the year, 277 were withdrawn, found unmeritorious, or outside the commission's jurisdiction. But there were 290 cases in which violations were indicated, and the commission proudly reports that each was settled purely and simply by persuasive conference. Not once has the commission resorted to the courts for punishment which the law provides up to a year's imprisonment and $500 fine.

These are the statistics, but far more important is the commission's work in education. Instead of existing as a narrow agency of prosecution the commission has always taken the large view that the way to eliminate employment discrimination is to keep it from arising in the first place. Corporations, unions, trade groups, employment agencies are constantly approached in this campaign of education. We think the results have been plain enough in the commission's brief history. Any reader can call up examples out of his own experience.

Maybe the antidiscrimination law was not solely responsible, but it certainly has pointed to a way of doing things. At least one phase of prejudice is being successfully attacked. Every resident of the State of New York can be proud of the story.

Mr. IVES. Mr. President, in closing I want to say that this bill is being introduced by me in collaboration with my very distinguished colleagues the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. SALTONSTALL], the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH], the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], and the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY]. We might have had many more with us in this undertaking, but we felt it inadvisable to delay any longer the introduction of the bill. This measure is typical of the best way to meet great problems which now confront us in this country.

We are dealing nowadays with great questions involving human relations. These same fundamental questions are involved in the subject matter of the bill I am now introducing. Yet more and more people nowadays seem to be turning to the law, to legal compulsion, to solve these problems. These problems in the final analysis can never be solved by legal compulsion alone. That is one of the things we should remember constantly in dealing with all these questions involving human relations which are before us.

Our great job in this country at the present time is to make our free society in America work successfully. Call it capitalism, call it the society of free competitive enterprise, call it the private profit system—it does not make any difference what we call it, our job is to make the system work.

We have heard a great deal about communism on the floor of the Senate in recent days. No one hates and loathes communism more than I do. But I wish to say that the great answer we should make to communism, which will insure once and for all that there will be no communism in this country, is to make our own great system work as effectively and successfully as it can be made to work. This can be done only through the full use of the voluntary processes which should always be available in this country.

In the consideration of legislation of the type I am introducing, in the consideration of legislation dealing with labor relations, the basic test should be whether that legislation will permit and encourage the effective exercise of the voluntary processes, so that out of their use can come that understanding, that grasp, that appreciation of the viewpoint and position of one another which will enable all of us to work together more happily in our own country.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred.

The bill (S. 984) to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, religion, color, national origin, or ancestry, introduced by Mr. IVES, for himself, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. SMITH, Mr. MORSE, Mr. CHAVEZ, Mr. DOWNEY, Mr. MURRAY, and Mr. MYERS, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, in reference to the remarks made by the Senator from New York, I may say that I was most happy to join the Senator and the other Senators mentioned by the Senator from New York, in introducing and sponsoring the proposed legislation. It is my honest opinion that it is the right approach to a problem which is very apparent in our country.

Lately we have been hearing much about communism, lately we have been impressed, through the radio, through the press, through the voices of public officials, about democracy everywhere.

By considering and acting on the proposed legislation, Congress can say whether or not the democracy we are talking about and are trying to impose throughout the world shall exist even in the United States.

AMENDMENT OF THE CIVIL AERONAUTICS ACT OF 1938, AS AMENDED

Mr. BREWSTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, out of order, to introduce for appropriate reference a bill on behalf of my colleague the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], who is unable to be here this afternoon, and for the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] and for myself and for the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON]. The bill deals with the amendment of the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended. I also ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], may make a brief statement regarding the bill.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator repeat the request?

Mr. BREWSTER. My request is that I be permitted, by unanimous consent, to introduce a bill, and that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], may be permitted to make a brief statement regarding it, inasmuch as he is obliged to take a train.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill (S. 987) to amend the Civil Aeronautics Act of 1938, as amended, to provide for the creation of a consolidated international air carrier for the United States, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. BREWSTER (for MR. WHITE, Mr. MCCARRAN, himself, and Mr. MCMAHON), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the Senator from Nevada is recognized at this time.

Mr. MCCARRAN. Mr. President, my colleagues in the Senate know that for some years now I have been striving for the enactment of legislation to provide for the creation of a community company to operate throughout the world, under the American flag, in international air transportation—a company which would give proper representation to our domestic air carriers and to the other elements in our great transportation system, a company which would have the full weight of our Government behind it, and which, therefore, would permit us to present a united front against our real and formidable competition in the airways of the world, namely, the chosen instruments of other nations.

In my efforts to secure this legislation, I was for several years as a "voice crying in the wilderness." The succession of bills which I introduced gained small support at first; but the need for such a community company as I have proposed has come to be more and more widely recognized as time has passed. In the Seventy-ninth Congress, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], stood shoulder to shoulder with me on this proposition; and in that Congress my bill was lost in committee by a tie vote, 10 to 10.

World events have demonstrated beyond question the soundness of my proposal for the all-American flag line. The present financial plight of many of our air lines demonstrates the desirability of pooling our interests in international air transportation, for the good of the carriers themselves, as well as for the national welfare. I believe in this principle today even more strongly than I did 3 or 4 years ago, if that is possible. We can no longer delay action in this matter with safety to our national interests in world trade and in global air transportation. I, therefore, welcome the turn of events which today sees the Republican leadership adopting this principle and taking responsibility for pushing the legislation to final enactment.

I want to say just a word, Mr. President, about the bill which has just been introduced. My colleagues know that in the past I have introduced a succession of bills on this subject. Each of those bills, in succession, represented not only a renewal of the basic principle involved, but also an attempt to improve the language designed to carry that basic principle into effect. Thus, my bill S. 326 of the Seventy-ninth Congress was somewhat different in language from my bill S. 1790 of the Seventy-eighth Congress. The amendment in the nature of a substitute for Senate bill 326, which I proposed toward the end of the Seventy-ninth Congress, involved changes of language which I felt constituted an improvement upon that bill as originally introduced. The bill just introduced for the senior Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], in behalf of himself, the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BREWSTER], the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCMAHON] again contains changes of language from my bill S. 197, which was the successor in this Congress to Senate bill 326 of the Seventy-ninth Congress. But I want the Senate and the country to understand that the principle involved remains unchanged. Certain perfections of language will, I hope, help to gain support for this new bill. Expansion of the provisions respecting subsidies to the proposed community company, and fixing definite limits to such subsidies, will, I hope, meet the criticism that the language of my earlier bills in this regard was too broad. Details of language will, of course, be threshed out in committee and on the floor of this body, and I anticipate that perhaps other and further changes will be made. For myself, I shall welcome any change in language which will strengthen the workability of this legislation. The vitally important thing is that the principle involved in this bill, the principle which I have advocated for all these years past, the principle for which the junior Senator from Maine and the senior Senator from Nevada fought in the Seventy-ninth Congress, the principle which is simply a common-sense application to the field of international air transportation of the American theory of "united we stand, divided we fall"—that this principle shall be embodied in law, so that at long last this Nation will have with respect to international aviation a fixed policy which will give us the basis we need, and which we must have, to preserve our position in world trade and commerce, in our dealings with the other nations of the earth, and in the air lanes of the world.

CHANGE OF NAME OF COMMITTEE

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution amending the rules of the Senate, changing the name of the Committee on Civil Service to Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. Under the reorganization bill of last year the name of the committee in the House was Civil Service, but when the bill reached the House it was amended, and the name of the committee on that side is Post Office and Civil Service. We want the name of the committee in the Senate to be the same. I am submitting the resolution at the request of the committee. It is unanimously supported by the members of the committee.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred.

The resolution (S. Res. 99), was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That paragraph (1) (e) of rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate is amended by striking out "Committee on Civil Service," and inserting in lieu thereof "Committee on Post Office and Civil Service."

Such change in identification of this committee shall be effective January 1, 1948.

PROTECTION OF INTERNAL SECURITY OF THE NATION

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, yesterday Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, the head of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, appeared before the House Committee on Un-American Activities and last night made a statement over the radio. It is one of the finest, most thoughtful, and most convincing arguments on communism that I have seen anywhere. I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the body of the RECORD, so that Senators can the better see it. Regardless of how Senators may feel concerning the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal I hope that every Senator will read this wonderful, patriotic, thoughtful statement by Mr. J. Edgar Hoover.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The aims and responsibilities of the House Committee on Un-American Activities and the Federal Bureau of Investigation are the same—the protection of the internal security of this Nation. The methods whereby this goal may be accomplished differ, however.

I have always felt that the greatest contribution this committee could make is the public disclosure of the forces that menace America—Communist and Fascist. That is why the venom of the American Communist and the now defunct German-American Bund has been directed at this committee as it has also been directed at the Federal Bureau of Investigation. This committee renders a distinct service when it publicly reveals the diabolic machinations of sinister figures engaged in un-American activities.

THE ROLE OF THE FBI

The FBI has great responsibilities to the Nation. In addition to being charged "with the duty of investigating violations of the laws of the United States, collecting evidence in cases in which the United States is or may be a party in interest, and performing other duties imposed * * * by law," the FBI has been charged by Presidential directive, dated September 6, 1939, "to take charge of investigative work in matters relating to espionage, sabotage." In implementing this charge the President called upon all law-enforcement officers to promptly "turn over to the nearest representative of the Federal Bureau of Investigation any information obtained by them relating to espionage, counterespionage, sabotage, subversive activities."

The FBI is essentially an investigative agency. It is our duty to get the facts. We do not establish policies—that is the responsibility of higher authority. We do not make decisions as to prosecutions—that is the responsibility of the Attorney General, his assistants and the various United States attorneys.

To the end that our responsibilities may be discharged it is necessary not to lose sight of the fact that our chief responsibility is the duty to obtain information and to protect confidence. Thus, when a citizen furnishes information on a confidential basis his confidence must be respected. In any intelligence operation, security of information is of primary concern. I recall in the prewar years that the FBI was criticized on the ill-founded premise that nothing was being done to meet the Nazi-Fascist-Japanism threat to our internal security. The real facts are now a matter of record. What was being done, and done successfully, could not then be discussed and publicized. When the time came to act the FBI was fully prepared to carry out its responsibilities. There was not one successful enemy-directed act of sabotage during the war and enemy espionage was kept under complete control.

In one of our espionage cases, a spy ring was kept under close surveillance for over 18 months. The arrests when made broke the backbone of the Nazi spy system in America. I shudder at what might have happened had there been a disclosure of our operations and our sources of information in the initial days of that investigation. That was the very time we were most criticized for inaction. I hope this committee will understand our situation and I know you will readily agree that there are many questions that you might like to raise which I would for obvious reasons be unable to answer in a public hearing.

THE COMMUNIST PARTY

My feelings concerning the Communist Party of the United States are well known. I have not hesitated over the years to express my concern and apprehension. As a consequence, its professional smear brigades have conducted a relentless assault against the FBI. You who have been members of this committee also know the fury with which the party, its sympathizers and fellow travelers can launch an assault. I do not mind such attacks. What has been disillusioning is the manner in which they have been able to enlist support often from apparently well-meaning but thoroughly duped persons.

Anyone who opposes the American Communist is at once branded as a "disrupter," a "Fascist," a "Red baiter," or a "Hitlerite," and becomes the object of a systematic campaign of character assassination. This is easily understood because the basic tactics of the Communist Party are deceit and trickery.

The great god of the American Communists, Comrade Lenin, whose writings are their Bible, in various speeches and writings urged the use of deceit and trickery, and his converts live by his injunction:

"The strictest loyalty to the ideas of communism must be combined with the ability to make all necessary practical compromises, to maneuver, to make agreements, zig-zags, retreats, and so on, so as to accelerate the coming to power." (Left-Wing Communism, an Infantile Disorder, pp. 75–76, V. I. Lenin, International Publishers Co., Inc., 1940.)

Lenin's views were incorporated in the "Thesis on the Fundamental Tasks of the Second Congress of the Communist International," and the following provision is familiar to all American Communists:

"In all countries, even the freest, 'legal and peaceful' in the sense that the class struggle is less acute in them, the time has fully matured when it is absolutely necessary for every Communist Party systematically to combine legal with illegal work, legal with illegal organization. * * * It is necessary immediately for all legal Communist Parties to form illegal organizations. * * * Illegal work is particularly necessary in the Army, the Navy, and police."

Continuing, the Thesis states:

"The absolute necessity in principle of combining illegal with legal work is determined, not only by the sum total of the specific features of the present period, the period of the eve of the proletarian dictatorship, but also by the necessity of proving to the bourgeoisie that there is not, nor can there be, a sphere or field of work that cannot be won by the Communists." (Volume X, Selected Works of Lenin, pp. 172–173; International Publishers Co., Inc., 1943.)

The Communist movement in the United States began to manifest itself in 1919. Since then it has changed its name and its party line whenever expedient and tactical. But always it comes back to fundamentals and bills itself as the party of "Marxism-Leninism." As such, it stands for the destruction of our American form of government; it stands for the destruction of American democracy; it stands for the destruction of free enterprise; and it stands for the creation of a Soviet of the United States and ultimate world revolution.

THE HISTORIC MISSION

The preamble of the latest constitution of the Communist Party of the United States, filled with Marxian "double talk," proclaims that the party "educates the working class, in the course of its day-to-day struggles, for its historic mission, the establishment of socialism."

The phrase "historic mission" has a sinister meaning. To the uninformed person it bespeaks tradition, but to the Communist, using his own words, it is "achieving the dictatorship of the proletariat"; "to throw off the yoke of imperialism and establish the proletarian dictatorship"; "to raise these revolutionary forces to the surface and hurl them like a devastating avalanche upon the united forces of bourgeois reaction, frenzied at the presentiment of their rapidly approaching doom."

In recent years the Communists have been very cautious about using such phrases as "force and violence." Nevertheless it is the subject of much discussion in their schools and in party caucus where they readily admit that the only way in which they can defeat the present ruling class is by world revolution.

The Communist, once he is fully trained and indoctrinated, realizes that he can create his order in the United States only by bloody revolution.

Their chief textbook, The History of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, is used as a basis for planning their revolution. Their tactics require that to be successful they must have—

1. The will and sympathy of the people.
2. Military aid and assistance.
3. Plenty of guns and ammunition.
4. A program of extermination of the police, as they are the most important enemy, and are termed "trained Fascists."
5. Seizure of all communications, busses, railroads, radio stations, and other forms of communications and transportation.

They evade the question of force and violence publicly. They hold that when Marxists speak of force and violence they will not be responsible—that force and violence will be the responsibility of their enemies. They adopt the novel premise that they do not advocate force and violence publicly, but that when their class resists to defend themselves then they are thus accused of using force and violence.

PARTY FOUND ILLEGAL

On May 28, 1942, Hon. Francis Biddle, then Attorney General, in reviewing the deportation proceedings of Harry Bridges, found that the Communist Party from the time of its inception in 1919 believes in, advises, advocates, and teaches the overthrow by force and violence of the Government of the United States.

Since then much has happened. In 1944 the party dissolved and became the Communist Political Association. The constitution of the new CPA in 1944 omitted references to "Leninism" and the "historic mission." That was the era when Browder was preaching a second front and all-out production. But even then they secretly held to their historic mission, for in an injunction to party members, Eugene Dennis, now general secretary of the party, said:

"Irrespective of name, we are, and shall continue to be, an American working class political organization, guided by the science of Marxism-Leninism."

But that era was short-lived. Immediately after Jacques Duclos, the French Communist leader, blasted the American Communists as deserting the Marxian cause, Browder was repudiated, the CPA was relegated to oblivion and the present Communist Party of the United States was reborn. A new constitution adopted in July 1945, as I have already indicated, referred to the party as basing itself "upon the principles of scientific socialism, Marxism-Leninism" and reincorporated the reference to the party's historic mission.

In establishing the party's illegal character in 1942, the then Attorney General Biddle based his findings on the contents of the same Communist publications which today are being sold and circulated in party circles. The American Communist, like the leopard, cannot change his spots.

THE PARTY LINE

The Communist Party line changes from day to day. The one cardinal rule that can always be applied to what the party line is or will be is found in the fundamental principle of Communist teachings that the support of Soviet Russia is the duty of Communists of all countries.

One thing is certain. The American progress which all good citizens seek, such as old-age security, houses for veterans, child assistance, and a host of others is being adopted as window dressing by the Communists to conceal their true aims and entrap gullible followers.

The record of the American Communists conclusively proves their true feelings. In the prewar days, when they were allied with Hitler, they marched on Washington protesting selective service, lend-lease, shouting "The Yanks are not coming." The American Peace Mobilization picketed the White House until the day before the Nazis marched into Russia and then within less than a month reconverted it into the American People's Mobilization, demanded all-out production, and started the chant for the second front.

We are witnessing the same tactics today. Since Secretary Schwellenbach advocated outlawing the Communist Party, and President Truman called for aid to Greece and Turkey, the Communists have been mobilizing, promoting mass meetings, sending telegrams and letters to exert pressure on Congress. The American Communists fail to realize that already they have outlawed themselves in the minds and hearts of loyal Americans.

The mad march of Red fascism is a cause for concern in America. But the deceit, the trickery, and the lies of the American Communists are catching up with them. Whenever the spotlight of truth is focused upon them they cry, "Red baiting." Now that their aims and objectives are being exposed, they are creating a committee for the constitutional rights of Communists, and are feverishly working to build up what they term a "quarter-million-dollar defense fund" to place ads in papers, to publish pamphlets, to buy radio time. They know that today it is a fight to the finish and that their backs will soon be to the wall.

STRENGTH OF THE PARTY

A few days ago word leaked out that the annual Communist convention scheduled to be held in Chicago had been shifted from July to September in order that they might carry on their campaign of obstruction to American foreign policy and increase their membership. They have been conducting an active membership campaign as the leadership is concerned over the manner in which membership has slipped.

The numerical strength of the party's enrolled membership is insignificant. But it is well known that there are many actual members who because of their position are not carried on party rolls.

New York leads in the number of enrolled party members, 30,000; followed by California, 8,553; Illinois, 6,500; Ohio, 3,838; Oregon, 3,654; Washington, 2,752; New Jersey, 2,487; and Michigan, 2,135. The Daily Worker boasts of 74,000 members on the rolls.

What is important is the claim of the Communists themselves that for every party member there are 10 others ready, willing, and able to do the party's work. Herein lies the greatest menace of communism, for these are the people who infiltrate and corrupt various spheres of American life. So rather than the size of the Communist Party, the way to weigh its true importance is by testing its influence—its ability to infiltrate.

The size of the party is relatively unimportant because of the enthusiasm and iron-clad discipline under which they operate. In this connection it might be of interest to observe that in 1917, when the Communists overthrew the Russian Government, there was 1 Communist for every 2,277 persons in Russia. In the United States today there is 1 Communist for every 1,814 persons in the country.

One who accepts the aims, principles, and program of the party, who attends meetings, who reads the party press and literature, who pays dues and who is active on behalf of the party shall be considered a member. The open, avowed Communist who carries a card and pays dues is no different, from a security standpoint, than the person who does the party's work but pays no dues, carries no card and is not on the party rolls. In fact, the latter is a greater menace because of his opportunity to work in stealth.

IDENTIFYING UNDERCOVER COMMUNISTS, FELLOW TRAVELERS, AND SYMPATHIZERS

The burden of proof should be placed upon those who consistently follow the ever-changing, twisting party line. Fellow travelers and sympathizers can deny party membership but they can never escape the undeniable fact that they have played into the Communist hands, thus furthering the Communist cause by playing the role of innocent, gullible, or willful allies.

PROPAGANDA ACTIVITIES

The Communists have developed one of the greatest propaganda machines the world has ever known. They have been able to penetrate and infiltrate many respectable and reputable public opinion mediums.

They capitalize upon ill-founded charges associating known honest progressive liberals with left-wing causes. I have always entertained the view that there are few appellations more degrading than "Communist" and hence it should be reserved for those justly deserving the degradation.

The Communist propaganda technique is designed to promote emotional response with the hope that the victim will be attracted by what he is told the Communist way of life holds in store for him. The objective, of course, is to develop discontent and hasten the day when the Communists can gather sufficient support and following to overthrow the American way of life.

Communist propaganda is always slanted in the hope that the Communist may be aligned with liberal progressive causes. The honest liberal and progressive should be alert to this and I believe the Communists' most effective foes can be the real liberals and progressives who understand their devious machinations.

The deceptiveness of Communist "double talk" fulfills the useful propaganda technique of confusion. In fact, Lenin referred to their peculiar brand of phraseology as, "* * * that cursed Aesopian language * * * which * * * compelled all revolutionaries to have recourse, whenever they took up their pens to write a 'legal' work." Lenin used it for the purpose of avoiding censorship. Communists today use it to mislead the public.

The use of the term "democracy" by the Communists, we have learned to our sorrow, does not have the meaning to them that it does to us. To them it means Communism and totalitarianism and our understanding of the term is regarded by them as imperialistic and Fascist.

The Daily Worker on Independence Day last year, for example, proclaimed: "It is a dramatic fact that on July 4, 1946, the independence of other countries is menaced by the United States in the grip of trusts and tories."

CORRESPONDENCE CAMPAIGNS

Communists and their followers are prolific letter writers and some of the more energetic ones follow the practice of directing numerous letters of protest to editors but signing a different name to each.

Members of Congress are well aware of Communists starting their pressure campaigns by an avalanche of mail which follows the party line.

RADIO

The party has departed from depending upon the printed word as its medium of propaganda and has taken to the air. Its members and sympathizers have not only infiltrated the airways but they are now persistently seeking radio channels.

MOTION PICTURES

The American Communists launched a furtive attack on Hollywood in 1935 by the issuance of a directive calling for a concentration in Hollywood. The orders called for action on two fronts: (1) An effort to infiltrate the labor unions; (2) to infiltrate the so-called intellectual and creative fields.

In movie circles, Communists developed an effective defense a few years ago in meeting criticism. They would counter with the question, "After all, what is the matter with Communism?" It was effective because many persons did not possess adequate knowledge of the subject to give an intelligent answer.

Some producers and studio heads realize the possibility that the entire industry faces serious embarrassment because it could become a springboard for Communist activities. Communist activity in Hollywood is effective and is furthered by Communists and sympathizers using the prestige of prominent persons to serve, often unwittingly, the Communist cause.

The party is content and highly pleased if it is possible to have inserted in a picture a line, a scene, a sequence, conveying the Communist lesson, and, more particularly, if they can keep out anti-Communist lessons.

INFILTRATION

The Communist tactic of infiltrating labor unions stems from the earliest teachings of Marx, which have been reiterated by party spokesmen down through the years. They resort to all means to gain their point and often succeed in penetrating and literally taking over labor unions before the rank and file of members are aware of what has occurred.

With few exceptions the following admonitions of Lenin have been followed:

"It is necessary to be able to withstand all this, to agree to any and every sacrifice, and even—if need be—to resort to all sorts of devices, maneuvers, and illegal methods, to evasion and subterfuge, in order to penetrate into the trade-unions, to remain in them, and to carry on Communist work in them at all costs" (p. 38, Left-Wing Communism, an Infantile Disorder, vol. I, Lenin, 1934, International Publishers Co., Inc.).

I am convinced that the great masses of union men and women are patriotic American citizens interested chiefly in security for their families and themselves. They have no use for the American Communists, but in those instances where Communists have taken control of unions it has been because too many union men and women have been outwitted, outmaneuvered, and outwaited by Communists.

The Communists have never relied on numerical strength to dominate a labor organization. Through infiltration tactics they have in too many instances captured positions of authority. Communists have boasted that with 5 percent of the membership, the Communists, with their militancy, superior organizational ability, and discipline, could control the union.

They regard as political every movement of the working class which seeks to gain concessions by exerting pressure from without as a political movement. Thus, as Lenin puts it: "The economic strike develops into a political strike and the latter develops into insurrection" (p. 12, Left-Wing Communism, vol. I, Lenin, 1934, International Publishers Co., Inc.)

That the Communists feel themselves ordained for a special mission in penetrating labor is revealed by the statement made by Eugene Dennis, general secretary of the Communist Party of the United States of America, at a recent party meeting: "No trade-union or people's organization," he said, "not even the great CIO, could long remain progressive if it were to exclude or to attack Communists."

The Communists have long viewed with envy the A. F. of L. They admit they play a very small role with only a handful of Communists active in the A. F. of L. locals. Recently there has been agitation in the party to reorganize to influence the A. F. of L.

A few months ago a party functionary said it was imperative that 3,000 party members be infiltrated into the A. F. of L. without publicizing this fact. They say this action is necessary because of the danger of a Third World War and the need to fulfill the Communist plan of creating a third party.

If more union members took a more active role and asserted themselves it would become increasingly difficult for Communists to gain control. Patriotic union members can easily spot sympathizers and party members in conventions and union meetings because invariably the latter strive to establish the party line instead of serving the best interests of the union and the country.

FOREIGN LANGUAGE GROUPS

The party for the past 18 months has been giving special attention to foreign language groups and has called for a sweeping self-critical examination of its work in this field. As long ago as 1945, in urging the importance of penetrating these groups, party leaders said, "We need only mention the Polish, Italian, Yugoslav and Greek questions," and in characteristic party double talk observed that they occupied an important relationship "to the entire democratic camp and to the broader peoples movements." In other words, the Communists now seek strength from foreign groups who may have relatives in countries which Russia seeks to influence.

GOVERNMENT

The recent Canadian spy trials revealed the necessity of alertness in keeping Communists and sympathizers out of Government services. In fact, the high command of the Communist party regards such assignments of sufficient importance to demand that party members not contact fellow members in the Government and if such Government employees are carried on party rolls at all they are assigned an alias. Last fall a high-ranking party leader instructed that all party membership cards of Government employees be destroyed and that party organizational meetings in Government circles be discontinued although informal social or union gatherings which could not be identified as Communist meetings could be continued. The dangers of permitting Communists or sympathizers to work in Government circles are too obvious to mention.

There has developed, however, as a result of Communist propaganda, some fanciful feeling among Communists that no distinction should be drawn and that Communists have a right to Government jobs.

Since July 1, 1941, the FBI has investigated 6,193 cases under the Hatch Act, which forbids membership upon the part of any Government employee in any organization advocating the overthrow of the Government of the United States.

For the purposes of investigation the Attorney General has ruled that a number of organizations in addition to the Communist Party are subversive under the Hatch Act because of Communist influence.

One hundred and one Federal employees were discharged as a result of our investigation, 21 resigned during the investigation, and in 75 cases administrative action was taken by the departments. A total of 1,906 individuals are no longer employed in the government while 122 cases are presently pending consideration in the various Government agencies.

The FBI does not make recommendations; it merely reports facts and it is up to the interested Government Department to make a decision. Almost invariably, of course, subjects of investigations deny affiliation with subversive groups, often despite strong evidence to the contrary.

The following is a case in point:

The FBI submitted a 57-page report to the Federal Security Agency on March 7, 1942, on Dexey Wilkerson. The investigation recorded interviews with persons who stated he was a member of the Communist Party. Following the submission of the report we were advised by the Federal Security Agency that further investigation failed to show that Wilkerson was subversive or disloyal to our Government. Wilkerson subsequently transferred to OPA and resigned on June 19, 1943. Within less than 24 hours he announced his new job as a Communist Party organizer. He was subsequently appointed a member of the National Committee of the Communist Party. To be eligible for service in the National Committee one must have been a member of the party in continuous good standing for at least 4 years.

MASS AND FRONT ORGANIZATIONS

The united front program of the Communist Party was launched at the seventh world congress of the Communist International in 1935. The Communist Party in the United States immediately took up the program and a systematic plan was worked out of infiltrating existing organizations with Communists.

For the most part, front organizations assumed the character of either a mass or membership organization or a paper organization. Both solicited and used names of prominent persons. Literally hundreds of groups and organizations have either been infiltrated or organized primarily to accomplish the purposes of promoting the interests of the Soviet Union in the United States, the promotion of Soviet war and peace aims, the exploitation of Negroes in the United States, work among foreign-language groups, and to secure a favorable viewpoint toward the Communists in domestic, political, social, and economic issues.

The first requisite for a front organization is an idealistic sounding title. Hundreds of such organizations have come into being and have gone out of existence when their true purposes have become known or exposed while others with high sounding names are continually springing up.

THE AMERICAN YOUTH FOR DEMOCRACY

Illustrative of how the Communists bury one organization and conceive another is the Young Communist League. In convention assembled in New York City, the Young Communist League was dissolved on October 16, 1943, and the next day the American Youth for Democracy was born.

At first the Communists denied paternity for the AYD, but in April of 1946 the party's national board indicated that the AYD was the successor to the YCL. William Z. Foster, the Communist Party head, at the AYD National Intercollegiate Conference in New York City in 1945, told the delegates in the concluding session that "the atomic age is the age of socialism, of communism. This is the greatest lesson that the youth of America has to learn." This new front set up youth centers ostensibly to combat juvenile delinquency. More properly, these centers could be termed Communist youth-recruiting centers.

THE TEST OF A FRONT ORGANIZATION

I feel that this committee could render a great service to the Nation through its power of exposure in quickly spotlighting existing front organizations and those which will be created in the future.

There are easy tests to establish the real character of such organizations:

1. Does the group espouse the cause of Americanism or the cause of Soviet Russia?
2. Does the organization feature as speakers at its meetings known Communists, sympathizers, or fellow travelers?
3. Does the organization shift when the party line shifts?
4. Does the organization sponsor causes, campaigns, literature, petitions, or other activities sponsored by the party or other front organizations?
5. Is the organization used as a sounding board by or is it endorsed by Communist-controlled labor unions?
6. Does its literature follow the Communist line or is it printed by the Communist press?
7. Does the organization receive consistent favorable mention in Communist publications?
8. Does the organization represent itself to be nonpartisan yet engage in political activities and consistently advocate causes favored by the Communists?
9. Does the organization denounce American and British foreign policy while always lauding Soviet policy?

NATIONAL DEFENSE

The Communist Party of the United States is a fifth column if there ever was one. It is far better organized than were the Nazis in occupied countries prior to their capitulation.

They are seeking to weaken America just as they did in their era of obstruction when they were alined with the Nazis. Their goal is the overthrow of our Government.

There is no doubt as to where a real Communist's loyalty rests. Their allegiance is to Russia, not the United States.

A top functionary of the Communist Party recently said, "A war by the United States against the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics would be an unjust war, which is why it must be fought against, but that if it should come the Communist Party in the United States would be with Russia, and make no mistake about that."

In another section of the country another Communist leader made the following statement, "I believe that everyone should know that we are for Russia and, if need be, we will die for the cause. I don't mean that war with Russia is coming soon; I hope not, so that Russia will be better prepared."

WHAT TO DO

What can we do? And what should be our course of action? The best antidote to communism is vigorous, intelligent, old-fashioned Americanism with eternal vigilance. I do not favor any course of action which would give the Communists cause to portray and pity themselves as martyrs. I do favor unrelenting prosecution wherever they are found to be violating our country's laws.

As Americans, our most effective defense is a workable democracy that guarantees and preserves our cherished freedoms.

I would have no fears if more Americans possessed the zeal, the fervor, the persistence, and the industry to learn about this menace of red fascism. I do fear for the liberal and progressive who has been hoodwinked and duped into joining hands with the Communists. I confess to a real apprehension so long as Communists are able to secure ministers of the gospel to promote their evil work and espouse a cause that is alien to the religion of Christ and Judaism. I do fear so long as school boards and parents tolerate conditions whereby Communists and fellow travelers under the guise of academic freedom can teach our youth a way of life that eventually will destroy the sanctity of the home, that undermines faith in God, that causes them to scorn respect for constituted authority and sabotage our revered Constitution.

I do fear so long as American labor groups are infiltrated, dominated, or saturated with the virus of communism. I do fear the palliation and weasel-worded gestures against communism indulged in by some of our labor leaders who should know better but who have become pawns in the hands of sinister but astute manipulations for the Communist cause.

I fear for ignorance on the part of all our people who may take the poisonous pills of Communist propaganda.

I am deeply concerned whenever I think of the words of an old-time Communist. Disillusioned, disgusted, and frightened he came to us with his story and concluded:

"God help America or any other country if the Communist Party ever gets strong enough to control labor and politics. God help us all."

The Communists have been, still are, and always will be a menace to freedom, to democratic ideals, to the worship of God and to America's way of life.

I feel that once public opinion is thoroughly aroused as it is today, the fight against communism is well on its way. Victory will be assured once Communists are identified and exposed, because the public will take the first step of quarantining them so they can do no harm. Communism, in reality, is not a political party. It is a way of life—an evil and malignant way of life. It reveals a condition akin to disease that spreads like an epidemic and like an epidemic a quarantine is necessary to keep it from infecting the Nation.

SUMMARY OF AUDIT OF TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, under date of March 17 of this year the Comptroller General's office submitted to the Congress a report of an audit of the Tennessee Valley Authority for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1945. There have been a great many requests for the report, and copies are not presently available. I understand that the report is to be printed as a House document, but will not be available for several days. In the meantime, with the discussion of the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal before the Senate, the report is likely to be referred to frequently in the course of the debate. The report itself is so voluminous that I shall not ask to have it all printed in the RECORD. However, I do ask to have a summary, which contains the findings and recommendations of the General Accounting Office, printed in the body of the RECORD, preferably at the end of today's debate on sugar.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, let me say to the Senator that I am informed that the report will be printed and in the hands of all Members of Congress within the next few days. Would it not be better for Congress to see the entire report, rather than a part of it?

Mr. AIKEN. I shall be very glad to submit the entire report to be printed in the RECORD; but it would occupy a great deal of space.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think that is true. It is unnecessary, because I have been informed by the Government Printing Office that the entire report will be printed by next Monday, I believe.

Mr. AIKEN. I have been informed today that the proof has not yet even gone to the General Accounting Office to be edited. In the meantime the debate on the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal will be under way. I hope it will be under way. I think Members of the Senate ought at least to have the findings and recommendations of the General Accounting Office available.

Mr. McKELLAR. I shall not object to the Senator's request. However, I warn Senators that I have read the report, and I was told that it was in the hands of the Government Printing Office, and that printed copies would be available within a few days. If that is so, I do not believe that culled-out parts should be printed. I shall not object to the request of the Senator from Vermont, but I invite the attention of all Senators to the fact that they can obtain the entire report in a short time.

Mr. AIKEN. It is in the hands of the printers, but the body of the report contains tables and charts which are difficult to print, and which take time to set up. Therefore, I ask unanimous consent to have only the summary of the report printed in the RECORD.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Vermont?

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY AS CONTAINED IN THE AUDIT REPORT ON THE TENNESSEE VALLEY AUTHORITY SUBMITTED TO THE CONGRESS BY THE COMPTROLLER GENERAL MARCH 17, 1947

1. Tennessee Valley Authority is a wholly owned Government corporation created by the act of Congress approved May 18, 1933 (48 Stat. 58; 16 U. S. C. 831 et seq), for the purpose of improving the navigability and providing for flood control of the Tennessee River, providing for the agricultural and industrial development of Government properties at and near Muscle Shoals, Ala., including Wilson Dam. Although power production and sale is considered in the act as incidental to these purposes, that activity is one of the most important of the Authority's activities. The Authority has been managed by a Board of Directors independently of any other Government agency or department.

2. The Authority received appropriations from the Congress and Executive allotments from emergency funds aggregating approximately $668,000,000 to June 30, 1945, for the purpose of financing construction of additional dams and power and other facilities in the Tennessee Valley and for covering the costs of development programs, navigation, and flood control. Other sources of funds have included net revenues of the power department, aggregating approximately $100,000,000 (before charges for depreciation) and borrowings of $65,000,000 from the Treasury and Reconstruction Finance Corporation.

3. Of the total investment of $718,000,000 in property, plant, and equipment, less depreciation, at June 30, 1945, the amount allocated to power facilities was $391,000,000, and to navigation and flood control, $284,000,000. The allocation of the property investment reflects direct classification of the costs of facilities installed for single uses and apportionment of the depreciated cost of multiple-use dam facilities ($331,000,000). The method of allocation selected by the Board of Directors is based largely upon prorating the cost of the joint investment between power, navigation, and flood control in ratio to the hypothetical justifiable-alternate-single-use investments for the three purposes. As a result, the cost allocated to power, thus far the main revenue-producing program, was less than the estimated cost of a hypothetical single-use investment for that purpose. Similarly, the cost allocated to navigation and flood control was less than the hypothetical single-use investments for those respective purposes. The basis of allocation of the investment is also used in allocating operating costs for maintenance and depreciation of the multiple-use facilities. Therefore, the effect of the cost allocation is to reduce operating costs of each activity below what would have been borne on the basis of single-use operations. For this and other reasons, the cost of power operations may not be compared with a private power corporation's operations.

4. Power sales for the fiscal year 1945, amounting to $38,959,400 (10,314,746 thousand kilowatt-hours), were the largest in the Authority's history. During this year more power was produced than by any other single integrated power system in the Nation, and it is estimated by the Authority that more than three-fourths of its power system output was utilized in war production. Substantially all of the power generated is sold wholesale to municipalities, cooperatives, other Federal agencies, large industrial power users, and private public utilities.

5. Net income of $17,982,034 from power operations was based upon the method of allocation of costs of multiple-use facilities and certain other accounting and financial policies subject to comment on pages 22 to 26. As indicated therein, charges to power operations do not include the following items:

DEPRECIATION

As discussed on pages 61 and 62, no depreciation has been provided on the costs of land rights and clearing for transmission lines and reservoirs and costs of relocations and removals of former occupants, because such provision is not required by the Federal Power Commission.

TAXES

The Tennessee Valley Authority contributes to the support of State and local governments in its area through payments in lieu of property taxes, but, like other Federal agencies and other governmentally owned public utilities, it is not required by law to make any contribution to the general support of the Federal Government through the payment of income taxes.

INTEREST

Interest paid by the Tennessee Valley Authority and charged to power operations is limited to the interest on its bonds held by the United States Treasury and Reconstruction Finance Corporation. Bonds having a principal amount of $56,500,000 held by the Treasury carry an interest rate by temporary agreement of 1 percent, which is less than the interest cost of long-term bonds to the United States Treasury.

No interest is required by law to be paid on the remainder of the Government's investment in power operations, which in the aggregate amounted to approximately $400,000,000 at June 30, 1945. The interest rate on long-term borrowing of the United States Treasury is 2½ percent. Based upon this rate and investment in power facilities, the annual interest cost to the United States Government on its investment in power facilities would be $10,000,000, or approximately $9,274,000 in excess of interest charged in the income statement for power operations for the fiscal year 1945.

Contrary to the customary practice in public utility accounting, the Authority's investment in property, plant, and equipment does not include any interest during construction. If interest had been paid on the investment and capitalized during construction, depreciation on property, plant, and equipment would be increased.

EMPLOYEES' COMPENSATION CLAIMS

Claims for employees' injuries are allowed and paid by the United States Employees' Compensation Commission (now Bureau of Employees' Compensation, Federal Security Agency) without charge to TVA. As in the case of interest, the cost of property, plant, and equipment does not include the cost of employees' injuries and damages applicable to construction. If such costs had been paid and capitalized, the annual depreciation charges would reflect some increase.

It is recommended that the Congress consider specific amendments in the TVA Act or other legislation, as follows:

(a) All claims for injuries and damages should be paid by the Tennessee Valley Authority and not charged to separate appropriations from the United States Treasury for the United States Employees' Compensation Commission unless such charges are reimbursed to it by TVA.

(b) Interest should be required to be paid to the Treasury on the entire investment of the Government in power operations.

(c) Retroactive adjustments should be required as to both interest and claims for injuries and damages to the end that TVA shall reflect in its accounts such costs for the prior years as additional capital invested by the United States Government. (It is understood that that portion applicable to construction would be added to the cost of property, plant, and equipment and made the subject of annual depreciation charges.)

The Tennessee Valley Authority Act states it to be the policy of Congress that in order, as soon as practicable, to make the power projects self-supporting and self-liquidating, "the surplus power shall be sold at rates which, in the opinion of the Board, when applied to the normal capacity of the Authority's power facilities, will produce gross revenues in excess of the cost of production of said power."

An enterprise is self-supporting only when its revenues at least equal the sum of the costs properly chargeable against its revenues. It is self-liquidating when its revenues are sufficient not only to cover its costs but also to afford repayment of its capital. It is believed that the Authority's revenues for the year ended June 30, 1945, were in excess of the sum of all its costs, including those costs which we have recommended be required by law to be taken into account. It appears, therefore, that the power rates for the year ended June 30, 1945, produced "gross revenues in excess of the cost of production of said power." However, we cannot say this positively, and there can be no consistent showing of whether TVA is self-supporting and self-liquidating unless and until every element of cost is recorded on its books and shown in its financial statements.

6. Non-income-producing and developmental activities showed the following costs for the year ended June 30, 1945, based on a method of accounting similar to that used for power operations:

Navigation	$2,114,981
Flood control	1,408,756
Chemical division, after deducting research and development expenses of $1,355,146	859,373
Other development activities:
Agricultural resources	2,839,487
Forest resources	451,078
Mineral resources	339,180
Other resources	178,398
Other development activities	285,684
Administrative and general expenses therein	760,148
Total	4,853,975
	9,237,084

7. TVA is required to deposit annually into the general fund of the Treasury—as distinguished from the Authority's funds in the Treasury—the net proceeds from power sales and other sources under section 26 of the act. The TVA Board determined that for the year ended June 30, 1945, a payment was due for the first time under this section; it determined that the sum of $12,597,744 was so payable. This determination was consistent with prior interpretations of the Authority, apparently acquiesced in by the Congress, and, as indicated on page 51, has had the approval of the House Appropriations Committee. The amount payable to the Treasury under section 26, pursuant to such interpretations, is not subject to conclusive, independent-audit verification. The effect of such interpretations is to avoid an effective basis for assuring return of the Government's investment in power facilities and, in turn, to avoid control by the Congress over capital expenditures for power facilities financed by revenues withheld by TVA. The interpretations of the TVA Board and our comments are presented fully on pages 50 to 54. The result of our consideration of section 26 and of the problems of legislative and executive control of the Authority's affairs indicates that section 26 is inadequate as a means of assuring ultimate liquidation of the Government's investment in the Authority's power operations and that some of the controls to which the Authority is subject are too restrictive, while others are inadequate or are inappropriate to the nature of some of the Authority's most important activities. These defects should be corrected, and as means of correction we recommend that section 26 be repealed and the following be adopted as an integrated plan to reserve to the Congress complete and effective control over the Authority's programs, provide definitely for the return to the Government of its capital investment with interest, and yet leave to the Authority all necessary flexibility for its authorized business operations:

(a) That the over-all capital requirements of the Authority as it is now constituted be determined and formalized.

(b) That future capital needs of the Authority from the United States Treasury be financed by appropriating funds for subscriptions to capital by the Treasury. (Recommendation (g), which contemplates discontinuance of the making of direct appropriations for capital needs, is a concomitant of this recommendation. The Government Corporation Control Act gives Congress sufficient control over expenditures to obviate the necessity for using direct appropriations as a means of controlling capital outlays. Under this act the Authority's annual intentions are required to be submitted to legislative review, and its expenditures are independently checked by the General Accounting Office for Congress against the budget plan authorized by Congress. The Congress has ample opportunity under the Government Corporation Control Act to control over-all policies, the adoption or alteration of programs, and the authorization of major construction projects to implement these policies, independently of appropriation procedure. It is sufficient, therefore, to provide money for capital outlays by authorizing subscriptions to capital to be used therefor. Moreover, this deals with the matter at the level at which it should be dealt with, recognizes the corporate nature of the activities involved, and in other respects puts the authorization of these activities on a more appropriate basis.)

(c) That the Authority have the power to borrow only temporarily from the United States Treasury within limits established by the Congress at current interest costs, and that it not have authority to borrow either temporarily or on a long-term basis from any other source.

(d) That the Authority determine and show separately on its books that portion of its capital derived from appropriated funds and invested in power facilities or otherwise used in the power activity. (This is a necessary prerequisite to implementation of the announced intention of Congress that the power projects of the Authority be made self-liquidating. Implementation of this intention is proposed in recommendation (e).)

(e) That a definite plan for the repayment of the appropriated funds invested or otherwise used in the power activity and the payment of interest on this capital at a definite rate be provided for by law. (This action should be related to repeal of section 26 and is proposed as a more satisfactory and definite arrangement for repayment of the Government's investment in power facilities. The management of TVA is engaged in a study of this matter and is expected to make recommendations concerning it shortly.)

(f) That the net income from power operations, after deduction of all costs of these operations, be carried to an earned surplus account.

(g) That the practice of making direct appropriations for the construction of dams, reservoirs, and other power facilities not taken care of under sections 12 and 26, and for machinery, equipment, and other commercial facilities, be discontinued.

(h) That the act be amended to permit the Authority to use temporarily any of its unappropriated funds and, if necessary, its borrowing power to finance extensions of its existing commercial facilities that the Authority's Board of Directors deem necessary to proper discharge of the authority's commercial obligations and responsibilities. (The management of the Authority must have this power in order to meet the requirements for prompt action that arise almost daily in the commercial undertakings for which it is responsible. Managers of similar private commercial undertakings commonly have such power, and it should be unhesitatingly given here. Possession of it by the managers of the Authority would promote efficiency and thus be advantageous to the Government. Note that the extension of authority contemplated by this recommendation is meant to apply only to expenditures made pursuant to actions already taken by Congress by budget adoptions or otherwise.)

(i) That separate appropriations be made for the operating expenses of the Authority's navigation, flood control, and other essentially or entirely nonincome-producing developmental programs. (This recommendation is made on the theory that Congress alone should determine how much should be spent for programs and activities that are primarily matters of spending; that there is danger that this prerogative will be invaded when appropriations for such programs and activities are lumped; and that the best way to avoid this danger and leave no doubt is to establish definite limitations through the medium of specific appropriations. This recommendation would strengthen legislative control over expenditures that are required to be financed from the United States Treasury.)

(j) That the Authority be permitted to combine under one depository account all of its funds from whatever source derived, in the same manner as corporations generally, governmental as well as private. (It is not necessary to separate money according to the purposes for which it is provided in order to safeguard or control the application of it. To do so merely creates a difficult and unnecessarily costly accounting situation. Money can be safeguarded in one account as well as in several, and its application can be determined by commercial-type accounting procedures; that is, by classifying and allocating expenditures by programs or activities which are the subject of control. Reasonably satisfactory procedures as to this already have been developed by TVA, and the expenditures determined on this basis are satisfactorily auditable annually by the General Accounting Office under the Government Corporation Control Act; therefore, the present requirements that call for much complex cash accounting are superfluous and unjustifiably expensive.)

(k) That the act of November 21, 1941, 55 Stat. 775, containing the requirement that the Authority render accounts to the General Accounting Office under the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921, be repealed. (Auditing of the Authority's affairs as now required by the Government Corporation Control Act is adequate and renders such rendition of accounts unnecessary.)

These recommendations are discussed at greater length on pages 43 to 49. They have as their purposes, and the adoption of them would afford: The establishment of a definite plan of financing TVA consistent with its corporate status and its functions; budgetary presentation of the financial requirements of the Authority in a manner that will afford Congress opportunity for firmer control of the Authority's programs and policies; tightening of congressional control of those activities of the Authority that primarily involve only the expenditure of funds; full use of the means of fiscal control that are contemplated by the Government Corporation Control Act; desirable limitation upon, and equally desirable extension of the use of, the Authority's borrowing powers; fully informative accounting for the Government's investment in and earnings from the Authority's power operations; a definite plan for the payment of interest on, and the liquidation of the Government's investment in, the Authority's power operations, as contemplated by the TVA Act; freeing of the management of the Authority from unnecessary and hampering restrictions; and elimination of unnecessary accounting requirements.

8. In our opinion, TVA's accounts generally are well conceived, supervised, and maintained, and the Authority is to be commended as one of the foremost Government corporations in the use of accounting in management, comparing quite favorably in this respect with well-managed private corporations.

9. Insofar as we are qualified to make general observations regarding the character of the management of TVA, and insofar as covered within the scope of our audit, we believe that the management is entitled to the highest commendation for the effectiveness with which the Authority functions and for its accomplishments in carrying out the objectives of the TVA Act. However, we reserve the privilege of commenting in future reports, after further study, upon navigation, fertilizer, and other developmental operations. The accounting recommendations made in this report are not intended as a criticism of the management with respect to the manner in which they have discharged their broad responsibilities, and may not be so construed.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, the unfinished business before the Senate is the proposed sugar legislation, and there is an amendment pending which takes prior consideration. My purpose in rising, in behalf of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and myself, who I know shares my views in this matter, is to point out to the distinguished Members of this body, in connection with the pending sugar legislation, that the sugar controls will expire next Monday. There has been 1 day of debate on the bill, interrupted by several extraneous matters, which certainly were brought up in all good faith.

I am now going to make an appeal to my colleagues in the Senate that this day, after the one exception I shall speak of in a minute, Senators refrain from introducing other matters during the consideration of the sugar legislation, for this prime reason: Time is of the essence, as I said yesterday. After the joint resolution shall be passed in the Senate it must go to conference between the two bodies; it must then be engrossed and go to the President for signature, or there will be chaos and rampant disorder in connection with sugar next Monday.

We will proceed with the consideration of the proposed sugar legislation soon, I hope, and I should like to make the request of the distinguished acting majority leader that if we do not finish consideration of the joint resolution by 6 o'clock today he will hold the Senate tonight until we do complete action on the legislation. It is important.

The distinguished Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT] came to me this morning in amity and stated that he also had an important measure, proposing to extend a law which will expire on March 31, which he desired to have taken up, and of course I yielded. There may be a dispute arise over it, and if so, the Senator has made me a very fair promise that he will then withdraw his matter so that we may again take up the sugar legislation.

So I make this appeal in good faith. It is important to enact the sugar legislation. It is not a personal matter with me; I think it is the concern of the Senate; it is a matter affecting the American people. I submit my case to the Senate's sense of fairness.

Mr. WHERRY. The distinguished Senator from New Hampshire has made an observation I was about to make, and he has made it much better than I could have done. However, I should like to have the Senate know that we would like to finish the pending sugar measure today. When its consideration is resumed, we shall go right on through and finish it, if that is possible.

Mr. BARKLEY. If the Senator from Nebraska will yield, I wish to associate myself in the remarks of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] as well as the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. The matter that is in a moment to be taken up is somewhat in the same category with the sugar legislation, because of the expiration of the law on the 31st of March, and I hope we may promptly dispose of the matter the Senator from Wisconsin will bring forward, and then promptly dispose of the sugar legislation.

TERMINATION OF WAR POWERS AND CONTROLS UNDER SECOND WAR POWERS ACT

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. WILEY. I take the floor to ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that the Senate proceed to consider Senate bill 931 and dispose of it as quickly as possible.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 931) to extend certain powers of the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside and that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 931?

Mr. WHERRY. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the distinguished Senator a question. If the unanimous-consent agreement is made and the Senate proceeds with the bill referred to, is it the Senator's idea that it can be concluded within a reasonable length of time?

Mr. WILEY. I think so.

Mr. WHERRY. And if we find it cannot be concluded in a reasonable time, the consideration of the unfinished business now before the Senate may be resumed?

Mr. WILEY. Yes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair might state, for the information of the Senate, that at any time during the consideration of Senate bill 931 it would be in order for any Senator to ask for the regular order, at which time the Senate would recur to Senate Joint Resolution 58.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 931) to extend certain powers of the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That this act shall be cited as the First Decontrol Act of 1947.

SEC. 2. The Congress hereby declares that it is vital to a free economy and full production in the United States that all emergency controls and war powers under the Second War Powers Act be removed except in certain limited instances.

The Congress further declares that in each such limited instance the authority for such emergency controls and war powers should not be exercised by the grant of broad, general war powers but should be granted by restrictive, specific legislation.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of liquidating existing emergency controls and war powers and for the purpose of affording further opportunity for the appropriate committees of the Congress to consider specific legislation granting restricted authority in limited instances, title III of the Second War Powers Act, as amended, shall (except as provided in S. J. Res. 58 and H. J. Res. 118, 80th Cong., 1st sess.) remain in effect only until June 30, 1947: Provided, That any material or facilities which were not being allocated by the President on March 24, 1947, shall not be allocated hereafter under the provisions of such title III.

Mr. WILEY. I think if I read section 3 of the bill every Senator will very quickly understand the meat of the matter which we are now considering. Section 3 reads:

For the purpose of liquidating existing emergency controls and war powers and for the purpose of affording further opportunity for the appropriate committees of the Congress to consider specific legislation granting restricted authority in limited instances, title III of the Second War Powers Act, as amended, shall (except as provided in S. J. Res. 58 and H. J. Res. 118, 80th Cong., 1st sess.)—

By the way, I interpolate, those are the rubber and sugar resolutions, one of which has passed, the other of which is being considered—remain in effect only until June 30, 1947: Provided, That any material or facilities which were not being allocated by the President on March 24, 1947, shall not be allocated hereafter under the provisions of such title III.

It will be remembered that the President of the United States, on March 14, as I recall the date, submitted a request for an extension of titles I, III, and V of the Second War Powers Act. It was then, after that request, that we were able in our committees for the first time to learn from the various departments the real reasons or the real need for a continuation of these war powers. Because of the President's message, although there was no bill before us, the Committee on the Judiciary held several sessions with the result as set forth in section 3.

At this time I ask that there be inserted in the RECORD an explanation, as set forth in the report of the committee which was filed on the 24th day of March. I refer especially to part II, beginning on page 3, and terminating on page 5. I ask that that be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the explanation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

II. RÉSUMÉ OF PRINCIPAL CONTROLS CURRENTLY IN FORCE

A. UNDER TITLE I.—EMERGENCY POWERS OF THE INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION OVER MOTOR AND WATER CARRIERS

The only control power under title I for whose continuance extensive testimony was submitted was that control currently in force to provide transportation services presently furnished by Capital Transit Co. to the Pentagon Building and vicinity under temporary orders from the Interstate Commerce Commission.

B. UNDER TITLE III.—PRIORITIES AND ALLOCATION POWERS

Of the thousands of orders which have at one time or another been issued under title III of the Second War Powers Act only a relatively small number of general orders remain in effect. A sketch of the chief provisions of the principal remaining orders, grouped by subjects, is as follows:

C. TITLE V.—WAIVER OF NAVIGATION AND INSPECTION LAWS

The waivers under this title are largely on an individual vessel basis. At present such waivers are in effect with reference to a number of vessels including both Government and privately operated. These waivers relate not only to safety and inspection requirements but also relate to crews.

Mr. WILEY. At one time, under the War Powers Act, more than a thousand orders were outstanding, but my understanding is at this time there are only some 21.

On June 30 the Export-Import Control Act expires unless continued, and it is the judgment of the committee that the President's request and the Export-Import Act should be considered together, and that between now and June 30 we should have the complete answer as to which of these controls should be continued for a longer time.

That in substance is the issue before the Senate. It has been stated dramatically by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] in relation to sugar. I personally feel that if this action is not taken and there should be a hiatus between the 30th of March and the time when we could get a bill passed, the consequences might be serious. I understand, a few nights ago, the President pro tempore of the Senate [Mr. VANDENBERG], the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], and several of the distinguished Members of the House were called to confer with the President. I may say that we had favorably reported our bill before that conversation took place. While I have not talked with any of these gentlemen, I am informed that the chief concern of the President was that there would be such a hiatus. In that respect, we agreed with the President.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President——

Mr. WILEY. I will yield in a moment. Up to the time of that message, however, we received no cooperation from the executive department in relation to giving us information.

At this time I ask that there be printed in the RECORD that portion of the report of the Committee on the Judiciary beginning on page 2 and extending down to "II" on page 3.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the excerpt will be printed in the RECORD.

The excerpt is as follows:

I. STUDY AND HEARING

TWOFOLD NATURE OF PROBLEM

The subject of war controls as they have been considered by the Senate Committee on the Judiciary may be divided into two categories:

(1) The most immediate problem and the subject of this report relates to the extensions proposed in the Presidential message dated January 31, 1947, requesting a 1-year extension to March 31, 1948, for titles I and V and for title III for limited purposes of the Second War Powers Act.

(2) The much broader and only slightly less immediate problem relating to all other emergency and wartime controls which (in addition to second war powers controls) come within the purview of Senate Resolution 35. This broader problem is not directly involved in this report.

HEARINGS

Pursuant to the Presidential message dated January 31, 1947, and pursuant also to the provisions of Senate Resolution 35, a subcommittee consisting of Senator WILEY, chairman, and Senator KILGORE, conducted hearings of Government witnesses on Friday, March 7, and Saturday, March 8, 1947, and further conducted hearings of nongovernmental witnesses on Tuesday, March 11, 1947.

STUDIES PRECEDING HEARINGS

Following is an approximate chronology and substantial résumé of the studies preceding the hearings:

On November 29, 1946, the present chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary addressed letters to members of the Cabinet and to the Veterans' Administration stating his belief that termination of wartime and emergency controls would be high on the agenda of the committee and asking for statements of opinion from these offices as to (a) which wartime and emergency powers currently applied to his department or office, (b) which powers could be terminated and why and when, and (c) which powers could not be terminated and how long those powers should remain in force.

Replies to these letters contained or transmitted lists of laws and authorities in answer to (a). None contained complete answers to (b) and (c)—all stating in effect that information pertinent to (b) and (c) had been transmitted or would be transmitted to the President for study and correlation by Dr. John R. Steelman, assistant to the President, and the Attorney General.

By letter dated December 17, 1946, the present chairman called this situation to the attention of the President, asking that the requested information be furnished because of its importance to the formulation of recommendations to the majority conference scheduled for December 30.

By letter dated December 27 the Chief Executive replied in effect that he had directed the Cabinet officers to answer the first question (a): That a complete survey was being made; that the conclusion must be on an over-all basis; not on a departmental basis; and that information would be furnished to Congress as soon as available.

On January 8, 1947, the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary submitted Senate Document No. 5 to the Senate and introduced Senate Resolution 35 directing the standing committees to make full and complete studies of all existing temporary and permanent wartime legislation and to make recommendations to the Committee on the Judiciary not later than March 15, 1947. The resolution was agreed to on January 29, 1947.

By letters dated January 30, 1947, attention of the various chairmen of the standing committees was directed to Senate Resolution 35 and the required studies.

By letter dated February 8, 1947, following the Presidential message to the Congress dated January 31, 1947, requesting the extension of titles I and V and title III (for limited purposes) of the Second War Powers Act, the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary again sought the cooperation of the Chief Executive and requested specifically that the President direct the various departments to present justifications for continuation of any specific wartime and emergency authorities deemed absolutely essential.

No substantial information was forthcoming, however, until Tuesday, March 4, 1947, when Mr. Harold Stein, Commissioner of War Mobilization and Reconversion, and Mr. Aaron Lewittes, counsel to Dr. John R. Steelman, and Mr. George T. Washington, Assistant Solicitor General of the Department of Justice, meeting with the chairman of the Senate Committee on the Judiciary and with representatives from the Committees on Armed Services, Banking and Currency, and Interstate and Foreign Commerce, gave assurances that Government witnesses would be available on Friday, March 7, 1947, to present evidence supporting the Presidential request of January 31, 1947.

It is felt that the chronology outlined above clearly indicates delay on the part of the executive department in supplying data and justification evidence to the committee.

In connection with committee consideration of the Second War Powers Act terminations, it should be noted that the Committee on the Judiciary has had the benefit of consultation with the three standing commitees of the Senate involved in the three pertinent titles. These three committees are Armed Services, Banking and Currency, and Inerstate and Foreign Commerce.

In connection with any further report from the Committee on the Judiciary with reference to all other emergency and wartime controls as studied under the terms of Senate Resolution 35, the committee will utilize the reports made by all of the standing committees of the Senate.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. ELLENDER. Do I understand correctly, that should the Senate enact the pending measure it would mean that the allocation and rationing authority would expire on the same day that the Price Control Act expires, that is, June 30?

Mr. WILEY. Yes; and also the export-import control would expire on that day.

Mr. ELLENDER. So that in the event the Senate should enact this legislation all controls over and rationing of sugar would remain in effect until at least June 30?

Mr. WILEY. The pending bill especially excepts sugar. There is a special measure before the Senate dealing with sugar. We have taken sugar out of this measure because of the conflict which otherwise would exist with respect to that subject.

Mr. ELLENDER. I see. I was not aware of such a provision. Would it not be a good idea not to exempt sugar so that in the event Congress should fail to pass sugar legislation by March 31 both the Price Control Act and the Allocation and Rationing Act would expire on June 30?

Mr. WILEY. I might say that my personal answer to that question would be yes. But because of the conflict between the two measures now before the Senate we felt we should resolve all fields of conflict outside this particular proposed extension, so we could get this particular extension passed by the Senate, because it covers the entire field except sugar.

Mr. BARKLEY. And rubber.

Mr. WILEY. A measure relating to rubber has already been passed by the Senate.

Mr. BARKLEY. The object of this temporary extension of 3 months is to enable the Congress to consider to what extent, if at all, there should be any extension beyond June 30 of control over the items which are now under control.

Mr. WILEY. The Senator states the situation perfectly.

Mr. BARKLEY. The President, as we know, has been releasing controls over various commodities as fast as he felt was justified under the circumstances, but there are a few upon which controls must be retained for a while in order that Congress may further examine the question, and not be obliged to act separately on each one of them, as we have done with respect to rubber and are now about to do with respect to sugar. So the measure before us would give Congress a 3-month period in which to determine what shall be done hereafter with respect to all items now under control.

Mr. WILEY. That is exactly the situation existing. I thank the Senator from Kentucky.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment to Senate bill 931.

The amendment was agreed to.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill (S. 931) was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXTENSION OF SUGAR CONTROLS

The Senate resumed the consideration of the resolution (S. J. Res. 58) to extend the powers and authorities under certain statutes with respect to the distribution and pricing of sugar, and for other purposes.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] to the first committee amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the Chair has stated that the pending question is on the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] to the first committee amendment. The amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is to the committee amendment on page 2, line 20, and proposes at that point to insert a colon before the period and the following: "And provided further, That refined sugar shall be allocated for home consumption at a rate of not less than 35 pounds per capita per calendar year, and any increase in the amount of sugar available for allocation in the calendar year 1947 over the amount recommended by the International Emergency Food Council for allocation to the United States for 1947 shall be allocated for home consumption until the allocation for such use equals 50 pounds of refined sugar per capita."

Mr. President, I should like to say for the benefit of the Members of the Senate that as the Committee on Banking and Currency reported the joint resolution it did not contain the provision which the Senator from New Hampshire now proposes to insert in it. It was only after there had been considerable discussion and urging on the part of many Members of the Senate that the amount of the allocation of sugar to the housewife or to the individual be equalized, that the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire apparently then became receptive to incorporating in the joint resolution an amendment which would accomplish the purpose sought by many Senators who had asked for such equalization, by adding to the amount to be allocated to housewives, on the theory that during the past month the housewife had been discriminated against.

We were told in the beginning that it was impossible to do this because the Department did not feel that there was sufficient sugar for that purpose. At that time the Department did not know enough about the Cuban crop, it did not know exactly what the production would be, and did not know exactly what the allocations would be. But since the hearings have been held and since there has been a reexamination of the figures, which are much more encouraging, indicating, for example, an increase in Cuban production, and also the availability of nearly 600,000 tons which the Department did not count on from Cuba, if I remember correctly the figures given by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY], a member of the subcommittee, there seems to be now a disposition on the part of the Department of Agriculture and those in charge of the legislation to agree that it is possible to do the first thing provided by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire in his amendment, and that is to make a firm commitment of 35 pounds to the individual. I wish to compliment the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire on what he has provided in that respect, because that is exactly what the amendment I am about to offer does, except that I want to go further than the Senator does in the matter of allocation.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I think it would be helpful to us at this time in the discussion if the able Senator were to state the amount of sugar per capita that is being received for domestic use at this time.

Mr. WHERRY. At this time the housewife is being allocated 35 pounds per annum, or rather the individual is being allocated 35 pounds per annum. That, however, is not mandatory. It is under a directive issued by the Department of Agriculture. The amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire would make it mandatory that the individual should receive 35 pounds per annum.

Mr. REVERCOMB. For the sake of clarity, will the able Senator state the amount received per capita during the year 1946?

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. I may say to the distinguished Senator from West Virginia that for the year 1946 the housekeeper or the individual received a total of 25 pounds, 15 pounds for each allotment across the board for any use the individual wanted to put it to, and 10 pounds which were earmarked for canning purposes, making a total of 25 pounds. But I point out, as the Senator doubtless realizes, that many individuals did not use the 10 pounds for canning purposes, but took the 10 pounds for general use.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Many individuals did not make use of the sugar for canning purposes. Did such individuals receive 15 or 25 pounds in the year 1946, that is, was each individual entitled to receive that amount?

Mr. TOBEY. The individual received 25 pounds all in all.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The proposal now before the Senate is that a guarantee be made of 10 pounds more for each individual?

Mr. TOBEY. The proposal is to guarantee 35 pounds to each individual, or a 40 percent increase.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Which would mean 10 pounds more for each individual for 1947?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I thank the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. I believe it is generally understood that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] and myself, who were members of the subcommittee studying the sugar situation, at the conclusion of the hearings were firmly convinced, and still are firmly convinced, that we have more than enough sugar and that therefore sugar can immediately be decontrolled. I assume it is also understood that the question of rationing or derationing has nothing whatsoever to do with the world allocation program. That would in no way interfere with that program.

However, we have been prevailed upon—at least I have been; I am not sure about my colleague from Ohio—to consider a compromise in the nature of ending allocations as of October 31 of this year, on condition that the housewife get her fair share of the sugar allotment. I took the question up with the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and suggested that there be added to the joint resolution a provision giving the housewife an additional 10 pounds of sugar during the canning season. The present plan is to give her 10 pounds on July 1. I suggested to the Senator from Vermont that there was sufficient sugar available to give her 20 pounds during that period. He has rejected that suggestion.

The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has offered an amendment which I think is completely meaningless—I shall go into that question later—and completely deceptive so far as the housewife is concerned.

Within the past 10 minutes I have received word from the Department of Agriculture that they have gone over the figures which we have been submitting, and now wish to discuss with us the possibility of agreeing to make available to the housewife during the third quarter—that is, during the canning season—a total allotment of 20 pounds of sugar, to be made available half during the first part of the third quarter and half at some other point in the third quarter.

Frankly, I feel that if we could do that, if we could add an additional 10 pounds to the canning sugar ration, personally I would have no objection to extending the controls to October 31, although I can see no reason for it.

I should like to give the figures. I shall not object to being questioned in detail as to the figures. I feel that this is entirely a question of figures. Either we have sufficient sugar to do away with rationing, or we have not. It is a matter of tons.

Originally the Department of Agriculture estimated the Cuban sugar production at 5,000,000 tons for the current year. That figure was later revised upward to five and a half million tons. The rationing program was based upon an assumed Cuban sugar production of five and a half million tons. However, we now have the final figures, and they no longer represent an estimate. As we all know, the harvesting of the Cuban sugar crop commences in January. It ends some time in May or early June. So any figures as to that production are now no longer an estimate. They represent an actual counting of noses.

There has been completed within the past few days a survey of 97 percent of the Cuban sugar producers. The new estimate of the Cuban crop is 6,137,000 tons. I should like to have Senators bear that figure in mind. We have a contract with Cuba, the contents of which seem to be not a matter of general knowledge. I have taken the trouble to go over it very thoroughly. This contract provides that we shall obtain a large percentage of the Cuban sugar crop. The Commodity Credit Corporation has purchased America's quota of the Cuban crop for 1946 and 1947. We shall get all the 1947 crop, less 350,000 short tons for local consumption, and less 300,000 tons for what is referred to as "export free." Ordinarily the 300,000 tons of "export free" sugar would go to Latin America. I am taking the figures of Mr. Marshall, who will be in charge of the sugar-rationing program if and when it is turned over to the Department of Agriculture. He tells us that this year there is a surplus of sugar in the Argentine; there is a surplus of sugar in Peru; and there is a surplus of sugar in Brazil. So it follows, as night follows day, that a part of the 300,000 tons "export free" sugar will be available to us. But even assuming that it is not, let us see how much sugar we can get from Cuba.

Let me make a correction. I stated that we would get all of the Cuban sugar crop, less 350,000 short tons for local consumption and less 300,000 tons for what is referred to as "export free." In addition there has been allocated to foreign nations a total of 1,600,000 tons. This is, roughly, 600,000 tons more than the foreign nations got before the war, but it is made necessary because of the shortage of sugar in other producing areas. So we get all the Cuban crop except a total of 2,250,000 tons.

Coming back to our figures, the original estimate, based upon the estimates which were made at the time when we did not know how much sugar we would get from Cuba, and upon which the Department of Agriculture and the OPA planned their rationing program—and we cannot blame them for it, because that was the best estimate they had at that time—was that we would get 3,146,000 tons of sugar from Cuba. However, taking the revised figures representing the amount of available sugar in Cuba, that figure now goes up to 3,387,000 tons, which gives us an additional 741,000 tons of sugar.

Mr. Marshall takes the position that we should not decontrol. So we cannot very well question his figures when he estimates an additional tonnage. He tells us that Hawaii will give us an extra 50,000 tons over what we originally estimated. So that will give us 791,000 tons of sugar upon which we had not counted.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, perhaps the Senator has already stated it, but if so, I did not hear him. How many tons of sugar would be required to provide an increase of 5 pounds for each individual in the United States?

Mr. McCARTHY. Between 600,000 and 700,000 tons.

Mr. WHERRY. For 5 pounds?

Mr. McCARTHY. No; for 10 pounds.

Mr. WHERRY. How much would be required for 5 pounds?

Mr. McCARTHY. About half that amount.

Mr. WHERRY. How much is that?

Mr. McCARTHY. Approximately 300,000 tons.

Mr. WHERRY. That is, provided they all take the sugar.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. Has the Senator any idea how many persons might not take the sugar made available by such an increase?

Mr. McCARTHY. All I can say is that the average prewar consumption of sugar—I do not refer to total consumption, but to the granulated sugar which the housewife buys—was slightly more than 50 pounds a person. Again, that figure is deceptive in that the housewife in the lower-income group, the woman with a family of four, five, six, or seven children, ordinarily does her own canning and preserving of fruit. She uses far more than 50 pounds. The housewife in the higher-income group, who does not do her own preserving of fruits and vegetables, uses much less. I could not make a guess. I know that many farm women use 100 pounds of sugar during the canning season. My mother, who had seven children, used to get 100 pounds of sugar to put up her fruits and berries. Undoubtedly many housewives in the upper-income brackets would not take the additional 5 or 10 pounds of sugar. I hope they would know some woman on a farm or in the lower-income group to whom to give the sugar.

This one figure gives us nearly 800,000 tons of sugar. I am proposing a 10-pound increase, and I believe the Agriculture Department will go along with me. We have the figures to show that the sugar is available.

Mr. WHERRY. If there is an increase of 5 pounds per individual, or 10 pounds——

Mr. McCARTHY. Let us talk about 10 pounds.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator's point is that not all individuals will consume that increase.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think there is no question about it. At present some of the women in the higher income group do not use their full quota. I talked with some ladies in the Press Gallery, and they say they have plenty of sugar. They do not do their own canning and preserving. I presume that is true of one or two million families.

Let me point out this further fact in connection with the question of surplus sugar. At the beginning of this year, using round figures, we had a stock pile or inventory—call it what we may—of 1,400,000 tons of sugar. It is proposed that we ration 6,800,000 tons, based on a Cuban production of 5,500,000 tons, and that we add to our stock pile half a million tons of sugar, so that at the end of the year, instead of having a stock pile of 1,400,000 tons, we shall have built the stock pile up to 1,900,000 tons. So we have the fantastic picture of attempting during a period of scarcity to increase the stock pile by half a million tons.

Let me quote briefly from the hearings——

Mr. WHERRY. Let me propound a question to the Senator while he is looking up his reference. The Senator was a member of the subcommittee and heard the testimony. What evidence was submitted that we need an addition of 500,000 tons to the stock pile?

Mr. McCARTHY. The reasons given were varied. Mr. Marshall appeared before the subcommittee. As bearing upon the Senator's question, I propounded this question to him:

Just one further question: Mr. Marshall, in view of the world food shortage, in view of the apparently undisputed fact that unless the milk processors get more sugar there will be a great waste of food, namely, milk, would you not think it might be wise, even if you continue rationing, instead of building up the stock pile in the United States by 500,000 tons during the current year, that you take at least a part of that 500,000 tons and allocate that to the milk processors?

That is the question which I propounded to Mr. Marshall.

He did not agree to that. However, the next day Mr. Anderson said they would use part of the 500,000 tons for milk processors to prevent milk from being wasted.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me finish my answer first.

There were a number of excuses given. One of the gentlemen said that the reason we had to build up the stock pile was to bring it up to normal; that, regardless of whether we were in a period of scarcity or of plenty, there should be an increase in order to maintain a normal stock pile.

Another gentleman—all of them were opposing derationing or decontrol—said that unless we had a stock pile of 1,900,000 tons some hardship would be entailed in moving sugar from the west coast to the east coast. At that time the statement was made that the 1947 beet crop would not be available for consumption until 1948.

In making that statement that gentleman did not check the Department's own records.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, the Senator is getting away from the point on which I wanted to question him.

Mr. McCARTHY. I shall not yield to the Senator until I finish my answer.

I have in the pile of material before me some charts issued by the Department of Commerce in which they show that, beginning in February, Cuban sugar is not available to the refineries but is available to the consuming public on a fairly even scale from February until late in August. The charts also show that the beet crop, starting in the West and slowly rolling eastward, becomes available before the first of the year, and that the low point of availability of sugar is some time in September. I understand that the low point in consumption is after the canning season has ended.

I now yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Vermont to ask a question of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me apologize to the Senator from Nebraska for taking his time. I forgot that he had the floor.

Mr. FLANDERS. The Senator from Wisconsin has raised questions so fast that I am having difficulty in keeping up with him. I should like, first, to refer to the 500,000 tons which has been spoken of as being added to the stock pile of the United States this year. That is not the plan of the Department of Agriculture and the OPA. As was repeatedly stated, the Department's figure for additions to stock this year is 458,000 tons, the difference between the anticipated stock of 1,900,000 tons on January 1, 1948, and the 1,440,000 tons which existed on January 1, 1947.

This increase in stock is largely the automatic result of the large beet-sugar crop which is expected this fall. The beet-sugar crop of 1947 will begin to reach the market in late 1947. Only a small portion of this year's crop can be marketed during the last 3 months of the year.

I merely want to indicate, in regard to the first question, that there is an automatic increase due to beet sugar.

On the various points on which I am at issue with the Senator from Wisconsin, I wish to say that we cannot deal cavalierly with the question of sugar stocks. Figures regarding the Cuban crop, the receipts, the amounts——

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I sat here for 4 hours yesterday while the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] held the floor on this subject. I do not object to being asked questions, but I do not think the Senator should make a speech at this time. I do not mind being questioned thoroughly on anything I say, but I would prefer that the Senator not make a speech until I have concluded.

Mr. FLANDERS. I was under the impression, after listening to the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin, that he was not present during the remarks made yesterday.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] has the floor.

Mr. DONNELL. So I understood.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President——

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire in order that he may ask a question.

Mr. TOBEY. Did I correctly understand the Senator in the course of his remarks to make the statement that he had talked with representatives of the Department of Agriculture and that they had agreed that ten additional pounds of sugar could be allotted to housewives?

Mr. McCARTHY. The assistant to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] stated that the gentlemen from the Agricultural Department wanted to discuss this matter with us and talk about the possibility of allocating 20 pounds instead of 10 pounds during the third quarter, which is the canning season, on the basis of giving part of it at the beginning of the period and part later during that period.

Mr. TOBEY. Was it the understanding of the Senator from Wisconsin with reference to increasing the allotment for the calendar year from 35 pounds to 45 pounds, or did he mean merely to speed up and give 10 pounds of the 35 pounds to housewives to be used at canning time, continuing the total allottment at 35 pounds?

Mr. McCARTHY. In view of the fact that I feel confident that sugar rationing will not be extended beyond October 31, I frankly do not care what anyone has in mind for any period beyond October 31.

Mr. TOBEY. No; but let me point out that a few minutes ago the Senator stated, as I think the RECORD will show, that he talked to the Department of Agriculture and they advised him that they could give 10 pounds more sugar this year.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, the gentleman from the Department will be here shortly.

Mr. TOBEY. That is not the question. I ask the Senator whether he said that or whether he did not say it?

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to let me finish.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Wisconsin is not answering the question. He is dodging it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to let me finish. The gentleman from the Department will be here shortly. What I have stated is the word I have received; namely, that they can give the 20 pounds which I mentioned. I shall be glad to have the Senator from New Hampshire sit down with us when the gentleman comes, and I shall be glad to ask him a further question.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to wait a moment. He talks too fast.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, if the Department of Agriculture does agree with me on my findings that we can give the housewife an additional 10 pounds of sugar during the canning season, then I ask whether the Senator from New Hampshire will go along with that idea, or will he still insist that the industrial user get it?

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I will answer the Senator's statement now and forthrightly; here the answer comes: The Department of Agriculture's announced position was misrepresented by the Senator from Wisconsin today. Here is the answer which came from Secretary Anderson just 3 minutes ago, over the telephone, to me:

I authorize you to state that I have not, at any time, made a statement that we can give more sugar for home consumption now.

What I did tell Senator McCARTHY was simply that we were happy that we could now allot 10 pounds per person for home consumption over and above what we gave them last year.

I stand unqualifiedly behind the 35 pounds, and there is no more sugar available for home consumption. But I support your amendment that if any more does come across the horizon, we will allocate it to the housewives.

That is Secretary Anderson's statement, and it refutes the statement which has been made by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. Then, Mr. President, let me say that in view of the unquestioned figures, I do not give a tinker's dam what Secretary Anderson says about the matter. The sugar is here.

Mr. TOBEY. But he has said the sugar is not available. That is his own statement. Yet the Senator from Wisconsin, putting himself in a higher orbit, above Secretary Anderson, the Secretary of Agriculture, says the sugar is available. On a question of veracity, I would not choose between the two gentlemen, but on a question of fact, I take the Secretary of Agriculture any time.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, do I still have the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am glad to yield to the Senator for an observation.

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to point out to the Senator from New Hampshire that we sat through more than 2 weeks of hearings on this question. We heard all the available evidence. Mr. Anderson was not there.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. DONNELL. I desire to state that, as I understand the rule, a Senator who has the floor cannot yield save for questions. I now make the point of order that the recent debate has gone entirely too far, and that the Senator from Nebraska can yield only for a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Missouri is entirely correct in his interpretation of the rule. Under the latitude of debate, it is the practice of the Senate to permit substantial interruptions, but at any time a Senator wishes to call for the enforcement of the rule he is entitled to do so. The Chair is forced to rule that the Senator from Nebraska can yield only for a question.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin for a question.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, let me point out that I may be rather long-winded in answering the question, but I am answering it. If there is objection to this procedure, I should like to request the Senator from Nebraska to yield the floor to me.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me say to the Senator that in view of the fact that I have spent a great deal of time on this matter, I shall get all the figures at my fingertips. If the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] objects to having me take the floor in this manner, I should like to suggest, respectfully, that the Senator from Nebraska yield the floor to me.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall be glad to yield the floor when I conclude my statement. I cannot yield the floor at this time to the Senator from Wisconsin unless he is recognized. However, he can get the floor in his own right when I have concluded my statement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska is recognized for the moment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to continue and conclude my statement relative to the amendment which I hope to offer in the event the amendment now being considered, which has been offered by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], is defeated.

Let me explain the present parliamentary situation. The amendment which the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire has offered is an amendment in the second degree. It is impossible for a Senator to offer another amendment changing any of the provisions of his amendment, under those circumstances. Another amendment—one requiring the allotment of more pounds or requiring more firm commitments—can be made only if the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from New Hampshire is rejected.

I have been endeavoring to point out the difference between his amendment and the one which I propose to offer if his amendment is defeated. I hope it will be defeated; but I have tried to say as kindly as possible that in the first part of his amendment he is attempting in principle to do what I am attempting to do, but his amendment does not go as far as mine does. In other words, the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], the chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, who is speaking here for the Department of Agriculture, because he is receiving letters and telephone calls from the Department——

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, the Department of Agriculture is not my tutelary deity; but after all, the witnesses from the Department of Agriculture are the principal witnesses, and I am taking the position that they can be depended upon to tell the truth.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am not taking exception to the Senator's statement. But after consulting with the Department of Agriculture, as is evidenced by the letters which have been read into the RECORD and the observations which the Senator has made, based upon telephone calls—one of them made only 3 minutes ago—there seems to be considerable confusion in the Department of Agriculture and the Committee on Banking and Currency as to what can be done in the way of a firm commitment.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. WHERRY. I ask the Senator to wait a moment.

Mr. President, further evidence is presented to us by the fact that when the bill was reported by the Banking and Currency Committee, it did not provide for the firm commitment which now is proposed by the amendment of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee, namely a commitment for 35 pounds. So in the last 3 or 4 days we have pried loose, apparently, an available sugar supply, as to which the Secretary of Agriculture now has advised us that we can give the housewife or the individual 35 pounds, although that was not provided for when the bill came from the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield first to the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, who first requested that I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator for his courtesy.

Mr. President, the distinction the Senator from Nebraska has made is a distinction without a difference. The point I affirm is that when the bill came from the Committee on Banking and Currency, as both the hearings and all the evidence will show, the intention was to give the 35 pounds. But I am one of those who like to have things ironclad, so I simply provided that the 35-pound allotment should be mandatory, that it should be a mandatory feature of the bill, instead of simply being based on the assurance of the Department. That is all.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; and we are not in disagreement as to that.

Mr. TOBEY. No; not at all.

Mr. WHERRY. Let me state in one sentence what the Senator's amendment does. His amendment now provides that for the individual, the firm commitment per annum will be 35 pounds. He also provides in his amendment that if there is any increase above the allocation allotted to the International Board—the I. E. C.—which amounts to 6,800,000 tons, the housewives shall have priority use to 50 pounds a person.

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct—which is the amount they had before the war.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. I think that is the amendment, fairly stated.

The amendment I intend to offer came about after a conference we had with the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire and the other members of the Banking and Currency Committee who submitted the majority report, as well as with the members of the committee who submitted minority views. The first commitment was simply that if there was an increase in the sugar supply, 35 pounds would be given. This amendment provides for a commitment of 35 pounds, for which we are hopeful.

The amendment I shall offer, if the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is defeated, provides for 40 pounds a person for the current year. That is an addition of 5 pounds per capita.

To be perfectly frank about it, there is no dispute that that will require approximately 375,000 tons, if all the individuals ask for the additional sugar that is allocated. However, that does not mean that the entire 375,000 tons will be used, because not all of them might ask for that much sugar, as has been ably explained by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin; and I think all of us will agree to that.

Mr. REVERCOMB rose.

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. If 375,000 tons, approximately, is required in order to provide for the additional 5 pounds per capita, let me ask the Senator what is to be done with the additional 700,000 tons which it has been discovered will be added to the sugar supply, but which was not known, as I understand, when the bill was reported by the committee?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall answer that question in the remarks I am about to make. My amendment has to do with that matter.

Mr. REVERCOMB. As I understand from the figures given by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] in his very able discussion showing a splendid knowledge of this subject and deep study of it, it has been discovered that we may receive an additional seven-hundred-thousand-odd tons of sugar which we did not know we would receive when the original bill came to the floor of the Senate. Is that correct?

Mr. WHERRY. That is the statement made by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY], and as a member of the subcommittee he had the evidence, and the figures as he interpreted them warrant that statement. That is not my statement. I am not familiar with the figures he presented.

Mr. REVERCOMB. The Senator from Nebraska says he wants to add 5 pounds, which will take up only three-hundred-and-some-odd thousand of the seven-hundred-thousand-odd. The question is, What is to be done with the remainder of the tonnage?

Mr. WHERRY. In answer to the question of the distinguished Senator, which is a very fair one, the last paragraph of the amendment I propose to offer, if the amendment of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire should be defeated, provides:

> In the event the quantity allocated to nonprovisional industrial users during the portion of the period from April 1, 1947, until the expiration of the allocation authority is increased above the base allocation of such users, the quantity herein required to be allocated for home consumption during such portion of such period shall be appropriately increased.

That is, the difference between what the firm commitment is and any increased quantity of sugar which may become available will be allocated proportionately to the housewives and the industrial users.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. In other words, the Senator provides a firm commitment, and then he adopts the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WHERRY. No, Mr. President, that is not my amendment. My amendment provides that if any allocations are made from any source of supply above that now estimated they must be made on a proportionate basis between the housewives and the industrial users.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator. I see the distinction.

Mr. LANGER. It would be in proportion?

Mr. WHERRY. If industry or any segment of industry is given an increase of, say, 5 percent, the same proportionate percentage of increase would have to be given to the housewife.

Mr. FERGUSON. What are we going to do about the fact that industry in the past has had 10 percent more than the housewife? Is it not time that at least this year, when the cost of living is high, the housewife should be permitted to have an increase? That is why I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska; but if we cannot obtain the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, I shall support the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. I think, however, that the proposal of the Senator from Nebraska is better from the standpoint of assuring additional sugar to the housewife for the coming year.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator for the observation.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from North Dakota was questioning me.

Mr. LANGER. I wanted to know if the proportionate division would come after the 10 percent.

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, yes; that is in addition to the firm commitment that has been made of the 35 pounds. If this amendment shall be agreed to, it would be above the 40 pounds.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will yield; I did not catch the suggestion of the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. What I have in mind is that if the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska cannot be adopted, I naturally favor the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. The only reason why I voted to table the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire yesterday was in order that the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska might be voted upon. My reason for the statement I made is that in the past, as the information comes to me, industry has received 10 percent more sugar, in proportion, than the housewife has received, and from what I learn from housewives, and others who do canning, when the cost of living is so high, they need the sugar. The time has come, in my opinion—it has been in the past, for that matter—when the housewife should be able to obtain sugar at least on an equal basis with industry, or, in proportion, more than industry, when we consider that some of the industries' use is certainly for the production of luxuries, compared with the actual use to which the housewife puts the sugar.

Mr. TOBEY. It seems to me the Senator is very much in favor of my amendment, without realizing it.

Mr. FERGUSON. I am in favor of the Senator's amendment providing we cannot get the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Nebraska would give 5 pounds more, making it mandatory, making it 40 instead of 35.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. TOBEY. My amendment is inclusive. If the sugar is not available, the Department cannot allot 5 pounds more, and they have said they cannot. Secretary Anderson said this morning they cannot. I point out the fact that my amendment makes it mandatory that if there appears on the horizon an increase in the allocation recommended by the international organization it is to be prorated among the housewives of the country, whether it be 5 pounds or 15 pounds. The ceiling is 50 pounds.

Mr. FERGUSON. If it were not for the word "if" in the amendment, there would not be so much difficulty. The Senator from Nebraska wants to give an additional amount to the housewife.

Mr. TOBEY. He wants to give it even though it is not available.

Mr. FERGUSON. He wants to take it away from the so-called industrial users, which I think should be done.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I am glad to yield for any question, but at least I should like to interpret my own amendment, and not have it misinterpreted.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair reminds the Senator that the Chair is under the compulsion of enforcing the rule strictly. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. TOBEY. My question is addressed to the two Senators jointly. Do the Senators from Michigan and Nebraska realize that there is in this country today a far larger number of businessmen engaged in businesses using sugar than we ever had before the war? Eight thousand veterans have come back and gone into industries which require the use of sugar, which has increased the commercial uses, and the spread between the industrial users and housewives varies around 50 as a median point, a little above 50 and a little below 50 at the present time. That allocation has been gone over most carefully. I wonder whether the Senators realize that that is the Department's position.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to read very briefly from the evidence taken at the hearings on the question being covered by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Nebraska. I was questioning Mr. Overman, who represented, according to his own testimony, a tremendous number of industrial users. I read:

> Senator McCARTHY. On further question: You recognize, of course, the fact that the average farm wife, as well as many other housewives, are processors of food?
> You realize that women in the small towns and farming areas do their own canning, they put up their own jellies and preserves, you know that, do you not?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is right.

Senator MCCARTHY. When you allot such a woman 35 pounds of sugar, do you realize that is far below the 80 percent which it is proposed your industry be allowed? There is no question about that, is there?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is true.

Let me reread that question and answer by the man who is here representing the industrial user:

Senator MCCARTHY. When you allot such a woman 35 pounds of sugar, do you realize that is far below the 80 percent which it is proposed your industry be allowed? There is no question about that, is there?

Mr. OVERMAN. That is true.

Senator MCCARTHY. Would you recommend that we reduce your 80 percent sizably and try to level off this situation and give the housewife some more?

Mr. OVERMAN. I would hesitate to recommend that, certainly.

Senator MCCARTHY. In other words, you say that we have been unfair to the housewife who cans her own food, but, representing bottling works as you do, you would recommend against trying to alleviate that condition?

Mr. OVERMAN. For the moment I would, sir.

Senator MCCARTHY. In other words, you say that you have the sugar, she is not being treated fairly. "As long as we have got it, let us keep it," that is your answer?

Mr. OVERMAN. It is not. To tell the truth, if historical rationing had followed through as intended, from the start, I think we would have had a much different picture, and you would not have had this criticism of all industry because they have gotten a little additional perhaps over the housewife.

In other words, historical rationing, as I understand it, was based upon what the public asked for prior to the war, what the public had set up as its pattern of purchases.

If it was in soft drinks, it meant a certain pattern of the brands they liked—or in jellies, jams, and preserves.

I had set its pattern of what it wanted.

A historical pattern of what the public preferred had been set up, and I think the OPA and the rules made a definite effort to reflect that pattern.

However, there have been pressures, and the soft-drink industries certainly have not profited by that.

They are perhaps one of the few who have been held to the 50, 60, and 70 percent, with very little opportunity of using substitute sweeteners and with certainly no history of having increased their business by 400 percent during the time when this rationing was in effect, so if there is any complaint from the housewife it certainly does not come from the—it should not be laid down at the door of the soft-drink industry.

Senator MCCARTHY. You understand you are in a rather peculiar position. You admit that while it is proposed that your particular industry gets 80 percent of its normal sugar consumption, that the housewife is presently getting far below that percentage.

I then asked you a question. I said: "Would you recommend that in view of this unfairness, that we try to at least bring things into balance by reducing the amount of sugar which your bottling companies and confectioners get and increasing the amount of sugar that the housewife who processes fruits and berries gets?" Your answer to that, I gather, is "No"; you think we should continue this unfairness.

At that point the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] came to the rescue of the man who was representing the industrial users, and would not allow him to answer the question.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his question of privilege.

Mr. FLANDERS. Instead of making that statement, may I ask the Senator if he will read from the RECORD?

Mr. MCCARTHY. I shall be glad to do so. I quote:

Senator FLANDERS. If I were in Mr. Overman's position across the table, I think I would suggest that the extra sugar be taken from the processors of jams and preserves rather than from myself.

I made exactly that suggestion to the Senator from Vermont, and he said, "No, we will not do it; we are going to introduce some type of fictitious amendment which in effect will do nothing more nor less than deceive the housewife"——

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

Mr. MCCARTHY. And the Tobey amendment——

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, that is a personal challenge, and I demand an opportunity to answer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska has the floor.

Mr. TOBEY. I rise to a question of personal privilege. The Senator made a charge against me of offering a fictitious amendment. I want to answer it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire will have to ask the Senator from Nebraska to yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I ask to be heard on a matter of personal privilege.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is advised by the Parliamentarian that the Senator from New Hampshire is required to request the Senator from Nebraska to yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I ask that the Senator yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I heard the statement by the Senator from Wisconsin. My hearing is fairly good. The Senator just said, "The Senator from Vermont said, 'We are going to introduce a fictitious amendment to cover this matter.'" He charged that my amendment is deceptive and fictitious. I take exception to his derogatory remarks. The Senator's statement, I submit, far contravenes the truth, to put it plainly. I want to go a little further and say that this amendment was not offered as a fictitious amendment, but as an honest-to-God amendment—as sincerely as anything the Senator from Wisconsin ever wanted to do. I stand here and defend a fellow Senator. To call it fictitious is not a fair commentary on the Senator's action.

Mr. MCCARTHY. Mr. President——

Mr. TOBEY. I am not quite through yet, sir. I point out that the Senator is confusing the Senate of the United States by a heterogeneous mass of figures, which will not stand test of accuracy, and will be taken care of a little bit later by the Senator from Vermont and the Senator from New Hampshire with interest.

Mr. MCCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield, so that I may answer the Senator from New Hampshire?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall be glad to yield so that the Senator from Wisconsin may reply to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. MCCARTHY. In answer, Mr. President, I might say that anyone who sat through the sugar hearings, who heard Mr. Dice testify, who knows that if the Department of Agriculture takes over the rationing of sugar, Mr. Dice, who was only temporarily loaned to OPA, will return to the Department and will still be in charge, must realize that the Senator's amendment will mean absolutely nothing, except that it will mislead the American public. I can find in the record two or three or four cases—I shall be glad to point them out to the Senator—where the industrial users repeatedly referred to Mr. Dice as "our friend, Mr. Dice."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the point of order made by the Senator from Missouri, the Chair is forced to say again to the Senator from Nebraska that he can yield only for a question, or he will lose the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, returning to the statement that I was making on the amendment which I desire to offer, in the event the amendment of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire is rejected, as I hope that it will be, I should like to call the attention of the Senate to the provisions of my amendment so that the Senate will have the information, and so that when the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire is voted upon, the Senators can make up their minds whether they care to support his amendment or the one I expect to propose.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. MARTIN. I should like to ask unanimous consent that I be excused for the remainder of the afternoon, to attend to some other very important business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the consent is granted.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, as I analyze the amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, it now proposes to give a firm commitment of 35 pounds to the individual consumer; and, certainly, if there is an increase above the 6,800,000-ton figure, then the Senator proposes to give a priority to the housewife up to 50 pounds.

Mr. President, in the amendment that I shall offer I propose to give the individual 40 pounds of sugar. Regardless of whether there is an increase in the supply, the 40-pound provision of the amendment runs straight across the board.

One of the reasons why I think individual consumers are entitled to it is made plain in the very forceful argument made by the distinguished Senator from Michigan that it has been admitted in the hearings by the industrial users of sugar that there has been a discrimination in the percentage the housewife has had compared with industrial users.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield for a question.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator has an amendment which has been printed, and which is lying on the table. He has another amendment on his desk, which contains certain language suggested by myself. I am very curious to know which amendment the Senator proposes to offer if and when the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire is defeated.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall not read it, but I send the amendment to the desk and ask that the clerk read it for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the clerk will read the amendment for the information of the Senate.

The CHIEF CLERK. Before the period on page 2, line 20, it is proposed to insert a colon, and the following: "And provided further, That in exercising the authority extended by this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall allocate, and permit the purchase of, refined sugar for home consumption at a rate of not less than 40 pounds per person per year; providing further that having in mind the need for sugar for home-canning purposes not less than 15 pounds per person shall be made available for home consumption during the third quarter of 1947. In the event the quantity allocated to nonprovisional industrial users during any portion of the period from April 1, 1947, until the expiration of the allocation authority is increased above the allocation of such users, the quantity herein required to be allocated for home consumption during such portion of such period shall be proportionately increased."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the amendment really can be explained very simply. There are three provisions. One is that the housewife gets 40 pounds. It is possible to cite a vast array of figures. I want to say that while there seems to be considerable disagreement among some of the distinguished members of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I compliment the work of the subcommittee, including the distinguished Senator from Vermont, the chairman of the subcommittee, and those who helped him, the Senator from Wisconsin, and the Senator from Ohio; and I also commend the leadership of the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency in this sugar problem. It is an acute problem, and it is a difficult one to settle. All of us have our respective opinions about what should or should not be done, but it is my humble opinion, after listening to the testimony and after learning about the discriminations which the housewife has experienced in the past, that the time has come when we ought to eliminate that discrimination, we ought to try to make some retribution for it. As a compromise, I think that giving them five additional pounds over this firm commitment can be reached, if we try it. I do not take exception to the remarks of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency; neither do I dispute the letter written by the Secretary of Agriculture.

I should like to say for the RECORD that I have much confidence in, and I highly respect, Clinton P. Anderson, the Secretary of Agriculture. No one was more helpful to me when I was gathering statistics relating to the meat situation durthe Seventy-ninth Congress than was the distinguished Secretary of Agriculture, and I appreciate what he did. I respect his point of view. He takes the position that any other administrator would take. The final figure for the sugar still depends upon the weather in Cuba. There are certain things about which the Secretary might be apprehensive. His position at this time is that possibly there might be some doubt respecting the size of the sugar crop. He has not given me a clearance that we should provide 40 pounds, and I wish so to state now to the Senate. But his Department has led me to believe that there will be the expected increase in the sugar crop. The figure given by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin in respect to stock piling 500,000 additional tons certainly should have our careful consideration.

Mr. President, the fact that the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency has offered an amendment which would make a firm commitment of 35 pounds convinces me that there is ground for optimism with respect to the increased sugar production in Cuba, and that we may expect an increase not only from Cuba but from other countries of the world. My amendment, however, provides that the individual consumer shall be allotted 40 pounds of sugar. I think that can be done. If the feeling prevails that 35 pounds can be allotted to each individual, I think it can be increased to 40 pounds. That would represent an increase of only 375,000 tons.

Mr. President, in considering the various figures we are assuming that each individual would avail himself of the amount allotted. The Department of Commerce estimates that only 30,000,000 individuals will use their full allotments. So it cannot be said with certainty that an allotment of 40 pounds to each individual will require an addition of 375,000 tons. Only if every last citizen of the United States asks for the proposed additional sugar allotment will 375,000 tons additional be required.

Mr. President, I think we are a little bit too apprehensive respecting the existing situation. I think some extravagant statements have been made here as to what can or what cannot be done. I think the Department of Agriculture can shoot at the figure of 40 pounds for each individual without creating as much disturbance as has been indicated might result. Such things have been done in connection with other commodities, and I am satisfied they can be done with respect to sugar.

I doubt if anyone, even the Secretary of Agriculture, can state with authority that there can or cannot be an increase to 40 pounds for each individual. What can be done is to make use of all the available statistics, and make an estimate on that basis. But between now and the time the housewives receive the proposed allotment of 40 pounds, it may be that 50 pounds instead of 40 will be available.

I believe, on the basis of the crop reports and the statistics furnished by the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin that we can pick up the additional sugar needed to provide 40 pounds for each individual, without jeopardizing to any great extent the distribution of sugar throughout the United States. In fact I have been told that a fairer estimate would be that there will be an additional 100,000 tons available above the amount heretofore suggested. But once again I say I cannot give any authority for such an estimate. I suppose the Secretary of Agriculture is as high an authority as we can avail ourselves of. But like all administrators, he surely does not want to make a commitment which he himself probably feels cannot be fulfilled by reason of weather conditions or for other reasons.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield for a question.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Nebraska spoke about someone having told him that there would probably be 100,000 tons of sugar additional coming along over and above other figures which have been suggested.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to correct that statement. What I meant to say was that 100,000 tons additional might be required if an allotment of 40 pounds to each individual were made.

Mr. TOBEY. My purpose in rising was to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that should the mythical 100,000 tons additional which may be needed appear on the horizon and in fact become available, under the Tobey amendment that amount would go to the housewife. Would it not?

Mr. WHERRY. I feel that the amendment does provide that it should go to the housewife.

Mr. TOBEY. Under my amendment it would be mandatory, would it not?

Mr. WHERRY. If the amount is rationed.

Mr. TOBEY. It is mandatory, is it not?

Mr. WHERRY. I shall come to that point in a moment when I discuss the provisions of the Senator's amendment and compare his proposal for increase with my proposal.

The second part of my amendment has not been touched upon to any great length up to this time. During the first quarter of this year there was an allocation of 5 pounds of sugar to each individual, that is for the months of January, February, and March. In the second quarter an allocation of 10 pounds of sugar is made, for the months of April, May, and June. My amendment provides that for the third quarter of this year there shall be allotted for the use of the individual, or I might say the housewife, because the third quarter is the canning season, 15 pounds of sugar. That is a firm commitment which is not contained in the Senator's amendment. I feel that if there is any time of the year when this proposed increase is needed, it is during the canning season. So I ask that an additional 5 pounds of sugar, as provided in my amendment, be allocated during the third quarter. My amendment does not disturb the situation in the first quarter or in the second quarter, but it provides that in the third quarter, that is during the months of August and September, a total of 15 pounds of sugar shall be allotted to each individual.

My reason for proposing an allotment of 15 pounds during the third quarter is obvious, and does not require any lengthy explanation. My proposal is simply that an additional 5 pounds shall be given the individual, or the housewife, during the time of year when it is most needed, which is during the canning season.

Mr. President, I have received hundreds of letters telling of food spoilage, or fruit that has been lost simply because there was not sufficient sugar to preserve it. We are paying out millions of dollars to provide floors for agricultural products, but on the other hand, we permit vegetables and fruit to go to waste, to be dumped into the sewers, because sufficient sugar is not allotted for preserving purposes. It is nonsense to have floors under agricultural production, and to encourage the fruit and vegetable producers to greater production, and then deny sugar to preserve the increased production. So the least we can do, if it is possible, is to provide 5 pounds more sugar to each individual during the third quarter, the canning season.

I should like to say for the benefit of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin that I, too, have been in telephonic conference with the Department of Agriculture almost as constantly as has the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire, and I have asked the Secretary this question over and over again: Can you not work out a provision for 5 more pounds, or a total of 45 pounds for each individual? I have asked him if he could not find a way to provide 20 pounds for each individual during the canning season. I wish to verify what the Senator from Wisconsin has said that now there is an effort to find out if it will not be possible to allocate 20 pounds during the canning season.

Mr. President, I do not want to have the Senate enact legislation providing an arbitrary, mandatory program impossible of being carried out, but I am willing to vote for a proposal which will give to each housewife every pound of sugar which can be given her during the canning season. I think it is smart to give the housewife as much sugar as possible during that time. There is a need for preserving the food which is produced. I think we should preserve every pound of food we can preserve.

Mr. President, in that respect my amendment is different from the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire. I beg of Senators that they will give it their earnest consideration.

A suggestion has been made by the Department of Agriculture that they ration the 10 pounds up to a certain date, and then if they could provide 15 pounds thereafter set the allotment of 15 pounds ahead, perhaps to the last week in July. I do not know whether that will be worked out or not, but regardless of whether it is worked out, when the time comes I shall offer the amendment I have suggested, that 15 pounds, an addition of 5 pounds over the 10 pounds, be allotted to the housewife in the canning season. I do not see why anyone should object to it. Certainly, if the housewives are to get the sugar, that is the time of the year they must have it.

Reference is made to stock piles. It is all very well to have stock piles, and it is all very well to increase the stock piles, if it is the opinion of the Secretary that they should be increased. But I think it is just as important, increased stock piles or no increased stock piles, to try to take care of food that is produced, and preserve it, if we are to have floors under production.

The third difference between my amendment and the amendment of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is relative to the allocation in the event there is an increase. Under the terms of the Senator's amendment, there must be an increase above 6,800,000 tons before the housewife gets any increase. I am sure that is correct. At least that is my interpretation. So until we reach the figure of 6,800,000 tons, the housewife gets no more than 35 pounds.

My amendment provides that regardless of the 6,800,000 tons, if there is any additional allocation of sugar to industrial users, whether there be an increase or not, the allocation shall be made proportionately in the same percentage of allocation as between industry and the housewife in the future. I think that is sound. I think there should be no further discrimination. The meaning of my amendment in that respect is entirely different from that of the amendment of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire. My amendment provides that if any additional allocation is made, in addition to the firm commitment, whether there be an increase above 6,800,000 tons or not, the allocation shall be made on a percentage basis, allowing a proportional increase to the housewife.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. As I understand the Senator's amendment, as he has explained it, when, as, and if an increase occurs, it will be allocated proportionately as between homemakers and commercial users.

Mr. WHERRY. In the percentage in which commitments are now made to industry and to the housewife.

Mr. TOBEY. The distinction between the Senator's thought and the thought expressed in my amendment is that in the case of my amendment the homemakers would get it all.

Mr. WHERRY. The distinction is that an increased allocation might be made whether there was an increase above 6,800,000 tons or not. In the past we have not had sugar for new users, or for hardship cases. The percentage of increase has been greater in some directions than in others. That is the reason why the housewife has been discriminated against to the extent of 10 percent. My amendment would take care of any increased allotment. The Senator's amendment provides a priority to the housewife provided there is an increase beyond 6,800,000 tons. I want it provided in the law that if there is any increased allocation of sugar, whether or not there is an increase beyond the 6,800,000 tons, it must be made proportionately, in the same percentage to the housewife as to any industrial user.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum? I think this subject is important enough so that Senators should hear the discussion.

Mr. WHERRY. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. WATKINS. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] are necessarily absent.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent on public business.

The Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-four Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief summary of what I have said relative to my amendment. I should like to call the parliamentary situation to the attention of the Senators who may not have been present earlier.

The amendment offered by the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] is a second-degree amendment. Therefore, it is not in order to offer an amendment to his amendment to increase the number of pounds. Unfortunately, if any amendment is to be adopted which will provide otherwise than is provided by the distinguished Senator's amendment relative to further allocations, the Senate must defeat his amendment.

The amendment which he has offered provides 35 pounds as a firm commitment to the housewife. It also provides that in the event there is an increase over 6,800,000 tons, the housewife shall be given priority up to 50 pounds. Nothing is said about other users, such as milk condensers. At the moment it provides that if there is an increase—and that increase is based upon 6,800,000 tons—there may be additional allocations to the housewife up to 50 pounds.

The amendment which I should like to offer, if the Tobey amendment is defeated, would make a firm commitment of 40 pounds to the housewife, regardless of any increase. It is based primarily on the fact that there has been discrimination against the housewife. It is felt that this is one way to equalize the situation. I think most of us are convinced that the Department can provide for distribution of an additional 5 pounds, because if everyone in the United States asked for it it would amount to only 375,000 tons. The evidence is that probably less than 30,000,000 people would avail themselves of the additional amount, and they are the people on the farms. Six million families, averaging five to a family, would represent approximately 30,000,000 people who would avail themselves of additional sugar. The evidence is that it will probably require only an additional 100,000 tons to provide the 40 pounds.

In the first quarter, in which we are now operating, 5 pounds of sugar is allocated to the housewife. In the second quarter, ending in June, 10 pounds will be allocated. In the third quarter it is asked that 15 pounds be allocated, or 5 pounds more than in the allotment proposed.

The reason my amendment proposes such an allotment is that throughout the country the months of July, August, and September are primarily the months when more sugar is needed for canning; and, as I have previously explained at considerable length, it seems to me that if we put a floor under agricultural commodities, such as fruits and vegetables, to induce their production, we ought to provide sugar to preserve them. We should not continue to appropriate money for floors under agricultural commodities and then not take care of the fruits and vegetables when they are grown, if sugar is needed for canning them.

The amendment of the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire provides for an increased allotment to the housewife only if there is an increase above 6,800,000 tons. There is a great deal of evidence in the hearings, and there has been a good deal of evidence given on the floor of the Senate, that sugar will be recouped from other sources, so as to make the supply in excess of 6,800,000 tons. In that event the third section of my amendment provides:

> In the event the quantity allocated to nonprovisional industrial users—

The nonprovisional industrial users are those who are not milk condensers, and so forth—

> In the event the quantity allocated to nonprovisional industrial users during any portion of the period from April 1, 1947, until the expiration of the allocation authority, is increased above the base allocation of such user, then in that event the quantity herein required to be allocated for home consumption during the last portion of such period shall be proportionately increased.

In other words, Mr. President, from here on there will be no discrimination. If there is any increase from any source and if an allocation of it is made, it will become mandatory upon the Department of Agriculture to increase proportionately the amount going to the housewife, as her percentage, just as they increase it for the industrial users. Certainly no one should quarrel with such a provision. It does exactly what the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire wishes to do, insofar as allocations are concerned, if we go above 50 pounds. I imagine he would not object to it.

I should like to say further that prior to the war, the amount of sugar consumed by home users, as compared to the amount consumed by industrial users, was approximately 50 percent of the total consumption; in other words, the home users and the industrial users were on approximately a 50–50 basis, with 50 percent being consumed by home users and approximately 50 percent being consumed by industrial users. However, during the war the amount allotted to the housewives dropped to nearly 40 percent. My amendment would return, from now on, to the historical basis of the distribution of sugar as between industries and the housewives.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I wish to say that I should like to see the housewives get all the sugar they possibly can get. Of course, in the event that I was in favor of the amendment of the able Senator from Nebraska, I would have to vote against the amendment of the able Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. If I voted that way and if the amendment of the able Senator from New Hampshire were not adopted, then I would be on record as being against giving the housewives 35 pounds of sugar.

Mr. WHERRY. Except, I may say to the Senator, if that eventuality arises, I still shall have the right to offer my amendment as a substitute for the House bill, after the House bill is amended by adding to it the Senate committee amendment as perfected; and that is what I intend to do in that event. So the Senator from Illinois will not then be on record as being opposed to giving the housewives the most sugar that possibly can be given to them. If the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is adopted, then I shall offer my amendment when the House bill, as amended by the Senate committee amendment as perfected, is before the Senate; and when I do that I shall ask for a yea-and-nay vote, and thus the Senator from Illinois will have a chance to place himself on record on the question of favoring my amendment.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes; but so far as the present situation is concerned, in order to vote for the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, I shall be compelled to vote against the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, so far as my record will be concerned, in that event I shall be voting against giving the housewife 35 pounds of sugar.

Mr. WHERRY. Except for the assurance of the junior Senator from Nebraska that the Senator from Illinois, when the Senate has before it the House bill as amended by the Senate committee amendment as perfected—which then will make the House bill a new bill—will have an opportunity to vote on the question of the adoption of my amendment, even in the event the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire is accepted. So the Senator from Illinois will still have a chance to vote for 40 pounds of sugar for the housewives, and I say to him that if he wishes to vote for 40 pounds of sugar, he had better vote against the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire and vote for my amendment when the time comes to vote on it.

Mr. LUCAS. Yes. But if I am going to have two chances to vote on the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, I think I shall take the chance of voting for the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire first. I do not wish to be placed on record as voting aganist letting the housewives have the 35 pounds of sugar. If I voted against that, I am afraid my record on the sugar question might reach my constituents; and that would be very dangerous, because my constituents are very much in favor of getting even 35 pounds of sugar. I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am afraid the parliamentary situation is such that I would be misunderstood if I should not support the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, for some reason it is very difficult for me ever to propose a piece of legislation for which the distinguished Senator from Illinois finds that he can vote.

Mr. LUCAS. Oh, Mr. President, I have voted with the Senator from Nebraska many times, and he knows it.

Mr. WHERRY. I deeply appreciate the Senator's interest in my amendment, and I know he wishes to support it. I can assure him that after all his years of experience in the Senate, he knows exactly what to do; and so of course at this time it is unnecessary for me to point out to him that I should like to give him an opportunity to vote for my amendment, and that if he and I are to have that opportunity, he should join with me in helping to defeat the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. LUCAS. But I do not wish to be misunderstood by the housewives.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Illinois will take care of the housewives all right.

Mr. President I yield the floor.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin is recognized.

Mr. McCARTHY. First, I should like to refer to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, which I was not previously able to cover thoroughly. The Senator from New Hampshire took exception to my description of his amendment as "fictitious." Mr. President, in law if there is a complaint or other matter which accomplishes nothing, it is referred to as fictitious. So I repeat that comment about the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire; it is fictitious, in that it will accomplish nothing. It provides for what shall happen, first, over a period of a year. In the second place, it contains no mandate that the amount of sugar going to the housewives shall be increased.

At this time I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire if he will consent to a suggestion to which for some time I have been trying to get the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and other Senators who take the opposite side of the question to consent to. I wish to know whether he will consent at this time, in view of his avowed concern for the housewives, to modify his amendment so as to make it provide that the housewife shall get at least 15 pounds of sugar during the canning season. If the Senator from New Hampshire will consent to such a modification of his amendment, then I also ask him whether he will agree to modify his amendment so that it will not affect the milk processors, as his amendment now does.

If the Senator will modify his amendment in those two respects, I shall be very happy to go along with him and to vote for and support the amendment as thus modified.

Does the Senator from New Hampshire understand my question?

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I was interrupted, I regret to say; so I shall appreciate having the Senator repeat his proposal.

Mr. McCARTHY. My question is this: The Senator from New Hampshire told me, and I believe he is sincere, that he is much concerned about having the housewife get her proper share of sugar. I read to the Senator from page 226 of the hearings, in which the gentlemen who represent the mass of industrial users of sugar freely admit that the housewife is not getting her fair share of the sugar. In view of that, and in view of the Senator's avowed concern for the housewife, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he will consent to modify his amendment so as to make it mandatory that the housewife shall receive a minimum of 15 pounds of canning sugar during the third quarter. If the Senator from New Hampshire will do that and if, in addition, he will do something else—which I think is merely a correction required as a result of an oversight—namely, provide that his amendment shall not affect the provisional users, I shall very heartily support the amendment. As the amendment now stands, I say to the Senator, I have used the word "fictitious" to describe it, because I think it will accomplish nothing, and will be nothing more or less than a deceptive measure.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, let me answer the Senator in my own way, if I may. I shall answer the Senator's question as I go along, but first let me state—I wish to repeat it, because it seems to me that some people do not grasp the facts of the amendment even as yet. The Tobey amendment is one which is thought out primarily for the housewife, in all good faith; and it does a very definite and concrete and substantial thing. It guarantees 35 pounds of sugar to the housewife during the calendar year, as against 25 pounds which she received in toto last year. That is a 40-percent increase. Then it makes a reasonable and sane and, I think a constructive statement, and makes it mandatory; namely, that when, as, and if an increase in the supply of sugar is available, the Department of Agriculture, through Secretary Anderson, must give all of it to the housewife—not a portion of the amount, but all of it, up to the limit of 50 pounds, which is the amount the housewise consumed annually before the war.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, let me interrupt the Senator to comment on his statement that the amendment would increase the allotment to the housewife by 40 percent. When the Senator refers to 35 pounds and to increasing the allotment to the housewife up to 35 pounds, the amendment would not increase it at all over what the OPA says it will give the housewife.

What I have been asking the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] to do all along is to recognize the fact that the industrial users are receiving an unfair portion of the sugar as they themselves admit in the record repeatedly. I say that, instead of giving the housewife a promise, which may or may not be fulfilled, we should make it mandatory.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator to let me know when he finishes his statement, and then I shall come in.

Mr. McCARTHY. I invite the Senator to come in now.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Wisconsin misses the point, I hope not intentionally to befuddle, but his is a befuddling statement. He fails to recognize and point out that the housewives were getting last year 25 pounds, and would get this year, by my amendment, 35 pounds, representing a 40-percent increase over last year. Does the Senator recognize that fact?

Mr. McCARTHY. I recognize the fact that she is not getting her fair share of sugar.

Mr. TOBEY. That is not the question.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me say to the Senator——

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator is not answering the question.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me refer to the hearings. I was interrogating Mr. Overman, who was representing the industrial users:

> Senator McCARTHY. When you allot such a woman 35 pounds of sugar, do you realize that is far below the 80 percent which it is proposed your industry be allowed? There is no question about that, is there?
>
> Mr. OVERMAN. That is true.
> Senator McCARTHY. Would you recommend that we reduce your 80 percent sizably and try to level off this situation and give the housewife some more?

Then Mr. Overman, who represents the industrial users, answered:

> I would hesitate to recommend that, certainly.

I say to the Senator from New Hampshire that here today we should do what Mr. Overman and the other industrial users refuse to recommend, we should level off the situation and give the housewife her fair share. The Senator's amendment does not do that, and my point is that if he is as sincere as I believe he is, he should be willing to amend his own amendment and make it mandatory that the housewife shall get at least an additional 5 pounds for canning. Obviously she should get more than that, she should get 10 pounds. The sugar is available.

Mr. TOBEY. I do not like to void the Scriptural injunction and use "vain repetitions," but here it comes again. The issue is whether the housewives of this country are going to be treated fairly, and we demand they shall be. So, in a constructive effort to take care of the needs of the housewives, we jack up the supply they are to get 40 percent over last year, and then we say, "Mr. Secretary Anderson, when the new sugar comes in if the supply is larger than estimated you must give it to the housewives up to 50 pounds," which would be 15 pounds more than contemplated.

Now about the canning feature. There is a certain amount of sugar available, and the Department has made an estimate of it. Has the Senator figured that? They allocate it to the commercial users and the housewives, and at any time in the current year, preserving time or not, when the supply of sugar increases and more is available the Secretary can and will give it to the housewives, but if it is not there he cannot and he will not.

Mr. McCARTHY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator is very welcome.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I should like to point out to the Senate that in 1944 a law was passed which made it illegal to ration sugar on the historical-usage basis. It was there very clearly written into the law. Mr. Dice, who was the head of the sugar-rationing program and who will, apparently, continue to be at the head of it, saw fit completely to disregard that provision, thereby creating a monopoly in certain industrial users, and excluding everyone from the use of sugar unless he or she had been in that particular type of business in 1941.

Whether that was wise or unwise, the law was there, very clear to see, and Mr. Dice saw fit to disregard it. The matter was taken to court, and it was decided that he was violating the law. The case was appealed to the higher court, and the higher court affirmed the lower court and said he was violating the law.

In view of that the ambiguous, deceptive amendment which the Senator from New Hampshire proposes to add to the bill can be interpreted in any conceivable way by Mr. Dice, who is heading the sugar-rationing program, and the only way we can get——

Mr. TOBEY. Is that name "Dice"?

Mr. McCARTHY. Dice.

Mr. TOBEY. I do not play with dice.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me finish the sentence. The only way we can make sure that the housewife gets her fair share of the sugar is by defeating the Tobey amendment. We may then vote upon the Wherry amendment.

Now I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. The Senator was speaking a moment ago about the allocation of sugar to prevent the wastage of milk. I believe he was present when the Secretary said that sugar would be allocated for that purpose. We have him on record to that effect in our report, at the top of page 7, the 4th, 5th and 6th lines, where it is said:

> The Secretary has assured the committee that sugar will be made available to prevent the wastage of milk.

Furthermore, administrative orders to that effect have already been issued.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me point out, in connection with that, that when we were examining Mr. Marshall, of the Office of the Secretary of Agriculture, as appears on page 237 of the record, we were trying to urge that something be done for the milk industry, and this is what he said:

> We still feel that it isn't right to pick out a single industry of that kind and give it sugar unless you are able to give increases to others.

At that time, while we were conducting the hearings, the Department of Agriculture had already made up their minds that they would not give the milk processor any milk.

Again, on page 240, in questioning Mr. Marshall, I asked:

> Senator McCARTHY. Just one further question: Mr Marshall, in view of the world food shortage, in view of the apparently undisputed fact that unless the milk processors get more sugar there will be a great waste of food, namely, milk, would you not think it might be wise, even if you continue rationing, instead of building up the stock pile in the United States by 500,000 tons during the current year, that you take at least a part of that 500,000 tons and allocate that to the milk processors?

It is true that at that time they said they could not, should not, and would not do it. A few days later Secretary Anderson came before us, and, like the typical bureaucrat trying to defend his position, he changed his mind, and said, "We will now do what was impossible 2 days ago."

That being the situation, I say we cannot trust those gentlemen. We have got to tell them definitely what they must do and when they must do it. I say that, in view of his changeable and changing attitude; it is indicated that there must be an investigation before we can have a law interpreted wisely, we must not use ambiguous language, such as is used in the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire, we must have something concrete, as is found in the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

Mr. FLANDFRS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. Again going back to the point where the Senator took off, as I was listening, with regard to the agreement by the Secretary of Agriculture to take care of wastage of milk, I would say that he was not the typical bureaucrat. The typical bureaucrat does not retreat, and the Secretary told us that he had himself been dealing with OPA for a long time on that question, trying to persuade them to do it; all of which, Mr. President, leads me to believe that we cannot pick out a much better man to handle the sugar law than Secretary Anderson.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Wisconsin yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. In reply to the statement of the Senator from Wisconsin to the Senate a few moments ago that the Tobey amendment was ambiguous, I will quote the admonition of St. Paul describing some people back in his day, and it applies equally to the Senator from Wisconsin: "Eyes have they and they see not." There is nothing ambiguous about the amendment. There it is, a plain declaration. I would like to have the Senator point out an ambiguous statement in the amendment.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, the undisputed fact that we have a tremendous amount of sugar which we did not anticipate at the time of the hearing, the Senator's repeated professions of concern about the housewife, plus his refusal to insert in his amendment anything concrete saying when and how she shall get additional sugar cause me to wonder whether or not the Senator does not heartily agree with me that his amendment is so ambiguous that Mr. Dice can interpret it in any fashion he wants to.

Let me say one thing further on the question of whether or not sugar is available to give the housewife additional canning sugar. I told the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] we would go along with him in his suggestion of an additional 5 pounds. I think that is entirely inadequate. I think we could give her 10 pounds easily. But I believe that 5 pounds would help somewhat. Let me take the word right out of the mouth of Mr. Dice, who is the head of sugar rationing, and show the Senate that we could, and should, as of today, do away with rationing, and, if that is possible, we could certainly give the housewife an additional 5 pounds. Let me read very briefly from the testimony of Mr. Dice:

> Senator McCARTHY. Do you know, roughly, how much sugar was in the United States on the first of this year?
>
> Mr. DICE. I believe it was about 1,440,000 tons. I believe Mr. Marshall could give a more accurate figure.
>
> Senator McCARTHY. Is that substantially correct, 1,440,000 tons?

The record shows Mr. Dice and Mr. Marshall answered, "Yes, sir."

> Senator McCARTHY. I understand further that under your present rationing plan, with 6,800,000 tons available to us, there will be at the end of this year how much on hand?
>
> Mr. DICE. It is my understanding that it is somewhere i the neighborhood of 1,900,000 tons. However, that is not something over which OPA has control. That is a matter that is determined by the Department of Agriculture.
>
> Senator McCARTHY. In any event, if you follow the present rationing plan, which will give each individual about 93 pounds of sugar—that is sugar consumption, not allocation; if you follow that plan of rationing you will increase both the visible and invisible stocks combined by, roughly, 500,000 tons; is that right?
>
> Mr. DICE. Or 450,000.
>
> Senator McCARTHY. You are also aware of the fact that the Cuban crop is tremendously better than was anticipated several months ago?
> Mr. DICE. I have heard reports both ways. I understand that the official estimate is still 5,500,000 tons.

I digress there to say that, 3 days before that, 3 days before Mr. Dice said the final estimate was 5,500,000 tons, his department issued an estimate of Cuban production of 5,750,00 tons.

> There are some reports that indicate that it will be higher.
>
> Senator McCARTHY. In other words, all of the reports that we get from Cuba indicate that the crop is a bumper crop. So far we have no reports indicating that it is not a bumper crop. That is substantially true?
>
> Mr. DICE. So far as I know, that is correct.
> Senator McCARTHY. And it has been estimated here that the crop will run from 300,000 to 500,000 tons more than was anticipated?

Again, if I may interrupt the quotation, I point out that instead of being from 300,000 to 500,000 tons, it is now actually and definitely 637,000 tons more than anticipated.

> Mr. DICE. Yes, sir.
> Senator McCARTHY. If we add that to your 500,000 tons by which you are increasing the inventory in this country during this year, we have close to 1,000,000 additional tons of sugar which we could use this year, and have our stock the same at the end of the year as it was at the beginning of the year.
>
> That is correct, is it not; just by simple arithmetic?
> Mr. DICE. If you assume that we would run our stocks down to the point where we started this year, and if you assume that there is an additional half-million tons produced in Cuba, and if you assume further that all of that half-million tons is available to the United States civilians for consumption, then that is a correct assumption.

Now let me analyze the statement of Mr. Dice. He says, first "if you will assume we will have over a half million tons available." We have; we have 637,000 tons available.

He says, second "If you assume that is available to this country." It is available to this country, because we have a contract with Cuba which makes it available.

Senator McCARTHY. You testified, I believe, the other day, that if we added about 1,000,000, or 1,200,000, tons of sugar to the amount of 6,800,000 tons which you presently propose to ration, that would make rationing unnecessary in this country?

Let me repeat that question. This is a question asked of Mr. Dice:

You testified, I believe, the other day, that if we added about 1,000,000 or 1,200,000, tons of sugar to the amount of 6,800,000 tons which you presently propose to ration, that would make rationing unnecessary in this country?

Mr. DICE. Providing there was some inventory control.

So, out of the mouth of the head of OPA, out of his own mouth, we find him telling us that if we have the amount of sugar available which we do now have available, rationing would be unnecessary, if we have inventory control.

Senator McCARTHY. Yes. In other words, the type of inventory control that was suggested the other day by Mr. Mack, perhaps.

Mr. DICE. That was not defined, but, say, a 30-day inventory limitation I believe would do it.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this time, to permit me to address a question to the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am very much interested in these proposed amendments, including the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire. The Senator from New Hampshire fixes a figure of not less than 35 pounds per capita for the calendar year, and that, I take it, is based on the known crop of sugar and the allocation to the United States when this bill was originally reported to the Senate?

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct.

Mr. REVERCOMB. If it should be found that there is an additional amount of sugar, which has been mentioned here as some 700,000 tons, what would become of that additional amount of sugar under the Senator's amendment?

Mr. TOBEY. It would all go to the housewives.

Mr. FLANDERS. Excuse me, sir.

Mr. TOBEY. Please.

Mr. FLANDERS. I think it would not all go to the housewives. At the proper time I should like to be interrogated on that point.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Very good, sir.

Mr. TOBEY. I thought the Senator asked, if there were an increase in the supply of sugar that had been allocated.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It is said, that the Cuban crop, and I believe, other crops that it was stated were coming in, would make available an additional 700,000 tons plus. If that be correct—not going into the question of whether that figure is correct, but assuming that it is—where would that 700,000 tons go? Who would get the benefit of it?

Mr. TOBEY. Up to 50 pounds per housewife, it would go to them.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Is it possible that any part or all of the 700,000 extra tons of sugar could be allocated to countries other than the United States by the International Emergency Food Council?

Mr. TOBEY. I have a signal from my friend, the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], who knows this question better than I do. I yield to him on that particular point. He will answer it.

Mr. FLANDERS. I would like to read the record.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I would like to have my last question answered first.

Mr. FLANDERS. I will answer the Senator's last question. Like the Senator from Wisconsin, I shall have to read a few preliminary statistics first, but it all goes to the points being raised by the Senator, and it is only one paragraph.

There is reason to believe that the supply situation is somewhat improved due to the more favorable reports from Cuba. On March 5 the Cuban Sugar Stabilization Institute cabled that the Cuban crop might reach 5,675,000 short tons; on March 17 word was received from the institute that, due to unusually favorable weather in recent weeks, the present crop will reach 5,960,000 short tons, barring an early rainy season. An estimate was made by the Cuban sugar trade on March 14 that it would go as high as 6,137,000 tons. However, these optimistic estimates cannot be accepted with assurance. The crop is not yet half harvested; therefore, it still is possible that production might fall short of the optimistic estimates or even of the estimate on which allocations were recommended.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I should like to interrupt the Senator at that point. I am not going into the question of how much margin there will be, in round figures. Let us assume that there is an increase. Let us assume it, not as a fact, but for the purposes of the question. What becomes of that extra amount? Where does it go?

Mr. FLANDERS (reading):

Allocations were recommended by the International Emergency Food Council on the basis of a Cuban crop of 5,500,000 short tons. The realization of a higher Cuban crop will, of course, be quite helpful, but the supply situation still will be far short of meeting the needs of a free market. The 1947 international allocation recommendation includes a total of 736,000 tons of "undesignated" sugar to all countries——

Mr. McCARTHY. Just a moment. I will not yield further to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. FLANDERS. I will finish the paragraph.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I will not yield further to the Senator.

Mr. FLANDERS (continuing reading):

with 200,000 tons of such sugar allocated to the United States. The increase in the Cuban crop, therefore, would not be——

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I still have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALDWIN in the chair). The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor.

Mr. FLANDERS (continuing reading):

enough to fill the need of the various countries——

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I have the floor and I do not yield further.

Mr. FLANDERS (continuing reading):

from the undesignated sources.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Vermont desist?

Mr. FLANDERS. I will at the request of the Chair.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator will recognize the fact that I have the floor, and I want to point out in my own time that when the Senator referred to "undesignated" I stopped him at that particular point, because that expression, "undesignated" sugar has been bandied about so much. We do have 200,000 tons of undesignated sugar allocated to the United States. However, there is nothing in the allocation with regard to our continental cane sugar. That amounted to 461,000 tons last year. This year we have an estimated 17,000 additional acres in cane production.

Mr. FLANDERS. May I correct that statement?

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not yield now. Let me finish my sentence. The additional 17,000 acres of cane sugar will bring the continental cane sugar output up to about 500,000 tons; so, instead of having 200,000 tons of undesignated sugar, we have a surplus of 300,000 tons. That is not taken into consideration.

Now I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me first?

Mr. McCARTHY. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President——

Mr. McCARTHY. I shall yield to the Senator from Kentucky as soon as the Senator from West Virginia concludes.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I thank the Senator from Wisconsin for yielding to me. I have a very simple question to ask which can be answered in a word or two without discussion such as has preceded. I will now propound the question. If a margin of sugar over the estimate upon which the allocations were originally made is found to exist, who gets that margin of sugar?

Mr. McCARTHY. I shall tell the Senator who will get it. We presently have a contract with Cuba for a large proportion of her sugar. If there is a great surplus of over 5,500,000 tons, as there is, then one of the foreign nations could, I assume, ask for a reallocation. If we accepted that reallocation, that would deprive us of some of that sugar. Presently all of that sugar is allocated to us. I might say further——

Mr. REVERCOMB. May I ask a question at this point?

Mr. McCARTHY. Certainly.

Mr. REVERCOMB. As a matter of fact, the allocations were made upon an estimated production of some 5,000,000 tons; is that correct?

Mr. McCARTHY. Five and a half million tons.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Five and a half million tons. Now it is found that we are going to receive some 6,100,000 tons. Will the allocations made by the International Emergency Food Council to the different countries, including our own, be changed because there has been found to be more sugar?

Mr. McCARTHY. We interrogated witnesses on this question in detail, and so far as I know and so far as I can determine, there is no automatic reallocation. I believe that any one of the nations that is concerned could ask the International Emergency Food Council to reconsider the allocation and give it more sugar.

Let me make a further statement. We have presently allocated 1,600,000 tons of sugar to foreign nations. That sugar is priced at 8 cents a pound, which is the established wholesale price. They can purchase calories, if I may use that term—they can purchase food value in grain much cheaper than in sugar at the present price. So that there is at least some possibility, if they use their dollars wisely, and use them for the purpose of getting the most calories per dollar for starving people, that they may not use the 1,600,000 tons of sugar. Now, if we were to do away with rationing, it would not affect the allocation program so far as sugar to foreign nations is concerned. But it might have this effect, that if sugar were to rise in price 2 or 3 or 4 cents a pound, then the cost of calories in sugar would be so far out of line with the cost of calories in grain that they would undoubtedly not even take—I say undoubtedly—they perhaps would not take the present allocations, and would do what appears to be much wiser, use their dollars to purchase the highest food value, and that is in grain.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator again yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I realize that the Senator has argued from a very practical standpoint as to what may happen. But let us get down to the very basis of this situation. We have talked about getting additional sugar for the individual user, for the housewife. We know how much sugar the United States was going to receive under the original allocation based upon a production of 5,500,000 tons. Now we have some 700,000 additional tons that have been found actually to exist, as the Senator from Wisconsin advises us. What I am asking is: Under the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire will all that 700,000 tons come to the United States. I ask that question of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. I thank the Senator. The statement I would make to the Senator from West Virginia is, that if there is an increase in the large allocation which is divided up among the nations of the world, we will get our proportionate share of that increase, and the whole of that proportionate share will go to the housewife; and all the sugar produced in this country, under the present estimates, will also go to the housewife.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I should like to ask another question of the Senator from New Hampshire? Then in order really to say that the housewife of this country will receive an additional share we will have to provide in the measure we pass that that sugar shall go to the housewife of this country before it is allocated to the people of other countries.

Mr. TOBEY. That cannot be done. We cannot on the floor of the Senate vitiate the terms of an international agreement.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am not trying to vitiate anything. But I say that this sugar comes to the United States. It has been contracted for by this Government. Some 300,000 tons of that sugar are found to be in excess of the basis of the sugar supply upon which the international allocations were made. I put this question to the Senator from New Hampshire: Is it not necessary that we fix a minimum amount that the housewife is to receive if we are going to protect her in connection with the increased quantity of sugar we receive?

Mr. TOBEY. The answer to that question in my judgment is "No," because the increase the Senator speaks of we hold in trust for other nations through the Commodity Credit Corporation. It is not our sugar.

Mr. REVERCOMB. One more question. Does the Senator agree with the argument that it is possible that the foreign countries will not need all of the 1,600,000 tons allocated to them?

Mr. TOBEY. They have now a smaller amount than we have, and far be it from me to say that they do not need the smaller amount than we have. Who has the authority to raise that question?

Mr. REVERCOMB. I am not arguing.

Mr. TOBEY. I am not argumentative. I say that whereas they now have under the international agreement a lower allocation than the United States has, it is rather presumptive for me or anybody else to say that they would not want to use what they now have allocated to them.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I wish to point out that the matter now being discussed has nothing to do with the question whatsoever. Canada and England have exactly the same per capita allocation that we have. There is no difference. I do not think that has anything to do with the question of rationing in this country, because our rationing will not affect the allocation program except insofar as it may induce some other nations not to take their full allocation.

Mr. REVERCOMB. One more thing. It seems to me that the very heart of the situation so far as additional sugar for the housewife, for the individual, is concerned, is that there will be some 700,000 additional tons by actual measurements after the crop is in. It seems to me, then, that the whole question of whether the housewife shall receive additional sugar comes down to what proportion of that sugar is coming to this country.

Mr. McCARTHY. I heartily agree with the Senator. Presently there may be indications that we shall not get the full amount of sugar from Cuba that we have contracted for. There has been no request for increased allocations. They are now getting 600,000 tons more than they got prior to the war. It is entirely possible that some of the other nations may request a reallocation by the International Emergency Food Council. Whether such a reallocation would be granted or not, I have no way of knowing. But as things stand today we have a contract for the sugar. We shall get an additional 700,000 tons of sugar.

Mr. REVERCOMB. In addition to the original amount?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes; in addition to the original amount.

Mr. COOPER and Mr. FLANDERS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. McCARTHY. I yield first to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I think I stand in the position of a great many other Senators. We did not have an opportunity to attend the hearings or hear the witnesses, particularly the Secretary of Agriculture. Any decision we may make must be based upon the facts developed by the committee and, I believe, upon the judgment of the committee.

I believe also that despite our statements and our interest in helping the housewife, we cannot help the housewife unless the sugar is available. My question is directed to the point as to what sugar is available. I notice from the report of the committee, in table 4, on page 9, that there has been allocated to the United States a total of 6,800,000 tons for 1947.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me interrupt the Senator to clear up that point. No particular amount has been allocated to the United States. There has been allocated to foreign nations, out of the amount which we purchased through Commodity Credit Corporation, the amount of 1,600,000 tons. The allocation to other nations is out of the Cuban supply.

Mr. COOPER. Table 4 is headed "International Emergency Food Council recommended sugar allocation for 1947 by source of supply." The figures are given in thousands of short tons. In the first column, the total recommended allocation for the United States is 6,800,000 tons. As I understand the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire, it would require, on the basis of the allocation of 6,800,000 tons, that 38 pounds per consumer be mandatorially allotted.

Mr. McCARTHY. and that is the present plan of the OPA. It is merely a reaffirmation of what they say they are going to do.

Mr. COOPER. On the basis of an estimated supply of 6,800,000 tons, does the Senator from Wisconsin propose to increase the supply to the individual consumer?

Mr. McCARTHY. Obviously not. We are talking about the additional sugar which is available.

Mr. COOPER. Then it is upon the basis of the increase which the Senator has information will be available.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes. It is based upon the known fact—not an estimate—that we shall have more than 1,000,000 tons of additional sugar. I should like also to point out that the other day the Netherlands East Indies issued a story to the effect that their peace treaty was about ready for signing—it has been initialed—and that when the treaty between the Dutch and the Indonesians has been signed in excess of 1,000,000 tons of sugar will be available for shipment from the East Indies. That will be a windfall. I am not basing my proposal upon that. But if that is true, before the end of the year we shall have a tremendous surplus of sugar, and Government agencies will again be paying our beet farmers not to raise sugar beets.

Mr. COOPER As I understand the proposal of the Senator, it is that an increase can be made, based upon information which has come to him that the imports from Cuba will be increased to a total of 6,137,000 tons.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes. The total amount we shall get from Cuba, assuming that the survey which has been completed is correct, is 3,887,000 tons.

There is one additional item. I am taking the testimony of Mr. Marshall, an official of the Department of Agriculture. He also tells us that there will be an additional 50,000 tons from Hawaii, which gives 791,000 tons, which incidentally is sufficient to give an additional 10 pounds to every one of the 143,000,000 people in the United States, which would bring us up to the total pre-war consumption of sugar.

Mr. COOPER. Pursuing the Cuban situation, I notice on page 8 of the report, in table 1, that the estimate imports from Cuba for this year are 5,500,000 tons. The Senator has stated that he has information that that supply could reach 6,137,000 tons.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me interrupt and give the Senator the complete picture. Originally the Department of Agriculture estimated the Cuban crop at 5,000,000 tons, which is much higher than the figure for last year. It later revised that figure upward to 5,500,000 tons. At the time of the hearings Mr. Dice stated that the estimate was 5,500,000 tons. However, at that time—in fact, 3 days previous to that time—the Agricultural Department had issued a bulletin to the effect that their estimates were again revised upward, to 5,750,000 tons. Let me point out that this is no fault of the Department of Agriculture or any other department. The Cuban crop is being presently harvested. They start to harvest it in January and finish some time in May. Since the hearings have ended, within the past week, a survey of 97 percent of the Cuban sugar producers has been made, and the estimate now is 6,137,000 tons.

Mr. COOPER. Whatever it is, out of the estimated increase in supply of 637,000 tons, the Senator proposes an increase to the individual consumer, whom we have been denominating as the housewife. Is that correct?

Mr. McCARTHY. That, and also the 500,000 tons which OPA presently plans to add to our stock pile this year. So we have 1,100,000 tons of sugar to draw upon.

Mr. COOPER. We have reached that point. How much does the Senator propose to increase the supply to the individual consumer out of the estimated increase?

Mr. McCARTHY. I am sorry, but I did not catch the question.

Mr. COOPER. How many pounds would the increase represent to the individual consumer out of the estimated increase?

Mr. McCARTHY. I have proposed an additional 10 pounds for home use. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] has an amendment which calls for an additional 5 pounds. His amendment also provides that after that 5-pound increase has been granted, any surplus of sugar shall go in proportionate amounts to the industrial user and the housewife. His proposal goes one step further, in that it would not affect the milk processors.

Mr. COOPER. Let me ask a final question. The Senator has stated that there will be a certain additional amount of sugar. The Senator proposes to capture that sugar for the housewife, under a mandatory provision that a certain number of pounds shall be allotted to the housewife.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] would likewise capture it under his amendment, which provides that an increased allotment be made, up to 50 pounds per person, from the expected increase.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me point out that the industrial user is now receiving, roughly, 80 percent of his prewar consumption. The housewife is receiving 67 or 68 percent of her prewar consumption. The proposed additional 5 pounds would bring them both, roughly speaking, up to the same comparative percentage of their prewar consumption; and from this time onward, under the Wherry amendment, it is provided that when there is a further allocation it shall go in equal proportion to the housewife and the industrial user. In other words, if the industrial user gets an additional 10 percent, the housewife will get the same percentage increase.

Mr. COOPER. The Senator stated that an additional 5 pounds would require 375,000 tons of sugar.

Mr. McCARTHY. Approximately that amount.

Mr. COOPER. Is it not true that if there should be an increase of 637,000 tons, under the amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire an amount larger than 5 pounds—almost 10 pounds—would be captured for the housewife out of that increase?

Mr. McCARTHY. Except this: The Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] has been urging that before we decontrol we must build up a sizable stock pile. I think he is correct. I think it would be well if we built up a sizable stock pile. That is also the attitude of Mr. Dice and Mr. Marshall. They apparently feel that instead of consuming the sugar this year we should add it to our stock pile. Under the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] we have absolutely no control whatsoever over Mr. Dice or Mr. Marshall. In view of the fact that the allocations have been admittedly unfair to date, unless we put it down in black and white that by such and such a date we must allocate so much sugar, as is proposed by the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], I have no faith in their judgment. While the Senator from New Hampshire may attempt to do the same thing that the Senator from Nebraska attempts to do, the terms of his amendment are ambiguous. They are indefinite. We know that Mr. Dice and Mr. Marshall, or whoever is in charge, can say, "We will not give it to the consumer. We will add it to the stock pile."

Frankly, I believe that the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska, while it does not go as far as I should like to go, is so infinitely superior to that offered by the Senator from New Hampshire that there is no comparison at all. For that reason I intend to vote against the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire.

The Senator from Kentucky was not present when, relying upon the sincerity of the Senator from New Hampshire, I asked him if he would so change his amendment as to provide for some additional amount of sugar for the housewife. If he would change his amendment to provide that the housewife should receive an additional 5 pounds, and then do something which I think he has probably overlooked, but which has to be done in order to make the amendment a sensible one, namely, provide for the processors of food and the processors of milk, I would heartily support his amendment. The Senator has refused to do so, and the Senator from Vermont has consistently refused to do anything toward definitely providing additional sugar for the housewife.

Mr. COOPER. I do not want to continue repeating. I am only trying to get the facts, to ascertain whether there is any essential difference between the two amendments. As I interpret the facts which I have heard, it seems to me that there is no essential difference between the two amendments.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me interrupt the Senator. There is this difference: The amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire is apparently a mere well-meaning, pious hope and desire. The amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska says that it shall be done by a certain date.

Mr. COOPER. As I understand, the idea of the Senator from Wisconsin is that there is a supply greater than 6,800,000 tons actually coming into this country, and that a definite amount should be allocated.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct.

Mr. COOPER. As I read the Tobey amendment it provides:

> That refined sugar shall be allocated for home consumption at a rate of not less than 35 pounds per capita per calendar year, and any increase in the amount of sugar available for allocation in the calendar year 1947 over the amount recommended by the International Emergency Food Council for allocation to the United States for 1947 shall be allocated for home consumption until the allocation for such use equals 50 pounds of refined sugar per capita.

Mr. McCARTHY. The joker is the word "available." Mr. Dice and Mr. Marshall can interpret the word "available" in any way they care to. They can say that unless we add a million tons to the stock pile the sugar is not available.

Mr. TOBEY. Let me ask a question. The Senator says the word "available" is the nub of the whole amendment. What does "available mean? It means that we have it. When we have it, it can go to the housewife. If the sugar is available, the housewives can get it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Available means one thing to the Senator and another thing to me.

Mr. TOBEY. I am a Yankee. I know what it means to me. It means that we have it in our hands.

Mr. McCARTHY. It does not mean the same thing to the bureaucrats who are administering the law.

Mr. TOBEY. Who is the bureaucrat in this case?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] to the committee amendment.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-one Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the committee amendment on page 2, adding certain words in line 20.

Mr. LANGER, Mr. TOBEY, and other Senators asked for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Chair restate the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], adding certain words at the end of line 20 of the committee amendment on page 2. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll; and Mr. AIKEN answered in the affirmative, when his name was called.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, is it too late to have the amendment read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire to the committee amendment will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment on page 2, in line 20, before the period it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "And provided further, That refined sugar shall be allocated for home consumption at a rate of not less than 35 pounds per capita per calendar year, and any increase in the amount of sugar available for allocation in the calendar year 1947 over the amount recommended by the International Emergency Food Council for allocation to the United States for 1947 shall be allocated for home consumption until the allocation for such use equals 50 pounds of refined sugar per capita."

The legislative clerk resumed and concluded the calling of the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] are absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from Oregon would vote "yea."

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] are necessarily absent. If present and voting, the Senator from Nevada would vote "yea."

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are detained on public business.

The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY] and the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] are unavoidably detained.

If present and voting, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "yea."

So Mr. TOBEY's amendment to the first committee amendment on page 2 was agreed to.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote just taken.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, it is proposed to strike out beginning with line 21, as follows:

SEC. 2. The Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to remove any or all controls with respect to any other product over which control is authorized by this act prior to its expiration when in his judgment the supplies of sugar are sufficient to warrant such action.

And to insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 2. Prior to the expiration of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to remove any or all controls with respect to any product over which control is authorized by this act when he determines that the supplies of sugar are sufficient to warrant such action.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment of the committee was on page 3, line 24, to strike out the following:

(c) So much of the unexpended balances, appropriations, or other funds available for the use of any agency in the exercise of the functions transferred by this act as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall determine shall be transferred for use in connection with the exercise of such functions.

And to insert the following:

(c) So much of the unexpended balances of appropriations, allocations, or other funds, and the property available for the use of any agency in the exercise of any function transferred by this act or for the use of the Secretary of Agriculture in the exercise of any function so transferred as the Director of the Bureau of the Budget shall determine, shall be transferred for use in connection with the exercise of such functions. In determining the amount to be transferred, the Director of the Bureau of the Budget may include an amount to provide for the liquidation of obligations incurred, against such balances of appropriations, allocations, or other funds prior to the transfer. Such personnel as required may also be transferred temporarily to the Department of Agriculture pending termination of the functions authorized hereunder. Any personnel so transferred shall not, by virtue of their temporary employment in the Department of Agriculture, acquire or be entitled to any right to employment in such department in connection with the exercise of any function other than a function transferred under this act. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Secretary of Agriculture such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this act.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, with reference to this amendment, it is to take care of veterans and the civil service rights of the transferees from the OTC to the Department of Agriculture under the legislation being considered. I offer as an amendment to it an amendment which has been printed and is on the Senators' desks, and which I ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the committee amendment, on page 4, line 20, after the period, it is proposed to insert the following:

The annual and sick leave of personnel so transferred shall be transferred with them; and they shall be entitled to the benefits of section 14 of the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944 to the same extent and effect as though they had remained employees of the agency from which transferred until the termination of such functions.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, may we have an explanation from the Senator of New Hampshire as to just what that means? It says they "shall be entitled to the benefits of section 14 of the Veterans Preference Act of 1944." Does that mean that the Veterans Preference Act applies in any way other than to veterans?

Mr. TOBEY. It has no such implication. The purpose of the amendment is merely to insure to the men who are veterans, and who are employees of the OTC, that their rights as such under veterans' legislation and civil-service laws would be the same as if they had never been transferred.

Mr. REVERCOMB. It applies only to veterans?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] to the committee amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the next amendment of the committee.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 5, line 5, after the word "heretofore", it is proposed to strike out the word "used" and insert the word "issued."

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 5, line 6, before the word "referred", to strike out the word "act", and insert in lieu thereof the word "acts."

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That completes the amendments of the committee.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I offer the amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 2, line 7, to strike out "March 31, 1948", and insert in lieu thereof "October 31, 1947, except that authority to continue inventory controls over other than household users may be exercised to and including March 31, 1948."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY].

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will not the clerk read the remainder of the amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that the other amendments are separate amendments. Does the Senator desire to have them read for information?

Mr. McCARTHY. I should like to have them read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the clerk will read as requested.

The CHIEF CLERK. Immediately before section 3, on page 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

(6) Not less than 40 pounds of refined sugar shall be allocated during the period from April 1, 1947, through October 31, 1947, to each person in the United States for home consumption, to be made available as follows:

(i) Not less than 10 pounds shall be made available for purchase from April 1, 1947, through June 30, 1947;

(ii) Not less than 20 pounds shall be available for purchase from July 1, 1947, through September 30, 1947; and

(iii) Not less than 10 pounds shall be available for purchase from October 1, 1947, through October 31, 1947; and

(7) In the event the quantity allocated to nonprovisional industrial users during any portion of the period from April 1, 1947, is increased above the base allocation of such users the quantity herein required to be allocated for home consumption during such portion of such period shall be proportionately increased. For the purposes of this act nonprovisional industrial users means industrial users who, as of February 18, 1947, were allocated sugar on the basis of use during a base period; and

(2) Base allocation with respect to any interval of time means 75 percent of the quantity of sugar used by such nonprovisional industrial users during the corresponding portion of the base period.

Insert immediately prior to section 2 the following:

(b) Notwithstanding the provision of any other law the Secretary of Agriculture in exercising the allocation and rationing authority transferred to him by section 2 of this act shall in a manner consistent with the maintenance of effective national allocation and rationing program, provide for the needs of hardship cases, for the needs of new sugar users, and for the needs of those who have no base period history.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, am I to understand that the Senator is offering a series of amendments, or a substitute for the bill?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will say to the Senator from Illinois that there are two separate amendments. One proposes to change the date as it appears in the joint resolution as reported by the committee, and the other makes substantial changes in the committee's proposal with reference to the handling of the entire matter.

The Chair would ask the Senator from Wisconsin if he desires to request unanimous consent for the consideration of the two amendments as one? They are related.

Mr. McCARTHY. I should prefer to consider them as one, and I would like to ask unanimous consent that the two amendments may be considered as one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Wisconsin to consider these two amendments as one?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry to see if I understand the ruling of the Chair. We have adopted an amendment providing for an allocation for domestic use of 35 pounds of sugar. I understand that the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin now seeks to change that amendment, which was adopted, by raising the allocation to 40 pounds, and making it compulsory.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. As the Chair understands the amendment, the Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I make the point of order that the amendment for a compulsory allotment of 40 pounds is not in order.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, may I point out to the Senator that the second part of my proposed amendment, dealing with the allocation of sugar, will not be in order, unless the first part of the amendment is adopted. If we adopt that part of my amendment which changes the termination date of rationing from March 31, 1948, to October 31, 1947, then there is nothing contradictory in the amendment which I now propose, and the admendment which has been adopted, for the reason that——

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me finish, please—for the reason that the Tobey amendment calls for a minimum of 35 pounds for the entire year. My amendment calls for a definite amount of 40 pounds during a certain period of that year. It in no way conflicts with the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire. If he set a maximum requirement, there would be a conflict.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, with all due deference to my distinguished colleague, I do not agree with his position, but in the event his position should be correct, I would be compelled to ask for a separation of the amendments, and that the vote be taken first on the proposal to fix October 31, 1947, as the date for the termination of control.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I have no objection to a separation of the amendments.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I believe I have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska desires to propound a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. WHERRY. As I understood, the Chair ruled that it required the unanimous consent of the Senate to consider the amendments as one.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I withdraw the request that the two amendments be considered as one. I will withdraw that request so they may be taken up separately.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin withdraws his request. The amendments he has offered will be considered separately. The question now is upon agreeing to the first amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY].

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask that the amendment be stated.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the first amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed on page 2, line 7, to strike out "March 31, 1948", and insert in lieu thereof "October 31, 1947", except that authority to continue inventory controls over other than household users may be exercised to and including March 31, 1948.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the first amendment.

Several Senators asked for the yeas and nays, and they were ordered.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I would like to be heard upon the amendment. I still have the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I might repeat—and I shall be very brief—that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] and myself, who very extensively studied the sugar situation, both feel that decontrol should take place as of now, and not as of next fall. However, a number of things have been pointed out to us.

First. The Senators who come from States where sugar beets are raised, and Senators who come from States where sugarcane is an important industry, have pointed out to us that if we decontrol as of March 31 of this year, then any temporary price increase will inure to the benefit of the Cuban sugar producer, but that if we wait and decontrol as of October 31, then if there is any temporary price rise, the American beet grower and the American cane grower will benefit thereby. That is one of the reasons why we are willing to change the date of it.

Second. All the charts prepared by the Department of Agriculture, all the information which we have indicates that the consumer demand is at an all-time low on the 31st of October. The canning season has ended, the so-called Christmas cooking season has not begun, so that at that particular time of the year we can perhaps more safely decontrol than at the date originally suggested.

I would like to point out for the benefit of the Senators who were not here at the time this point was covered, that the OPA stated unqualifiedly that if and when we had 8,000,000 tons of sugar available we could decontrol. All the figures now show that we do have that amount available, and if any of the Senators want to inquire beyond that, as to the source of the figures, or where the sugar is available, I shall be glad to answer questions; otherwise I shall not take more time on this phase of the subject.

Mr. ELLENDER and Mr. TOBEY addressed the Chair.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator from Wisconsin had yielded the floor.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have not yielded the floor. I will yield for a question.

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not desire to ask a question. I desire to speak on my own account.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am sorry. Then I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin yields the floor. The Chair recognizes the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I shall not detain the Senate long, but this matter has been considered in the subcommittee, in the committee, and in the Senate. The Senate has adopted the Tobey amendment, and has fixed the allocation for the coming year. The date in the bill is March 31, 1948. Now, at the last hour, the Senator from Wisconsin, who has been trying to kill this bill from the very beginning, comes forward and offers this entirely radical change, which is exceedingly important. He would change the date to October 31 instead of March 31.

I desire to be heard to read four paragraphs from a letter which will show the lack of wisdom in the attempt that is now being made.

> Stocks of sugar in the United States are normally at the lowest seasonal level in October. At that time the stocks of beet sugar have been exhausted in preparation for the new beet crop which begins to move in volume in November. Seaboard cane-sugar stocks are at a low level in October because of the heavy distribution during the heavy consumption months of July, August, and September, and the distribution of the mainland cane crop begins in that month. The termination of controls on October 31 would come at a time when there is the least amount of sugar available to absorb the first shocks of decontrol and, therefore, could be expected to result in greater price fluctuations and more serious distribution troubles than at any other season of the year.
> If it is known in advance that controls must be removed on October 31, as would be the case if the committee's resolution is enacted, it is almost certain that a considerable amount of sugar will be withheld from consumption channels in anticipation of decontrol on October 31 and higher prices immediately thereafter. Any sugar withheld from consumption would, of course, be in stocks in October, but October stocks still would be at the seasonal low point for the year. Such withholding would result in insufficient distribution of sugar during the heavy consumption season when orderly distribution is most important from the standpoint of saving the maximum quantities of perishable agricultural commodities.
> It is questionable whether decontrol on October 31 would result in any considerable increase in the production of sugar this year. The certainty of decontrol on that date could not result in any increase in cane sugar production because new plantings of sugarcane will not be ready for grinding until after March 1948 at the earliest, and later in most areas. There might be a slight increase in the plantings of sugar beets but the amount of such increase would necessarily be small because it is anticipated that the price-support program already announced for 1947 crop beets will result in a production of beets almost equal to the capacity of the processing facilities. The small additional acreage which might possibly be planted in some areas would produce a very small quantity of sugar in relation to our total supplies for the year. Moreover, sugar beet growers have announced their support of an extension of controls until March 31, 1948, with a provision that the Secretary of Agriculture should remove controls at an earlier date if the supply of sugar warrants such action.

Mr. President, the last clause is extremely important. In the joint resolution which I believe the Senate is about to pass, the Secretary of Agriculture is directed to remove controls at the earliest possible moment when the supply makes it possible. That is his job. Not only is it mandatory, Mr. President, but the Secretary of Agriculture has given us his word, and his word is good. He is a gentleman and a man of integrity; and he desires to remove these controls just as soon as it is humanly possible to do so. I submit, Mr. President, that I have made out a case that October 31 is a dangerous time, and this expert testimony has given further strength to that case.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TOBEY. Not until I am through. I am continuing my statement, I will say to the Presiding Officer.

The point I make, Mr. President, is that the job for us to do is to back up the committee which voted 10 to 3 to report the joint resolution favorably to the Senate. A small group of Senators has been trying all the way through to kill the measure.

Mr. McCARTHY and Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I should like to ask the distinguished Senator if it is not true that even if there should be a slight increase this year in the production of beet sugar, distribution could not be made by October 31? It would run well past that date.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me on that point?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I was asking the question of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield further to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Is it not true that if there should be an increase in beet-sugar production this year the supply could not be distributed until early next year?

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator not yield at that point?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield further to the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. The Secretary of Agriculture said he could not distribute the increased production of beet sugar until early next year, did he not?

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. So, if there should be a slight increase in sugar-beet production, we could not obtain the benefit thereof until early next year.

Mr. TOBEY. That is correct.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Is it not also true that by decontrol as of March 31, 1948, we would have the prospect, perhaps, of additional sugar from Cuba, some sugar from the Philippines, some sugar from the Dutch East Indies, and from other sources that could not possibly be available if we decontrolled on October 31, which the Secretary of Agriculture said would be the time of the lowest ebb of our supply in this country.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I wish first to answer the Senator from Virginia in the affirmative. I now yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to cite authority on the point under discussion. I have been studying the matter for weeks. When the sugar crop will be available is important. I am glad the question has been raised. I shall speak of the Cuban crop first and then of the beet crop. According to detailed charts which have been prepared to March 1947, supplied by the Department of Agriculture, the Cuban crop commences to become available in large quantities late in February, and it continues on a fairly even keel until along in August and September.

The beet crop starts to become heavily available about the first of October. On the 31st of October it reaches the high point. By that I mean it is available not to the refiners, but to the consuming public. It continues to drop off very heavily until the latter part of December. Then there is no noticeable available beet sugar until the following October.

So we do have that picture. The Cuban crop is available from February until late in August and September. Then there is a dropping off, and then we have heavy production from October until about the 18th or 20th of December. That is what is shown by the charts prepared by the Department of Agriculture on the subject.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I would say to my distinguished colleague from Wisconsin that all the testimony I have heard or read on this subject is to the effect that stocks of sugar in the United States are normally at the lowest seasonal level in October, and beet sugar cannot be distributed by that time. I will say further that it may be that some of the beet sugar growers might like to see a whirl of 25-cent or 30-cent or 40-cent sugar even for one fall. I remember what was called the Dance of the Millions in Cuba. I went down there after the price of sugar had dropped from 20 cents raw to nine-tenths of 1 cent raw, and saw the misery and suffering resulting from the inflation and the deflation, which wrecked the country. I am sure my distinguished colleague received a letter written by the representative of all the sugar-producing industries of Cuba begging us not to precipitate another disaster of that kind upon them, but to continue the control not only until this fall but until next spring.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield to me at that point so I may say a word regarding the letter written by the Cuban producers?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Hampshire yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. TOBEY. If the Senator from Virginia has finished, I will be glad to yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I do not think we can get very far in this matter unless we can agree on the facts.

Mr. TOBEY. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. McCARTHY. The Senator asked me a question. I should like to answer it. I saw the letter from the Cuban producers, and the full-page advertisement which the Cuban producers ran in the newspapers, and the high point in the letter was this:

They objected to doing away with sugar control, because it was contended that if we did so it might encourage the production of sugar in other parts of the world to the detriment of the Cuban sugar producers. I do not think we are here today to legislate to protect the Cuban sugar-beet industry.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. A 2-cent tariff will not protect sugar in this country if the price goes up, as the Secretary suggests, to 30 or 40 cents. What would 2 cents mean? When the price drops it will ruin our beet-sugar and cane-sugar producers.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. FLANDERS. Who has the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] has the floor.

Mr. FLANDERS. I thank the Chair.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Let me ask the Senator from New Hampshire this question: Does he believe that 1 year of high prices for domestic sugar could repay our domestic farmers for 4 or 5 years of depression if we were to stimulate the world production of sugar to the point where our present tariff would be no protection whatever?

Mr. TOBEY. The answer is "No."

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOBEY. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, we have been hopping about in a maze of statistics—or rather a swamp of statistics, because from time to time we have set one foot on solid ground, but no more than one foot at any time.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Does not the Senator from New Hampshire lose the floor if he farms out the time for speeches?

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Vermont is asking me a question. This is the preamble to the question.

Mr. FLANDERS. The question I am asking the Senator from New Hampshire is this——

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Has the Senator from New Hampshire lost the floor by farming out the time to the proponents of his measure and refusing to yield to other Senators?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that if any Senator raises a point of order in that connection, the Senator to whom the floor has been yielded must ask a question or else subside.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I raise that point.

Mr. TOBEY. I suggest to the Senator from Vermont that he ask a question.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I was about to ask a question, but it has been some time since I started to ask the question. This is the question——

Mr. TOBEY. Perhaps we had better vote.

Mr. FLANDERS. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] on behalf of himself and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER]. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I rise to speak in support of the pending amendment. The reason why I do so is that I have on the desk an amendment in the nature of a substitute, which incorporates the amendment which is now before the Senate. The amendment, I may say, stands out as the main difference between the House bill and the Senate measure.

My substitute is not my own handiwork. It happens to be the bill which was passed by the House with very little opposition. Let me say at this point that since it is essential that the Congress take action on sugar legislation before the 31st of this month, which is next Monday, it might be a good idea for the Senate to adopt the House bill, which I have at the desk, as a substitute for the measure now being considered.

Mr. President, I do not desire to delve at length in statistical data. Many figures have been submitted to the Senate pertaining to sugar consumption and production during the course of this debate. However, I ask the indulgence of Senators to listen to me so that I may present to them the world picture so far as sugar production is concerned.

The record shows that world production of sugar reached its lowest point since the beginning of the war in the 1945–1946 season. The production for that period was 26,692,000 tons, which was 77 percent of the prewar 1935–39 average production of 34,660,000 tons. The estimated production for 1946–47 season is 30,361,000 tons, which is 88 percent of prewar production. It can readily be seen that in one season after the war we have raised production to but 12 percent of our average 1935–1939 production and I have little doubt that during the 1947–48 season world production will be greater than the prewar 5-year average above referred to.

The greatest loss in sugar manufacturing occurred in countries which were ravished by war. For example, the European production decreased to 53 percent of the prewar average. The average production for Europe before the war was 10,366,000 tons which decreased to 5,494,000 during the 1945–46 season and by the 1946–47 season production had increased by almost 2,000,000, or 71 percent of prewar production. The same may be said of decreased sugar production in the Asiatic area, where the drop was more pronounced. For example, the production in the Philippine Islands before the war was in excess of 1,000,000 tons. In the 1945–46 season only 115,000 tons were produced and the estimate for the 1946–47 season is only 200,000 tons. It is expected that during the 1947–48 season there will be considerably more sugar manufactured.

I believe that the Congress should enact a law along the lines of the bill passed by the House. I believe that controls on sugar are necessary until October 31 of this year.

Our production in the Western Hemisphere has increased considerably since and during the war. As I pointed out a moment ago, production in the Asiatic portion of the world, as well as the European portion, was on the decline. But in North and Central America and in the West Indies the reverse was true. We might have expected a steady, normal prewar production, which most of us would have probably been satisfied with, but instead there was an increase of 11 percent in 1945–46 over our prewar average. Prior to the war the average production for North and Central America and the West Indies aggregated 8,745,000 tons, and in 1945–46 it increased to 9,606,000 tons. This season, 1946–47, the increase is 28 percent over the prewar average production, so that this year there will be produced in North and Central America and the West Indies an estimated 11,157,000 tons. All of this production has been on the incline, and I expect and anticipate that the increase will be much greater in all other sections of the world, so that the 1947–48 season will bring such an abundance of sugar as to satisfy the requirements of all users of the commodity.

The main difference between the joint resolution which is now before the Senate and the House bill hinges on the time element involved in cutting off controls. The House bill provides, as does the amendment which is now before the Senate, for October 31 of this year as the period at which controls and rationing shall end.

As to inventory controls, both measures provide that the date at which they shall cease shall be March 31, 1948. That is a very important provision to retain in the bill we finally pass. The principal reason for the retention of inventory controls is to make it impossible for large industrial sugar users to corner the market and load up with all the sugar in sight, and thereby defeat the housewife in obtaining her just share of the sugar which is available. They could buy large quantities during the next few months and store it for future use and the housewife may have to do without it for home use and canning purposes. Under this provision, as I understand it, the Secretary of Agriculture could limit the purchases of large industrial users to say a 30 to 40 days' supply.

I am certain that October 31 should be the period which this Congress should agree upon as the date on which to cease all controls and rationing. There are a number of reasons for that position, and I shall attempt to discuss a few of them.

First, the period during the year when sugar is purchased in greatest amount for all purposes is from the month of March through the month of October of each year. There is a great demand for sugar not only by industrial users but also by housewives. More soft drinks, ice cream, cakes, and the like are consumed during the summer, a large amount of fruit is canned during the fall both by the large canneries and the housewife and therefore the demand for sugar is much greater.

If the Senate adopts March 31, 1948, as the date upon which to remove controls, my guess is that the sugar processors of Cuba, Hawaii, the Virgin Islands and Puerto Rico will not be inclined to send their products to this country, because there will be on the statute books a law which will result in producing higher prices after March 31. The natural inclination will be for them to retain their sugar so they can sell it on an uncontrolled and unrestricted market. That will be the consequence if March 31, 1948, is the date fixed by law.

In Louisiana we begin our sugar operations in October. The sugar-beet producers begin their operations, I understand, in the latter part of September and early October. Puerto Rico, Cuba, and all off-shore producers that supply our markets begin their operations in early January. I believe it goes without saying that those producers will hold back the sale of their product. Then who will suffer? The housewife. There will not be much sugar sold to consumers from new production between October when the new crop begins to be manufactured and March 31, 1948, when all rationing and price controls are removed. The result will be, I repeat, that most of the sugar that comes to this country or is produced here will be stored somewhere and not put on the market. There is a situation now existing which will be far different from that which will prevail after all controls are off. We can now better control the distribution of such sugar we now have at our disposal. Why? It is because the Federal Government, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, has purchased the entire output of Cuban processors and the entire output of Puerto Rican processors and hence the distribution of sugar will have strings tied to it, as it were, and the Government is in position to see to it that sugars are equitably distributed and not hoarded. In other words, our Government will be armed with two methods of controls, one by virtue of the ownership of the greater portion of sugar for our requirements for this year and then rationing and price controls that will be voted by the Congress.

But after March 31, 1948, insofar as new sugar is concerned, there will be no such controls; and I can see the Cuban sugar manufacturers, the Puerto Rican manufacturers, and the Hawaiian manufacturers keeping all their new crop of sugar in warehouses in the hope that after March 31 they will be able to sell all of their crop on an uncontrolled market at nice, fancy prices. They know that we are dependent on them for our supplies, and it will be almost miraculous if they did not force us to buy at their own price.

Regardless of when controls are removed, we will necessarily have a little increase in the price; there is no question about that. But my argument is this: Why not permit the increase in prices at a time when consumers do not use much sugar? That would be accomplished by making October 31 as the date to end price and ration controls. Why remove controls in March, when that period is the beginning of the season when there is the greatest demand for sugar for all purposes, such as for soft drinks, for making ice cream, cakes, and so forth? What should be done, I repeat, is to remove controls when there is less demand for sugar, when prices would not take the spurt which they would take when there was a large demand for sugar. That is the theory upon which the House bill is predicated.

On the other hand, Mr. President, let us consider the farmers. If the Senate bill as now written is passed, the price paid to the farmers of my State and to those of Florida for every ton of sugarcane they produce will be paid on the basis of sugar sold on a controlled market. That is to say, the Florida sugarcane grower and the Louisiana sugarcane producer will have to sell their cane to manufacturers who will not be compelled to sell the cane sugar as soon as it is manufactured, but processors will be able to store all of it, if they wish to do so; but the price the farmers receive for sugarcane will be based on whatever the market price per pound happens to be under a controlled market. It happens that cane growers are paid on a basis of whatever the average price of sugar is between October 1 and March 1 of each year.

Mr. President, let us now consider the case of the sugar-beet growers. Their situation is slightly different from that of the sugarcane growers. As I understand, the sugar-beet growers are paid on the basis of one-half of the gross receipts of the factory. If farmers sell to a large beet-sugar factory which can store the sugar it produces and can sell it over a period of 12 months, such farmers of course will reap the benefits under such a system. But in Ohio, Michigan, and other States there are many smaller factories which are unable to store their output, but must sell the beet sugar as it is produced, because they lack the finances or facilities to store and hold it. The farmers who sell to those factories will be paid on the basis of prices that are fixed and under control. I venture the opinion that they will be placed in the same category as Louisiana and Florida cane farmers.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. The distinguished Senator from Louisiana said that if we end this control on October 31, the price will go up. I assume, however, that he will agree with me that he would not want to see a period of boom and bust for the cane producers of Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator's question I may say that I do not foresee more than a flurry. I do not expect prices to run wild, for the reason, as I said a while ago, that the period when we are to end controls will be at a time of the year when purchases of sugar or the use of sugar is at its lowest, and production will begin at its greatest. When November comes along all continental sugar processors will be in full operation and then will be followed by offshore manufacturing. The Senator must not overlook the fact that but a small amount of sugar produced after October 31 of each year is consumed in the year it is produced.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Does the Senator know what the official representative of the cane producers told us in the committee as to whether this would be a small bust or a big one? Let me read to the Senator just a paragraph from the record. This was the testimony of Clarence J. Bourg:

> I represent the American Sugar Cane League and the Farmers and Manufacturers Beet Sugar Association.
>
> The former is an association whose members are growers and processors of sugarcane in Louisiana, and the latter is an association of the growers and processors of sugar beets in the States of Michigan, Ohio, and Wisconsin.
>
> We recognize, after making a very thorough study of the sugar statistical picture in the world as it affects the United States market, that this is not the appropriate time for discontinuing controls.
> We are convinced that rationing should be continued beyond March 31, 1947, and price control will be necessary beyond June 30, 1947. Should either or both be discontinued, there would result a chaotic condition.

Not just a little flurry, said this witness representing the cane producers, but he said a chaotic condition would result. He was a representative of the producers of cane sugar, from the Senator's home State.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I am in thorough agreement with the statement just read by the distinguished junior Senator from Virginia, because Mr. Bourg did not question the fixing of October 31. Mr. Bourg was talking about decontrolling allocations and rationing on March 31, 1947, and price controls on June 30, 1947. Of course, I agree with him. That is why today I am on this floor asking that controls be retained until October 31. Mr. Bourg said in his testimony that it would be fatal to many sugar producers—and I agree with him—to take off price controls on June 30 and rationing on March 31. Of course, I agree with him.

What I am arguing for is that we delay the decontrol date until October 31, when our consumption of sugar in this country is at its lowest point and when production is well on its way.

Mr. President, there is no question in my mind that it will mean chaos to the housewife after next January. I am not worried about the period up to December 31 of this year, because we have for distribution among the sugar consumers of our country for this year, 6,800,000 tons. That amount may be somewhat increased because of higher estimates of the Cuban production as was discussed today in the course of this debate.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. In just a moment. Of that amount, that is, the 6,800,000 tons, there is included a carry-over from 1946 of 1,450,000 tons. But with the increased production that is expected from Cuba, the inventory on January 1, 1948, will be 1,900,000 tons, rather than 1,450,000, as in January of this year. We may also expect some sugar from the East Indies.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Is it not a fact that the Senate bill authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to decontrol when he thinks conditions justify it, and will the Senator still stick with his representative from Louisiana, who said this to us:

> We have complete confidence in the Secretary of Agriculture and in the Director of the Sugar Branch of the Department of Agriculture. We are convinced that a transfer of the authority to them would result in the earliest practicable removal of unnecessary controls.

Mr. ELLENDER. I have complete confidence in our Secretary of Agriculture, but I do not have much faith in some of the advisers he has around him. When Mr. Bourg made that statement the Senate bill had written in it a fixed decontrol date of October 31, 1947, with the understanding that said date could be extended if the Secretary found it necessary to do so. I understand that language was deleted from the bill. On the other hand, Mr. President, I want to leave it to Congress to take action. I want Congress to say when controls are to be removed. Let us assert ourselves.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. The spokesman before us for the Senator's industry and the beet sugar industry told us just what I have read, and that is what we put into the bill, thinking that we had the highest source of information we could get.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, it is evident that the distinguished Senator from Virginia has based much of his study on the evidence he heard before the committee. He spent 2 or 3 minutes here reading from a statement made by a representative from the cane area with which I am in full accord and which is not inconsistent with my present position. What the representative from the cane area had in mind when he testified was based on the contents of the bill before him at the time. It is possible that the distinguished Senator is basing his views from the testimony on a bill that is somewhat different from the one now under discussion.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. If the Senator will yield for a suggestion, the Senator from Virginia spent 10 years as a member of the Committee on Ways and Means of the House of Representatives, and time after time he heard the sugar people, the beet-sugar and the cane people, who come before that committee on the subject of tariffs on sugar, and the distinguished Senator from Louisiana, I think, will agree with me that if he today had his choice between 100-percent increase in the tariff on sugar and the additional allocation of 500,000 tons under the Jones-Costigan Act, he would take the latter. The Senator knows his people need the control and that the tariff is not enough, and he knows that our previous experience was that uncontrolled prices will run the industry into serious trouble.

Mr. ELLENDER. The question raised by the distinguished Senator from Virginia has no place in this debate. Of course, I prefer the quota system to the imposition of tariffs. There is no question about that. But what I am arguing for—and I do not like to repeat it—is simply that we in America, who produce but 29 percent of our sugar requirements, are going to be at the mercy of Cuban producers, as we were following World War I. Manipulators held the sugar back and sold it at whatever prices the traffic would bear. If we at this time should make the mistake of providing that controls should end on March 31 of next year, there is no question that Cuban and many other offshore producers of sugar would retain their supply of sugar with a view of selling it on an uncontrolled market, manipulating it so as to obtain high prices for it.

So I say to my colleagues, let us have controls end on March 31, when the consumption of sugar is at its lowest peak during the year, rather than when production starts and is at its highest. That is the way to handle the situation.

Mr. OVERTON. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is saying March 31. Does he not mean October 31?

Mr. ELLENDER. I am sorry. What I intended to say is that the lowest period during the year of sugar consumption is during the latter part of October of each year.

Mr. OVERTON. That is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. And the greatest production begins about that time.

Mr. OVERTON. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ELLENDER. That is what I intended to say and I thank my distinguished colleague for his correction.

Mr. OVERTON. That is all there is to it.

Mr. ELLENDER. Absolutely.

Mr. OVERTON. It is just as plain as can be.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Louisiana yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I yield for a question.

Mr. DWORSHAK. I understand our Government has a contract with the Cuban sugar producers to take over most of their crop.

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Is there not some provision contained in the agreement as to the price to be paid for the sugar?

Mr. ELLENDER. Yes.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Would not that provide protection against an uncontrolled price?

Mr. ELLENDER. I am not talking about next year's crop. So far as this year's crop is concerned, we are protected, because we have bought that sugar at a certain price, and it is under the control of the Commodity Credit Corporation.

We have also bought the Puerto Rican crop, and the Government controls that output of production, and it can sell that sugar and dispose of it so as to prevent hoarding, and to compel a fair distribution of that supply.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I do not desire to address the Senate any longer. I am going to reserve a little bit of my energy to debate the House bill when I offer it as a substitute to the pending Senate bill.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont has the floor.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I had the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator yielded the floor.

Mr. ELLENDER. I was in the process of answering a question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator was in the process of yielding the floor, as far as the Chair could see. Will the Senator from Vermont yield to the Senator from Louisiana?

Mr. FLANDERS. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. LANGER. I want to know who bought the Cuban sugar last year and the year before.

Mr. ELLENDER. The Commodity Credit Corporation bought the entire Cuban sugarcane crop this year, and under agreement reached with the International Food Control Organization, about a third of the entire crop will be sold to 14 countries, giving to them in some cases a per capita consumption equal to 75 percent of their prewar requirements, and in other cases as much as 90 percent; and we, under the agreement, are to obtain the remaining two-thirds of the Cuban crop.

Mr. LANGER. A further question to the Senator. Is that true of the crop this year?

Mr. ELLENDER. It is.

Mr. LANGER. We will only get from 10 to 12 percent?

Mr. ELLENDER. Oh, no; we get two-thirds of the Cuban crop. We get 3,146,000 tons out of an estimated production of 5,500,000. The rest of it goes to these various countries, as I indicated a moment ago.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I want to address myself very briefly, because the position can be stated very briefly, to the question of the October 31 date. There are two troubles with the October 31 date. The first trouble is that on that announced date and in anticipation of it, for 2 or 3 months previously sugar will be withdrawn from the markets, just as much on October 31 as on March 31. It will be withdrawn in anticipation of higher prices subsequent to the removal of the controls. It will be withdrawn from the market during the canning season. It will be withdrawn during a month in which the stocks are the next to the lowest of any month in the year. September is the month of lowest stocks. October is the month of the next to the lowest stocks, and it is one of the months of medium production, neither the highest nor the lowest. But the principal thing I am emphasizing is that the release of controls on that date would leave the markets bare of sugar for household use for 2 or 3 months preceding.

That leads me to the second point which I wish to make, and this, it seems to me, is the most important point about the pending measure and the whole process of removing controls. It is this: The date of removal of controls must not be legislated; it must be administered. March 31, the date set in the committee's proposal, is not a date of relinquishing controls. The Secretary of Agriculture is simply told "You must relinquish controls by March 31." Any date which the Congress sets as a date for relinquishing controls is an invitation to hoarding and to speculation and to market disorganization, and to inability of both housewives and of industry to get sugar. We must not, particularly if we consider ourselves to be friends of the American housewife, set legislatively the decontrol date, and by all means, we must not set October 31 as the decontrol date. A worse date for the housewife of America could by no means be picked even by some satanic group interested in disrupting our home economy in this country. It is the worst possible date.

I beg of the Senate not to legislate a date of decontrol. Let that come from the Administrator, like a stroke of lightning from Heaven. That is the only way the thing should be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I have been waiting for several days to make a few brief remarks on the subject of sugar legislation. I regret that it has been necessary to attend committee meetings, both morning and afternoon, to such an extent that I have not been able to keep in constant touch with the debate here on the floor; but I am certain that the few remarks I wish to make in defense of the October 31 date will be appropriate at this time.

The joint resolution as reported by the Senate committee sets a date of March 31, but I consider the House version, setting the date of October 31, much the best in the interests of the people of our country.

Mr. President, in my judgment, one of the principal reasons why the people of this Nation voted to change the political control of both the House and Senate was the desire to get rid of all these unnecessary wartime controls. The people discovered last summer that continuation of controls meant continued shortages. They voted to get rid of those controls just as rapidly as possible. We have a clear mandate on that point.

For that reason, I am frankly very reluctant to vote for any extension at all of these controls on sugar. I am willing to do so only for a very short period of time, and only because it is clear we cannot correct the mistakes of many years in a few weeks.

In my opinion it is ridiculous that there should still be a shortage of sugar in March 1947—over 18 months after the end of the fighting. If prompt energetic steps had been taken by the Administration to meet this situation by expanding sugar production, these controls could be wiped out immediately. Such steps were not taken. We still have a sugar shortage. We must face that fact and give the sugar industry a few more months to recover. For that reason I believe we must extend the controls for a short period in the interest of avoiding a run-away market that would do no one any good.

Nevertheless it is important to get rid of the controls as soon as possible. There will never be a perfect time to wipe them out. I say that because I am convinced that disruptions and shortages will continue as long as the controls continue. It is the control program which has kept sugar production from expanding to meet our needs. Controls cause shortages. We saw that proved last year in the case of meat and many other commodities. It is even more true with respect to sugar. Price control has prevented farmers from growing all the sugar we need, since the returns to them on other uncontrolled crops were far more profitable.

In fact, in some parts of the country, on sugar-beet land, farmers are growing potatoes which we do not need and which may eventually be sold to the Government and left in the field to rot. The prices that have been set by our economic planners have led them to grow potatoes we do not need instead of sugar that we do need. That has been the result of Government planning. It is a situation that will not be corrected until we encourage the farmers to expand to meet our requirements.

If controls are to be lifted on October 31 by legislation that we pass this week it will serve as a clear announcement to our farmers that they can depend on receiving a profitable price for all the sugar they want to grow. Planting of sugar beets has not been completed in most parts of the country, but it will be very soon. In other words, this proposition is a matter of telling our farmers now that we want them to expand their sugar acreage just as rapidly and as much as they can. If we extend these controls until next March, the domestic sugar producer will have practically all his 1947 sugar sold before that time. He will know that he will have to sell at the present fixed price or something very close to it. It will serve clear notice on him that the Government does not want or expect him to increase production. If we do tell him any such thing as that, we can hardly blame him for drawing his own conclusions and turning his acreage to beans and potatoes.

Mr. President, in this connection, I wish to say that from the newspapers of the last 2 or 3 days which have come to me from Nebraska, I have this little clipping:

THIRTY-FIVE THOUSAND SIX HUNDRED AND EIGHTY-NINE ACRES OF BEETS SEEN—NORTH PLATTE VALLEY CROP MAY BE UP 20 PERCENT

SCOTTSBLUFF, NEBR.—A total of 35,689 acres of sugar beets have been contracted so far in the North Platte Valley, exclusive of the Wheatland (Wyo.) district, P. H. McMaster, general manager of the Nebraska district of the Great Western Sugar Co., said Saturday.

This represents an increase of 20 percent on the same farms and farms which did not grow beets a year ago.

"If this same percentage of increase continues throughout the contracting season, from 54,000 to 55,000 acres of beets will be planted in the valley this year," he said.

Some farmers plan to start planting late this month. Some beet labor already is arriving and other groups are en route from Texas. Mr. McMaster said the company would be able to provide all necessary labor to growers.

Contracting will be completed in about 10 days.

That is in the first irrigation district that was ever completed in the United States, in the North Platte Valley.

Another news item deals with Alliance, which is located on high ground irrigated by pump irrigation. I read from the Nebraska Farmer of March 15, as follows:

NEBRASKA'S CHAMP SUGAR PRODUCERS

The Koester brothers, of Alliance, are the champion sugar producers of Nebraska. They have won the title seven consecutive years.

The brothers produced a total of 294.1 acres that yielded an average of 16.19 tons per acre with a total sugar production of 1,464,532 pounds. Harold Ledingham, of Mitchell, was the reserve champion with 795,925 pounds produced on 146.31 acres that averaged 20.13 tons per acre.

Phillip Schriener, of Haig, is the champion sugar-beet producer in the State. He produced 25.75 tons of beets per acre on 20.99 acres. Jack Gempert, of Mitchell, is the reserve champion producer with an average of 25.24 tons per acre on 19.04 acres.

Mr. President, those figures are given, as I stated, in order to show the importance of increasing the acreage as early as possible, and that increased acreage will come as a result of the announcement that the closing date on controls will be on October 31 this year. I am speaking from the standpoint of the producer, and it is the producer who is going to answer our sugar problems, and not the consumer.

There are other important reasons for preferring the October date. During the past few months, it has become clear that the world-wide sugar picture is not nearly so black as it has been painted. Just a few months ago, the administration was predicting a Cuban sugar crop of only 5,000,000 tons. Then recently that estimate was increased to 5,500,000 tons. Now the latest reports are that Cuba will produce this spring more than 6,100,000 tons. It is clear that our department experts have been too pessimistic about sugar prospects all along. I do not charge that these underestimates have been due to a desire to extend controls and maintain the present bureaucratic regimentation. I do suspect, however, that it is in the nature of a bureaucrat always to seek out and find some excuse for maintaining and increasing Government regulations. The whole case for control was based on the assumption of an extreme shortage. We now find there are over a million tons more than we thought there were. Most of the case for continuation of control has therefore vanished.

Another argument for early decontrol is the availability of substantial amounts of free sugar in various parts of the world. Cuba, for example, reserved 300,000 tons out of her supply to sell to her other customers in Latin America and elsewhere. I believe she has had some difficulty in finding a market for this sugar at the prices she wants. If our prices go a little bit higher, it may come here. The same is probably true of sugar from several smaller supplying countries. I suspect we shall find that a good deal of sugar will come out in the open for sale if prices are lifted slightly. At the present time it is a good speculation for any country to withhold sugar off the market and wait for the end of controls. Once controls are removed, that speculative motive will disappear.

In this connection I want to say that within the last 2 or 3 days I had a conversation with a gentleman whose business it is to distribute sugar in the wholesale market. He told me that the sugar is backing up on the grocers' shelves, and I am sure that Senators who have sugar coupons are going to have no difficulty in obtaining the sugar represented by them two or three times over if they happen to pick up extra coupons in the near future. Sugar is not moving at the present time from the retail shelves.

Frankly, if we do not definitely decide to get rid of the controls this year, we shall be faced with the very same problem at the beginning of next year. The Department of Agriculture has never given us concrete assurance that there will be all the sugar we want even next spring. I do not know whether there will ever be enough sugar to supply every country in the world with all the sugar it wants. I see no logic in keeping controls for another year or two or three in the hope that some day there will be sugar to supply every country with enough sugar to bring it up to the American standard of consumption. Most of the other countries buying sugar in competition with us are using our money to do it with, anyway. I repeat, we do not dare extend these controls until next year when we know we will have to face this same problem again and decide, under pressure, whether to keep the controls on until 1949.

It is worth remembering a few of the panicky predictions that were made last year when we were considering price-control legislation. It is worth remembering that butter did not go up to a dollar a pound and stay there; that meat is now available for far less than the black-market prices of last summer. We owe it to our belief in the American way of doing business to get rid of the controls on one more American industry at the earliest possible date. If we really believe in our own system, we can hardly do otherwise.

One point I have hardly touched on is the importance of this subject to the agriculture of the irrigated sections of the Middle West and the West. Sugar production in the United States has been controlled, discriminated against, and held down ever since 1934 by quotas which prevented our farmers from producing enough to fill our needs. We saw the unfortunate effects of this policy when the war broke out. Sugar was the first thing of which a shortage appeared. Quotas restricting our domestic production were lifted at that time, but the price controls and priority regulations effectively prevented our farmers from expanding to meet our needs. The history of sugar during the war was one of consistent favoritism to foreign producers at the expense of our own farmers.

Now that the war is over, it is high time we get to work and expand domestic beet production. This measure is one important step in that program. Another important step will be revision of the quota legislation which has prevented construction of new beet-sugar factories. In my own State we could easily produce enough beets to supply four or five additional sugar factories if the quotas can be increased or removed. I am hopeful that we can consider such a change when the question of reviewing the Sugar Act comes before us later on in the session. Meanwhile, the best thing we can do for both the consumer and the producer is to get rid of these controls as soon as possible. That will permit the housewife to buy as much or as little sugar as she cares to. If she is used to canning her own fruit, she can obtain the sugar with which to do it, and avoid paying the very high prices for commercial jams and jellies. Decontrol will thus bring down any unreasonable prices for such manufactured products. It will permit the housewife to preserve her own fruit instead of forcing her to buy commercial goods. At the same time, it is the only way to stimulate production and to thus get rid of the shortage completely, if there is a shortage. It will stop the nonsense of paying farmers to produce too many potatoes on irrigated land that should be producing sugar. It will help restore domestic beet and cane production to a point where we can rely on it as a source of supply in case of emergency. It will definitely strengthen the agricultural economy in States having irrigated farms. It will return one more industry to the American people, and remove that industry from continued control of the economic planners.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. Do I correctly understand the Senator to say that the champion sugar raiser in his State produced only 24 tons to the acre?

Mr. BUTLER. The figure I read was close to 26 tons to the acre.

Mr. LANGER. Was that the best that was done?

Mr. BUTLER. That was done by the champion farmer in that area. I presume that in the Red River Valley there may be isolated farms that can compete with that record.

Mr. LANGER. We have a great many farmers who raise 30 tons to the acre. Sinner Brothers at Casselton produce 30 tons. I was interested in what the Senator had to say about new plants. Have contracts been let for new plants?

Mr. BUTLER. They cannot be let until those investing in the plants can be assured of a quota to maintain the plants.

Mr. LANGER. That is our trouble in the Red River Valley. The farmers are willing to raise sugar beets, but there is no place to dispose of them. The existing plants are already operating to capacity, and there is no money to build new plants.

Mr. BUTLER. The situation in Nebraska is a little different, because we have some idle plants in areas where sugar acreage has dropped, which we wish to remove to areas where sugar production is under way.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I was very much interested in what the Senator from Nebraska said in connection with the increased amount of sugar in Cuba, to the effect that if the market price went up a little we would be able to buy more of it.

Mr. BUTLER. I made the statement that I thought a slight advance in the price of sugar might bring an increased movement.

Mr. MAYBANK. And that the United States would probably benefit?

Mr. BUTLER. The Cubans, or whoever is handling their sugar for them, set aside 300,000 tons to take care of the demand in addition to what they sold in the United States. They are having difficulty in disposing of those 300,000 tons, and my statement was that ultimately some of it would probably come to the United States.

Mr. MAYBANK. Is not that difficulty occasioned by agreements in the UNO, in which the allotments of Cuban sugar were prorated?

Mr. BUTLER. I am unable to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. MAYBANK. I believe that there would be some additional Cuban sugar sold if the price were increased, but there was one point that impressed me very much as a member of the subcommittee, and which I have not yet heard discussed. If the Commodity Credit Corporation and the various other Government agencies dealing with Cuba are discontinued, there are some countries in the Old World which still have a great deal of gold, namely, Sweden, Switzerland, and France. With the competition which we would find from them there would eventually come into existence black markets in Europe which would be just as bad as the black markets under the old OPA, which the Senator and I both voted to do away with in connection with meat. When we come into competition with the gold credits of Sweden, Switzerland, and some other European countries, we shall find that the only sufferers will be our old friends, who spent everything in this war, and who perhaps need some small allotment.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Does the Senator from Nebraska realize that the 300,000 tons of sugar to which he has referred as being reserved by Cuba for its own use will be sold to South American countries if it is not used in Cuba, and then, as the Senator stated, it would come to the United States? When that happy occasion arises, let me assure the Senator with great pleasure that it will then go to the housewives pronto.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BUTLER. I yield.

Mr. McCARTHY. The contract provides that if Cuba does not use her 350,000 tons, we are to get it. That is in the contract, as set forth on page 38 of the hearings.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator realizes that Cuba has obligations to South American countries to supply them with sugar.

Mr. McCARTHY. We are speaking of the 350,000 tons reserved for Cuban use, to the extent that Cuba does not use it.

Mr. TOBEY. Under the Tobey amendment, it would go to the housewives at once.

Mr. McCARTHY. We are not arguing the Tobey amendment. There is an item of 300,000 tons of export free sugar that can go anywhere. Ordinarily, it would go to South America, except for the fact that this year Argentina, Peru, and Brazil have a surplus of sugar.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I wish to take a few moments of the time of the Senate on the subject which is now before it, namely, sugar legislation. I wish to speak to the point that, in my opinion, the date for the termination of controls should be October 31. I have tried to ascertain the facts from those who are familiar with the subject and who know what the facts are, and I wish to say a few words on the facts. October 31 each year comes exactly at the peak of the beet sugar production in the United States. The beet sugar harvest begins as early as July in California, and all beet areas are in production by October 1.

Likewise, the mainland cane production in Louisiana begins in the first week of October, so that deliveries of sugar are being made regularly by October 31 and in substantial amounts.

Based on the 1947 estimates of 1,700,000 tons of beet sugar and 500,000 tons of cane sugar, the production of beet and cane sugar at the October 31 date within the United States would average about 200,000 tons per week.

We must not lose sight of the extremely important fact that the 1947 crops of Cuban sugar and Puerto Rican sugar have been bought by the Commodity Credit Corporation. True, considerable part of this volume will have been delivered by October, but the remainder will be sugar that belongs to the United States Government. The fact of Government ownership will have a stabilizing effect, because the distribution of sugar can be controlled and supervised in an orderly manner. The possibility of speculation in sugar or the possibility of withholding sugar from the market would be reduced to its lowest point in October.

The situation would be completely reversed in March 1948. The Government would own no Cuban sugar or Puerto Rican sugar, and would have very little influence, therefore, upon the orderly distribution in the first 3 months of 1948. In fact, I am told by people in the sugar industry that the prospect of serious withholdings from the market would be very much greater in the first 3 months of 1948, than it could possibly be in September and October. The reason is obvious, because in October the insular production will have been largely delivered to refiners under Government direction and the remaining supplies of sugar will continue under Government control until December 31.

In addition, the Department of Agriculture has announced the intention to build up the year-end stocks from 1,400,000 tons at the beginning of 1947 to 1,900,000 tons at the end of 1947. This reserve or surplus of 500,000 tons would provide additional means of Government protection against speculation, withholding, or disorderly marketing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER]. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I wish to say a few words with reference to the bill which is before the Senate, but not particularly in reference to any of the amendments.

For the benefit of Senators who did not hear me last summer when I spoke against OPA and price control, I will say that I am still against price control, regimentation, and regulations governing the lives of American citizens during peacetime.

However, I wish to say that at that time, last July, I tried to express in the Senate the voice of the people, by reading on the floor of the Senate hundreds of telegrams and letters which came to me from people who were pleading that the Senate abolish OPA and price control. Unfortunately, my brother Senators did not seem to hear the voice of the people as I then expressed it. Fortunately, however, the keen political, analytical mind and ears of President Truman were quick to recognize and hear the voice of the people, soon after November 5—either he or his advisers did so—for quickly he issued an order abolishing practically all price controls, except rent control, sugar control, and rice control. I am very happy that such controls now have simmered down to the control of only those three commodities—rents, rice, and sugar.

I suspect there is very little chance of eliminating sugar control at the present time; but I desire to voice my resentment of it as well as my opposition to it. As I have said, I am not interested in any of the amendments, except of course I shall vote for any amendment which will bring closer the day when price control on sugar ends; and if I am given an opportunity to do so, I shall vote against continuation of price control on sugar, regardless of how the bill for the control of sugar may be amended.

However, inasmuch as it appears to me that the control of sugar may be continued, I wish to direct my remarks to the absurdity of the entire program and the humiliation which has been visited upon the citizens of my State by the New Deal bureaucrats who have endeavored to enforce the control of sugar in Texas. The main objection which is coming from the citizens of Texas at the present time is that most of the housewives and other consumers of sugar, including also the manufacturers and the large commercial users of sugar in Texas, are forced to buy their sugar on the black market, and the price on the black market is rather high.

Mr. President, if I may have the attention of the Senator from New Hampshire, I should like to propound several simple questions. I wish to know whether he has detected in the pending measure any provisions which would take care of the black marketeers in sugar.

Mr. TOBEY. That is an administrative matter in the hands of Mr. Anderson, Secretary of Agriculture.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Is the pending measure any different in that respect from the measure which it is intended to supersede?

Mr. TOBEY. Not in any degree.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Then that leaves us with the information that no provision has been deliberately inserted in the bill to take care of the black marketeers in sugar.

My next question is: Did any evidence or any testimony appear before the Banking and Currency Committee to indicate how the black marketeers obtain the sugar which they sell at high prices?

Mr. TOBEY. I do not believe so.

Mr. O'DANIEL. It seems to me that there must be some loophole somewhere, because in Texas there is a flourishing market for sugar in the black markets.

Mr. TOBEY. The trouble with the black market, Mr. President, is that we hear a great deal about it; but when we wish someone to come forward and say, "Thou art the man," and to fix the guilt personally, such persons are conspicuous by their absence. Does the Senator from Texas agree?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I agree.

To illustrate my point a little better than I have so far, I wish to read a letter which I have received from the H. O. Wooten Grocer Co., of Abilene, Tex. It is a large wholesale grocery concern, which under normal conditions would deal in sugar; at least it deals extensively throughout west Texas in other groceries. The letter reads as follows:

ABILENE, TEX., February 18, 1947.

Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The present situation on sugar has become unbearable for the wholesale grocer and also the retail grocer. The low ration allowance for the consumer in 1946 caused the housewife to devise all kinds of methods for counterfeiting sugar stamps. Retailers over our entire territory have had sugar stolen from them, and at the present time both their allowable inventory and our allowable inventory are depleted to the point that they and we are both unable to continue to supply sugar to the consumer on legitimate claims made by valid ration stamps.

Some plan should be worked out immediately, and we do mean immediately, to allow the wholesaler and retailer to revise their allowable inventory and get back in the sugar business. At the present time most of the sugar available in this territory is through black-market channels. We hope that you can take steps that will bring relief at once.

If you need further information in regard to this critical situation, please advise us by return air mail.

Yours very truly,

H. O. WOOTEN GROCER CO.
T. W. PEARCE.

Mr. President, if no provision has been made for taking care of the black marketeers in sugar, and if the pending measure is substantially the same as the law now in effect, there must be some loophole by which the black marketeers get the sugar they sell. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee on what basis the allotment of sugar to housewives and individual users of sugar was arrived at. How did you arrive at the amount which each housewife would be entitled to receive under the law?

Mr. TOBEY. We did not arrive at that as a committee. We had the testimony of Mr. Anderson, Mr. Marshall, and the other sugar authorities. We discussed the world supply and the supply which is allocated to this country by the world organization, with which doubtless the Senator from Texas is familiar, under which we buy the Cuban sugar crop and then allocate it to other nations, as well as to ourselves, and then we have so much sugar—let us say 6,000,000 tons. That is allocated between the commercial users and the housewives. The commercial users are receiving slightly more than 50 percent of it and the housewives are receiving slightly less than 50 percent. So much for the allocations.

Doubtless the Senator from Texas is familiar with the amendment which has been adopted by the Senate, which allocates to the housewives 35 pounds of sugar on a firm definite basis, with the provision that all that is available in addition to that amount shall also go to the housewives.

With respect to the black markets, the following has been pointed out in the course of the committee hearings:

We have had our investigating staff trying to run down a few of those. Some of the industrial users have also helped us in trying to run some of those down, and everyone of them to date that we have run down has just evaporated into thin air. When you call one of those fellows and ask, "Where is this sugar," the answer usually is, "Well, I cannot talk to you about this over the phone." "All right, I will come to your office." "No; I cannot do that. I will come to your office."

And then they come to the investigator's office or to one of the industrial users, when he is doing this for us, and they just do not have the sugar, and why they are putting out such feelers, I have not the slightest idea, because it costs money to publish an ad. It costs money to do the cabling back and forth that is usually done in connection with one of these transactions.

But in every case we have investigated, and we have investigated several of them, there is not anything in back of it.

Senator BRICKER. They are doing it just for fun?

Mr. MARSHALL. Maybe someone is doing it who is being duped with the understanding that there may be some sugar to be obtained. If there is any such sugar, it is bootleg sugar and Cuba, the Cuban Government, does not know anything about it, nor do we, because we bought their sugar crop in its entirety, with the exception of the amount needed for their local consumption, and specific reservations for free export, all of which is accounted for to us.

If there is any other sugar available for shipment, it is bootleg shipment.

Senator BRICKER. Have you any amount of black market, or any estimate of black-market sugar in this country?

Mr. MARSHALL. No, I have not.

Senator BRICKER. You hear rumors about it all of the time.

Mr. MARSHALL. I think in relation to the volume of sugar, it is very low, that is as to the amount distributed, although you hear several rumors about it.

We are distributing at the rate of 5,600,000 short tons last year and 6,800,000 this year. The percentage of total volume is bound to be low, and much lower this year with the increase of over a million tons.

Senator BRICKER. You do not think it is enough to pay much attention to or make any appreciable difference in the market?

Mr. MARSHALL. I do not think so. I think it should be run down in every possible instance, but in the total volume, I do not really think it is significant in affecting the supply.

That is the testimony about the black market which the Senator asked about, as given in the course of the Senate committee hearings.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I thank the Senator. He has stated that the allotment is based on an allowance of 35 pounds for each citizen of the United States.

Mr. TOBEY. Yes.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Is that to be the maximum amount which each citizen may acquire?

Mr. TOBEY. That is the mandatory amount—not the maximum amount, but the mandatory amount, based upon present allocations. But as I have said many times before, today—and I gladly repeat it—when, as, and if the supply which comes to the United States is increased, then all the amount which comes to the United States, according to the provisions of the Tobey amendment which now has been adopted, will accrue to and be passed on to the housewives, up to the point of 50 pounds per capita, which is the prewar consumption of sugar by households in the United States.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I understand the Senator on that point; and I think his amendment is a laudable one, and it gives to the housewives hope that they will get more sugar.

But, as I said a moment ago, I am trying to find whether the maximum amount is to be 35 pounds per person. Could any person get more than 35 pounds?

Mr. TOBEY. That is the minimum amount anyone could be given, 35 pounds.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Suppose a person wanted only 5 pounds.

Mr. TOBEY. He could get it, and give away the balance to some other person. He could be a good Samaritan. Others might be glad to receive it. I should be.

Does the Senator mean that if John Jones and Bill Smith were neighbors and John Jones wanted to use only 5 pounds, the Senator would like to know what he would do with the other? He would give it away, would he not?

Mr. O'DANIEL. What I am trying to find out is about the leak through which comes the black market sugar. If each citizen in the United States is entitled to acquire 35 pounds, and many of them do not acquire that much, many do not acquire any, some of them 5 pounds, some 10 pounds, none of them over 35—it would appear to me that there would result, if that took place, an abundance of sugar which had been allocated to the housewives, but not availed of by the housewives, and which would find its way into the black market.

Mr. TOBEY. That is human nature, and it is a bad feature of human nature. If the Senator means, and poses the thought, that the people who have 35 pounds coming to them under the Tobey amendment might use only 10 pounds, and then sell the rest on the black market, of course they could if they were evilly inclined.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I do not mean that. If they are entitled to 35 pounds, and they desire only 10 pounds, that leaves 25 pounds left for some other person in the allocation which is to go to the domestic housewife. The accumulation of those small amounts from each of the 140,000,000 citizens, it appears to me, might well be finding its way through some channel into the black market.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator realizes that if a person does not use the stamps which are good for sugar, the stamps are still good until they are canceled, and they are outstanding claims, an account receivable on the outstanding supply of sugar. There has to be sugar to balance the stamps which come into the bank.

Mr. O'DANIEL. The point I am trying to make is that under the allocation plan of the pending measure there might be a large volume of sugar which had been allocated for domestic use in the home which would not be called for by the domestic users. It appears to me that that sugar might get into the hands of the black marketeers. If that is the case, or if there is enough suspicion that that is the case, some provision should be made in the joint resolution, if possible, so that that additional quota would go to the housewives.

Mr. TOBEY. It will beyond peradventure go to the housewives. It increases the floating supply of sugar. But remember, they cannot get it as long as the stamps are outstanding. They are a first lien. If one should cancel his stamps, and should say, "I shall not use my sugar," the sugar would be apportioned out, on the next stamp date, to the other householders.

Mr. O'DANIEL. That may be true theoretically.

Mr. TOBEY. What does the Senator suggest? He goes around in a circle.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I suggest that we let the OPA and price controls die. I do not think there is anyone in Washington smart enough to devise a plan that will work out equitably as compared with the plan of taking off controls.

Mr. TOBEY. Of course, that is not the pending question. The pending question is on an amendment to change the date, and not to let the OPA die.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I am not speaking on the amendment. I am in favor of changing the date to the nearest possible time.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield for a question.

Mr. HAWKES. Does the Senator know that counterfeit stamps are in circulation in connection with the sugar program, to such an extent that the Government feels that it must set aside, I understand, approximately 400,000 tons of sugar to take care of counterfeit stamps, and that they are probably responsible for a large part of the black market about which the Senator is talking?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I think there must be a large volume of sugar taken into consideration as going to the black marketeers, because they are getting it, and it is a serious thing.

Mr. HAWKES. Will the Senator yield again?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield for another question.

Mr. HAWKES. The Senator recalls, does he not, that one of the strongest points urged in getting rid of the OPA was the black market.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Yes.

Mr. HAWKES. In other words, if there was fixed a price level which everybody looked at, and which was supposed to represent the actual prices, but did not do so, the people were being fooled by looking at a list, on the one hand, and paying other prices, on the other hand, to get what they wanted.

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is correct.

Mr. HAWKES. There is the same situation in the picture today, and the same actuation should come to every Senator which came in connection with the OPA, for so long as controls are retained and people are bound down to certain things with which they are not satisfied, we are going to have black market operations. That is the thought I should like to leave with the Senator.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I thank the Senator from New Jersey. I have here another letter which bears out the point I am discussing. It comes from another wholesale grocery company, in another section of Texas, from Corsicana, Tex. The writer says:

DEAR SENATOR: Since he early part of 1943, we have operated under the various OPA regulations on coffee, canned foods, meats, and sugar. As these several commodities were released from ration restrictions they shortly began to adjust to supply and demand, and with a great deal less confusion.

There still remains sugar rationing, requiring stamps, certificates, or checks before sugar can be delivered from the refiner, wholesaler, or retailer. The rationing of sugar has affected the people, as a whole, to a greater degree than any other commodity; gasoline not excepted. There has been more injustice, with the least consideration for business or the individual, by the incompetent field men and the district OPA office, than you would ever believe possible under a democracy. Pages could be filled with cases of how the people and business alike have been humiliated and persecuted under this sugar rationing since the war was over in 1945.

Today we have 27 notices to our retail customers of debits to their sugar-ration accounts for what the OPA office calls invalid or altered stamps. In many cases these retailers will not have enough sugar inventory left to operate on. Many are now forced to operate their business without sugar, and the OPA office will not give them any consideration for replacement or increase in their allowance.

If there was sound reasoning in 1933 for the repeal of the Prohibition Act, because the people refused to abide by a bad law, then there are a thousand more reasons why the sugar rationing should be stopped, and at once.

Please use your effort to stop this curse.

Yours truly,

SOUTHERN WHOLESALE GROCERY CO.,
J. H. SULLIVAN, President.

There are many things contained in this letter. Let me repeat just one sentence.

Many are now forced to operate their business without sugar, and the OPA office will not give them any consideration for replacement or increase in their allowance.

That was the point I was endeavoring to bring out. In the pending measure there is a certain allocation made, of 35 pounds, to every individual, every citizen, in the United States. But how are those citizens to get their 35 pounds when this wholesale grocery company, and the retail grocery company in that territory, have no sugar, and are unable to get any sugar? The sugar which this wholesale company and the retail stores should be getting and selling to the housewives is going into the black market.

Mr. President, I wish to tell Senators something more about the black market. I will tell where the black-market sugar goes.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for an announcement?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to inform Members of the Senate that we expect to remain in session until we dispose of the pending sugar-control legislation.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I have here a letter I wish to read, and I should like to have the attention of every Senator to it. It comes from a gentleman who should know what he is talking about, from an attorney, Hubert T. Faulk, of El Paso, Tex. The letter is addressed to Hon. Cliff Anderson, Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D. C. I understand the new legislation now being considered will turn the handling of sugar over to Secretary Anderson. This is a copy of a letter which was sent to me. Other copies were sent to others, as I shall relate later.

This letter is dated January 25, 1947:

DEAR MR. ANDERSON: With your permission I will add one more to the daily increasing list of "gripes" on the sugar situation.

By way of introduction of myself I will say that I am just a country lawyer, without affluence or influence and recognizing my station and strata in society I am never disappointed when things go awry and seem to stay that way and our officials in high places say they know the inequities of conditions as they exist but the regulations say we must do certain things and we cannot substitute our wisdom, discretion, and judgment for the regulations. I am here referring particularly to the sugar situation.

I have two clients who use a great deal of sugar in their business. They are not distillers or moonshiners but are legitimate industrial users of sugar. They must stay in business and hope that some day the tide will turn. The ration board says "your predecessor in business in 1939 did not require much sugar therefore we cannot allot you any more than he required although you are pushing your business and the public is clamoring for your products." When the small allotment of sugar is exhausted there is always a man standing at the front door who is glad to let my clients have the sugar they need to finish the quarter on and supplies them at a sacrifice of $25 per hundred. Lately this type of sugar has gone up and is now being offered at $40 per hundred. Of course, if I knew the names of the sugar bootleggers I could not afford to divulge their names unless the Government would see that my clients get some relief. My clients must stay in business and if their source of sugar be cut off they would go out of business and it would be cut off if the sugar pirates were put in jail because the Office of Price Administration says sugar is so scarce we cannot expect any increase in allotments. Naturally, my clients would not know the names of the fellows furnishing them the sugar any more than a witness before the grand jury back in prohibition days would know the name of the tall, dark man that sold the witness the pint of corn.

This attorney is laying it right on the line. He is not concealing anything. He wrote this letter to the Secretary of Agriculture, and, to make sure that it was known by other officials in Washington, he sent a copy to Tom Clark, the Attorney General of the United States, if you please, and he sent a copy to his Representative in Congress, Mr. R. E. THOMASON, at Washington, D. C., and, in order to get a little publicity, he sent copies to the El Paso Herald Post and the El Paso Times of his city, El Paso, Tex. The letter continues:

The situation all over the country and the refusal of the proper Government officials to take cognizance of the condition, just naturally raises two questions in the minds of the American people, whether they be Democrats, Republicans or "Bumfuzzled," to which latter group I have been forced to go because of the peculiar theory entertained by our officials as to what is best for our country as a whole. These two questions are:

"Is the rationing of sugar continued for the benefit of the dealer in what is commonly called the black marketing of scarce commodities?"

I want to tell you, Mr. President, that there are many good citizens in this country who actually believe that this price-control bill has been enacted heretofore, and may be renewed for the principal purpose of benefiting these black marketeers, who make great contributions to those who help get the bills enacted. I do not know whether that is true or not, but it has been told me by many of our citizens who are struggling and suffering under the oppression of this kind of administration.

I have many more letters from the citizens of my State and from other States. After reading what is related in those letters it is almost impossible for anyone to realize the extent of the oppression that has been visited upon the citizens of the country.

Some of those letters state that it is surely as bad right here in the United States as some of the edicts that were visited upon the people of Nazi Germany; and I tell you that is a bad thing for the country, to be under an oppresison like that.

Here we are, 2 years after the termination of World War II, still hanging onto the outworn and exploded theory that the Congress of the United States, or some administrator in Washington, knows what the people of the country should have, whether they should have one teaspoonful of sugar in their coffee or two. I say with all due respect to the wise men we have in Washington—and there are many of them—it is my distinct opinion that there is nobody here wise enough to rule this Nation and to regulate the life and the activities of each one of its citizens. It is simply one of those things that it is impossible to do under our democratic form of government.

And so Mr. Hubert T. Faulk says:

If the supply of sugar is so scarce that it must be rationed so each person will get some of it, why is it so abundantly plentiful that when the user of large quantities has exhausted his legal allotment he can rely on getting any quantity he is able to pay for from the black market?

And the price today is from $25 to $40 a hundred pounds, or 25 cents to 40 cents a pound.

The black marketeer has sugar, all he wants, and he is selling it freely in the State of Texas, and all over the Nation, I assume.

Mr. LANGER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield.

Mr. LANGER. I should like to ask if the Senator noticed an Associated Press item in the paper a week ago, in which it was stated that one company got over a million pounds of sugar, and used it before being arrested?

Mr. O'DANIEL. No, I did not happen to read that particular item, but I find instances in my correspondence along the same line as that item.

The letter from Mr. Faulk continues:

It is my conviction that if Congress will get its mind off of 1948 and seriously consider the crisis at hand, not only as to sugar but other matters, we can usher in an era of prosperity and contentment such as we have never known.

Mr. President, I do not know whether or not the black marketeers had anything to do with inspiring someone to get this rationing- and price-control measure enacted into law in this country, but nobody could have done the job any better for their benefit than the way it is being done. They are not coming into the committee and making any complaint; they are not asking that price control be eliminated. They are going right ahead doing business at the same old stand and now, when sugar controls could very innocently and beneficially die next Monday at midnight, we are proposing to extend them and are debating as to whether we should extend them until June 30 or October 31, or March 31, next year. It is proposed to continue the authority for a while, and when the authority again expires it can again be extended, and again and again.

Mr. President, some of the abuses under rationing and price control are very bad indeed. I do not believe I shall take up the time of the Senate this evening to go into all the complaints I have received, because I think it would be a futile thing. I do not believe there is a possibility of preventing the passage of the joint resolution. I think it is going to go through. I think the New Dealers are going to have this little emergency continued for them. Ever since 1933 the New Dealers have been unable to operate unless there was some great emergency on which they could feast. There has been emergency after emergency until November 5 last, when President Truman heard the voice of the people and got busy and abolished most of the price controls. The New Dealers got down to almost the last emergency in the bottom of the barrel. They do not have very many emergencies left; just a little old rent control, and a few cubes of sugar, and a little rice to be dealt with under the pretext of emergencies. But they have got to hang on to their emergencies or they will die. They cannot exist unless they have some emergencies on which to live. They would like to have the law extended so as to retain a strangle hold on the citizens of this country and thus be able to tell them how much sugar they can have in their coffee.

Mr. President, we hear it said that we must do something to give more sugar to the housewife. That is a laudable ambition, but it cannot be done. Everything is so lined up that the housewife cannot obtain more than 35 pounds of sugar, or perhaps 40 pounds of sugar if something favorable happens in Cuba or Hawaii or somewhere else so we can obtain another shipload of sugar.

Senators may think they are hearing something good for the housewife and her children. Not so, for all that happens is that she is limited in the amount of sugar she can buy. This is depriving her little kiddies of the great joy that used to come to many Senators when they were boys, seeking out the cookie jar and eating some of those fine home-made cookies their mothers used to make. But now the cookie jar is broken and gone. The housewife who would like to make cookies and doughnuts and other bakery goods, sweets for her children and perhaps for her husband, cannot buy enough sugar for such purposes. She may bake a few cookies, but not many. So she must go to the bakery and there she can buy all she wants of fine cakes, one of which would make about a meal for one husky boy. She can buy such a cake for about a dollar, so there is a saving of a few cents on the pound of sugar she cannot obtain, but she spends a dollar for a cake which, if she had the sugar, she could bake at a cost of about 10 or 15 cents.

That is what is being done to the housewives of this country. Those who can afford to do so buy their sweets at the bakery, but the housewife who is on a small budget, who cannot afford to buy high-priced bakery goods, she and her children must do without those delicious dainties which are so essential to the well being of growing children if they are to become strong and sturdy. They are deprived of them. The result of the Government policy is that instead of bakery goods, cookies and doughnuts being made in the home, that business has been directed into commercial channels, practically all of it, because the housewife cannot obtain enough sugar with which to bake the dainties she would like to make for her family.

Mr. President, why cannot the housewife get the sugar she needs? It is because of the law which is in effect and which it is now proposed to extend. The law says she can have 35 pounds of sugar, if she can find it. But when she goes to the store it is not there. The wholesale dealer says he has no sugar, and the retail grocer says he has no sugar. She has her sugar stamps and she is entitled to 35 pounds, and has the money to pay for the 35 pounds, but she cannot buy that amount of sugar because it is not avail..ble. Why is it not available to her? Because the black marketeers have headed it off somewhere down the line. What does he do with it? Does he go to the housewife and say, "I will let you have some of this sugar at 35 cents or 40 cents a pound?" No, he is in the wholesale business, and he sells it to the manufacturers of bakery goods who are on his list, and he receives for his sugar, as the letter I read says, 25 cents a pound, or at least that is what he used to get, but now he gets 40 cents a pound. He lets the manufacturers have all the sugar they want at $40 a hundred pounds.

So, Mr. President, are we doing anything for the common citizens of the country when we are forcing the sugar through the manufacturing channels via the black marketeer?

Are we doing anything beneficial for the people of this country when we permit such practices to prevail? I cannot see that we are. On the other hand, I can see where we are doing something highly detrimental to the common people, something that is injurious to the health of their children.

Mr. President, it seems we must continue this little emergency if the New Dealers in Washington are to continue to operate. The New Dealers could have enough to do if they really meant to help the farmer. However, they think they must engage in the administration of the distribution of sugar, to dish it out a spoonful at a time, and it is dished out in this manner with the result that the housewife finally does not get much of it.

Mr. President, there are 140,000,000 citizens in the country. Multiply that number by 35 pounds which each individual is entitled to, and we have the amount which should go to the housewives. But we know there are thousands of people who do not buy one pound of sugar. Where does the sugar which is allotted to them go? There are others who buy less than 35 pounds; where does that sugar go? That provision with respect to 35 pounds to each individual is put in the measure deliberately so that there will be a surplus. It is put in it deliberately by somebody. I do not want any Senator to construe my remarks as impugning the motives of anyone who supports the measure. I would not do that for the world. That is against the rules of the Senate.

But I do want to say that such a provision is in the measure. That provision is in the bill for a purpose, and I have concrete proof that it is with the purpose of providing a surplus. I cannot vote for such a provision. I do not criticize any Senator who votes for it, because, thank God, every Member of this body has the right to vote in any way he pleases, and he does not have to answer for his vote to anyone. He may vote as he thinks is right. I hope we shall continue to maintain the form of government here that permits every Senator to vote as he thinks. But we will not do the right thing so long as we impose such a regulation as this on the citizens of the country. The citizens are sick and tired of such practices, and my mail so indicates. I do not know whether my mail is of different character from that received by other Senators. But I know that the people of Texas do not hesitate to express their views and opinions on political matters or on any subject that pertains to them. Most of the citizens of Texas are against this measure. I have letters from preachers who cannot get a little sugar with which to make ice cream for their church socials. I have letters from veterans of the war protesting against the measure. Oh, yes; it is true we are always going to do something for the war veterans. But let us say a war veteran decides to start a business of making ice cream, and he may take a partner in with him. He starts a little business and receives some kind of an allotment for 30 days which will be only sufficient for 1 day. I have letters from such individuals, but I shall not take the time of the Senate to read them.

Mr. President, I have a letter which shows that the OPA established a new census bureau. It revived a system which had been used by the United States Bureau of the Census, and began the taking of a census all its own. It found that someone had left the town of Corpus Christi, Tex.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'DANIEL. I yield for a question.

Mr. CAPEHART. Does the Senator know that unless an individual who goes into a small business, such as the Senator has indicated, is a veteran he is denied an allocation of sugar by OPA at this time?

Mr. O'DANIEL. Yes; I have received testimony from many who have stated that fact.

Mr. CAPEHART. If the Senator should wish to start a bakery and bake pies and cakes and sell them today he would be denied any sugar for that purpose.

Mr. O'DANIEL. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. CAPEHART. Does the Senator know that in the city of San Diego, Calif., a bakery has been built, a new building, and machinery has been installed. There is great unemployment in that city. Two hundred workmen are standing by waiting to go to work. Yet, that bakery is unable to open its doors because the OPA denies it the right to obtain any sugar.

Mr. O'DANIEL. I have heard of that instance also. In my home town of Fort Worth the Government has urged that the farmers produce more milk. The dairy herds have been multiplied and fine dairy barns have been built, and the milk has been produced, to take care of the demand during the war. As the demand commenced to lessen and the milk continued to come, the management of one of those dairies thought it would be a good idea to make ice cream. A great deal of machinery was bought and a plant was equipped. They were ready to start, and they had everything but the sugar. But some little bureaucrat in Washington said, "No; you cannot have any sugar. We are saving it." He would not say what it was being saved for, but I say it was being saved for the black marketeer. At least the black marketeer gets it, and it goes through commercial channels, but the housewife does not get it.

At Corpus Christi a new system of taking the census was placed in operation. It was found that someone had left Corpus Christi. They could not find out who it was, but the sugar quota for Nueces County, in which Corpus Christi is situated, was reduced. There was not enough sugar for the people to get half as much as they need. They are entitled to it, but they cannot get it. But under the new system of taking the census instituted by Mr. Max McCullough and the OPA it is stated that there are not that many people in Corpus Christi. These people are there, but the OPA census does not show their presence.

I have before me a letter from General Mills, Inc., Minneapolis, Minn. It reads as follows:

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., January 21, 1947.

Hon. W. LEE O'DANIEL,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Should like very much to add my support to the position you have taken concerning the Emergency Price Control Act as it affects the sugar situation.

I am sure that you will have the universal support of industry as well as the majority of householders.

Speaking for industry, we have been severely handicapped and held back in the development of many new food products and the expansion of old products, which has hindered the development and manufacture of new machinery as well as the employment of additional labor.

Allowing a sugar allocation of 60 percent of 1941 usage does not seem right or equitable in face of published Government reports on the world's production of sugar, which indicate for 1946–47 92 percent of the prewar average.

Am also taking the liberty of writing our Minnesota Senators and Representatives requesting them to support your movement.

Yours very truly,

GENERAL MILLS, INC.,
C. V. NELSON,
Director of Purchases.

Mr. President, I do not intend to take up much more time of the Senate at this late hour, because nothing I can say will influence the vote. I merely wish to make the record clear that I am opposed to the joint resolution. I think it is unconstitutional. I think it is un-American. I think it is useless. I do not think there was any great demand from the citizens of the country for legislation of this nature. I think it was concocted by some of the New Deal economists and nit-wits in Washington. I think it will do much damage to our country. I do not think it will help the housewife get any more sugar, and that is what she wants.

In my State we have an abundance of fruit which has rotted on the trees and on the ground under the trees simply because we could not get sugar. Under the OPA we established a sugar refinery at Sugarland, Tex., and all its warehouses were so crammed with sugar that the mill had to be closed.

This administration has been catering to minority class about long enough. I think it is time to cater to the rank and file of American citizens who know how to conduct their own business. They know how to stand on their own feet and conduct their own affairs. They made sacrifices enough during the war. They did not object to rationing during the war, no matter whether it was necessary or not; but they have heard that all our enemies surrendered unconditionally, and that the war is over. They think it is time to end the foolishness of trying to ration sugar, rice, rent, or anything else which anyone might think of rationing.

I wish to voice my objection to the joint resolution, and to say that if it is passed by a voice vote, I want the RECORD to show that I am against it. I do not care how it is amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. MCCARTHY] on behalf of himself and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER]. On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll, and Mr. AIKEN voted "nay" when his name was called.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Has any Senator voted yet?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The roll call has begun.

Mr. CHAVEZ. Has any Senator voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Vermont voted in the negative.

The roll call was continued and concluded.

Mr. REED. I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The Senator from South Dakota is necessarily absent. If present and voting, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is absent because of illness.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] are absent on public business.

If present and voting the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 45, nays 35, as follows:

So the amendment offered by Mr. MCCARTHY for himself and Mr. BRICKER was agreed to.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment just adopted was agreed to.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I move that that motion be laid on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. HATCH. Was the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER] recognized?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Louisiana was not recognized, the Chair intended to recognize him. The Chair did recognize the Senator from Louisiana by entertaining his motion.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. IVES in the chair). The Senator will state it.

Mr. OVERTON. Has the Senator from New Mexico been recognized at all?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is an embarrassing question.

Mr. OVERTON. It certainly is. [Laughter.]

Mr. MCCARTHY. Mr. President, I believe that the other half of my amendment is still pending. I do not desire to address the Senate about it at this time, and I now move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. Immediately before section 3 on page 3, it is proposed to insert the following:

Provided further, That not less than 40 pounds of refined sugar shall be allocated during the period from April 1, 1947, through October 31, 1947, to each person in the United States for home consumption, to be made available as follows:

(i) Not less than 10 pounds shall be available for purchase from April 1, 1947, through June 30, 1947;

(ii) Not less than 20 pounds shall be available for purchase from July 1, 1947, through September 30, 1947; and

(iii) Not less than 10 pounds shall be available for purchase from October 1, 1947, through October 31, 1947;

And provided further, That in the event the quantity allocated to nonprovisional industrial users during any portion of the period from April 1, 1947, through October 31, 1947, is increased above the base allocation of such users, the quantity herein required to be allocated for home consumption during such portion of such period shall be proportionately increased. For the purposes of this act (i) "nonprovisional industrial users" means industrial users who as of April 1, 1947, are allocated sugar on the basis of use during a base period, and (ii) "base allocation" with respect to any interval of time means 75 percent of the quantity of sugar used by such nonprovisional industrial users during the corresponding portion of the base period.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I make the point of order that so much of the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin, which has just been read, as changes the action taken previously today by the Senate in respect to the allocation of sugar for domestic use is not in order.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator from Virginia speak louder, so that all Members of the Senate can hear him?

Mr. ROBERTSON of Virginia. I make the point of order that the amendment is out of order because it seeks to change action previously taken today by the Senate—as to which action a motion to reconsider was made, and the Senate voted to lay that motion on the table, so that became the final action of the Senate in regard to this portion of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is the opinion of the Chair that the question is one of consistency between the various parts of the bill, and that that is for the Senate itself to decide by its vote on the amendment. So the point of order is overruled.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment submitted by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I simply wish to point out—although, of course, it is difficult to gather the full import of the amendment, because it has not been considered at all, but simply has been read at the desk—that as I understand the amendment it provides that 40 pounds of sugar be given to each person. Is that correct?

Mr. McCARTHY. It gives an extra 10 pounds for canning.

Mr. TOBEY. Does the Senator mean 10 pounds in addition to the 35 pounds?

Mr. McCARTHY. Of course, rationing will end on October 31.

Mr. TOBEY. However long rationing runs, the allowances will be proportionate.

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, without taking undue time——

Mr. TOBEY. No, Mr. President; I ask the Senator to take all the time he wants, because this matter is important.

Mr. McCARTHY. Let me say that the amendment does not change the 10 pounds which will be allowed on April 1, but maintains that amount; it does not change the 10 pounds which will be allowed on October 1, but will maintain that. It does provide that instead of receiving 10 pounds on July 1 for canning, the housewife will receive 20 pounds, not on July 1, but between July 1 and the next coupon date. In other words, the amendment provides a 20-pound allowance for canning over the three canning months. Is that clear?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes; it is clear insofar as the Senator has stated it.

Mr. President, the Senate has debated at length the matter of allocations, and after considerable debate, as I think all Senators will agree, the Senate adopted the Tobey amendment, which gives 35 pounds, definitely, for the calendar year and also provides that all extra sugar which comes into the United States during the year, up to the amount of 50 pounds per person, shall be allowed.

Now we are faced with a proposed amendment which would stop that process on October 31, just as the Tobey amendment will, but the Tobey amendment will operate proportionately, whereas by the McCarthy amendment it is proposed to allow an extra 10 pounds of sugar for canning.

The point is that under the Tobey amendment the consumers will get all the sugar that is available, and the canning allotment will be taken care of by the Secretary of Agriculture, according to the supply, when, as, and if he is able to allow it. That is his intention, and that is what he has told me.

I think it would be a mistake for the Senate to take action contrary to the Tobey amendment, which has been adopted and which provides for the allotment of 35 pounds of sugar definitely.

The amendment now proposed would change that arrangement. No member of the Senate now present could explain the present proposal, except for what has been said by the proponent of the amendment.

Mr. President, I ask that the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin be rejected, so as to have the Senate act consistently with the action it took earlier today.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from New Hampshire whether he understands that the amendment would increase the allotment to 45 pounds or to 40 pounds?

Mr. TOBEY. My understanding of the amendment which has been offered is that it would give 20 pounds of sugar for canning during the summer months—10 pounds as provided by the Tobey amendment and 10 pounds in addition to the April 1 coupon allowance. Is that correct?

Mr. McCARTHY. That is correct. The housewife already is to have 5 pounds as of April 1. The pending proposal is to give her, instead of 10 pounds on July 1, an additional 10 pounds sometime between July 1 and October 1, so that instead of having 10 pounds for canning, she will have 20 pounds for canning. The amendment would not disturb the rationing now proposed up to October 31.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, does the Senator from Wisconsin state that his amendment would increase the allotment to 40 pounds?

Mr. McCARTHY. It would increase it to 45 pounds. The housewife will have 5 pounds as of April 1, anyway. My amendment provides that she shall have 40 pounds more, or a total of 45 pounds. The amendment will give the housewife a total of 20 pounds of sugar for canning.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, where does the Senator think the extra sugar will come from?

Mr. McCARTHY. Mr. President, I went over that matter thoroughly earlier today, and I showed that there is available more than a million pounds of additional sugar.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Wisconsin knows that, under the Tobey amendment, that will go to the householders, anyway.

Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from Wisconsin is a play on words.

SEVERAL SENATORS. Vote! Vote!

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. McCARTHY].

Mr. McCARTHY. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. REED. I have a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. YOUNG] and will vote. I vote "yea." The Senator from North Dakota is unavoidably detained. If present and voting, he would vote "yea," and the Senator from New York would vote "nay."

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] is necessarily absent.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] are absent on public business.

If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

So Mr. McCARTHY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I have on the desk an amendment to the pending bill in the nature of a substitute. The main purpose of the amendment was to change the date from March 31, 1948, to October 31, 1947. Since that has been accomplished, I wish to state to the Senate that I shall not submit my proposed amendment.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask to have it stated. I offer it at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska offers an amendment, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to strike out all of section 4 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 4. The Secretary of Agriculture, in exercising the allocation and rationing authority transferred to him by section 3 of this act, shall make available not less than 50,000 tons of refined sugar for other than provisional-allotment users during the period from April 1, 1947, to March 31, 1948, to provide for the needs of new industrial-sugar users (with particular reference to the needs of shortage areas caused by population shifts) and for the needs of those who have an insufficient base period history to operate currently at competitive levels (and shall consider, as a determining factor in those cases where there is such insufficient base period history, the rate of growth of such user prior to the base period year).

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the amendment merely provides that the Secretary of Agriculture shall set aside 50,000 tons of sugar to be used in hardship cases, where no base has been established, and also for those who desire to establish new businesses.

This is one of the amendments that came out of the Small Business Committee, and I am quite satisfied, after talking with the officials of the Department of Agriculture, that they have no objection to it, as they have so announced to me. They are doing in a limited way what the amendment provides, and this will simply provide that they shall set aside 50,000 tons for the purpose specified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no further amendments to be offered, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read a third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate a joint resolution coming from the House of Representatives which will be stated by title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 146) to extend the powers and authorities under certain statutes with respect to the distribution and pricing of sugar, and for other purposes.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House joint resolution.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. TOBEY. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the joint resolution, and to insert the text of the Senate joint resolution as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert the Senate text.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I offer to the joint resolution the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will state the amendment.

The CHIEF CLERK. On page 2, line 20, before the period, it is proposed to insert a colon and the following: "And provided further, That in exercising the authority extended by this act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall allocate, and permit the purchase of, refined sugar for home consumption at a rate of not less than 40 pounds per person per year; providing further that having in mind the need for sugar for home-canning purposes not less than 15 pounds per person shall be made available for home consumption during the third quarter of 1947. In the event the quantity allocated to nonprovisional industrial users during any portion of the period from April 1, 1947, until the expiration of the allocation authority is increased above the base allocation of such users, the quantity herein required to be allocated for home consumption during such portion of such period shall be proportionately increased."

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, this is the amendment which has been discussed as the Wherry amendment all afternoon. It has not been offered until this time. This is the amendment I explained in detail on the floor, and which was the subject of debate for many hours. It merely provides that individual users shall be allotted 40 pounds instead of 35 pounds. It provides, and is mandatory, that during the third quarter the Secretary of Agriculture shall give the housewife 15 pounds instead of 10.

The amendment also provides that if there is any new allocation, whether there is an increase or not, the Secretary of Agriculture must make it on a pro rata basis, seeing that the housewife has the same advantage of increase as is given to industrial users.

Mr. President, this is the amendment which the distinguished Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS] said he would like to vote for, but he could not vote for it unless the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire was voted down, and he did not want to vote against that.

I shall not indulge in further debate now, but I should like to have the yeas and nays, so that all those who would like to vote for the amendment can be so recorded.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I shall let the RECORD speak for itself as to my position on the amendment.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I should like to close the debate, if it is worthy of being called that, and I should like to close it along this line. The amendment the Senator from Nebraska offered this morning——

Mr. WHERRY. I have never offered it.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator has offered it now.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. TOBEY. And he discussed it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. TOBEY. I am not blaming the Senator; he certainly talked about it, and it has been thoroughly aired in the Senate. It is a first cousin to the amendment just defeated. If Senators vote for this amendment they go back on the way they have voted twice by a large majority, 2 to 1 in each case. If they vote for this amendment they make null and void all they have done. I say it is a first cousin to the amendment just defeated, and I merely ask Senators to vote the amendment down. Let the Senator have his record, make it plain, and make it emphatic.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY]. The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. BUSHFIELD] is necessarily absent.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is unavoidably detained. He is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], and the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN] are absent on public business.

If present and voting, the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 34, nays 44, as follows:

So Mr. WHERRY's amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the so-called Wherry amendment was rejected.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, on January 31, 1947, as appears on page 715 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, as chairman of the Committee on Public Lands I requested a short extension for a committee carrying over from the Seventy-ninth Congress to make its report. No additional expense would be involved. The extension was granted until March 31. The committee referred to was under the chairmanship of the then Senator from Utah, Mr. Murdock, and other Members were the Senator from Idaho [Mr. TAYLOR], and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CORDON]. They desire to complete the report. The shorthand reporter who took the notes was ill in the hospital. He is still confined to the hospital, but with the assistance of his own clerical force he is completing the transcript and will have it ready, we hope, in the near future. I send to the desk another extending resolution, in order that the report may be completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator requesting present consideration?

Mr. BUTLER. I request present consideration.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I have no objection to the resolution, but it is presented on the verge of our voting on the sugar joint resolution, and it is a matter which could wait at least until we pass that measure. If the Senator will wait until we get through with the pending matter, I shall not object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection at the moment?

Mr. BARKLEY. I must object at the moment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] to strike out all after the resolving clause of the House joint resolution and to substitute therefore the perfected Senate text.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the engrossment of the amendment and the third reading of the joint resolution.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the joint resolution to be read a third time.

The joint resolution was read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Several Senators asked for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I wish to make a brief statement before the final vote. I have been strongly in favor of continuing the Sugar Control Act and the rationing of sugar, for I apprehend that too early an ending of it would cause tremendous confusion in this country. I am convinced, however, Mr. President, that since the majority of the Members of the Senate have seen fit to conclude the controls on sugar by the 31st of October of this year, thereby adopting the House date, that it would be much better to end the rationing at the end of this week. The proposed short extension in my opinion will cause a great deal of confusion and will lead to unusual profiteering on the part of some persons who will hold their sugar until the expiration date of the act and otherwise manipulate the supply. For that reason I shall vote against the measure. I do so despite the fact that I probably will have to explain to a number of my constituents, to whom I have written letters, that I favor sugar rationing. I had hoped that we could extend this sugar rationing until sometime next spring so that the controls might be removed without any lengthy knowledge to those who might speculate in sugar. If rationing is going to be concluded in October, I shall cast my vote against the measure and let it end now. Prices will go up whenever rationing ends, but in my opinion it will cause more profiteering and hoarding to fix the October date than to catch the speculators unaware and end it now. I would like to have an opportunity to vote for a bill to help the people of the United States solve the sugar problem. I regard this as a bill to benefit speculators and hoarders. I cannot vote for a speculators' bill.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, as a member of the subcommittee of the Committee on Banking and Currency, and as a member of the committee supporting sugar legislation, I want to make my position perfectly clear. I could not support a measure which would end rationing in October, thus creating gambling and hoarding between now and then. If the rationing is to end, Mr. President, let us end it on March 31, and let those who desire to hoard, or do whatever they want to do, commence to do it immediately. Therefore, I shall vote against the measure.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, I agree with what the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from South Carolina have said. By changing the date to October 1, if we enact this measure into law, we will simply make millions and millions of dollars for speculators. For that reason I think it is better to let sugar control end now than after 6 months from now.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of the Senator from Georgia and the Senator from South Carolina, because in my judgment we have laid the foundation today for a very serious sugar scandal in this country. I think we are playing into the hands of the speculators and the profiteers. I do not believe it represents sound Republican policy. Therefore, I shall vote against the measure.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, coming from a State which has voted Republican ever since there was a Republican Party, and on behalf of that party for which my State has so consistently voted, I shall vote against the measure because, like the dead albatross around the neck of the ancient mariner, it would hang on the neck of the Republican Party, and I will have no part in it.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, I join with the Senator from Georgia, the Senator from South Carolina, the Senator from Oregon, and the Senator from Vermont. I shall vote against the measure. But I want to call the attention of the Senate to the fact that there will be no more of a scandal, and no more justification for an increase in the price of sugar by our releasing controls on October 31 than there would be if we removed controls on March 31 next. I want the RECORD to show that, in my opinion, anyone who maintains that there will be such a scandal merely for that reason, is wrong. I think the facts will substantiate that such a thing is going to happen regardless of when rationing is discontinued. Let us not be fooled now by anyone into believing that as a result of what the Senate has done today by voting to discontinue rationing on October 31, something is going to happen that would not happen on next March 31.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I speak with no bitterness in my heart, but I concur in the statements made by both Senators from Vermont. I want to go on record as saying that this subject has been thoroughly aired here on the floor of the Senate, and honest representation has been given to the sugar situation by sincere men, including the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Anderson. No man in this Chamber can say he did not know from authoritative sources what the consequences would be of changing the date to October 31. They were thoroughly explained and pointed out.

There is a certain clique in this country which is going to capitalize on the action we take today in changing the date to the 31st of October. The speculators are singing a Te Deum in their hearts tonight throughout the country. They are singing "Hail, Hail the Gang's All Here. We are ready for the kill."

Mr. President, I deplore that. I shall do nothing that would result in advantage to that selfish crowd, the crowd that has no interest whatever in the welfare of the people of the country.

Mr. President, the measure as framed by our committee and favorably reported to the Senate was designed for the good of the country, to administer a very trying situation, and to let the effects of rationing decline gradually. It was voted out 10 to 2. To remind those who may try to defend their action in changing the date to October 31, instead of leaving controls on until March 1948, as the joint resolution reported by the committee provided, the Secretary of Agriculture was directed in that measure to remove controls whenever he could and when he found it in his heart to do it. Both the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] and I repeatedly pointed that out. I read to the Senate the letter of the Secretary, in which he said that when that time came he would give no advance notice, so there could be no speculative benefit from the action he would take. He would pull the curtain down at a time unannounced in advance, and at such a time that no privileged or preferred class would benefit thereby.

Now by what is proposed to be done, the removing of controls on October 31, the speculators are being put on notice that the doors are ajar. The floodgates of speculative profits are open to greedy hearts. I shall vote against the measure.

I want the country to know where the blame lies. It lies with a group in my own party, in the Republican Party, who have been trying to sabotage this measure at every possible opportunity.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, I make the point of order that the Senator from New Hampshire is out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair rules that the Senator from New Hampshire is not out of order.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator from Idaho cannot take it, can he?

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I want to say that I served on the subcommittee. That subcommittee worked very hard to draft and report out a bill which would continue these controls in an orderly manner. I consider the change of the date as an absolute scuttling of the measure. The Secretary of Agriculture, if I remember correctly, told our subcommittee that it would be better to end the controls now than to end them on October 31.

Mr. TOBEY. The Senator is correct.

Mr. SPARKMAN. For that reason I want to say that I shall join the other members of the subcommittee who have announced their intention to vote against this measure.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. MORSE. I understand the Senator from Idaho raised a parliamentary inquiry as to whether or not the Senator from New Hampshire was out of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair ruled he was not out of order.

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I am at a loss to understand the reason for the tremendous consternation that seems to have struck the Senate within the last few minutes. As I see it, there is no occasion for any great fear of any great national scandal arising out of this situation. Unless I am entirely in error, section 2 of the measure, which has been eulogized on the floor here, still remains in it. Is that not true? Does not section 2, which provides that "prior to the expiration of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to remove any or all controls with respect to any product over which control is authorized by this act when he determines that the supplies of sugar are sufficient to warrant such action," still remain in the measure?

Mr. TOBEY. Yes, it still stands there. It is a pretty mess of verbiage. But let me point out that what the Senate is doing now is put speculators on notice that they can make the killing, when they can play the game. But if the measure is left in the form in which the Banking and Currency Committee reported it, the Secretary of Agriculture will, when he knows the proper time has arrived, let the portcullis fall at such a time as to make the speculators impotent to take advantage of his action. But they are not blind now; they are put on notice that controls definitely go off October 31 and there is no uncertainty to them. They will govern themselves accordingly.

Mr. DONNELL. I have understood upon the floor of the Senate this afternoon, certainly from this side of the aisle, that the Secretary of Agriculture is esteemed as an honorable man. I have understood him to be eulogized here, as to his judgment and his integrity. It seems to me that this authority—not merely authority but direction to him by section 2—means, if it means anything, that he is told that prior to the time when the removal of the controls would take effect on October 31 he shall remove the controls, and the idea is, as I understand, Mr. President, that by so doing he will prevent the very scandal and the very reaping of vast harvests of unholy gains, concerning which consternation seems to have struck the Senate. Now if I am wrong about that I should like to be corrected, and I yield to the Senator from Vermont who stands upon his feet.

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, in answer to the point raised by the Senator from Missouri I would say that it is the considered judgment of the Secretary of Agriculture that it is unsafe to ask him to raise the controls at any time between now and October 31. He might be able to, but he would not want to be responsible for having to remove the controls between now and October 31.

Mr. DONNELL. Does the Senator mean that he is not willing to commit himself to do so at this time?

Mr. FLANDERS. It means a little more than that. He feels that there is very great danger in being required to remove controls between now and October 31.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. CAPEHART. I should like to know what there is about the date of October 31 as compared with next March 31, which will make any difference in the so-called scandal? What is the difference, so far as the profiteers are concerned, and those who would hoard sugar, between hoarding it from now until October 31 and hoarding it between now and next March 31? I have never listened to anything I thought was such a striking example of much ado about nothing as the discussion with respect to those two dates. We voted to decontrol on October 31. The joint resolution as reported by the committee set the date as next March 31. Either date gives notice to those dealing in sugar that on October 31 or March 31 controls will be lifted from sugar. I wish some Senator would tell me the difference. In the interim, whether we take October 31 or March 31, the Secretary of Agriculture has the right, at any time he may see fit, to decontrol. We are making a great ado about nothing.

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. AIKEN. I invite attention to the fact that setting the date for the expiration of the control at October 31 sets it at a time when undoubtedly the Congress will not be in session; and no matter how short the supply of sugar becomes, no matter how much the gamblers withhold the supply of sugar, there is nothing in the world that Congress can do about it, whereas on the 31st of March Congress will be in session.

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. FLANDERS. I should like to say further in response to the inquiries raised by the Senator from Indiana that the best time, in the judgment of the Secretary, lies somewhere between a November date and the March date, and that so far as any knowledge or information about supplies, stocks, and consumption is concerned, any date before that would be unsafe. There is a practical surety in finding a date between those extremes.

Mr. CAPEHART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. CAPEHART. I appreciate that point; but I was trying to point out to the Senate that there is not much difference between dates so far as speculation is concerned.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so that I may ask the junior Senator from Vermont a question?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. The question is this: Massachusetts is a large industrial State which uses a great deal of sugar in ice cream, bottled goods, and confectionery. There are also two large refineries in the State. If we take off controls now, will not those large industrial users get all the sugar, and leave none for the housewife, or for canning? In other words, if we keep the controls until October 31, even though there may be a large increase in the price of sugar after that time, with the coming of new supplies there will be better opportunity for the housewife under those conditions than if we were to remove controls today.

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS] for the purpose of answering the question.

Mr. FLANDERS. The situation so far as the housewife is concerned in the case of an October release would be very bad indeed. The hoarding would take place during her canning season. As I explained this afternoon, that was one of the very bad features against the October 31 date. I can conceive of nothing worse so far as the housekeeper and home canner are concerned.

With regard to the other part of the question, as to whether it was not more serious to decontrol now than next October, the Senator from Massachusetts was thinking largely in terms of the very large industrial consumption of sugar. As I understood, he expressed the fear that that very large industrial consumption of sugar might drain the household supplies at this time. Am I correct in that statement of the question?

Mr. SALTONSTALL. My question was, Would not the housewife, in an industrial State using large quantities of sugar, be better off with the October 31 date, than if controls were removed today?

Mr. FLANDERS. My answer to that question was that there was no time worse for the housewife so far as canning was concerned than October 31. As has been explained, the hoarding which would take place in anticipation of that date would come during the canning season. The point has been raised that the Secretary does not necessarily decontrol at that date. The fact remains, however, that everyone knows that control is to be lifted at that time at the latest, and the hoarding will therefore start during the canning season unless the Secretary announces a date suddenly, well in advance of that time. The housewife and canners certainly are not served by the October 31 date, under any conceivable circumstances except those I last mentioned, if the Secretary should suddenly announce a date well in advance of the canning season. That is what we are doing, in effect, if we vote "nay" on the joint resolution.

Let me say to the Senator from Massachusetts that I cannot say what will happen to the household user as compared with the industrial user in the State of Massachusetts or any other region where the industrial demand is strong. We would be in the position of relinquishing controls, and something would happen—heaven only knows what. I am not up in heaven, but in a very different place, namely, on the floor of the United States Senate; and I must plead ignorance on that subject.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield.

Mr. MAYBANK. I wish to mention one further point to the distinguished Senator from Vermont. Not only would prices be affected, but I was led to believe by the evidence that the Cuban cane is now being cut. A great deal of Cuban cane might not be cut, and there might not be as much sugar from Cuba if the controls were to be terminated in October.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, I think this confusion which has taken hold of the Senate in the last few minutes is much ado about nothing. As I tried to point out this afternoon in the course of the debate the Senate should not overlook the fact that the Federal Government, through the Commodity Credit Corporation, owns the largest available source of sugar that is now being produced in this hemisphere. The Government is the owner of the Cuban crop and the Puerto Rican crop, and I am certain that with that sugar in the hands of the Federal Government and with controls applied until October 31 all will receive their just share and there will be no opportunity to hoard sugar.

As I tried to point out this afternoon, if we select March 31, 1948, instead of October 31, 1947, as the date for the removal of controls, the scandal which has been mentioned will really occur, because the period of the greatest sugar production begins in November and continues through December and on until May in each year; and if we should make the mistake of having controls removed on March 31 there is no question in my mind that all the new sugar produced from November until early next year, up to March 31, would be retained so that it could be sold on an uncontrolled market.

Mr. DONNELL. May I ask the Senator from Louisiana, who has just spoken, whether or not he anticipates that if this joint resolution shall be passed in its present form a great national scandal will result?

Mr. ELLENDER. Of course not. It is silly to contemplate that such an occurrence will come to pass.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ELLENDER. I do not have the floor.

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina for the purpose of interrogating the Senator from Louisiana.

Mr. MAYBANK. The Senator from Louisiana is more familiar than am I with the production of sugar and the growing of cane. Inasmuch as he has stated that the Commodity Credit Corporation owns the Cuban crop and the Puerto Rican crop I should like to ask him this question: Is it not a fact that the Cuban Government made certain arrangements with UN to allocate a certain amount of the crop and that the American Government agreed to it?

Mr. ELLENDER. As I understand, the American Government purchased the entire Cuban crop, and approximately one-third of it has been allocated for foreign distribution, so there is an increased allotment to the people of countries which are not producing as much as they produced before the war. This country has been allocated two-thirds of the Cuban sugar production, which amounts to approximately 3,200,000 tons.

Mr. MAYBANK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. MAYBANK. My only point is that the Government acted as an agent for UN, and when we remove the ceilings the dollar credits will be involved, and Cuba desires to build up her credits in the future with countries other than the United States. The United States will control the sugar as an agent for Canada, England, and for every other Nation involved.

Mr. ELLENDER. But I repeat to the distinguished Senator from South Carolina——

Mr. DONNELL. Mr. President, I yielded for the purpose of propounding an inquiry only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky for an inquiry.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to propound an inquiry to someone who can shed enough light on this situation to enable me to cast an intelligent vote. I preface my question by the observation that because I felt that March was a better date I voted against the amendment providing for moving the date up to October 31. I think it is now obvious that the Senate made a mistake in the action which it took. But the joint resolution is now beyond consideration so far as amendments to the text are concerned. The question is now on the passage of the joint resolution. If we decline to pass it, all sugar control will end next Monday.

The question I should like to ask the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] or the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY], or any other Senator who can answer it, is this: In view of the fact that it has long been known that sugar control will expire next Monday unless Congress extends it, if this measure is now defeated, as between the condition that will transpire following next Monday and that which will transpire following next October, would the country be worse off next Monday and following, or would it be worse off in October? I am not speaking of a possible sugar scandal. I presume that so far as it could be done there has already been hoarding of sugar, on the theory that Congress might not extend the law and that the price would immediately rise after the law's expiration next Monday. Whether there will be greater hoarding between now and October I do not know; but insofar as the equitable distribution of sugar among the consumers in this country is concerned, would the country be any worse off next October than it would be next week if Congress declined to extend control?

Mr. FLANDERS rose.

Mr. DONNELL. I see that the Senator from Vermont is on his feet, and I am sure he can respond to the question.

Mr. BARKLEY. Let me also include in my question this observation, with an interrogation point after it: In my section of the country the canning season as a rule is long in advance of the 31st of October. When the 1st of November arrives vegetables and ordinary fruits have been consumed or canned. There are certain products which are suitable for canning up to the 31st of October, but for the most part the housewife in my section of the country has done most of her canning before the 31st of October. I am concerned about what will happen to her in the summer season. If the Senator from Vermont or any other Senator can satisfy my mind with reference to that, and in relation to the other matters about which I have inquired, I shall be very grateful.

Mr. FLANDERS. There is no better time than right now for a disorderly removal of controls for which we have voted. Now is the time. We are in a period when Cuban sugar is coming in. The refining of sugar will reach its peak in May, June, and July. Beyond that time stocks continuously decrease. Now is the time for disorderly removal of controls. There is no better time.

Mr. BARKLEY. That does not entirely answer my question, but I accept it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY rose.

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator from Wyoming is on his feet.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I desire to obtain the floor in my own right, in accordance with the rule.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President——

Mr. DONNELL. I yield to the Senator from Louisiana for an inquiry.

Mr. OVERTON. I wish to propound this inquiry to the able Senator: If controls are removed next Monday is it not true that the sugar refiners and those who grow sugar will proceed to hoard it in order to obtain higher prices, and the market will go up, and that the country will be infinitely better off if control is continued until October 31?

Mr. DONNELL. The Senator has stated his view in his question, and I shall not make further comment upon it. It has been stated by him with clarity.

Mr. OVERTON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. DONNELL. I was, like the Senator from Kentucky who spoke a few moments ago, one of those who voted to retain March 31, 1948, as the date for the removal of control, rather than October 31, 1947. Two things are true: In the first place, the Senate, by the majority of its Members, determined that October 31, 1947, is the proper date to place in the joint resolution. Personally, notwithstanding the fact that I differed with those Senators and voted against it, I am willing to abide by the judgment of the Senate.

In the second place, Mr. President, when that vote was taken by the Senate section 2 was in the joint resolution; and prior to that vote I failed to hear any comments made with respect to any great scandal which would result in the event that we placed in the joint resolution the October 31, 1947, date. Throughout the discussion I have understood that although many believed, as did I, that the proper date was March 31, 1948, nevertheless, section 2, which has been inserted, as I understand from italics, by the committee was a safeguard, or deemed to be such. Certainly when the Senate decided this afternoon that the proper date was October 31, 1947, rather than March 31, 1948, the Senate must have acted on the theory that section 2 was a safeguard.

Mr. President, I am unable to read the mind of the Secretary of Agriculture. I saw this afternoon a memorandum which was handed about here. For the life of me I cannot recall the details of it. I only glanced at it hastily. It may have been conveying the news to which the Senator from Vermont has referred.

But, Mr. President, bearing in mind, first, that the Senate, after full and complete debate, fixed upon October 31, 1947, as the proper date; and bearing in mind the further fact that when the Senate did that there was no charge, so far as my ears conveyed it to me, of prospective scandals resulting therefrom; and bearing in mind the further fact that when the Senate voted to put that date into the joint resolution section 2 was in the joint resolution; and bearing in mind, also, that section 2 provides that—

> Prior to the expiration of this act, the Secretary of Agriculture is hereby authorized and directed to remove any or all controls with respect to any product over which control is authorized by this act when he determines that the supplies of sugar are sufficient to warrant such action.

I say, Mr. President, that bearing in mind that combination of facts, I shall vote in favor of the joint resolution.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I have listened with a great deal of disquietude to the discussion which has taken place here in the last half hour. I was one of those who voted against termination on October 31, 1947, because I was convinced that termination at that time would provoke the hoarding and the speculation which have been prophesied by the Senator from New Hampshire and the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. If the Senator from Ohio will permit me to finish, I shall then yield.

Mr. President, I sympathize completely with everything which has been said here by the Senator from Georgia, the Senator from South Carolina, and the Senator from Alabama. I can understand the feeling of the members of the subcommittee who, having studied this problem, feel that disaster will come to the consumers of sugar in the United States if the price controls are lifted on October 31, 1947.

The question now propounded to us, however, is that which was asked by the Senator from Kentucky; namely, which date of termination will be worse for the people of the United States—next Tuesday or October 31 of this year? I believe that what the Senator from Georgia has said is correct; namely, that with termination as of October 31, 1947, the joint resolution is a speculator's joint resolution. But I also know——

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I decline to yield.

Mr. President, I also know that if we permit sugar controls to terminate next Tuesday, the housewives of the United States, the industrial users of the United States—all who want sugar—will be the sufferers; and the price will rise. There is much greater danger of a price rise with termination of controls within the week than there is with termination on October 31.

I call to the attention of the Senate that after the OPA was repealed, after the failure of OPA legislation in the last session of Congress, when all controls were lifted, there was an immediate rise of prices. Then the OPA was reimposed. Subsequently, the controls were dropped. As a result of that failure to deal realistically with the situation which then confronted us, the price index as of last November was 188. In short, the prices of food in the United States at that time reached an all-time peak.

Mr. President, everyone who pays the slightest attention to what is going on in the United States today knows that prices are rising on every hand. They are rising so rapidly, Mr. President, that I have a grave feeling that before many months have passed this country will face another depression, another crash of prices. Mr. President, that is not my prediction. The business writer for the New York Times, Mr. Russell Porter, only a few weeks ago, in his column in one of the issues of the Times, warned the industrialists of the United States that they had 60 or 90 days within which to reduce prices or else face a break in the market. The United States News, which certainly is not a New Deal publication, in its issue of only last week predicted that a recession was near at hand. Mr. President, we have allowed things to get out of hand because we have been thinking emotionally instead of realistically about the condition which confronts this country.

What is the issue which faces us? The joint resolution brought in by the committee would extend these controls until March 31, 1948, which is only a year from now. As the Senator from Vermont well stated, the purpose of the legislation as brought in by the committee was to secure orderly decontrol.

Section 2, to which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] has referred, was written into the joint resolution for the purpose of avoiding termination at a time of shortage. But it was intended to enable the Secretary of Agriculture, if there were a sufficient supply of sugar, to bring about the termination without notice or without warning, in order to prevent speculation. However, this afternoon the Senate of the United States has made that impossible. The joint resolution now contains no safeguard against a termination of price control on October 31 for the simple reason that there is no possibility of getting a sufficiently increased supply of sugar between now and then.

We are confronted with a shortage of sugar. Anyone who has given attention to the sugar problem knows that the United States is confronted with a shortage of sugar. There was a time before the war when we used to receive over a million tons of sugar annually from the Philippine Islands. That supply was utterly and completely cut off; the Japs destroyed the machinery and the plantations there; and there is no possibility of securing more than a thimbleful of sugar from the Philippine Islands next year, comparatively speaking.

But if we terminate price controls while there is a shortage of the sugar supply, the slightest bit of common sense should convince everyone that we are inviting disaster; and when the prices begin to rise the housewife will not get sugar for her canning or for the table. The people of the United States as a whole will be the ones to suffer.

O Mr. President, let us legislate with common sense. Let us legislate in the interest of all the people of the United States. It is perfectly obvious, from what has happened here this afternoon, that this is a matter which needs more consideration. As the Senator from Kentucky said, the parliamentary situation is such that we cannot reconsider the vote by which the October 31 date was inserted, but we have not lost the power to legislate if we are willing to deal with this question intelligently, with common sense, without partisan feeling, in the interest of all the people of the United States. All that is necessary is for us to send the joint resolution back to the committee, Mr. President, and I move that it be recommitted.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I wanted to point out that those who think the controls should be continued to March 31, 1948, it seems to me should necessarily vote for the pending measure. They have an opportunity to introduce for the consideration of the Senate another bill to extend the controls until March of next year, if they wish to do so. The passage of this measure will continue the controls, and there will be at least 4 months in which those who think that is the wrong date can bring in another bill to extend the date to March 31, and get full consideration in the Senate and the Congress.

It seems to me those who think controls should be continued, but vote to cut them off tomorrow because they do not like the exact date fixed at the present moment, are cutting off their noses to spite their faces. The whole subject has engendered far greater heat than is justified. I may be mistaken, but I do not see how anyone can hoard sugar before the 31st of October if people are strictly limited in the amount they can get. Who can hoard before the 31st of October if there is inventory control and rationing control? I cannot see that disaster would ensue. It is possible that we have so overestimated that we will be very short on the 1st of November, but I do not think so. So far as I can see, with the additional sugar from Cuba, we are going to have a very large stock pile. We will have the new plants of the International Emergency Food Council, and we will have built up a considerable stock. That is why we are rationing for the next 7 months. If we add to that five or six hundred thousand tons more from Cuba, which we have not counted, it seems to me we may expect a perfectly normal supply, certainly for the two coast areas, and the beet sugar crop is coming in to take care of the central area of the country.

In any event, I cannot see why anyone who wants to continue controls should not vote for the joint resolution and then, if later on it is desired to reconsider, move to extend the date from the first of November until March 31. We can reconsider our decision of this afternoon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] to recommit the bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish merely to suggest to the Senator from Wyoming that if his motion to recommit is to be of any value it should carry with it, if it is to be agreed to, an instruction to the committee to report back to the Senate not later than tomorrow in order that the Senate might take action.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The Senator is right. I accept the amendment.

Mr. BARKLEY. It would be in order, if the motion to recommit should carry, for the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency on tomorrow, or later today, if it desired, to report back the bill to the Senate as it was reported originally by the committee, minus all the amendments agreed to, or plus anything else the committee might want to add to it. So that if we are to get out of this situation, assuming the Senate wants to get out of it, in some way other than by having all control expire next Monday, there should be carried with the motion of the Senator from Wyoming an instruction to the committee to report not later than tomorrow.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I am very glad to accept the amendment as a part of my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's motion, then, is that the bill be recommitted with instructions to the committee to report not later than——

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Not later than tomorrow.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Let the Chair understand the motion clearly.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. The motion is to recommit the bill with instructions to the Committee on Banking and Currency to report back to the Senate at not later than noon tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. At not later than noon tomorrow.

Mr. TAFT. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. TAFT. If the bill shall be recommitted, will the committee be free to make any changes in the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The recommittal would nullify the action of the Senate in respect to all amendments, and the committee would be free to report as it pleased.

Mr. TAFT. I move that the motion of the Senator from Wyoming be laid on the table, and on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Ohio moves to lay on the table the motion of the Senator from Wyoming. The motion is not debatable.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I understand those who desire to recommit will vote "no."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator's understanding, as usual, is sufficiently accurate not to require any prompting from any source.

The yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is unavoidably detained. He is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent on public business.

If present and voting the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 44, nays 36, as follows:

So Mr. TAFT's motion to lay Mr. O'MAHONEY's motion on the table was agreed to.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I want to make a very brief statement, not for the purpose of attempting to influence the vote of any Senator, but in order that I may make my own position clear. I regret that the Senate took the action it took earlier in the day in moving the date forward to October 31. I think it was a mistake, but it was made, and it was made by the Senate, knowing that the same date was fixed in the House bill, and that therefore that date would not be in conference and it could not be changed by the conferees. So that the Senate took the action with its eyes open on that subject.

I do not know, and I would not pretend to say, whether it is wiser to end control of sugar on next Monday or Tuesday, or to continue it until the 31st day of October. I do feel that if we suddenly and unexpectedly remove controls from sugar, the result may be a windfall for the benefit of those who have, or will have, sugar for sale or manufacture. I think the Congress would not want to bring that about. I am afraid of that situation. I am therefore unwilling to take the responsibility. I have been unwilling to get the consent of my own mind to end these controls unexpectedly on next Monday, which will take place if this bill fails of passage. From my past experience, following the expiration of a control law and a 2 months' hiatus, during which the sky was the limit, in undertaking to secure legislation to reimpose limitations in a field where they had been lifted by failure of Congress, I would not be willing, if this law expires next Tuesday, to try again after my previous experience to reimpose these controls, because it would be ineffective, just as it was last year when we could not reimpose controls after the expiration of the price control act, and its reenactment a month or two later.

Therefore, for my own part, Mr. President, being unwilling to get the consent of my own mind to end these controls on next Tuesday, I shall vote for the passage of this measure, with the hope that if it turns out, in the light of new information, another date should be adopted for the expiration finally of sugar controls, we will have an opportunity to consider it and act upon it between now and the time when Congress shall adjourn.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I should like to make an inquiry of some member of the Committee on Banking and Currency. The inquiry is this: Is there any evidence before the committee which discloses the viewpoint of the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to these two dates, namely, March 31 and October 31? Has the Secretary testified as to the two dates, and the impact either would have upon our economy, so far as sugar is concerned? Has he given us any information about those two dates?

Mr. FLANDERS. Mr. President, I would like to say to the Senator from Illinois that the Secretary said, I think possibly without realizing that this emergency would come upon him, that he would rather decontrol now than that the October 31 date be fixed by law. He said that, quite specifically. I shall want to inquire of him, between now and our meeting tomorrow morning, whether he feels the same way, and I would not want to hold him to that, personally, until he faced this as a possible fact, rather than as something that is a hypothetical situation. He certainly told us that he would rather decontrol now than between now and the 31st of October.

I think there is one other matter that is pertinent. Mr. Marshall told us that at the present moment there was no evidence of hoarding sugar; so that is also pertinent to this situation, and is favorable to an immediate decontrol.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Illinois that I spoke at considerable length today, and slowly, much more slowly than I usually do, so I would be clearly understood, expressing the hope the Secretary of Agriculture would act along the specific lines we have suggested, and indicating the danger if he resorted to the October 31 date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the joint resolution.

Several Senators asked for the yeas and nays; and they were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, I do not want more than a half a minute. I desire to express my personal appreciation of the practical and sensible statement just made by the leader of the minority group. In that connection, if Congress finds that the measure as passed here today is not working satisfactorily, in the next 2 or 3 months is there any reason why we cannot amend it at that time? I ask the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency that question.

Mr. TOBEY. The dike will have been opened, the floods will come, and hell will be to pay.

Mr. O'DANIEL. Mr. President, I have already spoken once today on the pending subject, and I think everyone knows that I am against price control and rationing. I presented several reasons why I thought we should discontinue the control on sugar at the present time. The whole thing, however, has taken a different trend since I made my little talk, and during that talk I said that I did not think there was any doubt but that the measure would be passed by the Senate. I also want to say that I had in mind at the time I made my talk, that even though Congress should pass the measure it would not remain in force very long.

I think we all know that Mr. Truman down in the White House has been playing some very smart politics beginning immediately after last November 5. I think it has been demonstrated that the best time to bring about decontrol is suddenly and without much warning. That is the way Mr. Truman has brought decontrols about, and the plan has worked very well.

Everything has found its level or will continue to seek to find its level. So I think nothing would be smarter, so far as Mr. Truman's political career is concerned, than for Congress to put itself on record as being in favor of continued price control in order that he might in a few days or a few weeks receive the plaudits of the Nation by removing these controls. It is plainly seen in the pending measure that the Secretary of Agriculture has the right to remove controls at any time he wants to. Of course, I am a Democrat and I would be very glad to see Mr. Truman pull that rabbit out of the bag, so to speak. At least, what I mean is that I would be glad to see him get the best of Congress and continue to build up his political fences.

I am surprised, however, and I say it in all friendliness, that my friends on the other side of the aisle would be led as innocent little lambs to slaughter so soon after the election last November, when, without a doubt, the people of this Nation decided that they did not want any more controls. They decided it in such a convincing manner that anyone could see. Mr. Truman took advantage of the situation and 2 or 3 days later he removed price controls, and thereby he grew in stature before the public. Now, here we are considering the question of putting controls back. I certainly hope—well, I do not know whether I hope that we kill the measure here today or that Mr. Truman shall kill it later. If we do not kill it here, I certainly hope that he will do so and do it soon. If he continues to be politically astute he will veto this bill if Congress passes it.

I certainly hope he will.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Shall the House joint resolution pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. ROBERTSON] is absent because of illness.

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED] is unavoidably detained. He is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER.]

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from California [Mr. DOWNEY], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Maryland [Mr. TYDINGS], and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] are necessarily absent.

The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND], the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MCCARRAN], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KILGORE] are absent on public business.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] has a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED].

I announce further that if present and voting, the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 46, nays 34, as follows:

So the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 146) was passed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, Senate Joint Resolution 58 will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WHERRY. I move that the Senate insist upon its amendments, request a conference with the House thereon, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. TOBEY, Mr. FLANDERS, and Mr. MAYBANK conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask unanimous consent that the joint resolution which just passed the Senate, and all the amendments thereto, be printed so that Senators may have it tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 931) to extend certain powers of the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, with an amendment; insisted upon its amendment, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. MICHENER, Mr. SPRINGER, Mr. FELLOWS, Mr. DEVITT, Mr. WALTER, Mr. BYRNE of New York, and Mr. CRAVENS were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 918) to establish an Office of Selective Service Records to liquidate the Selective Service System following the termination of its functions on March 31, 1947, and to preserve and service the selective-service records, and for other purposes, with amendments; insisted upon its amendments, asked a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. SHORT, Mr. COLE of New York, and Mr. DREWRY were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

TERMINATION OF WAR POWERS AND CONTROLS UNDER SECOND WAR POWERS ACT

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 931) to extend certain powers of the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act.

Mr. WHERRY. I move that the Senate disagree to the amendments of the House, agree to the conference requested by the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the President pro tempore appointed Mr. WILEY, Mr. COOPER, and Mr. MCGRATH conferees on the part of the Senate.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate on next Friday and Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, permission is granted.

IMPORTANCE OF PRICE REDUCTIONS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I invite the attention of the Senate to a series of articles written by Mr. Blair Moody and published in the Detroit News, dealing with the problem of reduction of prices. I think it is very important that this material be inserted in the RECORD, and I should like to have it published in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks, because I believe that in this series of articles Mr. Blair Moody has put his finger on one of the vital economic problems facing the country.

I notice that the President in his recent press conference called attention to the importance of American industry voluntarily reducing prices. Mr. Moody has certainly brought out very clearly in these articles the vital importance of a quick reduction in prices if we are to save ourselves from what I think is clearly ahead of us, namely, a great economic disruption. If the spiral of high prices continues, it may result soon in the legitimate demand on the part of labor for a quick increase in wages. I fear that such increases in wages will be increases in money wages and not increases in real wages. I feel so deeply about it that I think attention should be focused on the economic crisis toward which I think America is rapidly moving, a crisis which, as the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY] pointed out this afternoon, is bound to result in serious depression within the next few months unless American industry and American labor get together on a price-reduction program in order to avoid demands for increases in wages.

There being no objection, the series of articles was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PRESSURE FOR PRICE CUTS APPLIED BY BIG BUSINESS—HARVESTER AD URGES KEY INDUSTRIES TO BREAK THROUGH INFLATION SPIRAL

(By Blair Moody)

WASHINGTON, March 20.—The Government's effort to check inflation, by getting United States Steel and other key industrial giants to break a path for widespread price cuts, gathered strength today by polite—but pointed—pressure from within the ranks of industry itself.

A new type of industrial ad, calling on business to rise to its public responsibilities, is beginning to appear in eastern newspapers.

For example, such key price makers as Big Steel's executive committee, which shortly must decide whether to cut the price of industry's basic material or keep it high, must have seen in the New York Times the other morning a big black-and-white display reading:

"Any price is too high if it can be reduced."

The ad was signed by Fowler McCormick, president of International Harvester Co., which has just announced price reductions totaling $20,000,000, effective April 1.

There can be little doubt that many, many prices can be reduced. Steel is one obvious example, with production and profits running at unprecedented, swollen levels. So many prices are so much too high that the president of the New York Stock Exchange, Emil Schram, has been raising ned about it. He fears an angry public backlash if the country is high-priced into a depression.

"MOST IMPORTANT"

"We believe," says McCormick's ad, "there is nothing more important to this country than to lower the prices of goods that people buy."

That is what every ranking economist in the White House, every top businessman in the Commerce Department, including Secretary Harriman and Under Secretary Foster, and many businessmen outside Government also believe.

But so far, McCormick's effort to lead the economy away from a postboom crash, toward prosperous stability, has been received by key industrial bigwigs with the same indignant high nose as greeted the similar effort by Henry Ford II a few weeks ago.

"Business, to our way of thinking, has a social as well as an economic responsibility," continues McCormick's ad.

This statement might raise quite a debate on, say, Big Steel's big board which numbers Sewell M. Avery and several prototypes as well as some pretty broad-gaged men.

"The American people," says McCormick, "have insisted that the Government withdraw from its attempt to control prices in peacetime."

He might have said: Congress insisted, after it had been assured in full-page ads of quite another type, sponsored by the National Association of Manufacturers and others, that if only price controls could be smashed, prices would go down. At any rate:

"That places the responsibility," McCormick continues, "where it belongs—in the hands of business and industry."

MUST BREAK THROUGH

Obviously, not all business can reduce prices by the same amount, and some can't cut them at all, he points out. But:

"Our company has felt a duty to act as promptly as possible. In our case, the business outlook now makes it possible to move toward the goal of lower prices. The only way out of the vicious circle of higher and higher prices is to break through."

Now, as is always the case when men of great position and power are involved, much more is being said privately than on the record about this whole issue.

Several important industrialists have told the Detroit News they see the economic threat to the Nation. They say they would like to cut prices and could cut them, but they are afraid to act until the steel industry acts, and the steel industry will follow the lead of its biggest member.

It is not a cartel, formally. It may not be industry-wide price-fixing, technically. But it is a curious phenomenon of the American "competitive" system which might well be examined by the new unit in the Department of Justice just set up by Attorney General Clark to investigate the concentration of economic power.

U. S. STEEL URGED TO LEAD FIGHT TO HALT INFLATION—GOVERNMENT REBUFFED IN FIRST EFFORT TO LAUNCH KEY MOVE

(By Blair Moody)

WASHINGTON, March 19.—The Government is calling on the U. S. Steel Corp. to cut its prices, as the key move in an effort to check inflation before the soaring cost of living plunges the country into a depression.

Secretary of Commerce W. Averell Harriman, a big businessman himself, put the proposition up to Irving S. Olds, chairman of the board of Big Steel, when he passed through the Capital en route to a winter vacation in the Bahamas.

Harriman told Olds in effect that his company, should it follow the price reductions by Ford and International Harvester, could set a pattern for the Nation which would do more than any single thing to reverse the current dangerous trend. Olds' response is reported to have been not encouraging.

The same situation was laid before Enders N. Voorhees, chairman of the finance committee of Big Steel, by Under Secretary of Commerce William C. Foster. Voorhees, said in business circles to be a leader of those opposing a price cut in the corporation's inner councils, was reported even less responsive."

John R. Steelman, assistant to President Truman, and Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, chairman of the President's Economic Advisory Council, have been privately warning industrialists for weeks that failure to reduce prices, while piling up tremendous profits, is making another big wage increase, and a final pre-crash whirl of the inflationary spiral, all but inevitable.

BUSINESS WARNED

The same warning was voiced by Emil Schram, president of the New York Stock Exchange, in a closed meeting of the Business Advisory Council. Schram told BAC, which is an adjunct of the Commerce Department but is composed of independent industrialists, that the public would never understand the huge profits being piled up while prices are so high that millions of buyers are being priced out of the market.

Schram presented figures showing 1946 profits of 51 consumer-goods corporations, many of which, he said, "never could be justified."

Schram's concern was primarily directed at consumer goods, as most directly affecting living costs. Harriman, Foster, Steelman, Nourse, and other officials and like-minded industrialists, however, are concentrating their efforts on steel as the fulcrum of the industrial economy.

Olds and Voorhees were reminded that United States Steel made profits of $34,000,000 and $31,000,000 in the last two quarters of 1946, the latter despite some production troubles. Profits for the first quarter of 1947 are running far above even those levels.

For the steel industry as a whole, profits rocketed from $22,000,000 in the first quarter of 1946 to $94,000,000 and are still rising, according to semiofficial reports.

PROMISE RECALLED

A highly important factor, from the public standpoint, is the fact that prices have soared following removal of controls by Congress in response to a widely advertised promise, by the National Association of Manufacturers and others, that they would not soar.

Steel is crucial, officials assert, because a substantial reduction of steel prices would be reflected all through the industrial economy. Automobile companies for example, are currently paying 19 to 35 percent above VJ-day prices for sheet.

Some automobile companies are now paying $115 to $120 a ton for steel, including extras, and large amounts of steel are appearing in the gray market at much higher prices.

The cut in extra charges, announced by Carnegie-Illinois, does not affect basic prices, nor even extra charges on the big industrial items, sheet and strip.

If Big Steel would make a substantial price cut, officials and some industrialists say, the pattern would be widely followed not only by other steel companies but throughout industry. They declare it would have a moderating effect on impending wage negotiations and could lead to a stabilized economy.

The impact of a domestic economy disrupted by extreme inflation on world stability, and on the chance of checking communism in Europe and avoiding war, is a collateral issue of great concern to some high officials.

WHITE HOUSE WINS BACKING IN DRIVE FOR PRICE CUTS—GROUP OF BUSINESSMEN, PRESIDENT TEAM IN BATTLE TO HALT INFLATION

(By Blair Moody)

WASHINGTON, March 18.—The White House and a group of forward-looking businessmen are teaming up in a vigorous backstage warning that failure of big industrial and commercial interests to cut their prices may be heading the country into a violent depression.

Alarmed by the soaring cost of living, these industrialists and financiers, backed by top Presidential advisers, are declaring that, unless the inflationary surge is reversed, the very structure of our economic system will be in danger.

A moment when President Truman and Congress are about to launch a bold new effort to stop the spread of world communism, and when a strong or disrupted American economy may spell the difference between future war or peace, is no time, these men say, to dissipate our national strength in the aftermath of irresponsible profit grabbing.

The trend can be reversed, they assert, if those in key price-making positions in industry will take advantage of current enormous profits to set a pattern for stability instead of for a boom and bust.

Prices and profits have been soaring without restraint ever since Congress wrecked price controls last summer. Every week they are touching new 27-year highs. Only Ford Motor Co., International Harvester, and a few others have made good on the promise made then by the National Association of Manufacturers and other business spokesmen that lifting controls would automatically lower prices by competition.

WAGE PARLEYS PEND

Coming up are wage negotiations in crucial industries, like steel, which set the pattern over a wide area of business and industry, both for wage and price policies. Steel profits were very high in the third and fourth quarters of 1946 and are even higher now. Farm prices, leaping up after removal of controls, shortly may be subjected to even greater pressures by demand from overseas.

Many industrialists declare that a new pattern of wage boosts, unless kept within moderate bounds, would bring the crash closer by pricing more goods out of the reach of mass buyers. Yet those who have power to start the cost of living downward for the most part ignore the situation.

Emil Schram, president of the New York Stock Exchange, read the riot act in a closed meeting of the Business Advisory Council, an industrialist adjunct of the Department of Commerce, late last week.

He presented a confidential analysis of the profit of 51 prominent, selected commercial corporations selling goods directly to the public. It showed that high volumes and high prices are piling up astronomic profits, running in some cases many hundred percent over wartime levels.

If this sort of thing continues, Schram said, the capitalistic system will be endangered.

Among the comparatively progressive industrialists and merchants who comprise the BAC, the reaction to Schram's speech was described as excellent. Some industrialists with whom the Detroit News has discussed this situation entirely agree with his analysis of the danger involved. For various reasons, they do not want to be quoted.

GRAVELY CONCERNED

Secretary of Commerce W. Averell Harriman, a big businessman, and Under Secretary of Commerce William C. Foster, head of a small manufacturing company, are gravely concerned at high prices in some lines.

A blunt warning was voiced Monday by Dr. Edwin G. Nourse, former Brookings Institution economist, who is now Chairman of President Truman's Economic Advisory Council, before the Controllers Institute of America.

Nourse said that businessmen who currently get while the getting is good are "doing everything possible to dig the grave of private business enterprise."

Recalling that business interests, in demanding removal of controls, said the natural forces of market competition would promptly restore sound and permanently prosperous business relationships, Nourse said:

"I cannot accept the theory that, in this day of giant corporations, big financial institutions, and Nation-wide unions, the impersonal forces of the market will automatically establish sound wage-price-profit relationships.

"Over large areas of the economy prices and the course of business are determined by highly personalized administrative decisions made by officials of business organizations, and affecting large blocks of capital resources or of labor resources.

"I think it is quite clear to everyone that the decisions of these responsible executives have not since VJ-day mutually added up to anything like a workable solution of the Nation's business problems in terms of well-sustained production and the prosperity that goes with it.

"It is a familiar saying that you cannot do anything to change the law of supply and demand. That is true. But you can act intelligently or stupidly within the conditions laid down by the law."

THREATENED TELEPHONE STRIKE

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the body of the RECORD as a part of my remarks a letter which I have received from the president of the National Federation of Telephone Workers. When I made the suggestion a few days ago on the floor of the Senate that the telephone workers and the telephone industry try to work out an agreement for voluntary arbitration of a dispute, I did so without consultation either with the union or the industry. I understand that some members of the industry seem to think that I must have been in consultation with the union. The fact of the matter is that the union strenuously objected to the suggestion which I made.

I wish to say again—because April 7 is not very far away—that unless the telephone industry and the telephone workers find a way to settle this dispute by way of peaceful procedures—the last step being by way of voluntary arbitration—I think the American people have the right to call both the industry and the workers to an accounting, because there is no justification on the part of the industry—workers and employers combined—for confronting the country with the tremendous loss of a telephone strike.

I read an excerpt from a letter which I have received from a telephone worker, which I think is typical of the attitude of the workers in the industry. He says:

> Yesterday I heard telephone employees laying plans for a strike. In fact, I saw the picket signs. There is no fooling or bluffing this time. The members are resigned to militant action. I dread the consequence of a strike. Yet if I am to secure sufficient salary and job security it appears that I must resort to force. What can we do to prevent this calamity?

I will tell them what to do. Both industry and labor can get together on a voluntary arbitration agreement, neither side reserving to itself the right—which I am afraid the telephone employers are seeking to reserve—of determining in advance what the issues are that shall be submitted to arbitration. All issues ought to go to arbitration in this dispute. Therefore I ask to have the letter from Mr. J. A. Beirne, president of the National Federation of Telephone Workers, printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF TELEPHONE WORKERS,
Washington, D. C., March 19, 1947.

Senator WAYNE MORSE,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: In the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, I read the statement you made to the Senate on March 18. I will personally present the proposal you made to the policy committee of the National Federation of Telephone Workers. The policy committee meets in Washington, D. C., on March 24, and will be reviewing the entire situation as it exists in the telephone industry. The policy committee will be making a decision on the future course of action which will be followed.

Since November of 1946 we have been making proposals to the policy-making management of the Bell System. All of the proposals made were designed to offset the need for any strike action by our members. The Bell System management has refused to deal with us even though we have in our possession properly executed papers of agency and even though the Bell System management is fully aware of the fact that the federation's bargaining committee is equipped to settle all disputes.

It was demonstrated during the wartime period that the Bell System controls the policies of all associated companies. This means that 90 percent of the telephone industry is under the direct supervision of Bell System management. The Telephone Commission of the War Labor Board made the following unanimous observation:

"The over-all wage structure of the Bell System reflects the centralized management policies of the A. T. & T. Co. The unifying influence of the A. T. & T. appears in the close similarity of most nonrate aspects of the wage structures of the various associated Bell companies. Each Bell company, for example, has the same four major operating departments. Further, these same four departments in all companies carry almost identical job or task titles, and task routines. this same unifying influence is evident also in the existing interrelation of Bell System wage rates, not only among departments and specific jobs of each company but, likewise, among the total wage-rate structures of the companies themselves."

I might point out that one of the industry members who concurred in the statement was the official representative of the Bell System. In spite of the foregoing declaration, the Bell System management, since last November has refused to meet the only union capable of settling the labor problems in the industry.

The policy of the National Federation of Telephone Workers calls for the use of every medium in order to peacefully settle our problems. Your proposal will be considered in the light of our policy. Telephone workers do not want a strike any more than the management or the legislators on Capitol Hill. With contracts expiring, however, and with the industry refusing consideration of retroactivity treatment, we cannot be asked to forget our birthright as American citizens.

Very sincerely yours,

J. A. BEIRNE, President.

P. S.—I am also enclosing a copy of a recent talk given over ABC Broadcasting System which may give you some of the facts and figures connected with our current case.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 1947

The House met at 10 o'clock a. m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our blessed Father in Heaven, with grateful and thankful hearts we approach Thee. Do Thou enable us to understand that the best life is not all a battle or a race, but a growth and a walk with God. With this truth in our thoughts, we may turn cheerfully to our appointed tasks. Dismiss from us the jarring and discordant note; let us have done with the drudgery of fear and friction that often make duty an unendurable burden. Help us to ascend into the spiritual heights for inspiration and outlook, to feel the immensities of God's great world house, to wander along its shore lines, drink in the breath of heaven, and thus receive hope and faith and courage for the labors and conflicts of life. Through Christ our Saviour. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

INDIVIDUAL INCOME TAX PAYMENTS

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income tax payments.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 1, with Mr. CASE of South Dakota in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose yesterday, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] had 25 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. DOUGHTON] had 15 minutes remaining. By unanimous consent granted in the House today, the time for debate was extended until not later than 2 o'clock, the added time to be equally divided between the gentleman from Minnesota and the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND].

Mr. FORAND. At the outset, Mr. Chairman, I wish to advise my colleagues that I was not responsible for the quorum call that brought them here. I am glad, however, to see that the audience is a little larger than it was at the time the quorum call was made, because of a few points I hope to make during the course of my remarks.

Let me repeat what I have said before, that I yield to no man in my desire to reduce taxes. I am most anxious for that moment to arrive; but I cannot today agree with the majority that now is the time to do it, because on this tax bill, as was the case on the budget measure, they are acting in the dark; they are basing their decision not on factual information but rather on campaign promises. They are placing in jeopardy the opportunity of balancing the budget, and yet they have the colossal nerve to tell us they are going to balance the budget, they are going to pay on the public debt, and also that they are going to reduce taxes by $3,800,000,000 a year. I have asked many times that they tell me how they are going to do it, but I have yet to receive an answer. I hope sometime before the debate closes that the answer will be given to us.

It has been the practice in the past for the Republican Party to proclaim to the Nation that they believe in a sound fiscal policy for this government, that they believe in fairness and equity to all concerned. As was pointed out yesterday, in the minority views on the tax bill of 1945, which was signed by the now chairman of the Ways and Means Committee as well as the other Republican members, grave concern was expressed for the people in the low-income brackets. To follow that policy, of course, would detract considerably from campaign promises that were made last fall, and because of those campaign promises they are riding roughshod today.

I made a statement yesterday, when the gentleman from Ohio yielded to me after he had asked why the Democrats on the Ways and Means Committee had voted for the amendment of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] providing an additional 10 percent for those in the brackets below $1,000, I told him then that we were ready and willing at any time to help make a bad bill a little better if we could. He asked then why we had not suggested that it be raised from 30 to 40 percent, and my reply at that time—and I read now from page 2663 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, the first column:

> I will tell the gentleman why we did not offer anything in the committee, because of the way the committee was ridden by one man. We did not stand a chance, and I will tell you more if you want to hear it.

To that the gentleman from Ohio replied—and again I read:

> I am sorry that the gentleman is aggrieved. It is almost childish to think that one man dominates the whole 25 members of the committee. I am sure that the gentleman from Rhode Island was not dominated.

Of course, I was not dominated and I am not going to be dominated, but I was precluded from expressing freely my thoughts and my opinions. That was not the only instance where we had to face that type of boss rule. Read the hearings, read the reports of the newspapers during the consideration of this bill, particularly during the 2 days of hearings.

Let me go further and give you a little background of this bill. I am not going to deal in statistics this morning because you have plenty of statistics in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. You also have a discussion there on the merits and demerits of the bill, but I think you are entitled to know how this bill is up today and why it is being rushed through. The bill is here today because, as I said before, of campaign promises that were made at a time when it was the hope of the Republicans that they would control this House. Frankly, in their own hearts they had no hope of controlling the body at the other end of the Capitol. It would have been great politics for them to put through this House a tax-reduction bill and have the Democratic-controlled Senate defeat it. But the voters crossed them up and gave the Republicans complete charge of both branches of the legislature. Today they are on the spot. They are trying to make good. In their effort to make good, what are they doing? They want to make good, of course, in the higher brackets, because that is where their slush fund for the election comes from. They want to make good in the higher brackets, practically disregarding the little people.

They brought in this bill which was supposed to be a cut of 20 percent across the board. What happened? The gentleman from Minnesota and his colleagues realized what would happen with a 20-percent across-the-board cut. They realized they would be reducing the tax of the man in the higher brackets by about 7 percentage points below the taxes he paid in 1939 and they did not dare face the music. So they said that those earning above $302,000 would be cut about 10½ percent. To those below the $302,000 brackets and above the $100,000 bracket, yes, above $1,395, they gave a 20-percent cut.

Then they come in with a little notch for that group between $1,000 and $1,395 and they say magnanimously "We are going to give 30 percent to the little people." Yes; 22 cents a week to a married man who makes only $1,200 a year. That to me is an insult.

But, let me get back to the progress of this bill. It came before the committee after the Republicans, behind closed doors, had reached an agreement on what they were going to do. They had 15 members to 10 of the Democrats. They did not care how the Democrats acted. The gavel was there and there was a strong man handling it; also there were 15 votes against 10. Therefore, they brought in a bill considered behind closed doors. Let me assure you that the Republicans are not as full of agreement as appears on the surface, and as appears from these reports of what has been going on. I have heard some pretty loud voices behind these closed doors which indicated to me they were not getting along so well. Then they whittled the cut down a little further, and they bring in a bill that will give relief to the low-income group by 30 percent. This on the motion of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN]. What does that do? It does so little that if you take the chart you will need a magnifying glass to see the line and note where there is any real relief in the low-income brackets.

Mr. Chairman, you must realize this bill was supposed to be considered only in closed hearings, with selected witnesses, supposed to be only representatives of the Treasury Department, the Bureau of Internal Revenue, together with the staff of the Joint Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation. The committee voted on motion by the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED], that the hearings would be restricted, and the date set for the hearings was February 18 and 19. Again, I say one man rules the committee. The chairman decided to postpone the hearings and we, the Democratic members of the committee, learned of that postponement only through the press and not from the chairman of the committee. We also learned through the press first when the hearings would be held in March and also we learned then that it had been decided the hearings would be open to the public.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Rhode Island has expired.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. FORAND. I ask you, ladies and gentlemen, in this country where we proclaim democracy, is it fair, is it honest for the Republicans to close the door on the Democrats and when they have legislation ready, to say, "Here it is fellows. Take it. If you are not going to take it, you will not get anything."

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. I think it is well to put in the RECORD, right here, the fact that every hearing on tax legislation held before the Committee on Ways and Means under a Democratic-controlled committee, was open to the public, and every person interested had the opportunity to appear and testify.

Mr. FORAND. The gentleman is absolutely right, and that is the way it should be. But the Republicans go considerably further when they adopt a rule such as that which was brought in yesterday. Why, gentlemen, you will not even hear the bill read. The rule precludes the reading of the bill.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, there is an absolute constitutional right involved; the right of the citizens to petition their public officials, and it is denied in this case to the public, and we have always preserved it.

Mr. FORAND. Oh, of course, that is true, and I believe any one of you who would sit in the Committee on Ways and Means would realize that constitutional rights mean nothing. In fact, our Republican friends were so anxious to bring this bill to the floor that the rule provides for only 6 hours of general debate. When the legislative counsel pointed out that there were technical amendments that should be made to this bill, the gentleman from Minnesota simply said, "The Senate will take care of it." Now, I ask you, is that the way to bring in legislation?

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

Mr. KELLEY. That is not the only committee that is holding hearings by the majority members to the exclusion of minority members.

Mr. FORAND. I heard that.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. I want to say for the record that I believe it is true that not all hearings were held officially here in the Capitol. They were held elsewhere, and the decisions were made elsewhere.

Mr. FORAND. I will say to the gentleman that I am inclined to agree with him, because you recall, as I do, I am sure, that last week there was a postponement of the meeting of the committee for 2 days so that the Republicans could get together on the Kean amendment, and certain members left town.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. LESINSKI. Is it not a fact that the Manufacturers Association wrote this bill?

Mr. FORAND. I would not be a bit surprised that they were behind it. They had a finger in the pie. They were hot and bothered about it, and so was the chamber of commerce.

Mr. KEAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. KEAN. The gentleman said some hearings or discussions on this bill took place somewhere else than in the Capitol. As far as I am concerned there was no discussion of the bill or meetings of the Republican members anywhere except in this Capitol or in the House Office Building.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I do not believe my friend the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. KEAN] is high enough in the inner circles of the party. You were not all included; you would not know about it.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FORAND. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. When the gentleman from Michigan makes the statement that any conferences were held outside the Capitol or the House Office Building, that is false.

Mr. FORAND. Will the gentleman also brand as false the fact that when the Republican members of the Ways and Means Committee tried to report out the original Knutson bill, the steering committee of the Republican Party called them in?

Mr. KNUTSON. What do we have a steering committee for?

Mr. FORAND. That same gentleman from Minnesota told us in the committee that the committee was going to write the bill, and Republican members of the committee did write the bill, but the committee amended the bill at the request of the steering committee.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am getting tired of these false statements.

Mr. FORAND. I am giving the facts.

Mr. KNUTSON. We will reply to the gentleman in time.

Mr. FORAND. I am very anxious to get a reply, and I hope it will be a clear-cut one. I hope it is not the kind of reply I got when I asked the chairman in committee when the time would be propitious to consider my bill raising exemptions. The only answer I got then was a bang of the gavel by the chairman.

Mr. KNUTSON. He always does that when foolish questions are propounded.

Mr. FORAND. That is the gentleman's opinion as to how foolish the questions are, but I will match my wits against his, and I think I have at least as much brains as he has, despite the fact that he has lived more years than I have.

Now, with that background, ladies and gentlemen, I do not ask you to vote as I am going to vote. You vote your own convictions, but you are entitled to know the background of this iniquitous bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, the Good Book states that when you hand out the Gospel you ought to hand it out to sinners and not to saints. The Good Book also says that there is greater rejoicing in heaven over the conversion of 1 sinner than over 99 that need no conversion.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. Not now. Mr. Chairman, I would rather not be interrupted from this floor until I yield the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. MASON. If the word "sinners" is a proper word to apply to my friends on this side of the aisle, I want to confess right here and now that at least 99 percent of them are delightful sinners, and I love to associate with them as closely as I can. For that reason, I am over here on this side of the aisle speaking for this 10 minutes that has been allotted to me.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. MASON. I refuse to yield right now because I have some things on my mind that I want to get off, and I want to get them across to your minds.

The first thing I want to do is clear up a misconception or a misunderstanding that exists between the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] and myself. As you all know, some 3 or 4 weeks ago I tried to analyze the theory behind the Engel bill and the Knutson bill and make comparisons. At the close of that analysis I was interrogated by the gentleman from Tennessee and also the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL]. I answered those interrogations as clearly and as specifically as I could by saying either "Yes" or "No."

In the extension of remarks that the gentleman from Michigan placed in the RECORD, which were not uttered on the floor so far as I could hear, he made the statement that I did not know any more about taxes than I knew about the man in the moon. He also made the statement in his extension of remarks that I had not been on the Ways and Means Committee long enough to learn about taxes. That was not a very nice statement to make about a colleague, even if it had been true, and it certainly was not a nice thing to do to put it in an extension of remarks so that the gentleman from Illinois could not answer it at that time.

To clear up the RECORD I want to say this, and not in any prideful way at all. I was studying economics, majoring in economics, specializing in taxation in the university when the gentleman from Michigan was in knee britches. Later on I lectured all over the State of Illinois on tax matters before tax groups, for 7 years. I served in the Illinois State Senate on the tax committee of that senate and piloted tax bills through that senate for six long years. During those 6 years the State of Michigan got into a tax mess, the great State of Michigan, the State from which the gentleman [Mr. DINGELL] comes.

The Legislature of the State of Michigan sent a Macedonian call down to Springfield, Ill., to the Governor—a Democratic Governor—Governor Horner, to please send someone up to Michigan, some person to help them out of their tax mess and to explain the tax system of the State of Illinois and the methods of the State of Illinois of collecting taxes to the people of Michigan.

The Governor of the State of Illinois—the Democratic Governor of Illinois—Governor Horner, selected the Senator from the Thirty-ninth District of Illinois—a Republican Senator—the gentleman who is now addressing you. I went up to Michigan and I conferred with the tax committee of the Michigan Senate and the Michigan House of Representatives. I spoke also at a mass meeting that evening in the legislative halls, where there were assembled taxpayers from all over the State of Michigan. The next morning I addressed the joint session of the Legislature of the State of Michigan on this tax question. Whether I gave them any light on the subject or not, of course, I do not know, but those are the facts. That was in late April of 1933, 14 years ago, about the time the gentleman from Michigan was placed on the Committee on Ways and Means.

Now, I confess I am a freshman on the Committee on Ways and Means, but I do not think I am entirely a freshman on the subject of taxation. But, as I am a believer in the Good Book, and as I have been criticized and harsh things said about me before many times, even my wife, who has put up with me for 45 years, sometimes says a harsh word to me, I am going to say this to the gentleman from Michigan, and it is what I have said to my wife more than once, "In spite of the harsh words, I shall continue to love you as much in the future as I have in the past."

Mr. Chairman, now about tax theories: Perhaps I should lecture these delightful sinners here on tax theory for a minute or two. As I see it, there are only two questions before us in the consideration of this bill. One question is: Shall we do it now; is this the proper time? The other question, if it is the proper time, is: What is the best way to do it to bring about the greatest good to the greatest number? Those are the only two questions we are faced with here today. First, the proper time; second, how to do it to bring about the greatest good to the greatest number.

I want to try to treat each one of those questions very briefly.

The first one: Is now the appointed time? Well, every sound economist in the country today, without exception, says that our tax rates today are confiscatory; that they have passed the point of diminishing returns; that they are now drying up the streams of risk capital or investment capital; that they are at least slowing up and checking the expansion of business; that they absolutely prevent any new business from being started with any idea of success. Whenever you take 90 cents out of every dollar of profit that a manufacturer makes, which situation applies to many of them today, you are taking away from him the incentive to expand, to create jobs, and to produce the necesary goods to satisfy a hungry, consuming public. That is the situation today. Most people do not realize it, and I am afraid most men in this House do not realize that taxes and jobs are Siamese twins—they are tied together—they are closely related, and you just cannot separate them.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. No; I cannot yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MASON. No; I cannot yield. I do not have the time.

Mr. DINGELL. I would like to answer the gentleman.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, high tax rates always bring about a contracting national economy, fewer jobs, and greater unemployment. Low tax rates always produce an expanding national economy, create more jobs, and eliminate unemployment. Now, that is the situation we are facing in this Nation today, and we have got to do something about it. Whenever taxes take at least one-third of the national income they are absolutely too heavy for the average taxpayer to pay. He just cannot do it, and whenever you take from 80 cents to 92 cents of every dollar of income from the fellow in the high brackets, as you are doing today, then you are killing the goose that lays the golden egg, the golden eggs in this instance being jobs and increasing pay rolls for the workers of America.

Mr. Chairman, "the power to tax is the power to destroy." The speaker is opposed to high taxes, not primarily because they place a burden upon the rich, but because they prevent the poor from becoming rich. The ambitious individual that "dreamed dreams" and "launched out on some business venture" in the days of low taxes has already made his mark. He has accumulated his capital and become a captain of industry. The acid test of a system of taxation is not its effect upon the man who has already achieved, but rather its effect upon the ambitious young man just starting out to achieve.

Collecting taxes is like taking blood from a human body for a blood bank. If we take too much at a time, we run the risk of weakening the patient so that he cannot give blood another day. Whenever a tax takes too much or too often from the channels of business, business is weakened and the Treasury loses. When virile, forward, venturesome young men are permitted to grow and expand in a favorable tax climate the Treasury gains. High tax rates produce an economic anemia that prevents business expansion and makes it impossible for an ambitious, venturesome young man to achieve.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 17 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER].

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I am sure all Members who were on the floor were very glad to hear, from his own lips, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] tell us how brilliant he is with respect to tax matters. I wonder if the membership knows that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], who just spoke, is not in agreement with his party on this bill. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] within the last 2 or 3 days said publicly, "I am in favor of a straight 20-percent across-the-board cut." I am sorry, with all the knowledge of tax matters, that he was not able to convince his Republican colleagues that they should bring out a 20-percent across-the-board reduction.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. MORRIS. I have the highest regard and respect for the gentleman from Illinois who has just spoken, but it may be that on this particular subject his much learning hath almost made him a "KNUTSON."

Mr. EBERHARTER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

I want to further call attention to the fact that in Illinois they do not have any State income tax. So that all that experience which the gentleman had perhaps is responsible for Illinois having what is known as one of the most regressive tax systems in the country, because nearly all of their revenue is derived from excise taxes. So if the House wants to follow the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] in a 20-percent straight-across-the-board reduction and his method of raising revenue by excise taxes, then we will acknowledge his superiority over the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] whom he mentioned about seven times but to whom he refused to yield.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. DINGELL. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON] referred to me but would not permit me to answer. I may say to my friend from Illinois that the remarks to which he objected, and implied at least that they were not made on the floor, that they were definitely made on the floor; and the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. ABERNETHY], by my side, tells me he heard me make them on the floor, and there are other Members on the floor today who heard me make those references. This much must be conceded, however, that under the rule I have the right to revise and extend my remarks and I could if I chose place an added thought or a graphic illustration in them.

Let me say just one other thing to my friend from Illinois: If he were called to Michigan to advise with the legislature in 1933 it was for the express purpose probably of trying to correct a tax situation that was a mess from the previous administration under Republican misrule.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I have only 15 minutes. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] will yield me an extra minute or two I will yield to the gentleman, but I cannot otherwise.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question further?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. DINGELL. I am prompted at this moment by my distinguished colleague from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI] that it is presumed that the gentleman from Illinois came to Michigan to advise us about the passage of a sales tax bill in Michigan.

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. SADOWSKI. I was a member of the Legislature of Michigan at that time. If I remember correctly, what the gentleman from Illinois proposed to us at that time was the infamous sales tax, unjust in its workings, which taxed the milk of the babies and the food of the underprivileged. The man making $50 a month would have to pay a 3-percent tax on every bit of food he bought or every piece of clothing he wears. It is the most onerous, the most indecent thing ever put upon our State.

The Republican policy of high prices for consumers, high profits, and high tax reductions for the rich is already resented by the great masses of people, as recently demonstrated by the teachers' strike and the thousands of letters that I am now receiving. I think this foretells the end of Republican rule in Congress.

Mr. MASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan. His name has been mentioned so many times it is only fair to yield to him.

Mr. MASON. What I said was that I did not hear the statements made by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL]. I did not say they were not made on the floor.

Mr. DINGELL. That was the only inference I could draw.

Mr. MASON. Secondly, I was called to Michigan to do a definite job, to explain the sales tax which I had voted against in the Illinois State Senate; but I was called there to do a job and I did it.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I will yield for a question, but I cannot spend all my time yielding to others to carry on this dispute.

Mr. CURTIS. It appears that the minority is not going along with this bill, but I wonder who is on trial, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] or the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON].

Mr. EBERHARTER. I will let the committee decide that.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I decline to yield further.

There are just two points I want to make clear about this bill in the time at my disposal: First, H. R. 1 favors the rich against the poor; and, second, the few crumbs for the low-income taxpayer are tossed him in such a complex way as to seriously disrupt the simplified system of individual income-tax payment.

On the first point, it is crystal clear that H. R. 1 favors the rich against the poor. Even the Republicans do not deny that the amount of dollars added to the spendable income of upper-bracket taxpayers is vastly greater than the pittance added to the weekly salary of the taxpayers with net incomes under $5,000. No; the Republicans do not deny that the take-home pay of the $300,000-a-year married man with no dependents would be increased by about $47,000, or more than 70 percent, while the $4,000-a-year man would be increased by $118, or 3½ percent.

The Members of this House, Mr. Chairman, no doubt are interested in what this bill does for them. Well, a married person with a net income of $12,500 before personal exemption would receive an additional $609, or 6.5 percent in take-home pay.

I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether the members of the majority, who seem to think the tax reduction joy ride such a fine campaign issue, have stopped to consider just how many people in their districts will receive this 70-percent increase in spendable income given to taxpayers above $300,000. The figures of the Secretary of the Treasury show that only around 1,000 taxpayers in the entire country make this much money. It is my prediction that the Republican Party will rue the day when H. R. 1 was born. The 46,000,000 taxpayers with incomes under $5,000, all of whom, even after the illusory 30-percent committee amendment, would receive less than a 4-percent increase in take-home pay, may well ask a few embarrassing questions. Nor may all the taxpayers be too pleased with the fact that Members of Congress receive a higher tax benefit than they.

No; the Republicans do not deny the disparities I have outlined. They seem proud of providing this vast windfall for the wealthiest taxpayers. Of course, they become a bit nervous when it is pointed out that the original 20 percent across-the-board plan would have increased the take-home pay of the highest brackets by nearly 100 percent. And what a shock it was to find that the original plan would have resulted in taxpayers with net income above a million dollars actually paying less taxes than before the war. This obviously was political dynamite—even to the Mellon-minded majority. You may have wondered, as I did, where the 10½-percent figure in the case of taxpayers over $303,000 came from. Well, Mr. Chairman, chart 1 on page 35 of the minority views in the report on H. R. 1 shows that this 10½ percent is the highest figure that could be applied in the upper brackets, and still not restore them quite to the prewar level.

Yes; Mr. Chairman, this bill would enable the high-bracket taxpayers to forget that World War II ever occurred. The people who benefited most from the wartime levels of business activity and the highest profits in our history now are to have their share of the war debt transferred to the shoulders of the smaller taxpayers—the veterans' laborers, and other persons of modest income—who did the fighting and sacrificing to win the war.

Yet the Republicans have the crust, Mr. Chairman, to attempt to justify this preposterous scheme. They say that the special consideration for the wealthy is necessary to stimulate venture capital and managerial incentives. On page 10 of their report it is stated:

New investments are believed to come primarily from incomes of more than $10,000 to $15,000. Those with smaller incomes can save little, and what they do save is likely to be invested in old, well-established business. Such persons have neither the information nor the time to examine the possibilities of making investments in new ventures, and cannot afford to assume the risks involved.

What a contradiction is this concern for the well-to-do and the wealthy with the tears shed by the Republicans for the low-income groups in the views of the Republican minority on the tax adjustment bill of 1945. In these words 9 of the present 15 Members of the majority on the Ways and Means Committee wept for the small taxpayer:

In these low-income groups will be found the millions of so-called white-collared employees—school teachers, clergymen, shopkeepers, salespeople, bookkeepers, barbers, clerks, and professional or semiprofessional workers, not to mention small-farm operators, mechanics, janitors, caretakers, skilled and unskilled laborers, many of whom are self-employed individuals. Most of these individuals are not organized and none of them has experienced any measurable wartime prosperity. The purchasing power of their dollar, moreover, has shrunk by more than 40 percent below 1939 levels. With the heavy rates of taxation now in effect, and with living costs constantly increasing, these groups have either been reduced to a substandard of living, or are rapidly approaching that level. The successful solution of our entire reconversion problem will very largely depend upon the resources of this particular segment of the taxpaying public. Within this group we find the bulk of the American market for the products of agriculture and industry, not to mention the sources of capital used in the production of agricultural and manufactured goods and maintenance of essential services. If tax demands continue for too long to empty the pockets of these citizens, the results can be serious on a broad scale.

Do you wonder, Mr. Chairman, that we Democrats now suspect these tears of 1945 to be more of crocodile than human origin?

In a final desperate effort to absolve themselves from guilt, the Republican sponsors have pointed an accusing finger across the aisle. They say, "The 1945 Revenue Act made a flat percentage cut in individual income tax."

But, Mr. Chairman, this is but a half or third of the story. While the 1945 act provided a 5-percent decrease, this was only one of three major changes affecting individual income liability. In addition to the 5-percent cut, the 1945 act provided for an increase in exemptions by raising the flat $500 normal tax exemption for the taxpayer to the surtax level of $500 for the taxpayer, $500 for his spouse, and $500 for each dependent. It also reduced surtax rates by three percentage points throughout the scale. The increase in exemptions and three-point decrease in surtax rates recognized the principle of progressive taxation in accordance with ability to pay. In contrast with the reductions proposed under H. R. 1 which range from 30 percent at the bottom of the income scale to 10 percent at the top, the tax cuts under the 1945 act ranged from 100 percent for some 12,000,000 low-income taxpayers to less than 7 percent for the highest incomes.

No; the unsullied record of the Democratic Party cannot be used to hide the sticky fingers of the majority advocates of H. R. 1. If ever a tax measure provided, in the words of the late President Roosevelt, "relief not for the needy but for the greedy," H. R. 1 does.

My second point, Mr. Chairman, is the mockery H. R. 1 makes of our efforts to simplify the tax laws. Enactment of H. R. 1 would be a set-back to the program of tax simplification which has advanced so far in recent years. It would complicate the rate structure, the tax-return form, and the withholding system. The "notch" provision would be confusing. Employers using the percentage method of withholding would be required to compute the amounts to be withheld on the basis of four rates rather than the two provided under present law. The retroactive tax reduction and the split first bracket under H. R. 1 would greatly increase the number of refunds. The split first-surtax bracket would increase the number of separate returns of husbands and wives and thus greatly increase the work load of the Bureau of Internal Revenue.

The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. MILLS] yesterday explained in some detail how H. R. 1 complicates the tax forms and creates problems of education and compliance in case of taxpayers with small incomes. Though his remarks might well bear repetition, I merely direct your attention to them on page 2667 of yesterday's RECORD. Other administrative problems include the following:

First, H. R. 1 would aggravate the inequities resulting from application of the State community property laws.

You are familiar with the unequal tax treatment that now exists as between taxpayers in community property States and taxpayers in other States. H. R. 1 would serve to expand greatly the area within which such inequities would arise. It appears that in community property States the number of couples with surtax net incomes between $1,000 and $2,000 is about the same as the number with surtax net incomes above the $2,000 level. This means that the number of couples accorded preferential tax treatment simply by virtue of their residence in community property States will be about doubled. And for the first time low income taxpayers in noncommunity property States in the bracket under $2,000 would be discriminated against.

Second. A new choice problem will be presented for the first time to millions of taxpayers.

Under H. R. 1, every husband and wife who have separate incomes, that together represent over $1,000 of surtax net income—that is, gross income minus deductions and exemptions—are faced with the choice between filing separate returns or a single joint return. This question cannot be answered merely by reference to the total amount of net income nor by any other equally simple method. For example, consider two married couples, each having one child, and each having aggregate net incomes of $3,000. Suppose that in one instance the husband has $2,200 income and the wife has $800 income. If they file a joint return the total tax liability is $228, whereas if they file separate returns their aggregate tax is $212.90, or a saving of $15.10 with separate returns. In contrast, assume that the husband of the second couple has an income of $2,700 and the wife $300. The tax advantage here would be with the joint return—$228 as compared with a tax of $258.40 on a separate return basis. The problem would be still more complex if we were to consider the matter of allocating deduction items under separate returns; so complex, in fact, that I shall not undertake to lead you through any illustrative examples.

The point to be stressed is that under present law this sort of complication need not be faced by married couples with one child with aggregate net incomes of less than $3,500. Under H. R. 1, however, millions of married couples would have to start to worry about the type of tax return whether separate or joint that they should file in order to minimize their tax liability.

In other words, the married couple with small income would have to compute the tax liability under both methods before they could actually know which method is more advantageous.

H. R. 1 allows a taxpayer an additional $500 exemption for himself if he is over 65 years of age. In the case of a joint return, an additional $500 exemption is allowed with respect to each spouse provided such spouse is over 65 and has a taxable gross income of $500 or more. If the taxable gross income of either spouse is less than $500, no exemption is allowed. This provision would operate somewhat as follows:

Take the case of Mr. and Mrs. Jones, each over 65. Mr. Jones has a net income of $1,500 and his wife has a net income of $500. They file a joint return claiming two special exemptions, and under H. R. 1 incur no tax liability.

In contrast, take the case of Mr. and Mrs. Smith, each also over 65. Mr. Smith, like Mr. Jones, has a net income of $1,500, but Mrs. Smith has a net income of only $499 or $1 less than Mrs. Jones. Mr. and Mrs. Smith file a joint return claiming only one special exemption and incur a tax liability of $66.37. In both the above cases, the wives were assumed to have no deductions.

Thus, H. R. 1 creates a most unusual situation whereby an additional dollar of income serves, not to increase the tax, but to reduce it by $66.37. The Bureau of Internal Revenue is constantly faced with taxpayers who understate their incomes to reduce their taxes. Surely, though, this will be the first time that the Bureau will have to concern itself with taxpayers who may find it decidedly advantageous to overstate their income.

As a condition to the allowance of the additional exemption to persons over 65 years of age, certain benefits which are not at present treated as income are required to be included in gross income for tax purposes by H. R. 1. The complicated rules dealing with these benefits defy explanation.

Let me read a portion of H. R. 1, beginning with line 2, page 19:

This subsection shall not apply—

(1) to amounts excluded from gross income under section 22 (b) (5); except that this subsection shall apply to amounts received as a pension, annuity, or similar allowance for personal injuries or sickness resulting from active service in the armed forces of any country, unless such amounts are also excluded from gross income by a provision of law other than section 22 (b) (5).

I do not know just how the folks in the Bureau of Internal Revenue can explain this to the taxpayers, even though they are supposed to be pretty good at that sort of thing. Frankly though, I do not understand it myself and I challenge any Member here to take the floor and explain this passage to the House.

In conclusion, equity and simplicity are priority requirements for the successful administration of the individual income tax. H. R. 1 is written without regard for these considerations. It should, therefore, not pass. When the workingmen back home see just what the Knutson 20-percent across-the-board tax plan does for him and what it does for the rich man up the street, and how it complicates the job of making out his income tax return, he is going to have the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] and the Members who vote for this bill "across the barrel."

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. REED].

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman seems to change his position. He was shedding tears, it seems, in the Seventy-ninth Congress, because he introduced H. R. 5293, a graduated-tax bill in which the highest tax to be paid by either a corporation or an individual was 50 percent. He seems to have changed his tune. He was then interested, of course, in his distinguished visitor from Pittsburgh. Then he was weeping tears. He was then ready to release venture capital.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. Is the House to understand that the gentleman who has just taken his seat [Mr. EBERHARTER] introduced a bill in the Seventy-ninth Congress that would have given a 50-percent tax reduction to those individuals and corporations in the highest brackets?

Mr. REED of New York. That is right.

Mr. KNUTSON. Where were his tear ducts then?

Mr. REED of New York. Now he comes here to indict us.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. The gentleman did not yield to me when I asked him, and I am not yielding now. I just want to say that the gentleman is giving a perfect demonstration of the fact that the human mind has infinite resources for resisting the introduction of knowledge.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL].

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, before I discuss the merits of the bill I want to make a few observations.

I was rather amused when I read the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD this morning to see the reference my friend, the gentleman from Minnesota, made to the tax firm or the tax experts, DINGELL, ENGEL, and GORE. Mr. Chairman, if it is a question of taking the expert opinion—and I am no tax expert and have never held myself out as such—of a tax firm called DINGELL, ENGEL, and GORE, or a tax firm known as Dr. Townsend and KNUTSON, I will take the former every time.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, the gentleman missed the point. When I referred to the gentleman as a tax expert, it was irony.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Oh, it was; was it? I am very glad the gentleman informed me it was irony.

By the way, the gentleman from Minnesota is a poet. He is a distinguished poet. I picked out of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a gem that should not be lost to future historians when they write up the debate on this particular bill. When the other tax bill came up in 1945, to be exact, on October 30, in twitting the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee [Mr. DOUGHTON], the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] quoted the following little poem, which I assume was original:

How sweet it is to hear the faithful watchdog bay
As we draw nigh to election day.

On August 2, before the Republican election in 1946, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] my distinguished former chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, engaged in the following colloquy wth the gentleman from Minnesota:

Mr. CANNON of Missouri. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is going to cut taxes 50 percent? How?

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course, when I made that statement I was going on the assumption that Republicans were going to control the House and cut all the waste.

Did I hear a watchdog bay, or was it just a little rat terrier yipping?

Then, according to the RECORD here, yesterday he pointed with a great deal of pride to the fact that nearly 1,400,000 senior citizens of the age of 65 and over are being removed from the tax rolls.

Mr. Chairman, this ought to be known not as the Knutson bill, not as H. R. 1, but it ought to go down in history as the Dr. Townsend-Knutson bill.

Mr. Chairman, the House has before it H. R. 1, a bill to reduce income taxes by approximately $3,800,000,000 a year. This bill was made retroactive to January 1, 1947. Here is the picture as I see it:

First. H. R. 1 reduces income-tax revenue for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, by $3,800,000,000.

Second. In addition to the above amount, the bill, being made retroactive, makes subject to refund $1,900,000,000 or such other sum as will have been collected during the last half of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for the period of January 1, 1947, to June 30, 1947.

Third. The taxpayers will make their tax return for the calendar year ending December 31, 1947, on March 15, 1948, claiming $1,900,000,000 refund.

Fourth. The Republican Congress will have to pass an appropriation bill refunding this additional $1,900,000,000 in taxes collected during the previous fiscal year, together with the cost of reprocessing every income-tax return that is made on March 15, 1947. Net result: The Democrats gain the $1,900,000,000 in taxes they have collected for the last half of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, to balance the budget with, and the Republican Congress will have to somehow make up this $5,700,000,000 more, including the $1,900,000,000 refunded, to balance the 1948 budget.

It is my candid opinion that the Democrats will balance the 1947 budget and there is a great possibility of the Republicans having unbalanced the 1948 budget. The task has been made a great deal more difficult by the policy of our Government supported by many able Republicans in pouring billions of dollars into foreign governments. The following are a few of the requests for the two fiscal years, 1947 and 1948: $1,450,000,000 for relief of occupied areas—these appropriations are supported by former President Hoover, Senator ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG, chairman of the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee, and Mr. EATON, chairman of the House Foreign Affairs Committee; $400,000,000 for loan and aid to Greece and Turkey; $350,000,000 to feed people in liberated countries, to mention only a few of these bills. There has also been approved by our committee an additional $489,000,000 for the Army to make up a deficiency caused by the passage of the Army-Navy Pay Act and by reason of the fact that the Army carried over more men than they told us they would have when the 1947 budget was made up. Here we have approximately $2,700,000,000 extra appropriations to mention only a few, which must be raised by taxes. If you are bound to pass this tax bill at least do not make it retroactive to January 1947. Start its operation not earlier than with the beginning of the fiscal year 1948, which begins July 1, 1947.

Let me state my position on this tax bill clearly. First, and above all, we have to balance the budget. We cannot continue to borrow; we cannot continue to go in debt for operating expenses of this Government. When I say balance the budget, I want it distinctly understood that I want included in that budget not only the interest on the national debt but inclusion in each annual budget of an amount which will liquidate that debt upon a sound plan of amortization. If there is anything left after we have balanced the budget, including an amount for amortizing debt, the great masses of people in the low-income group who require that money to live should be given the maximum benefit of that reduction.

1945 TAX BILL GAVE CORPORATIONS $3,136,000,000 TAX RELIEF

In 1945 Congress passed the first postwar tax reduction bill. This bill gave the biggest tax reduction to those who made the biggest profits out of the war.

It gave $3,136,000,000 in tax reduction to corporations—$2,550,000,000 of this tax reduction went to 19,100 corporations, 900 of whom benefited to the tune of $1,797,000,000 in excess war profits alone. All this, while individual taxpayers received a reduction of $2,641,000,000. The bait which induced some of us to vote for this bill was that we were told it took 12,000,000 of low-income individuals off the tax rolls.

Now we have before us another tax bill which gives the largest individual benefits to individuals with the highest incomes. This time it is a Republican bill and a part of the Republican political bait that is supposed to satisfy us and induce us to forget our scruples in that it will get the Townsend vote by giving people 65 years of age and over an additional $500 tax exemption. I have no objection to this exemption. I know these people need it. However, I also know there are millions of others in the low-income group who are equally worthy of consideration.

A 20–30 PERCENT TAX REDUCTION IS NOT FAIR TO THE LOW-INCOME GROUP

The Republican party has had a splendid tax record in the past insofar as the low-income group of our Nation is concerned, as pointed out in my remarks on the floor of the House on January 27.

REPUBLICAN POLICY HAS ALWAYS BEEN TO GIVE TAX RELIEF TO LOW-INCOME GROUP FIRST

A Republican Congress passed five tax-reduction bills from 1921 to 1930. In four of these bills the low-income group was given special consideration. Tax exemptions were increased during that period from $1,000 to $1,500 for a single person and by several steps from $2,000 to $3,500 for a married person. The tax rate on incomes under $4,000 was reduced from 6 to 4 percent to 2 to 1½ percent and finally one-half of 1 percent, successively, all by a Republican Congress during that 10-year period. At the same time taxes were reduced on a sliding scale on the higher income group. The higher the income the less the tax reduction.

The same attempt to reduce taxes for the few in the high-income group at the expense of the many in the low-income group I am informed was made then as now. The attempt was defeated by this House then and I hope it will be defeated now. It was because I wanted the Republican Party to continue that policy that I introduced a bill last year and again this year to increase tax exemptions on the low-income group. During the period from 1921 to 1940 the need for revenue was not as great as it is now. On the other hand living costs had not advanced to the high level that they have advanced since 1939 and the need for tax relief to the low-income group to maintain a decent standard of living was not nearly so great as it is now.

THE LOW-INCOME GROUP MUST HAVE TAX REDUCTION

The need of the low-income group for a tax reduction can best be measured by the increased cost of living since 1939. According to a recent issue of the United States News it took $1.56 in February 1947 to buy in living cost what $1 bought in 1939. On a living-cost basis therefore, $320 bought in 1939 what $500, which is an individual tax exemption, buys today and $640 bought in 1939 what $1,000 buys today, which is the exemption of a husband and wife. In 1939 that husband and wife had a $2,500 exemption. That is what your tax law and your cost-of-living increase have done to your low-income taxpayer.

HOW MANY PEOPLE CONSTITUTE THE LOW-INCOME GROUP?

Let us examine the record and see just how many people we have in this low-income group I am speaking about. Let us use $2,500 as the top figure for the sake of illustration. I addressed the House on this subject in 1945 and again in 1946. I had obtained from the Treasury Department tables showing the income of the various groups in 1944, one of our largest national income years. I found that in 1944 there were:

First. Twenty-one million six hundred thousand individuals with annual incomes of $1,000 or less, 12,250,000 of whom were single persons and 9,010,000 were heads of families.

Second. There were 12,430,000 individuals, 7,450,000 of whom were married or heads of families with incomes from $1,000 to $1,500.

Third. There were 11,990,000 individuals with incomes of from $1,500 to $2,000, 9,580,000 of whom were married persons or heads of families.

Fourth. There were still another 7,550,000 with incomes of $2,000 to $2,500, 6,590,000 of whom were married persons or heads of families.

This was according to the Treasury report furnished me taken from the income tax records. Summarizing we find we had, in 1944, 53,230,000 individuals with incomes of $2,500 or under. If we assume that each head of a family in this group had at least one dependent, we find that we have 85,860,000 people in this country or 61 percent of the population who were dependent on individual or family incomes of $2,500 a year or under in 1944.

I introduced my bill because I wanted the Republican party to have the credit for being the first to recognize that need. I stated repeatedly both on and off the floor of the House that I wanted the low-income group to get tax relief first in order to increase both their living standard and their purchasing power. They have to have tax relief to live decently. I do not want them to have tax relief to the exclusion of everyone else.

KNUTSON BILL GIVES GREATEST TAX RELIEF TO MAN WHO MADE GREATEST WAR PROFIT

The Knutson bill gives a man who made the biggest profits during the war the biggest tax relief, while the individual who had little or no increase in income, such as teachers and other white-collared groups, is now asked to continue to accept increasingly low-living standards because of such increased costs. Giving a 10 percent added reduction to the extremely low-income group is no fair solution of their problem. The added reduction for them is so small as to be of little importance. I recognize the fact that with the tremendous tax load we have to bear we must tax the broad base or the great mass of people who have the largest aggregate though the smallest individual income. In trying to prevent waste of the taxpayers' dollar in the past, I repeatedly called attention to the fact that the tax burden of the future, made necessary to repay these wasted dollars, would fall heaviest on that great mass of small taxpayers in the Nation. I did not expect, however, that the Republican Party would advocate a policy which would give the greatest tax relief to the higher income group including those who made the largest profit out of the war who would now under this policy receive the largest tax relief.

HOW DOES REDUCTION OF TAXES AFFECT THE TOTAL TAX COLLECTION AND WHY?

There are many people in both the Republican and Democratic Parties, in fact I believe they constitute a majority of those parties, who believe that if you will only give tax relief to the man on top the benefits will trickle or percolate down to the little fellow below. This argument has been and will be again advanced in trying to justify the passage of this bill. It is based upon the theory that by creating new investment capital the workers will obtain jobs. I cannot agree fully with this theory of government. I agree that under a capitalistic form of government or under a profit system we must permit the retention of enough profit so that industry can expand. However, all the capital in the world will not create jobs except insofar as it creates purchasing power in the erection of new factories, and so forth.

The depression of 1929 to 1940 should satisfy the most skeptical that those benefits do not adequately trickle or percolate down to the little fellow below. My theory is that in order to have permanent prosperity one has to begin by increasing the purchasing power of that great mass of people—86,000,000—in the low-income group. It is only by increasing the purchasing power and raising the standard of living of this great mass of the people that we can have real and permanent prosperity. By increasing mass purchasing power I do not mean taking the tax dollar from one taxpayer and giving it to another. I mean increasing the farmer's and worker's productive capacity and giving them a greater share of the selling price of the thing they produce on the farm, in the factory, mine, or whatever it may be. If you will do this the man above is bound to obtain his share of the profit.

Let me illustrate what I mean. If the wife of a low-income worker from whom we are taking 10 cents a week in pay-roll tax should take the 10 cents a week and buy a spool of thread from the corner drygoods store to patch her husband's pants, everyone from that corner store up through to the manufacturer of the thread and back to the farmer who grew the cotton that went into the thread would get a part of the 10 cents. If that $2,500-a-year worker could take a part of the $187 you were going to tax him under the original Knutson bill to buy a suit of clothes for himself or a dress for his wife, everyone from the store which sold him the suit or dress through to the manufacturer and back down to the farmer who grew the cotton or wool that went into the suit or dress is bound to benefit. But if that worker is not left enough to buy a suit or dress, everyone from the store where he would buy the suit or dress, or whatever it may be, up to the textile mill and manufacturer who would make that dress and suit of clothes and back down to the farmer who raises the cotton or wool will be the loser.

It was for this reason and not because the tax relief was given to the higher bracket taxpayer that the revenue in the Treasury for a time increased in the past, despite the reduction made in income tax rates. I recognize the fact and I have said so repeatedly that we have passed that critical point in the rate of taxation, where the law of diminishing returns is now operating. Under a capitalistic or profit system you must leave enough profit to the businessman so he can have capital to expand his plant to take care of increased business. On the other hand no business can expand and no profit system can survive without profits and there is no profit on a pair of overalls, a suit, or dress that the low-income group does not buy. Mr. Henry Ford, Sr., undoubtedly had this very policy in mind when for the first time he established what was then considered extremely high a $5-a-day minimum wage in his factory.

Let me repeat that a sound peacetime prosperity can only be built upon that basis. It is only by building up the income and productive capacity of the low-income group that you can have a national income large enough to pay our minimum current operating expenses, pay our national debt and not have further inflation.

THE HOUSEHOLDER CLAUSE MUST BE RESTORED

Only by restoring the householder clause and increasing exemptions can we give real low-income group tax relief. By doing that we need not increase the exemptions of the dependents. As the law now stands every member of the family receives the same exemption of $500. A widow whose husband died and who has the care of the dependent children loses her husband's $500 exemption despite the fact that she has to maintain the same household and at the same time support the fatherless children. The same is true if the mother dies and leaves the responsibility of supporting the children to the father. The householder clause recognized the fact that the exemption should be maintained for both father and mother after one dies because the same household must be maintained. After the household is maintained the added expense for rent, heat, and so forth, for each successive child is not increased on a numerical basis. I would restore the householder clause and give the householder an added exemption. This would of course reduce the amount required because the exemption of the children would not be increased. This principle was recognized until recently. I want to go back to it.

Today that householder has only $1,000 exemption for the father and mother, or the equivalent of $640 in 1939 purchasing power. It is not enough under present conditions. If the amount available for tax reduction is not enough to increase the householder exemption from $1,000 to $2,000 let us increase it to $1,500 or even to $1,250 and leave the dependent's exemption where it is at $500. Surely no one can argue that taking taxes out of incomes above $1,000 a year on a household is not taking the necessities of life where that income is below $2,000 or $2,500 a year. Again if we cannot give everyone that increase, limit it to families where the aggregate income of the husband and wife is $5,000 or under as we did in 1921. If that takes too much tax money, limit its application to cases where the aggregate income of the husband and wife is under $4,000, under $3,000, or even under $2,000. Surely that sort of a plan can be arranged without taking too much tax revenue. All I want is to give that low-income group a break.

I do not want to give him, the low-income group, that break to the exclusion of everyone else. I want to divide the amount available for tax reduction in the same way as we divided it in the 1921–30 period. First, give the low-income group an added exemption however small. Second, divide the balance in such a way so that every taxpayer gets the same reduction on a sliding scale just as we did during the previous Republican administration.

I do not want to go into the next election, and I do not believe the Republican Party does, and tell that husband and wife with a $1,200 income to maintain a household and from whom we are taking $38 a year living money that we are now going to give them $8, $9, or $10 a year relief and continue to take $30, $29, or $28 a year of their living money, and then give the man with an annual income of $6,000,000, $540,000 a year in tax relief.

I do not want to say to that single person who has room rent, clothes, food, and so forth, to buy on an income of $600 a year and from whom we are taking $19 a year in living money: "We are giving you tax relief, we are only going to take $15 out of your living and give you $4 a year tax relief," and then give the man with $1,000,000 a year income $110,000 a year in tax relief.

That is sure to be the issue upon which the next Congress is going to be elected if we pass this bill. Does anyone honestly believe that we can go into that next election and convince these people that we had their interest at heart and are entitled to their support if you vote for and pass this bill?

If we, the Republican Party, lose this House and the Presidential election in 1948, it will be because of the short-sightedness of our leaders and not because of a few of us who have tried to avoid having our party placed in such a vulnerable political position. I want to go to these people and say, "Here is what we were able to do for you. We tried to help you. It was not all we would like to have done, but the terrible financial condition of this country, the tremendous public debt, much of which was caused by waste and extravagance, makes it impossible for us to give you all the relief we would like to have given you. Go along with us and next year when we get some of these financial liabilities out of the way we will try to give you further relief." I honestly believe that the average man will go along with us despite the fact that we have not given him the tax relief he needs to live. He will not go along with us if we permit the high-income group with incomes running into the millions to feast luxuriously like Dives at the table of tax relief while we expect this low-income group whose very living we are taking in taxes to be satisfied like Lazarus with a few crumbs of tax relief that may accidentally fall from the table of Dives.

WHAT REPUBLICAN TAX PROMISES WERE MADE AND TO WHOM WERE THEY MADE?

Much has been said about promises made by the Republican Party during the campaign that we would reduce taxes 20 percent straight across the board. I heard no promises of that kind made by responsible Republican leaders during the campaign. I heard some rash statements made as to tax cuts, such as were made by the present chairman of the Ways and Means Committee on the floor of this House on August 2, 1946, when the following colloquy took place:

Mr. CANNON. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] is going to cut taxes 50 percent. How?

Mr. KNUTSON. Of course when I made that statement I was going on the assumption that the Republicans were going to control the next Congress and that they would cut out all waste.

That statement was of course ridiculous and bound no one. The only promise to cut taxes straight across the board which I heard at that time was made by the chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and he was not talking for me nor for the Republican Party so far as I am concerned, when he added the words "straight across the board."

Again the same gentleman in a letter inserted into the RECORD on July 22, 1946, promised a Mr. Scott, of a large Minneapolis firm, a 20-percent straight tax reduction after speaking of cutting taxes 50 percent.

Again on October 30, 1945, when the tax bill was up—which reduced taxes $5,900,000,000 in largest part on corporations—and in ribbing the then chairman of the Ways and Means Committee, the gentleman from Minnesota waxed very poetic when he quoted from some unknown poem:

How sweet it is to hear the faithful watchdog bay
As we draw nigh to election day.

Speaking of election-day promises, I heard some watchdog baying about a 20-percent straight-across-the-board tax reduction before election day. I hear them baying again today in the attempt to get the Townsend vote. But I wonder just to whom the Republican Party made a promise to cut taxes 20 to 30 percent straight across the board? Let me ask the Members of this House: Did you make that promise to cut taxes 20 to 30 percent straight across the board? If so, to whom? Did you tell the low-income farmers of your district, if you have any, that you were going to give the man with an income of $1,000,000 a year $110,000 tax reduction and the married man with $1,200 a year $8 or $9 a year reduction? Did you tell the workers, organized and unorganized, in your district that you were going to give the men with $6,000,000 annual income $540,000 a year tax reduction, and the millions of people, including workers with annual incomes under $2,500 a year an average of $26.50 or perhaps $35 a year tax reduction? Did you address any large meeting of the low-income group of voters and tell them just what you were going to do to them in this amended 20-percent across-the-board tax reduction? Did you get any applause when you told them, if you did? Just to whom did you make the promise? Was it to those in the low-income group, including farmers and workers, or was it to the wealthier persons who were best able to kick into the political campaign fund? Was it to the workers in United States Steel, Weirton Steel, or other steel corporation? Or was it to the financiers behind those steel companies to whom this promise was made? I heard nothing from responsible parties about a 20- to 30-percent straight-across-the-board tax reduction during the campaign.

I was told recently by the president of one of the financial institutions and by one of the wealthiest oil operators in the State of Michigan, who reside in my district, just what they are going to do to me in 1948 and 1950 if I did not change my opinion on the question now before the House. I did have a vice president of one of the largest steel corporations, who is a friend of mine, call me and try to convince me that I should withdraw my opposition to H. R. 1. I did have the Republican national committeeman of my State phone me and ask me to change my mind. To save him embarrassment, I shall not give the reasons he gave as to why I should change my mind. In fact I received many long distance calls and letters from the higher-income group disagreeing with me, and some of them violently and I answered them frankly. I, together with other Members of Congress, have accepted campaign expense money from my party. I always felt there were no strings attached to party contributions. I have always rejected contributions from both labor and industry because of possible obligations such contributions might put me under. It is the first time I have ever been criticized for my position by a member of our National Republican organization.

This Michigan Republican national committeeman wrote to other Republican Members of Congress from Michigan giving his views on this 20-percent-tax reduction. In that letter he wrote, in part, as follows:

> It is most distressing to have the proposed 20-percent across-the-board tax cut questioned so critically by some of our Members of Congress. From their reported remarks, it would seem that they are a bit confused as to which party elected them.

It was evident to whom he was referring when apparently I was the only Republican Member from Michigan who did not get a copy of this letter. This was the same gentleman who called me on the telephone and asked me to withdraw my opposition to H. R. 1. Apparently this gentleman made some promises I never heard about to someone on this 20-percent across-the-board tax cut. May I inform the gentleman that out of the hundreds of letters I received on my stand, 95 percent approved my position and less than 5 percent disapproved. It seems to me that he is a bit confused in thinking that the 5 percent who make the larger campaign contributions elected a Republican Congress instead of the 95 percent of the voters, Republican and Democratic, who actually cast their ballots on election day.

He is the one who is in a fog. Unless that fog is cleared from the brain of some of our Republican leaders, they will find themselves once more a minority party when the next election rolls around.

Mr. HOLMES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. HOLMES. Are you taking into consideration any changes in amended income-tax returns in relation to your figures?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. The payroll tax will be in. Your first-quarter estimates are in. Everybody paid into the Federal Treasury our estimated returns for the year.

Mr. HOLMES. Do you take into consideration the changes in amended income-tax returns?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Regardless as to whether the 1947 tax return is reduced by amendment or the tax paid is refunded, the result is the same. It comes out of the tax receipts collected on March 15, 1948, when the final 1947 returns are made.

Mr. HOLMES. Will the gentleman let me finish?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I beg your pardon. I have the floor.

Mr. HALLECK. You yielded to him. Why do you not let him say what he wants to say?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Well, now, you are not running this. I am running this end. You can run your crowd but you cannot run me.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. Is not that 20 cents important to the little fellow? In my own State, a Democratic governor put over a sales tax and after we had been on this drunken spree for 14 years, does not the gentleman think it is about time we do a little something for the taxpayers?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Sure it is important. It is the price of only a quart of milk. I want that low-income taxpayer to have more.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. COUDERT].

Mr. COUDERT. Mr. Chairman, I want to thank the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means for giving me this brief opportunity to participate in what I think is an historic debate. I do not believe we can exaggerate the importance of the bill that is before this House and the action the House is going to take on it.

I heard with interest the remarks of the gentleman from Michigan. I do not think any of us on our side of the aisle are going to be very much concerned about what our voters will do to us when we pass this bill. I heard his heart bleed for the little fellow. I do not think anyone of us yields to him in our desire to take 20,000,000 people off the tax rolls, and in our desire to spare 20,000,000 people a $6,000,000,000 tax load. But my friend from Michigan forgets, and his colleagues in the firm of DINGELL, ENGLE, and GORE, forget that Republicans did not put these people on the tax rolls. We would like to get them off. We have the deepest sympathy, all of us, with everyone who pays taxes, and particularly with those at the lower end of the tax scale, on whom the burden of rising costs of living falls so heavily.

Why are they on the tax rolls? Why must they stay on the tax rolls? Ask the gentlemen who for 14 long years supported the wild extravagances of the New Deal and supported the new schemes of government activity that cost money. Those things now are coming home to roost. Those things will have to be paid for and paid for by every citizen in the United States. On top of that, there was a great war with a cost beyond all imagination, with a national debt and an annual cost burden that can not possibly be met unless everybody stays on the tax rolls. Gentlemen, we did not put them there. They were put there by the Democratic Party, the Democratic Administration, and the war.

The most important issue, the one issue that we confront here today, is the issue of whether or not we are going to adopt a tax bill and a policy of taxation in the true American tradition of fairness, justice, and equality all along the line, for all citizens, or whether we are going to adopt the line of tax policy advocated by the gentleman from Michigan and the two Democratic members of that firm and their colleagues, the liquidation of incentive tax policy—the destruction of incentive tax policy—the marxist, collectivist policy—a policy that more than anything else will tend to destroy freedom in the United States, undermine the economic strength of the United States, and will do more than anything else to deter the processes of economic expansion out of which alone the national debt will ever be paid.

Our friends on the other side speak sanctimoniously of paying off the national debt: "Oh, no, not taxes—let us not reduce taxes. Let us pay off the national debt." That is the trap that they would like to lay for us. They know that we Republicans are cast in the role of Simon Legree and Scrooge because we are cast in the role of budget-cutters and are obligated to effect economies in the national budget. Surely they are not naive enough to think you can effect economy in the national budget without stirring up widespread resentment and having to face the squawks of all those individuals and their families and of the different groups who may feel aggrieved. They know that the national debt has no Edgar Bergen to give it a seductive voice.

So what would they have us do? They would have us bear the burden of effecting economy with all the attendant pain, annoyance and trouble, and political risk, and they would come in next year and give to the American people the benefit of our work and sweat in the form of a tax reduction. Of course, they are against tax reduction, and any bill that the Republican majority might bring in.

Our Democratic friends have long had among their leaders advocates of sound American tax policy. Going back to the father of the Democratic Party, Tom Jefferson, it was he who declared that the first principle of association was the guarantee to everyone of the free exercise of his industry and of the fruits acquired thereby. You do not get that under the present tax structure, and would get it a great deal less under the program of the Democratic Party in the House.

Franklin D. Roosevelt made a great speech that has so often been quoted, that taxes are paid in the sweat of every man's brow who labors, and that excessive taxation leads to unemployment and misery.

But I do not stop there. There are living Democratic leaders who have taken a sound position and not hesitated to state it—a position in the tradition of Jefferson and the other great leaders of the old democracy. One of those leaders sits on the floor of this House today. Here is what he said in 1939, and as far as I am concerned, I shall be glad to have him join the firm of KNUTSON and Townsend. Listen to him:

One of the deterrents, probably the greatest, to business expansion is the high surtax brackets of the Federal Government. At present our normal rate is 4 percent—

That was back in the antediluvian days of 1939—

but our surtax rates run to as high as 75 percent—

I think they are 86 percent now—in some cases, and this does not include State income taxes. You can see from this statement—

Says the gentleman—that a deterrent exists to business expansion by new or venturesome capital.

One would suppose that was our own chairman [Mr. KNUTSON] speaking, but it is not.

The best interests of the man and woman who is looking for a job call for a sharp reduction of the present surtax rates. This and any other deterrents to business activity should be removed as soon as possible.

Mr. Chairman, those are remarks made in a radio address on September 13, 1939, by the then majority leader of this House, now the minority whip, the gentleman from Massachusetts, Hon. JOHN W. MCCORMACK.

Mr. Chairman, the responsibility of this House is great. The eyes of our countrymen are upon us, from Maine to California, anxious eyes, wondering if we are going to stand up for true, sound, traditional American policies; stand up for equality of opportunity, for the principle of keeping the doors open to the talent, the door open to opportunity for all men of imagination, initiative, and good-will. The country owes a very real debt to the courageous chairman of the Ways and Means Committee and a majority of its members for squarely meeting the challenge.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. COUDERT] has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING].

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I propose to support this bill, and I speak, as did the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], as the author of a different tax bill from the one in question. My tax bill, H. R. 2492, called for a graduated percentage method of tax reduction, all the way from 35 percent in the lowest brackets to 7½ percent at the top.

But I cannot go along with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] in two respects. The first error I believe he is committing is in deciding to vote with some Democrats, not all, I suspect, against any tax reduction just because his particular bill was not accepted by the Committee on Ways and Means or because he may have had some personal differences with the chairman of that committee. I sincerely hope he will reconsider that decision. In the second place, I cannot go along with him in the allegation, or at least the implication, that the distinguished majority leader has been trying to tell him what to do. I did not, as the gentleman from Michigan says he did, drop my bill in the hopper never expecting it to go through. I introduced it and I fought for it with the members of the Ways and Means Committee with all the force and sincerity I could muster and by every legitimate method I could devise. But I recognize the fact that legislation is a give-and-take matter and that all knowledge in the world is not reposed in the mind of any one man, least of all in my mind.

I want to assure the membership on both sides of the aisle that neither the majority leader nor anyone else has tried to tell me what to do, and I do not propose to have anybody tell me what to do. Furthermore, I am confident that he has not told anybody what to do and I resent deeply the fact that the gentleman from Michigan in his excessive zeal, no doubt, has allowed himself to create any such distorted picture of the majority leadership in this body which has the respect and admiration, even when in disagreement, of the Members of the House on both sides of the aisle.

I believe the fight I put up along with many of my Republican colleagues who shared my views has borne fruit and I am happy to testify that the leadership has at all times been ready and willing to hear us. Contrary to the apparent conclusion of my friend from Michigan, I believe up my way that the hard-working charwoman who earns $18 a week about whom I told the House the other day, will be very grateful to receive a check from the Government for $20.28, which is the annual amount she will save on taxes, and the man with two children who is making $50 a week and having $3.20 taken out of his pay every week will welcome a reduction of that amount to $2.20, and you cannot tell me that the retired school teacher or fireman or policeman, or Federal or State employee trying to get along on a pension that is subject to taxation, or, for that matter, the large group over 65 who have laid aside a bank account or a few Government bonds or other securities and in the evening of their lives, when they should be entitled to a measure of comfort and security, are worrying over their living expenses and the cost of meat and coal and rent, you cannot tell me that these people will not welcome the tax relief afforded by this raise in their exemptions by $500.

Thirty-one million of these small taxpayers in the lower-income and over 65 groups, it is estimated, are benefited especially by the additional consideration shown in raising the reduction from 20 percent to 30 percent and in this special exemption for the older people. In addition, some 15,000,000 more share in the benefits in the 20-percent and 10-percent brackets. Just because this bill before us does not approach this tax-reduction problem in precisely the manner I might wish, is no reason, it seems to me, to deny these deserving and overburdened taxpayers any relief at all. I conceive it to be my duty to support this legislation, and am confident that it will bring not only new hope to the people of this country, but also, by thus virtually effecting a pay increase to the wage-earners, will give them more money to spend on the good things of life, thus contributing to the general prosperity, and will release not only much needed venture capital, but also, and even more important, the wells of confidence leading to increased productivity, business progress, full employment, and the creation and maintenance of a high standard of living for all our people.

As I stated when H. R. 2492 was introduced, I hope the time is not too far distant when the present exemptions of $500 for a single person and $1,000 for a married person can be raised somewhat to a more realistic figure. There certainly is some bare minimum, it seems to me, beyond which we should not go in requiring a man or a woman to contribute out of his or her income to the expenses of running the Government. This bare minimum might well be set somewhat higher than the present figures.

The difficulty arises out of the amazing reduction in revenue which the Bureau of Internal Revenue figures reveal as the cost of the Government of raising the exemptions even $100. For instance, it is estimated that to raise these exemptions $200 would result in a revenue loss very nearly equivalent to the total amount expected to be the result of the passage of H. R. 1.

Although special emphasis, it is true, should be placed on relief in the lower brackets, as I am happy to say this bill now does, it would not be equitable, it strikes me, to deprive of the benefits of tax reduction single men with incomes over $700, or married men with incomes above $1,200, which would be the result of adopting the suggestion of the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Therefore, I conclude, a bill has been brought before us, not perfect, in my opinion, but embodying, to some extent, the principle of graduated reduction, a bill worked out by resolving the sincere and conflicting opinions and positions of many Members. There are those who sincerely contend that a straight percentage reduction should be given to everyone. Others claim that reductions should take the form of a raise in the present exemptions. Still others, like myself, favor the graduated-reduction approach. We could argue here until next Christmas and beyond, if we all stubbornly opposed any tax-reduction bill except the particular one which we favored. The country looks to this Congress for accomplishment. We must get on with the great work which lies ahead of us. Tax reduction is but one, albeit an important one, of the constructive steps we must take along the path of progress.

We have before us a good bill. Let us support it wholeheartedly. Let us give the people of this country this relief, so long overdue and so richly deserved.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I intend to support this bill because I believe that people in the lower income and moderate income brackets, now 2 years after the war, must have some tax relief from the high wartime tax structure to help them meet the high cost of living—up over 60 percent since 1939. I was against an across-the-board tax reduction because I considered it unfair to the ordinary citizen in my district and would be against it today if it were before us. The further reduction of the tax by one-third—from 20 to 30 percent—for the great bulk of the taxpayers in my district does make enough of a difference to them so that I must support the bill. I still do not like the feature of the bill giving a 20-percent tax cut to taxpayers up to $300,000. I believe that the cut should have been graduated, this 20 percent cut down materially and the saving in the amount available for tax reduction used to increase the tax cut to over 30 percent for those in the middle and lower income brackets. However, the need of my constituents for some tax relief to help them meet living costs is so great that I feel that as their representative I must vote for the bill with its imperfections rather than vote for no tax cut at all. The figures also show that this readjustment of taxes from war to peace will allow for a substantial debt reduction—essential to the future of the country in times of high national income like today. I have surveyed the opinion of the rank-and-file citizens of all parties in all parts of my district, and this is what they want me to do by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN].

A BALANCED BUDGET AND TAX REDUCTION

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, I am supporting H. R. 1 with certain reservations, and I feel that I should make my position clear before I cast my vote. In the first place, the Republican majority is committed to balance the budget and to make a substantial payment upon our national debt. These commitments must be carried out.

Relying upon the presentation made by the members of the Ways and Means Committee as to prospective tax income for 1947, I am convinced that the Federal budget will be balanced, and that a substantial sum will be made available to pay on the national debt. However, no one can predict with any degree of accuracy as to the curtailment in Federal expenditures until after we have passed on all of the appropriation bills. It is my hope, which will be backed up with my votes, that Federal appropriations can be cut at least $6,000,000,000. I feel that expenditures can be reduced in this amount, or more, without curtailing essential services that the Federal Government should perform for the people. I am also convinced that the expenditures can be materially reduced for the Military Establishment without injuring our national defense and taking care of commitments to which we have been obligated by the administration in foreign fields. I will do my part in voting to cut expenditures so as to bring about a balanced budget, a substantial payment on the national debt, and tax reduction.

Under the Constitution, the House of Representatives must originate all tax bills. While I feel that the provision in H. R. 1 to make tax reduction retroactive to January 1 of this year is premature, I am nevertheless voting for the bill so that it can be presented to the Senate and be given consideration in time for final action before June 30, 1947. In my opinion, the tax-reduction program should not become operative until July 1, 1947, at which time definite information will be available to Members of Congress and the country as to the amount that we have been able to cut Federal expenditures. At that time we will also learn as to the amount of tax income for at least the first 6 months of this year.

I also feel that a more substantial cut in taxes should be approved for taxpayers in the lower-income groups—either by way of increased exemptions or higher percentage reductions than the 30 percent approved by the committee in H. R. 1.

The tax bill will come back to the House for another vote after it has been considered by the Senate, at which time I want to reexamine its provisions carefully to determine my vote on the conference report or the bill in its final form.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. TWYMAN].

Mr. TWYMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of and will vote for H. R. 1, the Republican 1947 tax bill. This proposal will be received enthusiastically by the people of the Ninth Congressional District of Illinois.

The Ninth Congressional District of Illinois is known as the gold coast district of Chicago. This is a misnomer. It is true that the gold coast is located in the district and that some of the wealthy people in Chicago are my constituents. On the other hand, mine is a district of extremes. It is the most cosmopolitan district in the United States. I represent both extremes in the financial register. I represent people who work and people who live off of invested capital. In my district is to be found every nationality, color, and creed in Chicago. There are people of Irish, German, Scandinavian, and Slavic descent; there is a large Italian-American population and a large Jewish population; there is a large colored population; also living in my district are one-third of the Japanese-Americans who live in Chicago; in addition, there is a large number of Filipinos in my district. Every religious denomination is represented. In fact, in my district there is both a Buddhist and a Mohammedan congregation. I represent people from all walks of life, and I recognize my responsibility in trying to adequately represent them all.

This tax bill could not possibly satisfy everyone. There are features in it which I, myself, would have liked to have seen changed, but it is a good bill, and it is the forerunner of other bills which will lessen the tax burden on the American people.

I am glad that special consideration is being given to those in the lower-income brackets. They are really the ones who need relief. I am also glad that consideration is being given to those who live on annuities and pensions. With the increased cost of living, all people will welcome tax reduction now, and I am glad to vote for H. R. 1.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. REEVES].

Mr. REEVES. Mr. Chairman, I desire to express my support of H. R. 1. I agree with what my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] has said, because, like him, I introduced a tax bill and urged the Ways and Means Committee to act favorably upon it. The fact that it has not yet been given consideration does not in anywise change my opinion that this bill is sound, and that it must be enacted to relieve the American people from the overwhelming burden of taxes which they have carried in recent years. So far as the questions of the proposed rates, exemptions, and the application of rates to various income brackets are concerned, the field has been thoroughly, and I might add very vigorously, plowed in this debate. I think it is now a question as to whether this tax reduction is desirable and acceptable to the House and to the American people at this time.

I do not think anyone can seriously question the importance of a tax reduction now. Every American citizen is paying taxes which are multiplied many times over those which he paid in the days before the tremendous extravagances of the New Deal. It is especially important to the workingman and to the small businessman that his taxes be reduced, and that he have the opportunity to accumulate some reserve against the day when a contingency or emergency now unforeseen may arise.

If there is any discrimination under this bill, it is against the upper-income brackets. It has long been a national policy that Federal income taxes shall be based upon, and graduated according to, ability to pay. This principle will not be violated through the enactment of H. R. 1. As a matter of fact, upper-bracket incomes, which already bear a disproportionately high share of the total tax burden will, after this bill is enacted, pay an even higher proportion of the total income-tax burden.

As the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. CURTIS] so ably pointed out yesterday, under the existing income tax law, adopted in the New Deal's wartime heyday, a man with a $25,000 income pays about 51 times as much income tax as the man with an income of $1,000; and under the bill we are now considering he will pay 58 times as much. In other words, this bill actually imposes on the larger incomes a still greater share of the total tax burden.

One effect of H. R. 1 will be to increase Federal revenues in the same way that income-tax reductions produced additional revenue in the 1920's. It is a matter of record that between 1920 and 1929 Federal income taxes were reduced four times and in every instance the Federal Government gained in receipts from income taxes because the reduction enabled private enterprise to expand, increased the national income and promoted prosperity generally.

It was the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GIFFORD] who said in the House not very long ago something we all should bear in mind, in considering the matter of tax reduction. He said:

> If you tax a man 20 percent of what he makes on Monday, 40 percent of what he makes on Tuesday, and 60 percent of what he makes on Wednesday, and plan to tax him 80 percent of what he makes on Thursday, and perhaps 100 percent of what he makes on Friday, he will not work on either Thursday or Friday.

Today, as never before in our history, it is imperative that we encourage every American to produce all that it is within his power to produce in the interest of our national prosperity and the prosperity of the individual citizen.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEVES. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. KNUTSON. It was stated in the House of Commons during a debate several weeks ago that one reason for the tremendous drop in the production of coal was the fact that the miners would only work 3 days a week in order to avoid paying taxes, that their wives worked the other 3 days in some nearby factory. That was one of the reasons for the coal shortage in Great Britain.

Mr. REEVES. I thank the gentleman for that illustration. It demonstrates completely that you kill incentive and the productivity of the individual through taxes as burdensome as those imposed on the American people today.

The Democratic Party has never reduced Federal income taxes but once. That was last year, in the Seventy-ninth Congress, which they controlled. What did the tax cut do for the wage earner, the low-income taxpayer? Did it give him a greater tax reduction than it gave the upper-bracket incomes? It did not. It was a 5-percent reduction straight across the board, a 5-percent reduction on every income, however large or small.

When they passed that bill the gentlemen across the aisle did not express for the millions of small incomes the tender solicitude they now profess in opposing this bill. They did not then demand debt reduction before tax reduction. They did not even argue from across the aisle that we should balance the budget before reducing income taxes 5 percent straight across the board. They forced through the 5-percent reduction in a frantic but unsuccessful effort to stem the rising tide of public revolt against the policies with which they had brought us very close to national disaster.

Now there is a substantial explanation, I think, for some of the opposition to this bill from the other side of the aisle. Yesterday I was interested to hear the arguments of the gentlemen from Oklahoma [Mr. MONRONEY and Mr. JOHNSON], as well as the distinguished gentlemen from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN and Mr. WORLEY] who were opposing the enactment of this bill.

All of these gentlemen are citizens and Representatives of districts within so-called community-property States, which already enjoy an enormous and unfair tax advantage over the 39 States which do not have the community-property system. These gentlemen do not know how vital this tax cut is to the rest of the country because in the community property States which they represent they do not carry the terrible tax load that we do. In a community-property State they pay 15 percent less in Federal income taxes on a $10,000 income, 29 percent less on a $25,000 income, and 20 percent less on a $100,000 income. No one can justify that discrimination against taxpayers in the 39 non-community-property States.

When the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON] so righteously espoused the cause of the little taxpayer, and opposes relief in the steep surtax brackets, I think we ought to look at what they did down in his State of Oklahoma to escape high Federal income taxes. In 1945 they voted themselves a Federal tax cut by adopting the community-property system, which gives them a great advantage, percentagewise, over all the taxpayers in the 39 States which do not have that system. And whom did they benefit? The little taxpayer? Not at all. They did not reduce the little taxpayer's taxes a dime. But they did thereby give the man who makes $10,000 a year a 15 percent reduction in his Federal income taxes; they gave the man with a $25,000 income a 29 percent reduction; and they gave their wealthy oilmen who make $100,000 a year a 20 percent reduction—and today it is worth nearly $13,000 a year to a man with a $100,000 income to live in Oklahoma where his Federal income taxes are that much less. When they adopted the community property system it was for the express purpose of reducing the taxes on large incomes, for it did not, and could not, give a nickel's worth of relief to taxpayers with low incomes.

The same situation obtains in Texas, Louisiana, and 6 other States where the community-property system protects incomes from the burdensome surtaxes that citizens of the other 39 States have to pay.

Because of the community-property system and its effect on Federal income-tax liability the gentlemen from the nine community-property States and their constituents do not know and have not experienced the crushing weight of Federal taxes. They are not burdened as the rest of us are, and now they are attempting to deny the rest of the country the tax relief which they have already obtained for themselves under the community-property system.

If you will examine the figures you will find that more than one-fourth of the gentlemen on the Democratic side of the aisle represent districts in community-property States. Less than one-tenth of the Members on the Republican side represent districts in community-property States. And we who live in the 39 non-community-property States always have paid part of the taxes of the citizens of the community-property States, and we will still be doing so after this bill is passed. One explanation for the opposition from across the aisle, particularly on the part of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. JOHNSON], who spoke yesterday, is that the 49 Members on that side who are from community-property States, and the people they represent, pay substantially lower Federal income taxes, and they do not need relief to the extent that the rest of the country does. It seems to me that that explanation somewhat dims the brilliance of the eloquence of the gentleman from Oklahoma yesterday.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEVES. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. RIZLEY. I would also like to call the attention of the gentleman, as well as my distinguished colleagues on the other side who spoke against this reduction yesterday, to the fact that the Oklahoma Legislature this year, for the very purpose of further encouraging venture capital in our State, reduced the State income tax in Oklahoma to the extent of 30 percent.

Mr. REEVES. I thank the gentleman for bringing that fact to the attention of the House. I understand that it was an across-the-board cut.

Mr. RIZLEY. That is right.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Missouri has expired.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, I yield three additional minutes to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEVES. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman made a statement a few minutes ago pointing out that from 1921 to 1929 there were four tax cuts, which he stated provided incentive capital, caused more people to go to work, and so forth, but I want to know what happened in 1929. Why did not the incentive capital then provide employment for the seventeen or eighteen million people that were then unemployed? In other words, during a 8-year period you had four successive tax cuts, which apparently is what you are trying to do with this bill. I say to you that it fell down in 1929, when you had misery rampant in this land, when you had people unemployed. Where were your manufacturers then with their incentive capital? Why did they not put those people to work then?

Mr. REEVES. Of course, the income-tax laws of the United States had no extraterritorial effect. As the gentleman well knows, the depression which occurred in 1929 was a world-wide depression which affected and infected every nation and every economy on the face of the earth. The fact that there were income-tax reductions during the 10-year period preceding that time, as the gentleman well knows or ought to know, had nothing whatever to do with the results of the complex interrelationships of the economies of the world, which were all depressed at the same time.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REEVES. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. I congratulate the gentleman on his explanation to the gentleman from Oklahoma. The question the gentleman is discussing with reference to equalization of taxes in the community-property States is something very timely. I think the Congress should take some recognition of that. I think the bill the gentleman has introduced to provide that there will be equality in taxation between the community-property States and all the other States of this Nation, so that each individual is taxed alike, is something that should be given recognition. I congratulate the gentleman on the work he is doing on that matter, and I hope he will succeed. I assure him that I want to do everything I can to assist him in bringing about the enactment of that bill into law.

Mr. REEVES. I am deeply grateful to my colleague from Pennsylvania for his support of the measure I have introduced. It is H. R. 1759. I have not withdrawn from my position that that bill should be enacted in all fairness to the people of the 39 States, comprising five-sixths of the income-tax payers of this country, who now suffer from the discriminatory operation of the Federal income-tax laws.

No tax bill is perfect, as the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING], has said so well, nor can it satisfy everyone. There is necessarily some give and take before there can be agreement upon any legislation on which there are different points of view. In the beginning I had hoped that in this bill, in addition to providing relief in the lower brackets, we could equalize income taxes in accordance with the proposal which the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RICH], has just mentioned, but I am willing and satisfied that we proceed now to reduce taxes in the manner and to the extent provided by H. R. 1, as amended. I believe that it grants tax relief which the American people need to increase their purchasing power and to build up their economic security. At the appropriate time the Congress can consider the equalization measure I have proposed along with other existing tax inequities which can be eliminated only by a general tax revision bill.

So, Mr. Chairman, I support the present bill, H. R. 1, and urge its enactment; and I forecast that it will pass the House by an overwhelming majority.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE].

Mr. GORE. Mr. Chairman, I think it might be proper if I prefaced my remarks by an expression of appreciation to my distinguished friend, the able gentleman from Minnesota, who on yesterday paid two of my colleagues and me a high compliment by referring to us as a firm of tax experts, by name DINGELL, ENGEL, and GORE. I am but a minority stockholder in that firm and I do not wish to go beyond my rights, but I venture to suggest to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota that his endorsement may presage an auspicious inauguration of a new firm of tax consultants.

I have suggested to my colleagues in that firm that we specialize in tax equity and sound fiscal policy. The indications are bright that we would have a prosperous business and many clients, the most prominent among whom would be the Republican candidates for Congress who vote for the Knutson bill. I say that not without definite indication, because on next Tuesday a Republican primary is being held in the State of Wisconsin to select a nominee of that party to fill a vacancy in the House of Representatives in which there are three Republican candidates. Those candidates are not running on promises made last year. They are running before the people now. And all three of those Republican candidates, I am informed, have repudiated the Knutson bill.

Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from New York said he understood legislation was a matter of give and take. Generally that is true. It is incumbent upon us to consider and try to understand the logic and merits of the positions taken by those with whom we disagree on the sundry issues which come before the Congress. Such an attitude of tolerance and understanding has resulted in much good, and in my limited time as a Member of the House I have seen many conflicting points of view resolved by that process into an action truly representative of the national will.

But on this question before us today, may I advise my friend, those democratic processes of developing the will of this Congress has been denied us—not only denied to this body but denied to the committee to which it was referred, as has been attested to by every Democratic member of the committee who has spoken.

I am one of those 85,000,000 Americans who bought a war bond. I am one of those American citizens who believe that the war-created public debt is an obligation of every American citizen and of the two political parties. I respectfully resist and repel the suggestion made in debate yesterday that because one party was in power when a great victory was forged that a party subsequently coming into power should, because of that previous fact, treat lightly the most stupendous debt in our national history.

Perhaps we here in this Chamber hear the public debt discussed so frequently we become calloused to its dangers to the American way of life and to its meaning to those 85,000,000 Americans who have their savings in bonds tucked away in their savings boxes.

True it is, the Treasury of the United States and the Federal Reserve System has done a great job in holding down the interest rates on these bonds voluntarily purchased, but if this Congress fails to live up to its responsibilities of preserving the stability and financial integrity of the Republic, then they will not be so successful in their refinancing operations, and then this tremendous burden of interest charge on our public debt, now an annual $5,000,000,000 burden, may become unbearable. Then it may be that the confidence of the American people will be shaken in Government paper. When that confidence in Government paper is shaken, the very foundations of our national economy will be shaken, if not shattered.

However, the question today is not simply whether we favor payment on the national debt on the one hand or tax reduction on the other. Not at all. It is far more complicated than that. To vote for the Knutson bill you not only vote to give tax-reduction priority over debt reduction, but you vote for the most inequitable, the most unfair, the most unsound tax bill that it has ever been my privilege to read and study or hear about.

These charts serve to illustrate the points I wish to emphasize. The distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. KNUTSON] yesterday undertook to say that his bill did not violate the principles of ability to pay. Let me show you how war taxes were levied. They were put on to the extent which this Congress considered the people able to contribute to the cost of the war. Here are the percentages by which they were increased on various income levels over the 1939 tax rate, and the third column shows by what percent they would be reduced by this bill:

Percentage tax increase 1939–46—Percentage tax decrease 1946—H. R. 1

Married person with income of—	Percentage increase of 1946 tax over 1939 tax	Percentage increase of H. R. 1 tax over 1946 tax
$1,200	(1)	30
$1,500	(1)	30
$2,000	(1)	30
$3,000	4,650	20
$5,000	898	20
$10,000	427	20
$25,000	265	20
$50,000	180	20
$100,000	94	20
$303,396	44	20
$500,000	34	16
$1,000,000	24	13

[1] No tax was levied on incomes of this amount in 1939. For 1946 the tax on $1,200 was $38; on $1,500, $95; and on $2,000, $190.

Let me say to the gentleman who spoke a moment ago that the war tax bills passed by almost unanimous vote.

Percentages can be deceiving. That is why 20 percent across the board is deceiving. But I am putting it on the basis of percentages, too. The percentages begin with this $3,000 income. There was an increase of 4,650 percent 1946 tax over the 1939 tax. How much do you decrease it by this bill? Twenty percent.

Let us take the $5,000-income bracket. It was increased 898 percent. How much do you decrease it? Twenty percent. So you are transferring the burden of the war debt from those most able to pay to the backs of those who are least able to pay.

"Take-home pay" is a democratic, workingman, farmer term. Every housewife knows what that means. It means what they have left to spend after paying their taxes. For this $1,200-a-year-income man that we have heard so much about, you increase his take-home pay by 1 percent. Take a look at this table:

Under H. R. 1 (Knutson tax bill) as amended by Committee on Ways and Means

Married person with income of—	Percent increase in take-home pay
$1,200	1.0
$1,500	2.0
$2,000	3.1
$3,000	2.9
$5,000	3.8
$10,000	5.6
$25,000	11.4
$50,000	19.7
$100,000	34.2
$303,396	72.1
$500,000	70.7
$1,000,000	69.2

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] has expired.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. GORE. The $303,000-income man gets a take-home pay increase of 72.1 percent—$47,000.

The man who earns $1,200 per year will receive an increase of $11.40 in his take-home pay, per year.

What does this mean to him? How much can this man buy with that take-home increase. He may be able to buy a cheap spring hat for his wife. But what can the man with an additional take-home of $47,000 do with his extra change? He can buy a dozen $50 hats, a mink coat, pay the grocery bill for an entire year, buy a new car, buy a new home at $20,000, and pay cash for it; buy a farm for $10,000 for a hobby, and pay cash for that, too.

Moreover, he will have enough left to buy a yacht, I mean another yacht, for, of course, he probably already has one; and he can pay his membership in the golf club, take a cruise, a vacation, and still have $5,000 left with which to gamble on the stock market. Is that what you are going to vote for? Well, that is what you will vote for if you vote for the Knutson bill.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GORE. I am sorry; later. No wonder the gentleman is disturbed, but here is another chart I want to show the Committee.

By this bill, taking for granted that $3,840,000 tax relief is conveyed by the bill, you will give tax relief to 4 percent of the taxpayers in the amount of $1,441,000,000—and these are not my calculations. I asked the actuaries of the Treasury Department to supply me with this information, and they complied with my request.

Let us look now at the middle income group, making up 43.3 percent of the taxpayers. They will get $1,378,000,000. And then this lowly income group which we have heard so much about, the 52.7 percent, get only $877,000,000. Here it is in table form. This is what you will be voting for.

UNDER H. R. 1 (KNUTSON TAX BILL)

Four percent get $1,441,000,000 tax relief.

Forty-three and three-tenths get $1,378,000,000 tax relief.

Fifty-two and seven-tenths get $877,000,000 tax relief.

Mr. Chairman, the author attempts to justify this on the promise that we are going to make drastic reduction in expenditures, that we are going to deeply cut cost of government. Weeks ago, this Congress voted a resolution to cut $6,000,000.

A disagreement with another body developed. Then conferees were appointed and we waited for a meeting. Day passed and day passed; no meeting; then the weeks began to roll by and still no meeting. Finally the distinguished former chairman of the Ways and Means Committee made some reference to the strange procedure and promptly a meeting of the conferees was called for last Saturday. I was a member of that conference committee, and although I am not privileged to disclose to you what happened there, I assure you it was a rare privilege to attend, and I assure you further that those noted Aristotelian logicians of the Middle Ages who spent long hours debating upon whether there was a homo genus and how many angels could stand on the point of a needle would have felt delightfully at home in that conference.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for an inquiry?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Where is this conference report now? Most of us are wondering where it is.

Mr. GORE. It is in the bosom of the Republican leadership of the Congress, and there I predict it will remain until the tax bill is passed.

Much has been said here today of the spending spree of the Democratic administration. Well, who are the spenders now? In the first two appropriation bills, this Republican House has appropriated 50 percent more money than was appropriated to run the whole Government in 1938.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Chairman, House bill 1, known as the Knutson tax bill, and sponsored by the Republican leadership of the House, will, if enacted into law, take its proper place alongside of other special privileged legislation for which the Republican Party has long been famous. The gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. FORAND] and other Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee have sponsored an amended bill which will extend relief to the taxpayer in the lower brackets by increasing the exemptions. This is the only practical method to relieve the tax burden on the millions who create the purchasing power of America.

Our Nation is just emerging from the greatest world war in history and is heavily burdened with a terrific national debt. It is the contention of the opponents of the present bill that substantial payments must be made on our national debt and also to balance our Federal budget, and then our Government should make a substantial reduction in Federal income taxes. The eighty-odd-million people who purchased defense bonds must not have the value of those bonds jeopardized by a politically conceived tax bill which will grant terrific reductions to the taxpayers in the high brackets. Our Government must continue on a sound fiscal policy and we cannot maintain it if the Republican leadership insists on playing politics with our tax structure. At no time in our history is the average American taxpayer better able to make substantial payments on our national debt than during these postwar years of prosperity. We must not postpone this responsibility of payment to some future date and have the burden fall on the shoulders of the boys who fought and won the war.

I fully realize that the Republican national committee promised the voters that they were going to cut Federal income taxes 20 percent across the board. The chairman of the Ways and Means Committee for several months has been assuring the American people that this would be done. We find that he has even retreated from his position.

The legislation which will undoubtedly pass the House this afternoon is nothing more than an empty gesture to the American people that the Republican leadership is carrying out its wild campaign promise. I do not believe that the Republican leadership in this House have any serious hope that House bill No. 1, as it now stands, will ever be enacted into law. This bill will merely serve as an instrument for the Republican National Committee to present to their corporate campaign donors as evidence that they are endeavoring to recompense their benefactors for the great campaign slush fund of 1946.

Millions of the smaller American taxpayers will become acquainted with the tax-reduction provisions of this bill by the November election of 1948. They will then learn that the policy of the Republican leadership toward the masses has not changed since the lush days of the Republican leadership in the 1920's. Young America and the World War II veterans will see in this bill a scheme to pass on the double burden of both fighting and paying for World War II.

On account of the Republican majority, it will be impossible to defeat this bill, but I do hope that the Democratic membership remain solid and, with the aid of a number of Republican Members, a sizable protest be registered against this ill-advised tax legislation.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McGARVEY].

Mr. McGARVEY. Mr. Chairman, much has been said lately of the need for party unity. For this reason, I am puzzled by those Republican Congressmen, who, in statements made on the floor of the House or to members of the press, openly criticize the proposed income-tax reduction.

This is a party measure. It helped us to win the election in November, and now we are being asked by some to forget its existence.

The original plan, calling for a 20-percent across-the-board reduction, has been changed in favor of the present measure, but still the critics are not satisfied. They would prefer still further revisions, or, better yet, a complete shelving of the bill.

They call it a rich man's bill. They claim that it benefits those in the upper-income brackets to the detriment of the workingman and farmer. Mr. Chairman, to me this pitting of class against class sounds strangely like the beginnings of new dealism in the Republican Party. Apparently some of our Members have forgotten the answer to that question heard so frequently before the last election. Perhaps they have forgotten the question.

Well I, for one, have not forgotten that my constituents had enough and voted for me in a district that has not had a Republican Congressman in 16 years. And I would like to make it clear that it is not a rich man's district. The people in it are, for the most part, working people and low-income wage earners. These same people write me daily urging my support of this so-called rich man's bill.

One Congressman, who opposes the bill for reasons best known to himself, has decided that the new Members are to blame for the desire to produce an effective tax bill. As you can readily see, he picked an easy target. What does a freshman Member do in Congress but keep his mouth shut? His remarks that business interests have threatened new Members with withdrawal of their support in the next election unless they vote for the tax bill belongs in the interesting if true department; a polite way of saying pure "bunk."

If anyone has used coercion in regard to this matter, I would say it was he. This gentleman issues dire warnings of the loss of the little man's vote. To listen to him for any length of time, one would come to believe that we proposed to raise the income tax, instead of lowering it.

This distinguished gentleman is so engrossed with his press interviews that he apparently has not had the time for a careful study of the measure. If he had, he would see the folly of his rantings. Not only does this bill benefit the workingman directly, by decreasing the tax on his income, but indirectly, by releasing a stream of venture capital from the upper income brackets into the field of productive enterprise. This would not only enable established businesses to expand, but allow the creation of new industrial undertakings. The obvious result is higher wages and more and better jobs for the workingman, who, according to some, is so abused by this bill.

I would like to say here and now that though I may be a freshman in Congress, I am not a freshman in politics. I know what the people of my district want. They want tax relief, not 1 year or 2 years hence, they want it now. This is the Republican Party's first chance to give the American people what they voted for last November. It is expected of us. Let us, therefore, cease this useless talk of revisions and amendments. Above all, let us stop, right now, any move favorable to the complete abandonment of the measure.

This is a sound tax bill. It not only paves the way for better tax bills, but is a necessary start in the restoration of the economic stability of our country.

I therefore urge your enthusiastic support of this bill. This is our chance to show the American people that the Republican Party does not make a mockery of their campaign promises.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER].

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make a few remarks respecting H. R. 1, which is now pending before this Committee, and which measure provides for the reduction of individual income-tax payments. At the very outset, I wish to state that I intend to support this measure. It is high time that the people of this country have some tax relief. During the war, and since the end of the war, the people have struggled, and they are continuing that struggle, to save and to prepare for the payment of their income taxes. These are certain, as long as the law provides for such payments. It has been written that there are two certain happenings in our lives, and these are death and the payment of taxes. That statement is unqualifiedly true. These are "fixed charges" against us, and the only variation is in the amount of the tax charges, and this great legislative body has the power to fix just what that charge may be. In the pending legislation this body is called upon to fix the amount of the tax charge against the people of this Nation.

Mr. Chairman, the people are eager for some tax relief. In the passage of the pending bill, I am certain that relief will be extended to them. I am very proud of the fact that the Ways and Means Committee has approached this problem upon the basis of the ability of the people to pay taxes, and they have seen fit to make a reduction to all those in the lower and small-income brackets; the small-income earner, regardless of what his vocation may be, is entitled to a reduction of his tax—he desires to enhance his power of purchase, and it is wholesome to our Nation to grant that increased purchasing power to those in the lower-income brackets. The Nation will welcome this reduction, I am confident. Another provision contained in this bill, with which I am in complete accord, is the provision granting to all those who have attained the age of 65 years an additional exemption of $500. It is common knowledge among the Members of the House that the aged people of our country, those who have attained the age of 65 years, are struggling to secure jobs, and many of them are unable to secure a job of permanent character. The mere pittance of their earnings, or the small amount which they may receive by way of income of any character, is quite soon absorbed in the payment of taxes. Under the pending measure these people, who are over 65 years of age, will receive an additional exemption of $500, which will be very helpful, I am certain. I fully approve of the action taken by the Ways and Means Committee with respect to the aged people of our country. I am confident all of the other reductions contained in the bill, now presented to the Committee of the Whole House, will meet with the general approval of the Members of the House, and that it will be universally approved by the people generally over the country.

Mr. Chairman, there is another, and a most potent, reason for my approval of this measure and of all measures which will reduce the spending of the taxpayers' money, and which will force the Departments of our Government to reduce their personnel and employees, and which will place a firm and definite limitation upon the amount of money our Government will have available for spending, and that is this—the people have reached the end of the road in their ability to pay, and they are entitled to a respite from this constant demand for more taxes, and for more money. The earning power of our people is largely fixed. Their resources are being sapped away by the payment of very high taxes. They are, therefore, unable to purchase the commodities they need, and they are unable to employ the people they should have to make repairs, and to engage in construction; their purchasing power is limited by the imposition of these high and all-absorbing taxes, and it was with this thought in mind, together with the desire to help the people in the lower income tax brackets, and the aged people, that this bill was prepared and introduced. It is my fervent hope that this measure will be promptly passed by the House of Representatives, all to the end that the much-needed relief provided in the bill may be extended to the people generally in our country. This measure, written into law, will also be a firm limitation upon our Government in the spending of the people's money. It will be a signal to those in control of our Government, and the many and various agencies thereof, to stop, look, and listen, a signal which has not been presented during the past 14 years. It is my considered judgment, Mr. Chairman, that this action is wholesome and that this legislation will redound to the ultimate benefit of the people in our Nation.

This measure should be passed without a dissenting vote.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GOODWIN].

Mr. GOODWIN. Mr. Chairman, when we pass this bill today, we will be furnishing additional proof that we propose to keep faith with the American people. They are looking to us to give them some measure of relief from the burden of individual income taxes. They have courageously and patriotically carried this burden during the war years, but now at the threshold of the third peacetime year they desire and deserve such tax reduction as will enable them to save from their earnings something more to spend for themselves and for the increased comfort and enjoyment of their families.

We should fail miserably in our obligation to our constituents if we did not pass on to them as taxpayers the savings which can be made and which we are going to make by eliminating unnecessary items in the cost of the Federal Government.

It is natural that there should be a difference of opinion as to how most equitably to apportion to the different income brackets the tax savings to be effected by cutting down Federal expenses. I feel certain the committee has approached this problem with analytical care and has reached a solution which will work substantial justice to the entire taxpaying public.

The benefit of the full 30-percent cut is given to that great army of taxpayers whose income falls into the lower brackets and who have been hardest hit by the increased cost of living. At the same time the bill recognizes the necessity for affording a tax reduction for those whose taxable income is larger.

In this latter group are those upon whose capital we rely for the financing of those business ventures so essential for an expanding economy.

We must encourage the free flow of this risk capital if we are to maintain and increase a high level of production and employment.

Thus this bill will furnish incentive for business expansion, stimulate our national economy and build up the wealth of the country. All our people will be able to enjoy a higher standard of living through full production, and a corresponding increase in gainful employment.

I am confident that the passage of this bill will be enthusiastically hailed by the great rank and file of our people as proof that this Eightieth Congress proposes to move with expedition and certainly to take from their backs the burdens brought on by the exigencies of war; to give them now the privilege of having and spending for themselves the tax-savings made by cutting the cost of Government and by eliminating Federal employees no longer necessary, fit the Federal pay roll to the pattern of a peacetime economy.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROBSION].

Mr. ROBSION. Mr. Chairman, I arise in support of H. R. 1, as amended. Our Democrat friends took control of the House in 1933. They continued in control with an overwhelming majority for 16 years and during all of those years they did not present a real tax-reduction bill. On the contrary, they increased taxes and the national debt, and it is a real pleasure to me, for the first time in 16 years, to have the opportunity to speak and vote for an honest-to-God tax-reduction bill, a bill that gives substantial tax relief to those with small incomes, to those of moderate incomes, and some relief to those who have larger incomes who provide much of the investment capital which creates jobs and more tax-producing incomes.

We have had a lot of figures submitted here by our distinguished friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] and others. I have always heard that figures do not lie. I am glad to observe that our friend the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] admits that he did not make the figures he presented here. You know a lot of people make figures. Some good folks as well as others submit figures to uphold their contention but are very misleading. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] reminds me of a story that I heard about a young man in my own congressional district. He was one of two brothers whose father was a farmer. One's name was Sam and the other Levi. The father was unable to provide funds for a college education for both of these sons. He decided to send the elder son, Sam, to one of the leading universities. Sam majored in logic. After 5 years, and in the month of June when chickens were large enough to broil, Sam returned to his home with his degree in logic. Levi had very limited educational opportunities. Sam daily astonished his father and brother with his discourses on logic. He claimed by the process of logic he could prove black is white, green is red, and so on. Sam said one day: "You think we are hoeing corn here on the south side of the Rockcastle River, but I can prove by the process of logic that we are on the north side of the Rockcastle River." Finally the dinner bell rang and they went to the house for dinner. The mother had broiled two fine young chickens and they were before them on a platter. The father returned thanks and then was about to carve the chickens and serve them to his two sons and himself. Sam, the logician, said: "Father, now wait, I am going to prove to you that there are three chickens on that platter." Levi remarked, after he became a man, in telling the story that his brother Sam convinced him that there were three chickens on the platter instead of two. The father, however, listened patiently until Sam got through. Then he took a fork and put one chicken on his son Levi's plate, and the other one on his own plate and said: "Now my son Sam, as you proved to your own satisfaction that there are three chickens on the platter, you may have the third chicken for your dinner."

Now my colleague the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] and other good Democrats have, by the use of a lot of hypothetical figures and some of Sam's logic, tried to convince us that there are three chickens on the platter instead of two. What do our Democratic friends know about reducing taxes, reducing expenditures, and reducing the national debt? They are experts on increasing taxes, expenditures, and the national debt.

I first came to the House in 1919. Our Democrat friends had run true to form during the years they had control of the Congress. They had raised taxes sky high. They bequeathed to us also a great national debt. The Republicans secured control of the Congress and the executive branch on March 4, 1921. The high war taxes and the big debt were there. The Republicans proposed to reduce taxes and reduce the national debt, but our Democratic brethren brought in figures and more figures, and also a lot of Sam's logic as they have been doing here for the last 2 days on the present tax bill. They insisted that taxes should not be reduced and should not and ought not be reduced. They almost shed tears pointing out how the reductions of taxes and the debt would ruin the country and destroy the Republican Party. The Republican Congress did reduce the taxes in 1921 and in that year paid a billion dollars on the national debt and had a surplus because the lower rates had encouraged business and brought on an era of greatest prosperity this country has ever witnessed. A number of other tax-reduction bills were passed by the Republicans before the depression in 1930, and in 10 years we not only provided well for all of the agencies of the Government but reduced the national debt by $10,000,000,000. It did not ruin the country; it did not ruin the Republican Party. So now these wild stories we now hear from our Democratic friends that we cannot reduce taxes, that it will ruin the Nation and the Republican Party, do not disturb me.

The Democratic Party again got control on March 4, 1931. They proceeded to increase taxes, proceeded to increase the national debt by leaps and bounds in peacetime and before we entered the war they had increased the national debt by more than $40,000,000,000 and the taxes also went up by leaps and bounds. I made the prediction some time after the Democrats took control that they would increase taxes and increase the national debt so long as they remained in power. That prophecy was fulfilled. I know you boast of the fact that in 1945 you did put through a tax-reduction bill but that was a real "phony" tax-reduction bill. You decreased taxes that year when we had a deficit for that particular fiscal year staring us in the face for more than $40,000,000,000 and in that same year and at the same time that you were putting through that tax-reduction bill, a great campaign was put on all over the Nation to sell some 15 or more billion dollars worth of bonds. In other words, while you were handing out a tax reduction in one hand you were increasing the indebtedness of this country by 15 billion or more. Now you argue that with a surplus confronting the country for the coming fiscal year of many billions of dollars that we cannot have a tax reduction. While many of us supported and voted for that tax-reduction bill as it was the first gesture toward the reduction of taxes in 14 years, I pointed out in a speech on the floor of the House what a ridiculous proposal it was with 14 years of going in the red and a tremendous deficit for that particular year, we were going out and borrowing billions of dollars by selling bonds in order to secure the money to pay for the reduction in taxes, and it was to take effect on January 1, 1946. Were our Democratic friends thinking about the big election in 1946 involving the control of the House and Senate? In selling these bonds we placed a first mortgage on the property and resources of every kind of the people of this country and used more than one half of the money to put through a phony tax-reduction bill. Of course, it was unfair to the American people. That is just like a bank or a business concern putting a first mortgage on their property to secure money to pay a dividend. If a board of directors did that in a bank they would be put in jail and that would be true in some cases of any business concern.

The bill before us will give a cut of 30 percent on the present taxes to practically 30,000,000 American taxpayers in the low income brackets. This will save several billions of dollars in taxes to these 30,000,000 low-income taxpayers of the Nation. Those who have a net taxable income above $1,400, and this means after deducting all exemptions, and up to $300,000 will receive a net reduction in their taxes over present taxes of 20 percent. Those that have a net income now of about $300,000 and are paying 86½ percent will have a reduction of 10 percent on their present taxes. In other words, the taxes will be reduced to 76½ percent. Persons who are 65 years of age or older will receive an additional benefit in exemptions of $500.

If a man and his wife each are 65 years of age, each of them will be entitled to this $500 exemption in addition to the present exemption of $500 for each of them. This, of course, is to bring some relief to nearly a million and a half aged people in this country who have small incomes and whose productive or earning capacity is practically at an end.

Two able former Under Secretaries of the Treasury under President Roosevelt strongly endorse this bill in their testimony before the Ways and Means Committee.

Mr. KNUTSON. What does the Good Book say about straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel?

Mr. ROBSION. Our Democratic friends appear to be doing that very thing.

DEMOCRATIC LEADERS OPPOSED

President Truman and his leaders, for some time, have expressed strong opposition to any tax-reduction bill. The Republicans again have inherited from the Democrats the highest national debt in proportion to its population of any country in the world and the highest pro rata taxes of any country in the world. Much of this was due to the reckless squandering of the people's tax and bond money by the New Dealers for the last 14 or more years, and, the Democrats now say we cannot and must not reduce taxes or we will ruin the country and destroy the Republican Party and they have consistently in this debate chided the Republicans for having promised the people last fall that if they were given control of the Congress, they would balance the budget, reduce taxes, and pay a substantial sum on the national debt. The Republicans did agree to balance the budget, reduce, taxes, and pay on the national debt. That is what I promised and I believe that is what every Republican in this House promised.

Who ever heard of one of our Democratic brethren going over his district last year and telling the people he was against reducing taxes? Why did not our Democratic friends, who are today so vigorously opposing any and all tax reductions, tell the people before the election last year? I heard no Democrat last year in the House before the November election, or elsewhere, claim that he would oppose the reduction of taxes. Insofar as I have observed, our Democratic friends joined with the Republicans in urging the balancing of the budget, the reduction of taxes, and reducing the national debt.

I, as one Republican, intend to carry out that pledge insofar as it is in my power to do so. I want to keep the promise I made last fall to the people that I represent and the American people, and I feel sure that practically every Republican in this House will do likewise. If we have any Republican who has any doubt as to the popularity of this bill among the Members of this House, as well as the American people, I want such Republican to listen when the roll is called in a short time and see how many of our brethren who have been opposing our efforts to reduce taxes vote for the bill. I am sure that many of our Democratic friends will remember the promises they made last fall before the election and forget some of the speeches that were made on the floor during the last few days and will vote for this bill. I have every reason to believe that the bill will be adopted by a vote of perhaps 2 to 1 or more, and I honestly believe that these Democrats who will vote for the bill will be rendering a real service to themselves and to our country. It will be much easier to explain a vote for this bill, giving substantial reductions to all groups of taxpayers, than a vote opposing a tax reduction to all groups. I am sure that each and every Member will find it much easier to explain his vote in keeping his promise than in giving a vote contrary to the pledges he has made.

One of the most vigorous speeches made against this bill was by our good friend and colleague, Mr. EBERHARTER, a Democrat from the State of Pennsylvania. He declares that he opposes the bill because we have not cut the incomes of the rich enough and have given too little consideration in the lower brackets. What percentage of taxes do the so-called rich pay at the present time? Eighty-six and one-half percent of their net taxable income, or in other words, they give to the Government in taxes 86½ cents out of every dollar of their income and they have left only 13½ cents out of each dollar for themselves. This bill reduces their taxes 10 cents on each dollar of their income and they can now retain from their income 23½ cents out of each dollar.

It would not be much encouragement for a man to invest his money in job-producing and tax-paying enterprises if he must take all the risks of loss and be permitted to retain no more than 13½ cents out of each dollar for himself. Now, let us see how consistent our friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. EBERHARTER] is. He is an able Democratic member of the great Ways and Means Committee. He introduced a tax-reduction bill in the present Congress which fixes the maximum taxes to be paid by corporations as well as individuals, at 50 percent of their income. Yes, he would let the biggest corporations and the richest men in this country off at 50 cents on each dollar of their incomes. Yet, for some strange reasons, he denounces the present bill as being too liberal to the rich when it fixes the tax at 76½ percent on individual incomes.

This bill does not reduce in any way or at all the high taxes on corporations. His tax bill and his speech, according to my lights, is very inconsistent indeed. Later on the Congress will consider the taxes of corporations, both large and small, and also excise taxes. This bill deals solely and only with individual income taxes. If Mr. EBERHARTER'S bill should be adopted now, we could give very little relief to the income-tax payers in the lower brackets and also to those in the brackets of moderate incomes, but as it is, a man and his wife with two children will pay practically no taxes on an income of $2,500 and will pay very little if his income does not exceed $3,300. The additional exemption of $500 for persons 65 years of age will take perhaps a million of needy old people from the tax rolls. This bill brings substantial relief to more than 50,000,000 income-tax payers.

Some countries, for whom we have done so much and who still today owe us billions and billions of dollars, have since the war ended given their people substantial tax reductions. The Australian Government, that owes us a great deal of money, has given to her people two tax reductions since the war. We have been and still are the Santa Claus for the world. Why not do a little Santa Clausing for the tax-burdened American people?

I have voted for many tax bills during my years of service in the House and Senate and this is the most popular and fairest tax bill that I have ever had an opportunity to support. Of course, I wish the reductions could be much more than they are. These reductions amount to approximately $4,000,000,000. The American people will have just that much more to spend for the necessities of life, their other requirements, and to invest in homes and business enterprises. We hope, by restricting the waste of the tax money of the people, that there can be another tax reduction in the latter part of this year or next year.

CUT EXPENDITURES, TAXES, AND PAY ON NATIONAL DEBT

Our Democratic friends insist that we cannot cut taxes. They have denounced us for our efforts to reduce the President's budget. The position of the Republicans is that we can balance the budget; we can cut taxes, and we can pay a substantial sum on the national debt, and we must put forth every honest and reasonable effort to do so.

Every day we hear the threat that President Truman will veto this tax bill. I sincerely pray that he does not follow that course, but if he does and we cannot pass it over his veto then it becomes his responsibility and not the Republican Congress'.

Let us examine for a moment this situation. We must do it because this was the pledge by the Republicans and practically all of the Democrats before the November election in 1946. The 30-percent reduction will apply to 30,000,000 or more taxpayers. These 30,000,000 will include single persons earning up to $1,667, married men, with wives, earning up to $2,222, and married persons with 2 dependents earning up to $3,333. The 20-percent reduction will go to some 15,000,000 taxpayers whose net taxable income ranges between $1,400 and $302,396. The $500 additional exemption will give relief to 1,400,000 persons who are 65 years of age or over. There are 922 taxpayers only who will receive the 10 percent or more reduction. This bill will bring relief to all individual income taxpayers of the Nation. Of course, this is based on a reduction in the expenditures of this Government.

President Truman sent his budget to Congress asking for $37,500,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947, and ending June 30, 1948. President Roosevelt was rated as the greatest spender at the head of any government in all history in peacetime. The highest budget he ever asked for was about $12,500,000,000. President Truman is asking for three times that amount for a peacetime year. I realize fully there is some increase in the expenditures of our Government but we certainly are not justified in calling upon the American people to provide three times as much in a peacetime year as Mr. Roosevelt called for, with all of his officeholders, bureaus, commissions, agencies, relief, and so forth.

Under a law passed in the last Congress, the Congress must before the beginning of each fiscal year examine the President's budget and then fix a budget. The Republicans in the House after examining the President's budget decided that it could be cut at least $6,000,000,000 without doing harm to the efficient operation of our Government, and did pass a measure cutting the President's budget six billion, leaving a balance of thirty-one and one-half billion. The Senate cut the budget four and one-half billion. We are informed the Senate has offered to compromise on the basis of a cut of five and one-quarter billion and there is no doubt but what the minimum cut will be five and one-quarter billion. If it cut six billion then the President will have thirty-one and one-half billion to spend next year. If it is cut five and one-quarter billion he will have thirty-two and one-quarter billion to spend next year.

The President estimated that our revenues this year will amount to $38,900,000,000, but it was conservatively estimated by those who know that the revenues will amount to $39,100,000,000 on a basis of an annual income from all sources of $165,000,000,000, but it is now claimed that the annual income of this country from all sources will be at least $175,000,000,000. This, of course, will increase the taxes proportionately. It is now generally admitted that the revenues of this Government for the year beginning July 1, 1947, will amount to at least $41,000,000,000. If the cut of the budget is not more than $5,250,000,000 this fixes the President's budget at $32,250,000,000; there will be a surplus of approximately $10,000,000,000. This tax-reduction bill will cut the revenues approximately $3,850,000,000. But assuming that the tax reduction will amount to $4,000,000,000, then there would still be a surplus of approximately $6,000,000,000.

It has been urged that we apply two and a half billion dollars on the national debt. This would still leave a surplus of three and one-half billion. Now, why should anyone argue that we cannot reduce the taxes to the amount provided in this bill? It can be done, and it must be done, in the interest of all of the American people. Nothing could give the American people more encouragement, stimulate business, and provide jobs. I realize how difficult it is to cut expenditures with the present administration in charge of the executive branch of the Government when they have been, for many years, following a course of taxing and spending. We must restore honesty, economy, and efficiency in our Government. How can we justify spending three times as much in a peacetime year as Mr. Roosevelt spent in any peacetime year? Let us bear in mind that every dollar we take from the American people in taxes takes just that much away from them in purchasing power. Of course, some persons hint that we may soon get into another war. We should be dedicated to do all within our power to avoid another costly, bloody, and destructive war.

Believing as I do that this bill, while it is not all that I should like, yet under the circumstances it is the very best bill that we can bring out under an administration that thinks in terms of heavy taxes and big spending.

Mr. KNUTSON. What does the Good Book say about straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel?

Mr. ROBSION. Yes; the Republicans agreed to balance the budget, reduce taxes, and pay on the national debt. That is what we promised. That is what the people want. That is what I promised. That is what I believe every Republican sitting in this House promised. Whoever heard of one of your Democratic brethren going out into his district last year and saying that he was against reducing taxes? Why, you did not do that, and if anyone did, let him stand up now and let us find out who it was. So far as I ever heard any of them speak on the floor of the House before the last November election, they joined the chorus of promises to reduce taxes and reduce the national debt.

I, for one, as a Republican, and I believe every Republican in this House will do the same, am going to respond and keep the promises that we made to the American people last fall. When the roll is called, I wish some of my dear Republican friends who may be hesitating on this question will listen to the roll call and see how many of our dear brethren will remember the promises they made last November much more than they remember the speeches that they have made on the floor in the last few days. Many of them are going to vote for this bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may care to consume to the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MURDOCK].

Mr. MURDOCK. Mr. Chairman, for the last 10 years I have heard my Republican colleagues talking about balancing the budget and demanding that it be done. Now, I maintain it will be impossible to balance the budget this year if we pass this bill. Therefore I regard this bill as dangerous to our economy if passed now, to say nothing about the unfairness and injustice of the methods used in it.

The provisions of the Reorganization Act, admittedly difficult to carry out in the beginning of a new Congress, appears not to have been fully carried out with respect to budgetary matters. The theory of the new law is correct and good, I believe, and is presumed to enable a balancing of the budget, but congressional action taken thus far under the new law has not been adequate. Balancing the budget presupposes a very safe and sane estimate of anticipated revenues and also a conservative figuring of all imperative expenditures. It is my information that we have had neither, aside from the President's budget of several weeks ago. It is for this reason that it seems unwise and dangerous to bring a tax-reduction bill before Congress at the present time before supply bills are passed.

Only two of the appropriation bills have thus far been acted on by the House, and neither of them has been acted on by the other body or enacted into law. It is a safe guess that both of those bills will total a greater amount of expenditure than they provided for as they left this body. I think such is a safe guess concerning every one of the following appropriation bills. How, then, can we know with any certainty what our bedrock expenditures must be for the coming year?

Not only that uncertainty but several unforeseen expenditures have arisen since the President sent his budget to Congress a few weeks ago. Those in charge of our foreign affairs, both inside and outside of Congress, both Democrats and Republicans, know that there must be large expenditures of money which were not contained in the President's budget. That great Republican leader, ex-President Herbert Hoover, has recently joined with President Truman since the President's budget was submitted to Congress in recommending hundreds of millions of dollars of expenditures in connection with our foreign affairs and particularly for the purpose of feeding the starving peoples of the Old World. The result will be that the President's budget will be enlarged even more than it can possibly be reduced by savings. Such savings as an economy-minded Congress can make in the regular budget cannot in all probability begin to equal the loss of revenue by this tax-reduction bill.

Saying nothing about the justice or injustice of this method of tax reduction—on which a great deal could be said—it is perfectly obvious that a reduction at this particular time is unwise in the light of all circumstances and because of our lack of knowledge of conditions as they will be 2 or 3 months from now. The majority party in its zeal to carry out preelection promises is getting the cart before the horse in this attempt to reduce taxes before balancing the budget. The feeling on our side is that the value of the dollar is jeopardized and the integrity of United States bonds held by 85,000,000 of Americans is also jeopardized. For that reason I feel that this bill is unwise in several respects but especially because it is untimely. It has been given first place over other fiscal steps which are more important. It should be recommitted.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may care to consume to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. RICHARDS].

Mr. RICHARDS. Mr. Chairman, this bill is indefensible from any standpoint. It is a political bill from every standpoint.

Here we are with the greatest debt ever confronted by any nation in the history of the world, and this bill laughs at that fact.

The Republican Party need pose no more as the champion of sound fiscal policies in government because the present tax bill violates every rule of good business. For this Government to remain solvent, the budget must be balanced, expenditures reduced, and a substantial payment must be applied to the public debt. The national income is now higher than it has ever been and this is our golden opportunity to reduce the debt while income is good. It will be hard to do later on when business is not so good. A child should understand those basic facts, but the Republican Party, with a weather eye to the 1948 elections, buries its head in the sand.

If the Republicans actually want to do justice in the matter of income taxes, they should give tax relief first to the lower income tax brackets. Except in wartime, there is no just excuse for taxing the bread and meat money of any man.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may care to consume to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. WHEELER].

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, to paraphrase Nathan Hale, my only regret is that I have but one vote to cast against this bill.

When the results of the general election in the fall of last year became known, one of the first questions that came into the mind of the American people was whether or not the Republican Party would follow its traditional policy of catering to wealthy interests with almost total disregard for the welfare of the average little man.

All of their protestations to the contrary notwithstanding, the answer to this question is found in H. R. 1 which gives tremendous tax relief to those in the upper brackets and who are most able to pay while giving only a token relief to those who are at present forced to pay taxes on their bread and meat money.

I denounce this bill, H. R. 1, as nothing but an attempt to railroad through this Congress under the guise of general tax relief, a measure that ignores all of the original intent of the sixteenth amendment, the authority under which income taxes are levied.

The original intent of the sixteenth amendment was to provide a method of taxation according to ability to pay. This bill ignores that intention by giving the most relief to those most able to pay.

It is interesting to note that in the time of need for greater income to the Government, the heaviest increase in proportion to income is always laid on those in the lower-income brackets. Why then, I ask you, should not the same method be applied when trying to grant relief? I say to you that the method of tax reduction proposed in H. R. 1 is grossly inequitable. That the bill would give too little reduction to lower incomes and relatively too much to higher incomes can be seen by looking at the effect of the proposed reduction on net incomes after tax and by comparing taxes under the bill with those in effect before the wartime increases. Tax relief at the bottom of the income scale is not significant in relation to tax burdens at these levels and the incomes left after present-law taxes, by comparison, are disproportionately increased at the top of the scale. H. R. 1 would wipe out most of the wartime increases in taxes on very large incomes while leaving taxes on other incomes much higher than before the war.

In effect, this bill (H. R. 1) forgives the people who became wealthy during the war, of their obligation to pay for the war by placing them back on the same basis they were in 1939. They are the ones who should bear most of the load. The proponents of this bill say they are giving the little fellow relief in the form of 30 percent reduction. How much is 30 percent of nothing?

One of the big arguments by the majority in favor of this bill is that the large tax reductions in the higher brackets will promote prosperity and business conditions by releasing new capital with which to promote and finance industry. This argument is without basis at the present time. A tax reduction on the upper level would not contribute to the immediate expansion of business and employment above the current levels, because the supplies of raw materials, machinery and equipment and labor available for producing new investment goods are already being used at capacity levels. And speaking of investments, the official records of the Treasury Department show that nearly 50 percent of the dividends of industry are received by those receiving incomes of less than $5,000. This will show you where investment money in the past has come from.

If we are ever going to place this country on a sound business basis we have got to have a systematic method of reducing our national debt which now stands at approximately $260,000,000,000. Why not start on this task while our national income is now at an all-time high? Preliminary estimates put the national income for the year 1947 at $166,000,000,000 but according to reports compiled after January and February, it will be nearly $177,000,000,000. This, gentlemen, is the time to reduce the debt while the national income is high. Then later in the event of a business recession, we can effect a large reduction in taxes and make a smaller payment on the national debt. Let me point out to you, gentlemen, that nearly $5,000,000,000 in the proposed budget is solely for the purpose of paying interest on this tremendous obligation. A reduction in the national debt would automatically lower the interest item in the budget which would enable Congress to effect even lower reductions in taxes.

It is generally conceded that the family is the basis of civilized society. The inadequate exemption provided in the present tax law offers no inducement or encouragement whatsoever for a young wage earner to marry and raise a family because everyone knows that the present exemption will not cover the expenses of raising a child. Court records show that the largest share of divorce cases grow out of couples who have no children. Raising the personal exemption might be some small inducement to combat the high divorce rate in this country and at the same time make the basis of our society more secure.

The only equitable way of reducing taxes at this time is by raising the personal exemptions. The personal-exemption section of the income-tax law was originally supposed to keep the taxpayer from paying taxes on the necessities of life. The present exemption is too low to be even a token toward carrying out that original intent.

It is just not morally right to grant relief to the person with a lush salary while forcing the people in the lower brackets to pay taxes on money that is going for providing the necessities of everyday life. I again denounce this bill and say again that personal exemptions should be increased before any kind of percentage cut is made.

Mr. Chairman, the votes I have cast in this Congress offer conclusive proof of my regard for economy in Government. I would also like to cast a vote in favor of tax reduction, but I cannot favor tax reduction in the form embodied in H. R. 1. In the first place, we should first determine what our outgo is going to be before we try to establish the amount of our income. After this is done we should then reduce taxes from the bottom up instead of from the top down.

No, Mr. Chairman; this H. R. 1 is no more than an ill-advised political gesture; and since I have more regard for the welfare of the next generation than I have for the result of the next election, I must paraphrase Nathan Hale by saying that "I regret that I have only one vote to cast against this tax bill."

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may care to use to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DAVIS].

Mr. DAVIS of Georgia. Mr. Chairman, I believe the time has come to make a start toward tax reduction. It has been necessary to have high taxes for the last 6 years. We have had to spend enormous sums of money to win the war. The people of the United States have all made sacrifices in many directions. We have bought war bonds. We have planted and cultivated victory gardens. We have canned vegetables, fruits, and food of all kinds. Men and women left careers and went into war-production plants. Boys and girls left school and college and went into the armed forces. We have denied ourselves and our families many needed articles, among which are shirts, shoes, clothing, furniture, washing machines, radios, automobiles, and other durable goods. We adopted the slogan: "Eat it up, wear it out, make it do." We have now just about worn out the 6- and 8-year-old automobiles, the shirts, the shoes, the coats, and many of the articles that we have been using in accordance with that slogan. The wage-earning taxpayer now needs relief in order to begin to replenish and replace some of these worn-out articles.

I do not think this bill gives enough relief to the low-salaried worker. If it lay within my power, I would amend this bill to give more tax reduction to the low-salaried worker. I am sorry that the House has voted to consider this bill under a rule which deprives Members of the right to submit amendments to it. No one has had an opportunity to submit amendments except the members of the Ways and Means Committee, to which the bill was referred. I believe this bill should be amended to provide greater reduction in the lower-income brackets. The only way this can be done is to recommit the bill. I shall vote to recommit the bill so that it can be amended to give more relief to the lower-income brackets.

I have given this bill serious thought and study. There are serious issues involved. In giving it this consideration, there are certain facts which appeal to me, namely, that with the war now over, the taxpayers need some relief from the heavy and unusual taxes brought upon us by the war. The term "taxpayer" includes practically every American citizen who works or who owns property. I have heard the statement advanced that we should adopt a sound fiscal policy and make a substantial reduction of the national debt before we begin to cut taxes. What does that mean? The national debt of the Federal Government is today approximately $260,000,000,000. It is not seriously contended that this debt can be reduced at a greater rate than three or four billion dollars per year. If that is the case, and it is the case, then, under that theory, it would be at least 25 years, and maybe 50, before we could begin to make any substantial tax reduction. I do not believe we should adopt that attitude. I am not willing to wait that long to begin. In my opinion the time to begin to reduce taxes is now.

I believe that debt payments and tax reduction should go hand in hand—that the debt should be reduced to some extent, and that taxes should be reduced to some extent, so as to relieve as much as possible the heavy burden of taxation which we are now bearing.

This problem is higher than political partisanship. It should be viewed from the standpoint of what is best for America, and not what is the policy of the Democratic Party or the policy of the Republican Party. The fundamental welfare of our entire country is at stake, and this question should be viewed from a nonpartisan standpoint. For these reasons I shall vote to recommit the bill so it can be amended to give greater reductions to the lower-salaried taxpayer. If it is not amended, then I shall vote for the bill as it is. From the standpoint of tax reduction, I believe that some reduction is better than none at all, and this bill, while it is not satisfactory to me, nevertheless is a step in the right direction—a step which I believe should be taken at the earliest possible date, and that date is today.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may care to use to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SADOWSKI].

Mr. SADOWSKI. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this Republican tax bill. This is a brazen sell-out to the rich and high-income groups. If any tax relief should be granted, in my opinion, it should come to those wage earners of $5,000 a year or under, so that the purchasing power of the Nation may be maintained, and, therefore, prosperity and full employment may be realized. I also feel that income-tax exemptions should be raised to $2,500 for married couples, and $500 for each dependent. Single persons should have an exemption of at least $1,500.

This Republican policy of high prices for consumers, high profits and high tax reductions for the rich, is already resented by the great masses of people, as recently demonstrated by the teachers' strike and the thousands of letters that I am now receiving. I think this spells the end of Republican rule in Congress.

This tax bill that is before us now represents a revival of the old Mellon-Hoover policy of siphoning off millions of dollars to the rich on top of the pyramid in the hope that some little bit will dribble down to the masses of people. This policy will create a lot of millionaires and then another depression, as we had under Hoover. The only way that we can have continued prosperity is to see that the purchasing power of the masses of people is maintained. A good many people are already wondering whether this bill is not really a big sledge hammer to smash the labor unions. They feel that this bill will fill the pockets of the wealthy with millions of dollars, and then they will close the factories and tell labor to wait in the bread lines until they are ready to come to work at slave-labor wages.

The pattern that is being followed now by the Republican party is the same as they used after the first world war. They are shouting communism, while at the same time they are socking labor on the head with a whole sackful of antilabor bills and following a general policy of increasing prices and the cost of living for the workingman. Look at the recent school teachers' strikes—certainly no one can accuse them of being Communists. They do not even belong to a labor union, but they simply had to strike because they couldn't live on the salaries they were receiving. Now, during the war living costs increased considerably, but the factory workers were getting time and a half for overtime, and double pay on Sundays. This gave them sufficient income to meet the increased wartime cost of living. Now that the war has ended, these factory workers are employed only forty hours a week, and in some instances less than that. There is no more time and a half or double time. Their pay checks have shrunk about 40 percent, but the living costs have not come down. On the contrary, there has been a considerable increase in the cost of food, clothing, and everything since last June, when the Republicans, with the help of some of our southern Democrat-Republicans smashed Government controls. At that time they promised that "free enterprise would take care of the situation and living costs would come down." Now, instead of helping the workers, the disabled, the old-aged, the school teachers, and the white-collar help generally, they are proposing to hand over a gift of millions of dollars more to our rich profiteers.

Gentlemen, I say to you that the Republican Party is done. The masses of people realize that they made a terrible mistake last November. The Republican policy of high prices and inflation for the consumers and workers, and high profits and high income-tax exemptions for the rich profiteers will put them back in the Hoover political gutter. This tax bill will hand a full silk purse to the wealthy and a sow's ear to the lower income groups. Nine million taxpayers will get nothing. Twenty-five million taxpayers will get an average of $34, and the rest goes to the rich. I remember when they came here with the infamous Ruml plan. Mr. Ruml, the stooge of the millionaires, talked about the poor workingman. The Republicans worked out a rebate plan, whereby about $8,000,000,000 of taxes were to be refunded. When they got through the poor workingman and consumers that they cried and lamented about would get about $1,000,000,000, and the rich would get seven billions. This bill stinks even worse than that one. This bill should be called the Knutson-Republican swindle bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may care to use to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. LYLE].

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, the passage of this bill by the Congress will forcefully demonstrate that this body under-estimates the intelligence of the majority of the people in the United States.

It costs $5,000,000,000 each year to pay the interest on the national debt. Translated into terms that I can understand, that means about $35 for each individual each year as interest on the national debt, and it has been estimated that if we retire the debt in 100 years, it will necessitate the payment of over $600,000,000,000.

Other than national security, there is no more important and vital problem for the people of this country today than the retirement of the national debt.

The levying of taxes is one of the most unpleasant duties of a Congressman in times of peace, but even more unpleasant than that would be to leave this Chamber today with a sense of having cast a cheap political vote.

Taxes are high, burdensome, and severe, but they do not equal our responsibilities in our quest for peace and decency. The statement made by the majority party that existing taxes are "a real threat" to the initiative and new investment essential to a high level of employment is not well founded.

In 1946 income taxes paid by individuals in America amounted to $17,600,000,000. Expenditures by the American people for the same period for selected consumption of luxury items, and I list them, were $17,600,000,000. Automobiles purchased for luxury purposes—a quarter of the total—cost $686,250,000 and gasoline for luxury use cost $1,323,000,000. Amusements last year cost $2,171,335,969 and the purchase of furs for American women amounted to an expenditure of $917,061,705. Luggage bought last year cost $407,117,132; toilet goods cost $477,872,426 and cosmetics, $862,000,000. People of the United States spent $1,830,287,495 for horse racing, and $7,770,000,000 for liquor. It is revealing that our liquor bill parallels the amount we spent on veterans, who paid the highest price any man ever paid for liberty.

Certainly the greater part of the seventeen-odd billion dollars spent on luxury items was not spent by the low-income groups. People with less than $3,000 a year are having a most difficult time securing the very essentials of life. How constructive and how pleasant it would be if the majority party would join with us to bring a measure of relief and security to these millions, who, under this bill, are certainly not receiving that relief.

For example, a married man making $2,500 a year would get a reduction amounting to about 50 cents a week. A married man with no dependents, earning $1,200 a year, would get relief of about 25 cents a week, or $11.40 a year. On the other hand, a man making $9,000 would get a reduction of $372.40. Married people paying taxes on less than $4,000 would actually and potentially be losing money by this bill. For instance, a married man with two children, paying taxes on $3,500, will save $57 per year under this bill. At the same time, he is saving $57, his family will incur a potential debt of interest on the national debt amounting to $140, which means that he has suffered a net loss for the year of $83. Of course, this isn't true for the higher-income brackets. For example, a Congressman would likely make a little money on the deal, but inasmuch as we have recently increased our own incomes, I believe it is fitting that we consider those who are in need of financial relief, and the only possible way for this Congress to materially benefit the average man is by reduction of the national debt.

Mr. Chairman, fortunately the people of this country are intelligent and well informed. They understand the issues at stake today. No individual Member of this Congress and no party will be able to purchase the preference of the people with such ill-conceived legislation.

I will join the Members of this House, of both parties, in an effort to drastically reduce the cost of Government, to balance the budget, and to retire the national debt. And then, Mr. Chairman, it will be my happy privilege to vigorously support a revision of the tax laws so that individuals and business institutions will be given proper relief and consideration in the light of our commitments and responsibilities.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY].

Mr. GARY. Mr. Chairman, the experience of two world wars within a quarter of a century into which we were inevitably drawn against our will has convinced the American people that we cannot isolate ourselves from the strife of the rest of the world. We are, therefore, accepting our responsibility and assuming our rightful position of world leadership in an effort to promote international cooperation and durable peace among the nations. If, however, we are to maintain our influence abroad, we must remain strong and virile at home, which means that we must not only maintain our military strength, but that we must remain strong economically and fiscally as well. Any evidence of weakness on our part, particularly at the present time, would deprive us of our position of leadership and would have tremendous repercussions abroad which might easily lead to world chaos.

Moreover, our domestic prosperity and tranquillity are contingent upon our economic and fiscal stability. No nation can long remain strong without a sound fiscal condition which cannot be preserved under a policy of continuous deficit financing.

In fact, if democratic government is to survive it must be able to properly finance itself. Elected representatives are usually so anxious to satisfy the wishes of their constituents for increased governmental service and at the same time so reluctant to adopt the measures necessary to properly finance such services, that there is a growing tendency toward deficit financing as the course of least resistance. This tendency is becoming a serious threat to the form of government that we cherish.

The Federal budget has not been balanced for 16 years, and the Federal debt has pyramided by leaps and bounds during that period. In 1917, just prior to World War I, the Federal debt was $3,000,000,000. It rose to a World War I peak of $26,600,000,000 on August 31, 1919. During the decade of the twenties there was a small surplus in the Treasury at the end of each year and the debt was gradually reduced to $16,000,000,000 on December 31, 1930. It was then that our present era of deficit spending, brought on by the depression, was resumed. By the end of the fiscal year 1940 the debt had arisen to $43,000,000,000. You will remember it was during that period we heard many arguments as to the ability of this Nation to carry a debt of such tremendous proportions. When some economists suggested that the debt might be increased to $50,000,000,000 without too seriously affecting our national economy their views were severely criticized.

Then came World War II and arguments as to the policy or size of the debt became academic. Unprecedented expenditures which reached the stupendous sum of $100,000,000,000 in 1945 increased the debt to an all-time high of $279,800,000,000 in February 1946. This has been reduced to $259,100,000,000 as of today. This reduction was accomplished by applying to debt retirement large outstanding Treasury balances which were maintained during the war, and not by surplus financing. At the beginning of the fiscal year 1948, however, the Treasury balances will have been reduced to a peacetime level and any further reduction in the debt must come from current surpluses. Likewise further current deficits will result in debt increases.

It is estimated that $75,000,000,000 of the outstanding interest-bearing securities are owned by commercial banks; $23,500,000,000 by Federal Reserve banks; $11,500,000,000 by mutual savings banks; and $25,000,000,000 by insurance companies, making a total of $135,000,000,000, which constitutes more than 50 percent of the assets of those institutions. After World War I, Federal securities depreciated in value to such an extent that at one time $100 bonds sold on the market as low as $80. If we were to suffer a similar experience after World War II the solvency of every bank and insurance company in the United States would be seriously jeopardized. We cannot permit this to happen. To prevent it, we must maintain the faith of the American people in the fiscal stability of their Government, and this can be accomplished only by adopting sound fiscal policies.

Our present fiscal condition, therefore, demands that the budget be balanced for the fiscal year 1948, and that a definite program of substantial debt retirement be initiated immediately. Unless some progress is made toward debt reduction during the period of prosperity and inflation through which we are now passing, we will inevitably face disaster in the lean years which are certain to follow.

Neither of these objectives can be attained if we undertake to reduce taxes at this time. The President's budget estimated the receipts for the fiscal year 1948 at $37,700,000,000 and expenditures at $37,500,000,000 which would provide a surplus at the end of the year of only $200,000,000. The receipts did not include the $1,130,000,000 of revenue which will result from continuation of war excise taxes as recommended by the President and enacted by the Congress. The addition of these receipts will, therefore, provide a surplus of $1,330,000,000.

There has been endless talk by the Republicans of cutting the expenditures proposed by the President but the legislative budget is resting quietly in the conference committee where it was referred nearly a month ago because the Republicans cannot agree among themselves as to the size of this cut.

In the meantime, two appropriation bills have passed the House. The appropriations carried in these two bills totaled $15,000,000,000, which represents 40 percent of the entire budget. After careful scrutiny by able subcommittees manned by the most vigorous Republican axmen these appropriations were actually cut approximately $125,000,000, or less than 1 percent. This percentage applied to the entire budget will result in a total reduction of less than $325,000,000. Of the remaining $22,500,000,000 of the budget yet to be acted on $11,250,000,000 is appropriated for national defense and $7,343,000,000 for veterans' services and benefits. Unless, therefore, these items are greatly reduced the prated Republican economies will become as mythical as their campaign promises.

Not only is it becoming more apparent day by day that there will be no drastic cuts in the expenditures recommended by the President, but we must recognize that the international situation may require increased expenditures in support of our foreign program. Already an appropriation of $400,000,000 has been recommended for Greece and Turkey. I dare say there is not a single person in this House who does not fear that this is the beginning rather than the end of such expenditures. We are living in critical times in which the exigencies of the occasion shape our policies rather than the dictates of our own desires.

Mr. Chairman, I shall not discuss the provisions of this particular bill. Its defects have already been forcibly disclosed on the floor of this House

The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE], pointed out that this bill will switch the burden for paying the war debt from the high bracket to the low bracket taxpayers. May I remind you that most of the veterans of World War II are in the lower brackets. So that the effect will be to shift the burden of the payment of war debt to those who won the war.

May I say in closing that I favor a reduction of taxes at the earliest moment conditions will permit. The war has left us with tax and other burdens which are oppressive to our people, but our present fiscal situation demands that we defer all tax reductions until the budget has been balanced and a definite program of reasonable debt retirement has been adopted. Thereafter we can apply surpluses over and above the debt requirements to tax reductions with a clear conscience and with the knowledge that we are following sound fiscal policies. Such a course will strengthen the faith of our people in the stability of our Government and promote our prestige and influence abroad. Any other course at the present time is fraught with grave danger.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, Andrew Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, had this to say in his Treasury Annual Report of 1925:

> While taking the people as a whole it is immaterial when the debt is paid, still, as between different classes of people, the investing class holding the bonds and the producing class from whom a larger part of our taxes are collected, inequality may exist. We should not tax too heavily the producers to pay the security holders. It is for this reason that we have sought a balance between debt reduction and tax reduction.

> We come now to the other principal factor in debt reduction, that of surplus, which has accounted to date for over one-third of the reduction in our debt. It is proposed to exhaust this surplus by reducing taxes. This is sound policy. A surplus of Government receipts over expenditures should be distributed just as the profits of any other mutual organization are distributed, among its members—the taxpayers—through a reduction in their forced contributions to the State.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. ELLIS].

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, this bill has been discussed 2 days by the best informed men in the Congress on the subject of taxation.

There is no mystery about its provisions; there is no doubt about its import. Consequently, my chief purpose in making this brief statement is to lend my unqualified and enthusiastic endorsement to the tax-reduction measure and to let the people in my district know that I am in complete accord with the leadership of my party in its determination to reduce taxes; reduce the budget; terminate waste and useless spending in Government, and make a substantial payment on the national debt. This is the first step on the road to the accomplishment of our objective.

This is a good bill and it will be a refreshing experience for the hard-pressed taxpayers of this Nation to observe that common sense and stability are again, in a large measure, dominating the consideration of fiscal problems by the Congress.

One of the basic principles woven by our forefathers into our form of government is the sacredness of private property.

The growth of the tax burden on our people has reached the punitive and confiscatory stage. The over-all annual tax burden of the country—Federal, State, and local governments—has grown from $10,500,000,000 in 1933 to the staggering sum of $105,000,000,000 in 1945.

This record is shocking and indefensible. The people demand tax relief and they are going to get it. This is the first step. We lighten the burden by approximately $4,000,000,000 and as far as the majority party is concerned, taxes are going to be reduced again, again, and again until the opposition is sick and tired of the battle and surrenders to the ideals of sanity and intelligent direction in Government.

I am happy to have the opportunity afforded me in supporting this bill to reduce the taxes of our people.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CHURCH].

Mr. CHURCH. Mr. Chairman, it is not my purpose to discuss the details of the bill before us, providing for a reduction of the individual income taxes of our people. The details have been ably presented by the members of the Committee on Ways and Means which reported the bill. I take this time to express, in behalf of the people I am privileged to represent, my full support of this legislation and to make a few general observations concerning it. I particularly desire to comment on the arguments that have been advanced by our Democratic friends on the other side of the aisle in their vigorous opposition to this bill.

The report filed by the minority members of the Ways and Means Committee, recommending recommitment of the bill to the committee, contains some rather startling statements in the light of record. In my opinion, the report is nothing more than a political document, in which the minority advocate principles which they in fact never support. Deeds, not words, is the test, and I do not think the people will be deceived by the rhetoric when the minority's voting record speaks so loudly.

In opposing this bill the minority have placed great stress on the relationship between expenditures and revenue. They say, and quite correctly, that in order to have a reduction in taxes there must be a reduction in Government expenditures. They say, and I quote from their report:

> The minority shares the conviction that every possible economy must be made in Federal expenditures.

The fact is, Mr. Chairman, that the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle have consistently opposed every effort we have made for reducing Government expenditures. When we had before this House from the Joint Committee on the Legislative Budget, on which I have the honor to serve, the resolution to fix the ceiling on expenditures at $31.5 billion, representing a reduction of $6,000,000,000 in the President's recommended budget, the minority argued that we should delay fixing any ceiling and, failing in that, they argued that the reduction should be at the very most not more than $4,000,000,000.

We have had three appropriation bills before this House: the Urgent Deficiencies bill, the Treasury and Post Office Departments bill, and the Labor Department-Federal Security Agency bill. In each of these bills the Committee on Appropriations, on which I serve, made substantial reductions in the budgets. And the House supported our committee. But, as the record clearly shows, both in committee and on this floor, the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle opposed practically every proposed appropriation reduction. They offered amendment after amendment, and delivered speech after speech, in an effort to restore our reductions.

The minority may say in their report that they share the conviction that every possible economy must be made; but, Mr. Chairman, I have yet to see that conviction expressed in votes, in committee or on this floor, for realizing economy. The record speaks for itself. It loudly proclaims that the gentlemen on the other side of the aisle believe in the doctrine of spending and taxing. They have opposed economy and today they are opposing reducing taxes. They created this great public debt and they created this existing tax burden. Spend and spend; tax and tax, is their true philosophy.

The second argument advanced by the minority in opposition to this bill is that no tax reduction should be made until a comprehensive study of the entire Federal tax system has been made, and they emphasize the "important structural, administrative, and procedural tax problems" that have accumulated. As to the need of a general overhauling of our entire tax structure, I am in complete agreement. On any number of occasions since I have been a Member of Congress, I have contended that there should be a general revision of our taxes. It seems to me rather strange that our Democratic friends, who have had complete control of this Government for 14 years and who have had a majority in Congress for 16 years, should now come forward with the argument for the need for a revision in our entire tax structure. Mr. Chairman, it is what we would characterize in the law as a "dilatory plea." How else can one characterize it, when those who make the plea have had at least 14 years to do the very thing they now plead we should do before we do anything else.

Mr. Chairman, the bill before us provides for a flat 20-percent reduction for most income-tax brackets, with two exceptions. A 30-percent reduction has been provided for individuals with surtax net income of $1,000 or less; and with respect to surtax net incomes over $302,000 the reduction has been limited to 10½ percent. This means that the committee has accepted the graduated rate schedule based on the principle of the ability to pay and has endeavored to treat all taxpayers fairly. And, most important, the committee proposes to provide a reduction in taxes so as to stimulate venture capital and furnish incentives.

I should like to call your attention to the report of the Committee on Postwar Tax Policy, under the chairmanship of Roswell Magill, published in February of this year, entitled "A Tax Program for a Solvent America." At pages 80 and 81 of this report you will find the following, which, in effect, is an endorsement of the bill before us:

> One step which we believe can and should be taken now is a revision of the surtax rates. These rates still stand very close to the peak established under the stress of war financing. Indeed, short of complete confiscation, they could not be much higher. We believe that they are so high as to provide a powerful deterrent to our productive effort. In fact, we are convinced that the effects of the kind of taxation which is now imposed upon individual income extend far beyond the individuals immediately concerned and involve the incomes and well-being of people generally.
> Every citizen has a vital stake in the welfare of the economy in which he lives and works. Regardless of what he does or what his own income may be, he will be better off with respect to both cash income and real income in proportion as there is vigor and growth throughout the economic system. The essential condition of this vigor and growth is a reduction of the tax load, not merely for small incomes, but for all incomes.

Mr. Chairman, it is difficult to translate into tax rates the principle of "taxation according to the ability to pay"; but, insofar as it is possible to do so, I believe we should adhere to that principle. I believe in progressive taxation. But that progression can be such that it completely destroys individual initiative and incentive. The rates can be so severe, as they are today, that one is not willing to make that extra effort and to assume that extra risk which contribute to our national growth and well-being. It is my conviction that with the reduction in the rates as proposed in this bill, people will again be willing to risk investing in new ventures and willing to exert new efforts, and our whole national economy will move forward. It is when our economy expands that our people as a whole have employment and better wages in terms of purchasing power.

For the past several years, our country has been in the hands of those who believe that America really has no future. They could see no new frontiers to be conquered and they have kept us in a static condition. On this side of the aisle we believe that America has a great future, that there are new frontiers to be conquered, and by such legislation as this we propose to attain an economy of abundance. We propose to revive the American spirit of free competitive enterprise.

Mr. Chairman, this bill should have the support of everyone who believes in the importance of the individual in the American philosophy of government, as opposed to the alien philosophy that dignifies the Government rather than the individual. This bill is a return to the American principle that each man is entitled to a just share in the fruits of his labors.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. GEARHART].

Mr. GEARHART. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to take the floor in support of the bill under consideration, but after listening to the addresses of the gentlemen who have been lightly described as composing a mythical firm of DINGELL, ENGEL, and GORE, I believe that I should say something about another tax-reduction bill that was before the House not so long ago as time is measured. It was in the good old New Deal year of 1945 that that measure was before us.

Because of what the genial gentlemen who have been described collectively as DINGELL, ENGEL, and GORE had to say about the gross inadequacy of the relief granted by H. R. 1 to those in the lowest bracket, the ones whose net taxable income does not exceed $1,395, it occurred to me that a comparison of the relief granted to this bottom group under the Democratic tax-reduction program of 1945 with that which the Knutson bill of 1947 would afford would be helpful—illuminating, to say the least.

So I asked the one who is, in my opinion, the greatest living tax expert, Mr. Colon F. Stam, chief of staff of the Joint Congressional Committee on Internal Revenue Taxation, to apportion the tax relief, as afforded by the Democratic tax-reduction act of 1945, among the taxpayers as they fall within the classifications set up by the Knutson bill and to fix the percentages of the total relief granted to each group.

The result of these calculations was impressive, very much so in the light of the somewhat explosive protests of the gentlemen of Michigan [Mr. DINGELL and Mr. ENGEL] and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] against the pending bill.

Under the Democratic Tax Reduction Act of 1945, those within the $1,395 bracket, were given 27.2 percent of the total relief granted by the act. Under the Knutson bill, taxpayers within this classification will get 33.6 percent of all of the relief which H. R. 1 will afford.

Under the Democratic Tax Reduction Act of 1945, the taxpayers within the middle bracket, that is, those with net taxable incomes of from $1,395 to $302,000, got 72.4 percent of the total tax reduction granted. Under the Knutson bill, the taxpayer will get but 65.2 of the total relief which H. R. 1 will afford.

Under the Democratic tax reduction program of 1945, the taxpayers of the top bracket, those who have net taxable incomes of more than $302,000, were given four-tenths of 1 percent of the total relief granted, but six-tenths of 1 percent less than the Knutson bill will grant to these more fortunate individuals.

But where does this comparison leave the distinguished members of the firm of DINGELL, ENGEL, and GORE? Why do they protest so vigorously against the Republican tax-reduction bill that deals so much more considerately with the group in the lowest bracket than did the Democratic Tax Reduction Act of 1945? And why were they so silent when the then Democratic majority was dealing so niggardly with those who were on the bottom rung of the tax ladder?

Just why is a Republican tax reduction bill so bitterly excoriated when a Democratic tax reduction bill which is far less considerate of the little fellows, escapes even the mildest of criticism? And that seems to describe exactly what has happened.

Why did we not hear the golden voice of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GORE] in an impassioned plea for the downtrodden taxpayers in this lowest bracket in 1945? Why was not the eloquent voice of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DINGELL] raised for a better break for those that compose this less fortunate group? Where was the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL] when the New Dealers of that day were doing dirt to those over whom his tears are now falling?

Mr. Chairman, is it possible that anyone could be playing politics with this tax reduction measure, seeking to make political capital of a just and equitable program? Certainly not these genial gentlemen to whom we have affectionately referred so many times under the euphonious designate of DINGELL, ENGEL, and GORE.

But all this notwithstanding, permit me, Mr. Chairman, to conclude my remarks by spreading upon the pages of the CONGESSIONAL RECORD the calculations of the chief of staff of the Joint Committee on Revenue Taxation to which I have so frequently referred. They are, in tabulated form, the following:

Surtax net income class	Number of people benefited	Their tax saving under—		Percentage of total reduction
		H. R. 1	1945 act	H. R. 1	1945 act
		Millions	Millions	Percent	Percent
$1 to $1,395	31,151,559	$1,242	$1,180	33.6	27.2
$1,395 to $302,000	15,531,673	2,411	3,150	65.2	72.4
$302,000 and over	567	43	20	1.2	.4
Total	46,683,799	3,697	4,350	100.0	100.0

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Chairman, during the course of this debate everything appropriate to the bill has already been said. I therefore content myself with saying that I shall support the bill enthusiastically.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. DONDERO].

Mr. DONDERO. Mr. Chairman, "The power to tax is the power to destroy." The highest court in the land rendered that decision during the early history of our country. Never before has the truth of that statement been more apparent than today.

Government is now reaching into the pockets of our people and taking out one-third of all they earn or make. Can any government long endure under such a burden? Republicans told the people in the last campaign that they would reduce taxes, the cost of Government, retire the national debt, and stop wasteful spending of public funds. The people registered their faith in such promises. This bill, H. R. 1, proposes to carry out that promise by reducing the income taxes of every taxpayer in the United States. It has my unqualified support.

Free enterprise has been dying in our country. Venture capital is vanishing from the American plan of life. Incentive to work, save, and expand has been killed by excessive taxation. To buy and sell, barter and trade, have been restricted and retarded by the ever-present threat of confiscatory taxes.

This condition must be corrected, and the bill before us is intended to do that.

The workingman and all our people in the lower-income brackets, including those who earn or receive incomes up to $3,300, are given the greatest relief. That is as it should be. That relief under this bill is a 30-percent reduction in their taxes. It will apply to 25,000,000 of our people who pay income taxes. All others generally will be benefited by a 20-percent reduction up to $300,000. Above that amount, 10½-percent reduction is allowed.

The passage of this bill will revive hope and encourage our people to go forward again to a better day for America. It will stimulate greater effort in the domestic affairs of the Nation. This will result in an increase of revenue, as many precedents have shown. Australia, New York, and Iowa have reduced wartime taxes and received increased income. I predict a similar result for the Federal Government, which will reduce the national debt.

The fallacious theory that we can spend ourselves into prosperity has come to an end. Tax slavery shall be abolished as human slavery was abolished. With the passage of this measure, people will no longer be able to say, "What is the use of working or trying to make money while the tax collector takes the most of it?"

This legislation means a larger take-home pay envelope for the average wage earner to support himself and his family. It does away with wartime taxes in peacetime. We move in the direction of strengthening our economic structure. Without a solvent and strong America, we cannot meet our obligations to those who fought the Nation's battles, nor can we maintain a position of world leadership at a time when freedom-loving nations everywhere look to us for light in a darkened world.

I shall keep faith with the people of my district, for whom I speak, by keeping my pledge to reduce their tax burden by voting for this bill.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. MCGREGOR].

Mr. McGREGOR. Mr. Chairman, I am going to vote for H. R. 1, a bill to reduce taxes, because I think it gives aid to every man, women, and child in these United States. I think it is about time we gave more consideration to our own people. This bill, H. R. 1, will do two things:

First. It will give income-tax relief for all individual taxpayers.

Second. It will give an incentive to venture capital and allow business expansion which means more work and more income for all.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, also gives special recognition and exemptions to taxpayers who have attained the age of 65. I have been especially concerned about this group. Many of them, including retired groups, such as retired school teachers, policemen, municipal workers, and others who have retired from private industry, have as their sole source of livelihood, the small amount which they receive as a pension, annuity, or retirement pay. H. R. 1 allows each taxpayer in this age group, an additional exemption of $500, making a total personal exemption of $1,000.

This bill, H. R. 1, is equitable and fair. The people want relief from high taxes and high living costs. This is not a political measure. Politics should be forgotten and we should all vote for this bill and give to the people the aid and relief which they so justly deserve.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I have given a great deal of care and study to the provisions of this bill. There are numerous provisions which I would much prefer changing. Suggestions have been made for more relief to the small taxpayer than the provisions of the bill give. Other suggestions have been made for a better handling of this problem.

This is, however, the only bill presented to us for vote. I believe the time has come for a reduction in taxes. The burden borne by the American people during the war in carrying extremely heavy taxes in time of peace becomes truly oppressive. Some reduction should be made, and tests to be applied in the reduction should be based on the ability to pay.

I have repeatedly told my people at home that tax reduction and debt reduction should go hand in hand. It is imperative that our debt be reduced in an orderly and businesslike manner. I hope this Congress will take up this problem at an early date and will make suitable provisions for annual debt retirements. Without some tax reduction, our people may lapse into a condition where they will feel the burden is too much to carry in normal times.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ALBERT].

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to H. R. 1 because it does not give tax relief where relief is badly needed. In this age of rising and inflationary prices individuals in the lower-income brackets are finding it increasingly difficult to make ends meet. H. R. 1 does not furnish the solution. To the married man making $100 per month the total relief will amount to only 22 cents a week. The taxpayer making $300,000 per year will save about $47,000 in taxes. In my opinion, the simplest and surest way of granting relief where relief is sorely needed is by increasing the personal exemptions of individual taxpayers.

I am also opposed to H. R. 1 because it will shift the burden of paying for the war from the shoulders of those most able to pay to those in the lower- and middle-income brackets.

I further oppose this bill because I think we should balance our budget and pay our national debt while our income is high. In 1946 our national income reached an all-time peak. This is no time to cut taxes in the higher brackets.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this bill—not so much from a standpoint of opposing the reduction of taxes—but primarily because this bill is a tool of the autocratic Republican Party which has never regarded the needs of the little man. If they must reduce taxes, certainly first relief should be given to the poor devil who must scrape the bottom of his dusty pockets in order to pay the exorbitant prices for his cornbread, peas, and turnip greens which have resulted from the application of Republican "economy." There is no justice in this bill; it relieves none but those who need relief least; it does not relieve the man who needs relief most, and is but a smoke screen thrown up to protect wild, promiscuous political promises made by Republicans in the North and East and West in their desperate grab for power. If taxes must be reduced, the only fair way to do so would be by raising exemptions and not by any spurious across the board plan.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CANFIELD].

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Chairman, I do not like to disagree with my good friend, the able gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER]. Yet, I cannot permit to remain unanswered the statements he made here Tuesday regarding the appropriation for the Coast Guard in the Treasury-Post Office appropriation bill recently passed by the House unanimously. I understand his anxiety for he has long been a friend of the Guard even as I have. All of us salute this service on its enviable record, its contribution to victory in war. All of us know it has a big peacetime job.

When the Treasury bill was before the House I made the statement that—

> The Coast Guard is attempting to build itself up into a full and complete replacement for the independent Navy.

I repeat that statement today. My colleague takes exception to this. May I point out to him and the House that the record speaks for itself. This year the Coast Guard originally requested $232,000,000. Now, please listen. In 1935 the total appropriations for the Navy Department amounted to $284,658,000. The Navy Department appropriations for the years 1930 through 1935 averaged $335,000,000. Thus, it is established, the Coast Guard this year asked for an amount equal to 70 percent of the Navy's average appropriation for these prewar years. And the Chief of the Coast Guard Planning Section told our committee in this year's hearings that 1948 would be a base year with increased appropriations requested in the years to come.

The gentleman from North Carolina goes on to say that the committee failed to give any evidence of "the waste, the extravagance, and the grandiose schemes" of the Coast Guard. I am afraid he has not made a study of the printed hearings, the report accompanying the bill, and the speeches on the floor. And certainly he minimizes the slashing of the guard's 1948 requests by the Treasury and the Bureau of the Budget. I will not take time to repeat all the evidence. Concrete examples were given the House by the hard-working gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. ROBERTSON] on page 1878 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; by the alert gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRIFFITHS] on pages 1883 and 1884 of the RECORD; and my own statement which appears on page 1875. You will also find on page 1880 the statement by the diligent gentleman from Virginia [Mr. GARY]:

> The facts are that the Coast Guard has expanded considerably during the war. The committee felt that the time has come when we should begin to eliminate some of the wartime activities.

I might also refer you to page 1884 of the RECORD wherein the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GRIFFITHS] called for a consolidation of training programs. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BONNER] arose to say, "I agree with the gentleman." That there was waste, extravagance, and overexpansion is amply borne out by the testimony on pages 570 through 731 of the printed hearings.

I must take sharp exception to my colleague's statement that there is no evidence to show that when forced to reduce personnel the Coast Guard retains admirals and dismisses enlisted personnel. One answer might be this, "Just ask the enlisted personnel." I ask the House to review page 587 of the hearings. Please note also that after World War I, the percentage of officers to men increased. Captain Richmond proceeds to tell us:

> In 1932, during the depression years, the officers were way out of line because, of course, we were forced to reduce drastically. We did that by letting men out of the service.

If my colleague still feels that those in charge of the Coast Guard have not been off the beam and that our committee has been unjust, let me ask him to read carefully the report that accompanied the 1947 appropriation bill for the Coast Guard, a report submitted by the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LUDLOW], whom none has ever accused of vilification or improprieties of any kind.

The so-called Ludlow committee last year, disturbed over the Coast Guard's presentation, directed an investigator to go to the Guard's headquarters and make a check-up. As a result the committee, in its report, had the following to say on two phases—administration and the truth:

> The committee's study of this item leads to the conclusion that the offices charged with responsibility for over-all management of the headquarters organization are not sufficiently familiar with details of administration and that there is not the measure of control over such matters as should obtain. The committee shall expect this situation to be corrected in the near future and that it will not again be confronted with testimony which varies from the real situation.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WORLEY].

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, I take this time for the purpose of keeping the record straight. The gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] has stated that the recommendations of the House Postwar Committee on Economic Policy and Planning advocated tax reduction. He is correct in that statement but he inadvertently left out the major recommendation of that committee, namely, that first, the budget should be balanced and a surplus created before any substantial tax reduction was made.

As the gentleman from New York pointed out also, there were a number of able and outstanding members on that committee, including the following members of the Republican Party: Mr. Charles L. Gifford, of Massachusetts; B. Carroll Reece, of Tennessee, who is now chairman of the Republican National Committee; Richard J. Welch, of California; Charles A. Wolverton, of New Jersey; Clifford R. Hope, of Kansas; Jesse P. Wolcott, of Michigan; Jay LeFevre, of New York, and Sid Simpson, of Illinois.

As I recall, the vote on this report of the committee was unanimous, and as a matter of fact, I have never served on a committee in which less politics or partisanship was present. We did not consider any of these problems from the standpoint of anything except what was for the best interests of this Nation's welfare.

Referring further to the report, I quote from page 66:

> In its ninth report, issued March 4, 1946, the committee called attention to the inflationary forces existing in the economy and stated that it was convinced that effective control over these forces was impossible without strong fiscal and monetary countermeasures. Among the measures which it stated should be adopted were curtailment of Federal expenditures, balancing the budget in the fiscal year 1947, and in the following year creating a surplus to be applied to the retirement of the public debt.

Further along on the same page is the following excerpt:

> All those who have studied fiscal policies of the Federal Government, however much they differ on other views, agree that during a period of high employment and income there should be a surplus in Federal revenues to apply toward reduction of the debt. It forebodes danger for the future if we cannot under these very favorable conditions handle the fiscal affairs of the Government in such a way that the budget can be balanced. The committee strongly urges that additional efforts be made to reduce expenditures during the remainder of the fiscal year so that the budget can be brought into balance and a surplus created.

The committee took the same realistic attitude of Government fiscal policy as an individual takes in managing his own financial matters, namely, that you can never get out of debt unless you begin paying and you cannot begin paying if you do not have the money. Further on, this doctrine is more concisely stated on page 70 in the following excerpts:

> The committee still feels that under the present economic conditions the prime concern should be the balancing of the budget and the creation of a surplus in order to reduce inflationary forces.

And the concluding quotation reads as follows:

> The issue should be faced squarely and realistically by the Eightieth Congress. If the budget cannot be balanced now when the Nation is enjoying its highest peacetime income, it is absurd to contend that it can be balanced in an era of recession or depression.

The committee quite logically placed the major emphasis on trimming Government spending, balancing the budget, making substantial payments on our national debt while we have the money, and reducing taxes as soon as sound business judgment and a strong fiscal policy will permit.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield the balance of the time remaining to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Chairman, I have enjoyed this debate—and I have heard most of it. The majority of it has been on the bill, which I was glad to see. It has been a very informative debate. Yesterday I felt a little sorry for my friends on my left and was glad when the time for debate was extended. I said yesterday that, of course, our people could attend to this matter in 3 hours, but I thought that it would take at least 5 hours for our Republican friends to even begin to justify the actions that the Committee on Ways and Means took and that the House in a short while will take.

I have always thought from way back that the Republican Party at least said it stood for a 100-cent dollar, for sound currency, for a balanced budget, and for paying our debt when we had prospects of having the money to do it. I have talked to a great many people, big and little—big incomes and little incomes—since the first of the year. I have yet to find one who did not tell me he thought the most vital thing in the Government was to protect the value of our dollar and pay something on our debt while we had the means of paying. That may not be the situation 3 or 4 or 5 years from now—who knows?

Someone spoke about risk capital. In these times is there any impeding of risk capital when capital is being used to such an extent that everybody in the United States who wants to work is employed? The thing that is going to bother capital and anyone who has a dollar in the years to come is what that dollar is worth when he goes to the store to buy something. We must, in my opinion, we must pay as much as possible upon our national debt in this most prosperous time that we have ever known. I say if you take $3,800,000,000 from the Treasury receipts and there are others who say that your bill would reduce revenues by $5,700,000,000, I do not see how you are going to sustain the Government and pay anything on the public debt.

I think this is an untimely thing. I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MASON], stated the problem very clearly when he asked two questions: one, is this the time to reduce taxes; and, two, is this the way in which to reduce taxes?

My answer to the first question is that this is not the time. We do not have enough information. We do not know what our ultimate commitments are going to be because nobody can tell what the appropriations are going to amount to. We cannot even make a wild guess. Of course, you can guess $6,000,000,000—you can guess $4,000,000,000 or $3,000,000,000 or $2,000,000,000. But just a little political advice to you. You would have been in so much better shape before the country about reducing expenditures if you had said you were going to cut to the bone and every dollar that was possible. Then you might have reduced the President's budget by a billion and a half or two billion. Two billion dollars is still a lot of money, even in the United States of America. You would have gotten credit for that. But now, since you have said you can reduce it $6,000,000,000, and you reduce it only a billion and a half or two billion, you are going to have great disappointment in this country. The people who are spending money for things to eat and wear are interested in what their dollar is worth. They do not want a 59-cent dollar. They want a dollar that is worth a hundred cents when it comes out of their pocket and goes over the counter, or as near that as possible. So in order to have that sound economy that our friends on the left have talked so much about and are doing so little about now; in other words, instead of making that dollar sounder, in my opinion, by your action here today you are making it less sound, because you are going to deplete the money in the Treasury so much that you cannot make a sounder dollar by paying on our Federal obligations. I thought before this debate closed I would just call these two or three little things, in all sincerity, to your attention.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, at this point I wish to say that the party on the other side gave us the 59-cent dollars. They gave us the national debt. They gave us the inflationary measures. They gave us the spending program. It is rather unusual to see them take the floor now and shed tears about the future of this Republic. The Republican Party never sought to overthrow this Republic. It did have to spend a great many lives to save this Republic. This party does not believe in the question of slavery. It never did. We are not going to make tax slaves out of the people. We are going to lift this load and we are going to do what we have done before. We are going to relieve this country from the peril which the other party has brought upon the country. We are going to relieve people of that fear, and from now on we are going to have prosperity; we are going to have debt reduction and we are going to have tax reduction. I am sure that these people are not so worried about what is going to happen to our party as a result of this bill. They are not shedding tears over that. It will not change a vote for them to stand there and weep over what may happen to the Republicans because they vote for this bill.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. SHORT. We have always had a 50–50 agreement with our Democratic friends about debts. They make them and we pay them.

Mr. REED of New York. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has consumed 2 minutes.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana is recognized for 15½ minutes.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, of course we always enjoy listening to the gentleman from Texas, the very eminent minority leader [Mr. RAYBURN]. I had not thought that I would participate in this debate, because I think the views of those on our side have been pretty well established by members of the committee and others who have debated this very momentous proposition. However, in view of some things that have been said, I feel constrained to respond.

I am not so sure but that the gentleman from Texas really would prefer that instead of going ahead with a tax reduction now—a tax reduction that is needed, badly needed for the welfare of the country—he would like to have us forego it so that sometime, possibly quite soon in the future, he and his people might say: We propose tax reductions. And thus undertake by that procedure to establish some credit in the country for themselves for having brought about a tax reduction.

I have been a little amused at the difficulties of some of the folks on the other side of the aisle. They do not know whether to be for tax reduction or against tax reduction. It is quite evident and I think it ought to be understood in the country, that fundamentally and primarily they are against tax reduction. True, they may say that they are for tax reduction but we should not have it now, which really is to say they are not for tax reduction at all. I think it has been quite definitely established that now is the time for tax reduction.

Some of you have contended that more of the tax reduction should go to the so-called little fellow. But in your professed solicitude for the little fellow, let me remind you that you have to have some tax reduction before you can help anybody. If you are not for any tax reduction at all, which you have indicated to be your position, certainly you are not for helping the little fellow.

The proposal before us today recognizes the problems of the low-income groups by the added benefit that is given that group. There is this additional factor in this whole proposition which you ignore: The man who works for a salary wants and needs some tax reduction to help him, but beyond that he needs to have a job to realize income out of which he can pay taxes. He must first have a job at good wages. And it is only a strong, functioning, productive economy that will give him the sort of job at good pay out of which he can and will gladly pay taxes.

Reference has been made to the question of the value of the dollar. We, of course, stand for a sound dollar. As the gentleman from New York pointed out, among other things that have happened the reduction in the value of the dollar cannot be laid at our door. That will be laid at the door of you people on the other side of the aisle. However, that is water over the dam.

What are we now facing? We face a situation under which I think we must all recognize that the value of the dollar can be maintained only by the maintenance of a strong, functioning, productive economy. Certainly tax relief is now necessary if such a functioning economy is to be maintained in the country.

Some argue that debt reduction should precede tax reduction. In keeping with our program to give new life and vigor to our economy, we are going to have tax reduction and we are also going to have debt reduction. But let us pursue the argument of those who say that debt reduction is the only thing to be achieved, and the suggestion of the gentleman from Texas that everything that might be saved should be applied on the debt, that we ought to tax and tax to get more money to apply on the debt. If you followed that theory to the end, then you would raise tax rates to take more out of the economy to pay on the debt. That could be pursued to the point where we would be killing the goose that lays the golden egg. That suggestion, of course, has not been made now, but if these tax rates are too high, as they now are, then we are in the process of stymieing and hamstringing our economy. Our economy would be doomed to a static condition. Certainly that is not the way, in the long run, to pay the debt.

Let me point this out to those of you who contend these rates should be maintained as they are now: We have changed from a wartime economy to a peacetime economy. If these rates are not too high today in a peacetime economy, then you did not have them high enough in the wartime economy. During the war billions and billions of borrowed dollars were being pumped into our economic bloodstream. It was our responsibility and your responsibility as the majority party to take the maximum out of the revenues and income of the country in order that we come as closely as possible to a position of pay-as-you-go in the war.

Why, for any one to contend that this country can go on with this schedule of wartime tax rates and at the same time provide a highly effective functioning peacetime economy to my mind fail to recognize the very essentials of our whole economy.

Mr. Chairman, we voted for a reduction of $6,000,000,000 in the President's budget. The other body voted for a reduction of $4,500,000,000. I have seen it suggested that the minimum figure being considered in the conference is $5,250,000,000 as a reduction. In addition to that, it has been pointed out that the estimate of revenues is too low and there is every indication that the revenues will be over the estimate. Certainly that clearly points to the truth of the assertion that this tax relief so badly needed, so sorely needed by all of our people, can be accomplished to the end that we do maintain a strong, effective, productive economy and, at the same time, begin paying off on the national debt. That is the way, I may say to the gentleman from Texas, that we will maintain the value of the dollar, and it is the only way I know of to maintain the value of the dollar.

So, Mr. Chairman, we are going to pass this bill. I know that it does not suit the PAC and some of the folks who stand with the PAC; but, you know, they are not writing this tax bill.

Some solicitude has been expressed on the Democratic side for the political consequences to us Republicans by our passage of this legislation. Possibly I am a little old-fashioned, but I have always thought that the best politics is to do right. That is what we are doing here and history will prove it. Sometimes we have got to look out a little for this very fine advice that is offered us. I have said for a long time that if I believed something were right, that something was in the national interest, I would support it without regard to its political effect upon my party or the political future of my party. I have sought in my time in the Congress to follow that precept. I am following it today. And I have no fear, because I think that on this as on many other occasions it will be established that we are right.

Mr. Chairman, I can discern in this solicitude shown on the other side of the aisle for our political chances some sort of an indication that what you are really afraid of is that we are doing the right thing, that we are going to cut the cost of Government, that we are going to respond in that way to the heart's desire of the American people, that we are going to give them a tax reduction they so badly need, that we are going to start paying off the debt in order to maintain the value of the dollar; and that out of it all will come a happier, a more prosperous America, and that we will get the credit for it.

You have sought to dissuade us from a right and correct course, and that you have not been able to do so will soon be quite apparent.

Now, if you want to vote against this bill, if you want to take the position that you are not for tax reduction for the little fellow, or anybody else, you just go ahead and vote that way and try to explain it. I think we know what we are doing. I know that we know what we are doing. I think if the truth were known a lot of you gentlemen on the other side of the aisle—and you are all my good friends; it is a pleasure to cooperate with you and to listen to what you have to say—but I think, if the truth were known and down deep in your hearts you could resolve this question the way you would like to, you would take this tax bill and vote for it. But because it is brought out here by the Republican Party you are having a little trouble following that course. But you may live long enough to see the error of your ways, and when you repent come around and tell us about it, and we will be glad to listen to you.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. All time has expired. Under the rule, the bill is considered as read. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act may be cited as the "Individual Income Tax Reduction Act of 1947."

SEC. 4. Additional Credit Against Net Income for Normal Tax and Surtax.

(a) Exemption for age: Section 25 (b) (1) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to credits against net income for normal tax and surtax) is hereby amended by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon and by adding after subparagraph (C) a new subparagraph to read as follows:

"(D) If the taxpayer has attained the age of 65—

"(i) an additional exemption of $500;

"(ii) in the case of a joint return by husband and wife under section 51, an exemption, in lieu of the exemption provided in clause (i) of this subparagraph, of $500 for each spouse who has attained the age of 65, and whose gross income (computed without regard to section 22 (o)) for the taxable year is $500 or more;

"(iii) for limitation on exclusion from gross income of retirement pay, etc., see section 22 (o)."

(b) Determination of age: Section 25 (b) (2) of the Internal Revenue Code is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new sentence to read as follows: "For the purposes of paragraph (1) (D) the determination of the age of an individual shall be made as of the last day of the taxable year."

(c) Limitation on exclusion from gross income of retirement pay, etc.: Section 22 of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to gross income) is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof a new subsection to read as follows:

"(o) Retirement pay, etc., of individuals 65 or over: If an individual entitled to the exemption provided in section 25 (b) (1) (D) (relating to individuals who have attained the age of 65) receives during the taxable year any amount (other than a lump-sum benefit) as pension, annuity, retirement pay, old-age or survivor's benefit, or similar payment, with respect to services rendered by him or another person, and the whole of such amount would, but for this subsection, be excluded from gross income, then only the excess over $500 of the aggregate of such amounts shall be excluded from gross income, despite any provisions of this title or of any other law. This subsection shall not require the inclusion of any such amount as gross income unless the gross income, computed without regard to this subsection, is $500 or more. This subsection shall not apply—

"(1) to amounts excluded from gross income under section 22 (b) (5); except that this subsection shall apply to amounts received as a pension, annuity, or similar allowance for personal injuries or sickness resulting from active service in the armed forces of any country, unless such amounts are also excluded from gross income by a provision of law other than section 22 (b) (5); or

"(2) to amounts excluded from gross income under section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to safeguard the estates of veterans derived from payments of pension, compensation, emergency officers' retirement pay and insurance, and for other purposes,' approved August 12, 1935, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 38, sec. 454a); or

"(3) to amounts excluded from gross income under section 3 of the act entitled 'An act to establish in the War Department and in the Navy Department, respectively, a roll, designated as "the Army and Navy medal of honor roll," and for other purposes,' approved April 27, 1916, as amended (U. S. C., 1940 ed., title 38, sec. 393)."

(d) Technical amendment: Section 22 (b) (5) of the Internal Revenue Code (relating to exclusion from gross income of compensation for injuries or sickness) is hereby amended by striking out "and amounts" and inserting in lieu thereof: "and (except as provided in subsection (o) in the case of individuals 65 or over) amounts."

(e) Taxable years to which applicable: The amendments made by this section shall be applicable to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1946. For treatment of taxable years beginning in 1946 and ending in 1947, see section 6.

"(a) Requirement of withholding: Every employer making payment of wages shall deduct and withhold upon such wages a tax equal to the sum of the following:

"(1) 12 percent of whichever of the following is the lesser:

"(A) the amount by which the wages exceed the number of withholding exemptions claimed, multiplied by the amount of one such exemption as shown in the table in subsection (b) (1); or

"(2) that portion of a tentative tax, computed as if the law applicable to taxable years beginning on January 1, 1947, were applicable to such taxable year, which the number of days in such taxable year after December 31, 1946, bears to the total number of days in such taxable year."

Mr. KNUTSON (interrupting the reading of the committee amendment). Mr. Chairman, there has been a general understanding that we would vote at 2 o'clock, for the convenience of a great many Members who have expressed the wish to leave for their homes this evening. I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

Mr. FORAND. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, it may be all right to dispense with the reading of it, but I would like to have a full explanation of the Martin amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. FORAND. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. KNUTSON. If the gentleman is going to object, we will have to read the bill, and he will have to take the responsibility.

Mr. FORAND. If the gentleman cannot give us an explanation of the amendment, I will have to object.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I understand there will be 5 minutes on the committee amendment which can be used for the explanation of the committee amendment, and then 5 minutes against it.

Mr. FORAND. I do not think you can explain it, but under those considerations I will withdraw my objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there anyone who wishes recognition in support of the amendment? If not, the question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. FORAND. Is that the explanation that was promised to us by the gentlemen on the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. That is not a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. FORAND. That is very nice, may I say to the gentleman from Indiana. I appreciate that. The Chairman did not recognize anyone to speak on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair invited someone to rise, and no one rose.

Mr. HALLECK. I did not so understand it, and am in good faith about it. Certainly, I may say to the gentleman from Rhode Island, I think the Chair should recognize some member of the committee to discuss the amendment and answer any questions that may be raised about it, and certainly anyone in opposition to the amendment is entitled to be recognized for 5 minutes in order that he may state his views in respect to it.

Mr. JENKINS of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, I might say that the Martin amendment is all one amendment, and that is what we have been talking about.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. McCORMACK. My point of order is that the amendment has apparently been adopted and, as I see it, there has to be unanimous consent to have the action vacated in order that further proceedings may be had.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman is correct. The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the proceedings by which the amendment was adopted be vacated so that we can go along in an orderly way.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will again invite anyone who desires to do so to speak on the committee amendment.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, I still request that explanation that is going to come from the other side. If they do not explain it we will have to assume that they do not understand it themselves.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the committee amendment.

What the gentleman refers to is the exemption? It is so clear in the committee report that I fail to see how there can be any question about it.

Mr. FORAND. If it is so clear, I wish the gentleman would explain it to those of us who are so dense that we cannot understand it.

Mr. REED of New York. I am sorry for the gentleman if he cannot understand it.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I suggest that somebody on the gentleman's side make an explanation of the amendment, in accordance with the understanding, which through a misunderstanding was not carried out?

Mr. KNUTSON. In short, the Martin amendment merely provides that one cannot take more than one deduction. He can take his choice of exemptions.

Mr. REED of New York. The Martin amendment is just to prevent a pyramiding of deductions, that is all. The taxpayer can take his choice of exemptions.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REED of New York. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. CURTIS. I do not think there is any amendment that can be singled out as the Martin amendment, because all the committee amendments were adopted as one amendment. There is a provision in the bill that gives an additional personal exemption of $500 to individuals over 65. That was put in there to meet a number of problems. Some people draw retirement benefits and are exempt from tax thereon. Some people draw retirement benefits that are taxable. Others of our aged people draw no retirement at all, and they must pay taxes, and they must also pay taxes for their neighbor who is tax exempt. To meet that situation and to take care of those people who are advanced in years, and whose opportunities for continued employment and new jobs are not very good, we have given this additional exemption.

The Martin amendment says in effect that if they avail themselves of this additional $500 exemption they cannot take any special exemption which is provided in certain retirement laws. For instance, railroad retirement benefits are exempt from taxation. We require the individual over 65 who is drawing those benefits to choose between that particular benefit and this $500 benefit. He cannot have both. The essence of the Martin amendment is that he is not entitled to both.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended 5 minutes so some of us can ask a question or two on this important amendment.

Mr. HALLECK. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. REED of New York. I will say to the gentleman that the reason I was absolutely astonished that the question should come from such a highly intelligent source as it did was the fact that this is explained fully in the committee report.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman's time expired, a request was made for an extension of time, and objection was heard.

Mr. EBERHARTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the Martin amendment. I am opposed to the amendment which would grant a special exemption to people who are 65 years of age for no other reason than the fact that they are 65 years of age.

Mr. MONRONEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I am glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. MONRONEY. I asked the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. REED] to yield for a question since he was one of the proponents of that measure. As I understand it, any Member of Congress over 65 years of age under this amendment now gets an additional $500 exemption.

Mr. EBERHARTER. That is correct.

Mr. MONRONEY. And the average age of the Congress is virtually 65?

Mr. EBERHARTER. The general public throughout the country knows the salaries of each Member of Congress. The salary is the same for every one of the 435 Members. But this amendment of Mr. KNUTSON'S gives some Members of the Congress a $500 exemption for no reason at all but that they are lucky enough to stay in Congress until they are 65 years of age. There is no sense in any such proposal.

Mr. Chairman, there is another very important complication in this amendment. It allows an exemption for the wife and the husband both of $500, providing each is 65 years of age and also providing that each one has an income of more than $500. Suppose the wife has an income of $499. Then, she does not get the $500 exemption. If she has an income of $501, she gets the exemption of $500. In other words, if you add even $2 to a $499 income to bring it up over the $500 mark you get an exemption of $500. Thus you can reduce your tax $66.50 by adding $2 additional income.

Mr. DINGELL. That is, on each $500.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The Bureau of Internal Revenue is going to be faced with a new problem—the problem of these people who may overstate their income so as to get the benefit of this $500 exemption. Goodness knows the Bureau of Internal Revenue has plenty of problems with people understating their returns, but with this amendment there will be thousands upon thousands of people who can overstate their returns by a few dollars—perhaps $50 or $100 or $10 or $1—and thereby gain an additional reduction in the tax of $66.50.

I want to bring that to the attention of the Members of the House so that they will know how deeply the majority committee members went into this question after they got their instructions from the caucus which was held by the Republican Party. Many of the gentlemen of the majority will hope that the next time they are called together in a caucus they will not be bound by the Republican leaders to vote for any measure until it is properly explained to them and until it has been debated on the floor of the House so that they can know something about it.

Mr. FORAND. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. EBERHARTER. I yield.

Mr. FORAND. Is it not a fact that when this amendment was brought up in committee the legislative counsel informed the chairman—that was on a Friday—that they could not possibly get this amendment because it was so complicated?

Mr. EBERHARTER. That is absolutely correct. The amendment was not drawn in proper form.

Mr. FORAND. We did not even see it.

Mr. EBERHARTER. The amendment was not drawn in proper form at the time it was voted into the bill, and the suggestion was made that we could meet again and consider it. But, of course, they were in a hurry and their plans were already made.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. CURTIS. Is it not true that the committee amendment includes the amendment for an additional reduction of 30 percent in the income bracket of $1,000 surtax?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman does not propound a parliamentary inquiry.

The question is on the committee amendment.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. HALLECK and Mr. EBERHARTER) there were—ayes 196, noes 133.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee will rise.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. CASE of South Dakota, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments, pursuant to House Resolution 161, he reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the reading of the engrossed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from New York is premature.

The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a reading of the engrossed copy of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Obviously, that cannot be done at this time. The bill will have to be laid aside temporarily until it can be engrossed. We hope to have it before 6 o'clock.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, in view of the situation with respect to some of the Members who wish to get home, I withdraw my request.

The bill was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is upon the passage of the bill.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. DOUGHTON. I certainly am.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman qualifies.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DOUGHTON moves to recommit the bill H. R. 1 to the Committee on Ways and Means for further study, with instructions not to report a tax-reduction bill until the Congress has passed the several appropriation bills and to consider individual income-tax reduction as a part of our over-all postwar tax program, and providing for more equitable relief in the lower income brackets.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. DOUGHTON. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 172, nays 237, not voting 23, as follows:

OFFICE OF SELECTIVE SERVICE RECORDS

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 918) to establish an Office of Selective Service Records to liquidate the Selective Service System following the termination of its functions on March 31, 1947, and to preserve and service the selective-service records, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, will the gentleman from Missouri explain the present status of this bill and explain its provisions.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, under existing law the Selective Service System automatically expires next Monday at midnight, March 31, 1947. As far as I am concerned, I am perfectly willing for it to breathe its last. But it is necessary that we maintain the records and files of more than 15,000,000 men and women who served in the armed forces during the recent global conflict. This bill simply provides for the liquidation of the Selective Service System, but it establishes an Office of Selective Service Records. There is a Director who receives a salary of $10,000, and he will have authority and power to appoint and fix compensation, within certain bounds which our committee wrote into the bill this morning, to transfer those records from the local county boards or similar political subdivisions to a central State headquarters. He must liquidate the Selective Service System as rapidly following March 31 of this year as possible and not later than March 31, 1948.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. As I understand, a subcommittee of the Committee on the Armed Services met this morning and now brings in different provisions than those contained in the bill reported a few days ago.

Mr. SHORT. Yes.

Mr. THOMASON. I would appreciate it, as I am sure would the other Members present, if the gentleman from Missouri would explain the bill he now proposes and the one which was reported to the House a few days ago which I understood at that time was not in agreement with the bill that was passed by the Senate.

Mr. SHORT. By direction of the Committee on Armed Services I have several amendments at the Clerk's desk.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Clerk may read these amendments at this time. If the gentleman from Texas has a copy of the bill S. 918 and follows the reading of the amendments he can note the changes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 2, line 13, strike out the parenthesis and the small letter "a" occurring immediately after the figure "4" in section 4.

On page 2, line 15, after the word "records", strike out the period and insert the word "and."

On page 2, line 16, strike out the parenthesis and the small "b" at the beginning of the line and change the capital "A" in the word "Authority" to a small "a."

Page 2, line 23, change the colon to a period and strike out the following proviso in this line and 24, and 25.

On page 5, line 17, after the word "employees", insert a parenthesis and the words "not to exceed 1,200 in number by November 1, 1947", and insert a parenthesis after "1947."

On page 5, line 19, after the word "amended", change the semicolon to a colon and insert the words "Provided, That the compensation of such persons shall not be in excess of that provided in said act."

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Texas will yield, I might state that the Selective Service System, beginning this fiscal year on July 1 last, had about 12,000 employees. That number has been reduced to 7,500 at the present time and under the provisions of this act it is to be further reduced to 5,000 by June 1, and by November 1 of this year there will be not more than 1,200.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Speaker, I will say in reply to the gentleman from Missouri that I find myself very much in accord with the statement the gentleman has just made. These, of course, are very valuable records and we are all interested in their preservation, but I believe the membership will appreciate it if the gentleman from Missouri will explain what persons would have access to these records, and, further, if veterans will find them easily accessible if they are sent to State headquarters in the respective States.

As I understand it, the bill that was proposed by the other body left these records in the counties where they are now situated. The gentleman by his amendment sets up State headquarters in every State. Certainly the records ought to be accessible to the veterans because they will probably have to refer to them about matters of compensation, the date of entry into the service, and many other things, for they probably have not kept individual records of this exact data that would be necessary for the making out of claims against the Government. So I think it ought to be made plain that you do propose to keep these State headquarters in the respective States and they will all be easily accessible to the veterans. They should not be accessible to other people, like creditors or curiosity seekers.

Mr. SHORT. I may say to the gentleman that section 7 of the bill protects everything of a confidential nature and anyone who unlawfully reveals or gains access to this confidential material is subject to a fine of $10,000 and 5 years' imprisonment.

Mr. THOMASON. Can the veteran inspect his own personal record?

Mr. SHORT. Yes; it will be accessible to him. If the gentleman will bear with me a minute, I may say that during the First World War we had about 4,000,000 of these records to deal with and between the First and Second World Wars we had approximately 500 employed by the Government to service these records. Of course, in the last war we have over 15,000,000, and we propose to have 1,200 employees under this bill.

Mr. THOMASON. You are setting up a Federal director here in Washington. I would like to know what his jurisdiction will be and also what the jurisdiction and authority of the State directors will be who are going to be the custodians of these records.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. If the gentleman from Texas had been present at the committee meeting this morning he would know that we voted in favor of an amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio to protect the very thing of which the gentleman speaks.

Mr. THOMASON. I am not in opposition to the bill, and I regret it was impossible for me to be at the meeting of the subcommittee this morning, but I think the RECORD ought to show and the membership ought to know what the changes are. I am going to ask the gentleman from Missouri to explain them.

Mr. SHORT. I tried to explain them.

Mr. THOMASON. I am satisfied.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. The Department of Justice, the Veterans' Bureau, and any governmental agencies that enter into the picture under certain conditions have the right to see these records. It was that very thing that led to the amendment to protect the rights of the veteran in connection with reemployment or in connection with the service records of veterans in connection with State bonuses or anything in that category.

Mr. THOMASON. I think the RECORD should show what these changes are.

Mr. SHORT. Most of these State headquarters will be, I presume, at the State capital; however, in Florida, for example, the records will be kept at St.

Augustine, which has always been the seat of the State military government. In Delaware they will perhaps be kept in the vault of the fort over there instead of the State capital.

Mr. BROOKS. When will we be able to get rid of these 1,200 employees that it is proposed to use to liquidate these records?

Mr. SHORT. No one can say. That is one of the portions I objected to. Our experience in the last war was that the records were not destroyed until 1941.

Mr. BROOKS. May I ask the gentleman, and I know he can explain the situation, why do we have to maintain and service these records over a long period of time?

Mr. SHORT. We have not yet reached the peak of inquiry from veterans. The Department of Justice work will be less and less all the time because there are fewer prosecutions. The Veterans' Administration, however, finds that its work is increasing and will increase for the next 4 or 5 years. After that you will naturally have a rather gradual to steep decline.

Mr. BROOKS. I am not going to object to the bill.

Mr. SHORT. I would not care particularly if the gentleman did.

Mr. BROOKS. I want to see it enacted as quickly as possible, just as the gentleman does. May I ask the gentleman this: The Senate report indicates it will cost $20,000,000?

Mr. SHORT. For the next year.

Mr. BROOKS. To get this out of the way. During this time we are not drafting a single man. What does the gentleman think of the cost of storing these records?

Mr. SHORT. I think it is next to unpardonable. I think it is terrible, but what are you going to do about it? We have already obligated $11,000,000 to dispose of these records.

Mr. BROOKS. There are not a great many of them, are there?

Mr. SHORT. You are going to spend $5,000,000 to give these people leave after discharge if we start folding up next Monday. But that was all done under the New Deal. That was before we got control of the House.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, a few days ago I objected to the consideration of this bill, feeling there were some things in it not clear to the membership as the bill came over from the other body, and I would like to have the gentleman from Missouri explain a few things now in the bill. I think it is a much better bill than when it came over to us. I was over to the hearing this morning when the Armed Services Committee was meeting, and I heard General Hershey's remarks relative to the bill. I would like to ask the gentleman from Missouri this: This really extends selective service until March 1948; is that correct?

Mr. SHORT. It cannot go beyond that. It is to liquidate as quickly as possible following next Monday.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Of course, many of us thought a year ago, when we extended it to March 31, it was really going to end then.

Mr. SHORT. I said then on the floor, and I certainly said in committee at that time, that if we extend it until March 31, 1947, they will be back here asking for another extension, and that is what they are doing.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. And now we are really setting up another committee to supervise the liquidation of selective service.

Mr. SHORT. That is right; liquidate the liquidator.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I think the gentleman said they did limit the number not to exceed 1,200 in employment.

Mr. SHORT. By November 1, this year, not more than 1,200 employees, and we also set a limit on the compensation or wages of these employees, an amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DURHAM].

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The bill of 2 days ago, to which I objected, set the cost in the counties for the handling of these records. Now they are transferred to a central office?

Mr. SHORT. That is right.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. As to the matter of the authority of the Director of this service, is he somewhat circumscribed in his ability to issue rules and regulations or does this give him a wide-open field here in the original bill?

Mr. SHORT. He has got pretty broad authority. He necessarily must have pretty broad authority, but there are certain limitations.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Does the gentleman feel that this bill we are reporting now is a better bill than we had a few days ago?

Mr. SHORT. I think it is an infinitely better bill, and I want to congratulate the gentleman from Nebraska for having objected to its consideration when it was first brought in.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Well, with that compliment, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, certainly the gentleman from Missouri feels it is necessary to do something. He made the statement that we would be coming in here with a piece of legislation which would continue the operation of the Selective Service System. We have to do something with these records. Of course, I feel we are making a mistake by transferring these records to a central division. I think they ought to be left in the counties where they can be used, and used more conveniently. Most of the State capitals at the present time, and the big cities, are crowded with people, and there will be no place to keep them, and it is going to be very difficult to find storage space in fireproof buildings. At the present time most of them are safe.

Mr. SHORT. They do not necessarily have to go to the State capital. They are to go to a central record depot.

Mr. DURHAM. But you will have to move all your personnel, and we are going to have to move the records, too, of course, which would require space.

Mr. SHORT. Sure, you would have to spend a lot of money even if you burned them or destroyed them. I believe the transportation cost is around two or three million dollars.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I would like to say that the cost of this transportation, the moving of typewriters, desks, chairs, and so forth, will be about $11,000,000.

Mr. SHORT. There is $5,000,000 of equipment, chairs, desks, typewriters, and the like which, under this act, the Director can turn over to the National Guard or the Organized Reserve or perhaps even give some to the county governments.

Mr. DURHAM. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. ROBSION. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, there are about 15,000,000 of these records?

Mr. SHORT. Yes.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. There are 44,000,000 records, but 15,000,000 of them refer to those who actually served.

Mr. ROBSION. Twenty million dollars sounds like a large sum of money, but if it is to take care of these 15,000,000 records that apply to those who actually served, it is a cost of $1.33 per record. I think there ought to be a central place where the records can be preserved. They might be well preserved in some counties, but in many counties they would soon be scattered.

Mr. FOLGER. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from Missouri if this bill goes any further than to preserve the records already made, or does it in truth extend the selective-service law?

Mr. SHORT. No. I had that impression myself, I may say to the gentleman, and I did not want to vote for any measure that would extend it. I think this really closes it. It is to fold up and to preserve these records and get them in shape.

Mr. FOLGER. Is the gentleman now satisfied that that is the case?

Mr. SHORT. I am. They have to do it not later than March 31 of next year, but the bill says as quickly as possible.

Mr. FOLGER. It does not extend the selective-service power beyond that time?

Mr. SHORT. No. The act expires on midnight next Monday.

Mr. FOLGER. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That there is hereby established an Office of Selective Service Records, to be headed by a Director who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive compensation at the rate of $10,000 per year.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Speaker, I offer amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendments offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Speaker, may I say for the benefit of the Members of the House that I am reliably informed that the Senate in all probability will accept the House amendments. However, in view of the time element involved and the fact that there is always a possibility that a conference will be necessary, I ask unanimous consent that the Speaker be authorized to appoint three conferees and that those conferees be instructed, in the event of a conference, to insist upon the House amendments.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. SHORT, COLE of New York, and DREWRY.

EXTENDING CERTAIN POWERS OF THE PRESIDENT UNDER TITLE III OF THE SECOND WAR POWERS ACT

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill (S. 931) to extend certain powers of the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That this act shall be cited as the "First Decontrol Act of 1947."

SEC. 2. The Congress hereby declares that it is vital to a free economy and full production in the United States that all emergency controls and war powers under the Second War Powers Act be removed except in certain limited instances.

The Congress further declares that in each such limited instance the authority for such emergency controls and war powers should not be exercised by the grant of broad, general war powers but should be granted by restrictive, specific legislation.

SEC. 3. For the purpose of liquidating existing emergency controls and war powers and for the purpose of affording further opportunity for the appropriate committees of the Congress to consider specific legislation granting restricted authority in limited instances, title III of the Second War Powers Act, as amended, shall (except as provided in S. J. Res. 58 and H. J. Res. 118, 80th Cong., 1st sess.) remain in effect only until June 30, 1947: Provided, That any material or facilities which were not being allocated by the President on March 24, 1947, shall not be allocated hereafter under the provisions of such title III.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I offer a committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. MICHENER: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That title XV, section 1501, of the Second War Powers Act, 1942, approved March 27, 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 1501. Titles I, II, III, IV, V, VII, and XIV of this act and the amendments to existing law made by such titles shall remain in force only until March 31, 1947, except that (1) for purposes of allocations of building materials, and facilities related to the utilization of building materials, such title III, and the amendments to existing law made by such title, shall remain in force until June 30, 1947, and (2) such title III, and the amendments to existing law made by such title, shall remain in force until December 31, 1947, for the following purposes: (a) Allocations of cinchona bark and cinchona alkaloids, tin and tin products, antimony and streptomycin; (b) allocations limited to control of production for export of automobiles and tractors; (c) allocating the use of transportation equipment and facilities by rail carriers; (d) allocations of materials or equipment for export which are required to expand the production in foreign countries of materials critically needed in the United States; (e) allocations of materials or equipment for export which are certified by the Secretaries of State and Commerce as necessary to meet international commitments: Provided, That the two Houses of Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate an earlier time for the termination of any such title. After the amendments made by any such title cease to be in force, any provisions of law amended thereby shall be in full force and effect as though this act had not been enacted.'"

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER], chairman of the subcommittee, who has prepared the bill and the amendments and who knows all about it.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, all the Members know that the Second War Powers Act will expire on March 31, which is next Monday, and that it is necessary that whatever action is taken with reference to the extension of any of these items contained in the Second War Powers Act be taken rather promptly.

May I say at the outset that there remain in the Second War Powers Act titles 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 7, and 14. All of these titles are being eliminated by this bill with the exception of certain items under title 3. That is the title which relates entirely to allocations and priorities. In connection with title 3 for the purposes of allocations, building materials are continued under the extension until June 30, 1947. That is done for the purpose of accelerating if possible the building program in order to coordinate it with other legislation.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield.

Mr. McCORMACK. Has the question of grains been considered in this bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. It also relates to grain. I was about to come to that in a moment.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SPRINGER. The bill which is offered has an amendment which has been reported out of the Committee on the Judiciary and provides that under title 3 and the amendments to the existing law made by such title which shall remain in force until December 31, 1947, the following: Allocations of cinchona bark and cinchona alkaloids. There is a shortage and scarcity of those products, and it was shown without any question of doubt that those items should be continued under the allocation plan.

The next items to which we have given full consideration and which remains in the bill are tin and tin products, antimony, and streptomycin. The evidence shows conclusively that there was a shortage of these items and that they should be continued.

Under (b), which is on page 2 of the amended bill which is offered, allocations are limited to the control of production for export of tractors. That is also continued.

That item of export control was deemed essential to protect our own farmers and our own people. Many foreign prospective purchasers of tractors offer very high prices for these articles. If all control should be eliminated, it is possible that our own people would be unable to obtain them. This would materially affect our food production.

In the original copy of the bill, automobiles were contained, and the allocation extended both to automobiles and to tractors. However, we received information from the Department of Commerce that on March 31 they are removing all allocations and all powers with respect to allocating automobiles, either new or second-hand automobiles. Therefore, we have concurred with the action of the Department of Commerce and we have eliminated automobiles, just as they propose doing on March 31. But we are retaining it on tractors, in order that the export of tractors may be controlled, and in order that the people of this country may have an opportunity to secure tractors in case of their great need.

Further, may I say that under (c) on page 2, allocating the use of transportation equipment and facilities by rail carriers is continued, because there is a shortage of box cars and freight cars. Those allocations are continued insofar as they are concerned, in order that certain communities, which have found a great scarcity of those transportation facilities, may have the opportunity of securing assistance along that line.

Also, under (d) the allocation of materials or equipment for export which are required to expand production in foreign countries, of materials critically needed in the United States of America. This was also deemed to be necessary under the circumstances.

Under (e) the allocation of materials or equipment for export which are certified by the Secretaries of State and Commerce as necessary to meet international commitments. That is retained in the provisions of the bill which is offered by way of an amendment.

May I say that the final provision, on the last page of the bill, which relates to any earlier termination of such power, contains a provision that both Houses of Congress by concurrent resolution, or the President, may designate an earlier time for the termination of any of these items under title III which are extended, and any amendments made by any such title cease to be in force, and any title amended thereby shall be in full force and effect as though this had not been enacted.

The Judiciary Committee has given very careful consideration to this bill. They have reported the bill out, as I have indicated, at a full session of the committee this morning. It is now offered by way of an amendment to S. 931.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield to my distinguished friend from Massachusetts.

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman specifically state what the status is or will be under the provisions of the bill, in relation to grains?

Mr. SPRINGER. Under the provisions with reference to grain and grain products, rice, sugar, edible molasses and sirups, fertilizer, all forms and types of natural or synthetic rubber and rubber products, excluding control over the importation of natural rubber, have been eliminated from the bill.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I note you state the limitations or controls to be taken off by concurrent resolution of the Congress or by the President. Does that also extend to the President the powers to put more items under control than you might presently have in the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. It does not. The bill specifically provides those items which are extended beyond March 31, 1947. No one has any power to insert any additional items under the provisions of title III except the Congress of the United States.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield. I am happy to yield.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The gentleman will recall that I appeared before his committee, as I did a year ago, hoping that the Second War Powers Act could be greatly curtailed. I stated before the gentleman's committee, and I think it is still correct, that under the Second War Powers Act the executive department has the power to nullify practically any law passed by this Congress. I am wondering whether those authorities are continued in this bill relative to international commitments. I notice you use those words. I am wondering just what those words involve.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] has expired.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER. May I say to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska that the bill as originally introduced provided under subsection (g) on page 3:

Allocations of any materials or facilities in the event of a national emergency proclaimed by the President.

That language was contained in the original bill. If that paragraph had been adopted by the Judiciary Committee it would have given the President the power to have declared a national emergency at any time and to have put allocations, priorities, and controls on practically every article; but under this measure which is offered by way of an amendment the items which are embraced therein are the only items provided in the bill on which there may be any allocations.

Mr. HERTER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRINGER. I yield.

Mr. HERTER. Can the gentleman explain why grains were taken out? Was it because of the supply situation?

Mr. SPRINGER. There is an ample supply of grains in this country. While some grain has been shipped to foreign countries there is still an adequate supply and we are getting along very nicely under the grain situation. It was thought by the subcommittee and by the full committee that it was not necessary that this allocation be continued further. The Department also testified on that particular subject that there was an act, now in force, covering this particular item which would not expire for some time and which would amply take care of this particular situation. It was, and is, our thought that all controls should be entirely eliminated as rapidly as possible, consistent, of course, with our security as a nation and for the protection and security of our own people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has again expired.

The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HOBBS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to take this opportunity to express my profound personal gratitude to the distinguished chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER], and particularly to the distinguished chairman of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER], to our friend and colleague, the gentleman from Maine, Mr. FRANK FELLOWS, and to our friend, the gentleman from New York, Mr. Clarence Hancock, who voluntarily retired from Congress, for the untiring work they have done on the Second War Powers Act.

It was my pleasure to acknowledge, with thanks, that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SPRINGER] was kind enough to introduce the President's bill, by request, which is H. R. 1983, just amended and reported today. It was also my pleasure to request of our general chairman that it be referred to that subcommittee of which he and the gentleman from Maine, Mr. FRANK FELLOWS, were still members so that we might have the benefit of their views and counsel and leadership on this bill because they had been through the same mill three times. Each time it was unanimously reported favorably from a subcommittee evenly divided as to party affiliation, three Republicans and three Democrats.

I want to give credit where credit is due, both to the leadership of the chairman of the full committee and to those three colleagues and esteemed friends of mine who have labored so faithfully and in such a nonpartisan manner in this matter. I think that in this instance, however, even though they have given studious and careful attention to the present bill, their hopes have out-run the facts. I believe that the message of the President of the United States and the bill on controls which was prepared accordingly by the five major administering agencies should be given more factual attention than has been given.

Please bear in mind that this Second War Powers Act, when we first reported it, contained 15 titles. Under it several thousand directives were appropriately issued by the executive departments of your Government. The original 15 titles have been cut down to 1, and only a part of that is retained. Such things as grains and other food articles may be covered by the Food Control Act, but personally I doubt it, because the Agriculture Department is still asking that they be retained.

I could go on, but I will not bother you with details. We have carefully discussed this matter in our committee this morning and every single one of some 12 amendments that were offered to restore as many different controls for the benefit of starving peoples abroad and for the benefit of our own people at home, as many of us see them, were killed. So there is no use in taking up the time of the House by offering them again.

I want to suggest, in all candor and earnestness, and I want to plead with you to defeat this motion if you conclude, after it has been explained, that the Senate bill is better than the House bill for the reason that it will merely continue the status quo as is, till June 30.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has expired.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Alabama?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOBBS. Mr. Speaker, it will give this great subcommittee that has done a splendid job the chance to iron out three or four important matters that they frankly admitted in our committee, and this is no secret, they had not adequate facts on, although considerable study had been given to them. In other words, if a chock block were put in now to stop the inevitable extinction of some of these powers we cannot iron out the situation and write a better bill. I believe, and I am not speaking for anyone but myself, that the Senate bill should be adopted and that the motion of the gentleman from Michigan, the chairman of our full committee, with all due respect to him and these other fine gentlemen, should be voted down.

I bespeak your careful consideration of the record made by the five major administering agencies in reducing the number of controls. I quote from the 1945 report of the committee:

By the grace and guidance of Almighty God, the brilliance and devotion of our civilian and martial leadership and the heroism of the men and women who composed the team of the United Nations, the Axis Powers have been brought to unconditional surrender, yet neither the war nor the peace has been won. Our victory then is neither final nor complete. We still have before us and our allies years of service in foreign lands, requiring the solution of problems at least as difficult as were those of war.

The conflagration that so recently blanketed the globe, still flares in spots. We have learned that no place is too remote to be a menace. Nor can it be doubted that fire spreads. Military and naval might, even including atomic bombs, do not quench the fire of war so potently as the milk of human kindness. No civilized nation, much less one that is Christian, can allow even surrendered enemies to starve or freeze when we have enough and to spare. That would not even be good business, were we so base as to be governed by no higher motive. Even more incumbent on us is to share with our allies in the liberated countries; and, of course, we must not fail to provide adequately for our own forces of occupation. This job cannot be done until the last man or woman so engaged shall have been brought safely home and be happily rehabilitated into our peacetime economy.

During our preparation for adequate national defense, and while the shooting part of the war was on, the Congress of necessity had to grant extraordinary powers for such purposes and for the fulfillment of the inevitable aftermath. These were loosely called war powers.

Now that we have won back much of our safety and peace, it is the determination of Congress to recapture those powers as speedily as may be wise, for the people, so that they may be again exercised in accordance with the slower but more desirable processes of democracy.

The study of the stuation by your committee has revealed that the Presidents and the agencies of Government that have been exercising these war powers agree with the thought of the Congress as shown by their records. The following synopsis not only shows such agreement, but also discloses no reason to doubt that they will continue to diminish their personnel and surrender their powers as rapidly as possible with safety. A survey of the five chief agencies exercising controls under title III of the Second War Powers Act indicates that they have reduced their outstanding controls and administrative personnel as follows:

REDUCTION IN CONTROLS EXERCISED UNDER TITLE III OF THE SECOND WAR POWERS ACT, AND OF PERSONNEL ENGAGED IN ADMINISTRATION OF THESE CONTROLS

War Production Board-Civilian Production Administration: At its peak prior to VE-day, this agency had outstanding slightly over 700 basic orders and schedules. Approximately 200 of these were lifted shortly after VE-day, and as November 1 the number had been reduced to 73.

Personnel has been reduced from a peak of about 23,000 in February 1943 to less than 11,000 at the end of August, less than 4,000 on November 3, and it is planned to reach a figure of 400 by June 30, 1946.

Office of Defense Transportation: On VJ-day this agency had outstanding slightly over 2,950 orders under title III of the Second War Powers Act. By December 1, 1945, all of these orders will have been revoked, and this agency will no longer exercise controls under this act. The reduction in personnel engaged on title III administration has been as follows: June 1, 1944 (peak), 3,897; VJ-day, 2,333; November 1, 1945, 54; December 1, 1945 (estimated), 0.

Department of Agriculture: On August 1, 1945, this agency had outstanding 94 general food orders and on April 1, 1945, 194 suborders. These two dates are chosen because they are the dates on which the greatest number of general and suborders, respectively, were in existence. As of November 14, 1945, there were outstanding 56 basic orders and 173 suborders. Of these 173, however, 144 were suspended. That is to say, they are temporarily inoperative and the Department of Agriculture believes that probably they will not be made operative again.

Personnel engaged in administering these orders has been reduced from 1,000 at the end of the fiscal year to 550 as of November 14, 1945.

Solid Fuels Administration: This agency had outstanding 13 general orders prior to VJ-day. Of these 13 only 6 remain today and of these 6, 1 has been confined to operations east of the Mississippi River. It is believed that all controls will be lifted at the end of the coal year, March 31.

Personnel engaged in title III activities has been reduced from 700 employees prior to VJ-day to 650 at the present time, and will continue to decrease to 50 at the end of the coal year. These 50 will be engaged in clean-up work.

Office of Price Administration: On VJ-day this agency had 16 major rationing programs in effect on a national basis. This number has been reduced to two.

Paid employees (as opposed to volunteers) actually engaged in administering the rationing programs have decreased from 27,055 on August 15, 1945, to 8,952 on October 31, 1945. This figure includes field offices and local boards. Actually the reduction has been greater since these figures do not include reductions in "overhead" employees indirectly concerned with rationing. Proportionately heavy reductions have been made in this category, as well.

The committee has concluded that extension of certain titles of the Second War Powers Act for a period of 6 months is essential in order to assure an orderly liquidation of much of our wartime economy and to aid reconversion. The necessity results basically from the fact that our armed forces and industry are still deployed for war, and from the continuance of a number of basic shortages which threaten to cripple industry and to cause inconvenience or even suffering to consumers.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I am always delighted to yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. SPRINGER. Under the Senate bill, S. 931, the gentleman is aware of the fact that it contains allocations with respect to tin, antimony, cinchona bark, and alkaloids, and streptomycin, and so forth. There is nothing about building material export controls here. The gentleman certainly does not think that the Senate bill should be passed in preference to the bill which we have just reported out of the Judiciary Committee, does he?

Mr. HOBBS. I think, from mere hearsay, the House bill is a much better bill in several respects. I have not seen the Senate bill, but I think if we go to conference, or, better still, reject the Senate bill and send the whole problem back to our committee for further study, we could work out and report a much better bill than either.

Mr. SPRINGER. Let me ask this question: Is it not proper to pass the House bill here so the two bills may go to conference on account of the disagreement?

Mr. HOBBS. That may be so, but I want to see and understand the Senate bill before passing on that.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be so happy to yield to my chairman.

Mr. MICHENER. I think there is a misunderstanding. If the statement of the gentleman from Alabama as to the procedure suggested were followed, the House would pass the Senate bill, and that would end it, and the Senate bill is much more restrictive that the House bill is. The real purpose here is to send this bill to conference where the differences can be worked out, and the only way that that can be done is to adopt an amendment to the Senate bill, because if you adopt the Senate bill it goes to the White House and there is no further opportunity for conference. It is all ended, and the Senate bill is much more restrictive than the House bill, in the form in which the subcommittee reported it.

Mr. HOBBS. I am cordially in agreement with the statement of the chairman and the statement of the chairman of the subcommittee unless the defeat of your motion and reference of the Senate bill to your committee for study would give us a chance to compare the respective merits.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Alabama has again expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be permitted to proceed for two additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. I will be glad to yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. McCORMACK. As I understand, if this legislation passes, it has to pass at a certain time; is that correct?

Mr. HOBBS. Yes, sir; by the 31st of this month, in regard to everything but building materials and possibly some allocation authority as to food supplies.

Mr. McCORMACK. So time is of the essence.

Mr. HOBBS. Oh, very definitely.

Mr. McCORMACK. Let me see if I understand the gentleman correctly. While he is not in favor of the amendment, nevertheless he is in favor of the bill going along to the Senate in order to get it to conference, so the gentleman is placing himself on record as opposing the amendment for future action, and his position at this time is that the bill should pass the House; is that correct?

Mr. HOBBS. Possibly that may be wise.

Mr. DURHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOBBS. Gladly.

Mr. DURHAM. I notice here, of course, it extends CPA No. M311 on quinine. Now, did this committee go thoroughly into the stock pile of quinine that we have on hand? Can anybody answer that question?

Mr. HOBBS. They certainly did, sir, and I more confidently praised them than they would praise themselves. That was gone into very carefully and fully, and it was explained that the supply of cinchona bark was being practically monopolized by the manufacturers of hair tonic instead of being used for medicine which will relieve many cases of heart trouble and malaria.

Mr. DURHAM. Of course, you understand at the present time, to get 5 grains of quinine, you have to have a prescription under this War Powers Act, and the people of the country, of course, are becoming a little bit concerned about that. The stock piles of quinine in this country, of course, is scarce. I think it is necessary to extend it. You probably remember that we passed Public Act 520 which carried out the stock-pile idea, and I wonder if the committee inquired into the stock pile on hand.

Mr. HOBBS. The gentleman, I know, is a druggist by profession and an outstanding one.

Mr. DURHAM. I thank the gentleman very much.

Mr. HOBBS. Well, he is, and so regarded not only all over North Carolina but everywhere else by the people who know him and the skill with which he keeps up with medicinal drugs and stock-pile supplies. I will say to the gentleman that the only way to prevent 80 percent of all the importations of cinchona bark going into the manufacture of certain hair tonics was to do this thing and make this control so that the sick people of America could, through proper allocations, hope to obtain relief and cures.

Mr. DURHAM. If that is the fact, of course, and I am sure it is, because the committee would not have made an erroneous decision, I withdraw my reservation of objection. I think it is a wise decision, because I understand how quinine can go into other products that are not medicinal.

Mr. HOBBS. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WALTER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALTER. As I understand, the gentleman from Michigan moved to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill and to substitute therefor the House bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. WALTER. Does not that mean that this entire matter will be subject to any legislation written by the committee of conference? In other words, it is all in disagreement, and an entirely new bill may be written?

The SPEAKER. The Chair will state that the conferees will have a very wide scope in bringing in legislation.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Speaker, I understood from the gentleman from Alabama that the Senate bill was far more restrictive and extended less of the War Powers Act than we propose to do here in the House. Is that correct?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. The Senate bill has a different approach. I think it is a 90-day extension for all materials and services now being allocated, so in that regard it is a broader bill than the House bill.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The gentleman from Alabama said it was a more restrictive bill. If so, I was certainly going to go along with the Senate. I can say that to the gentleman because I have been one of the Members of this body that feel there have been too many regulations imposed upon the American people and that these building allocations that are presently in effect are holding up the construction of any type of building. The allocations of steel that were in effect on boxcars prevented the country from getting box cars. It has been only within the last 2 weeks that the powers that be have seen fit to let them make perhaps 10,000 cars a month, when they should have been making them 6 months ago, starting on 10,000 cars a month. United States Steel said they were in 98 percent of production. I just hope we do not continue these wartime controls when they are not necessary.

I spoke last year when the gentleman from Alabama was in the well of the House and asked him then how much longer we expected to continue the War Powers Act. He said, "I hope they can end by next March 31." Now we come in and ask for another extension. We did that with Selective Service. I am getting sick and tired of continuing all of these War Powers Acts. If there is any way under the sun to limit them, cut them off, or set a definite time for terminating them, I want to do it. I do not think we are doing it in this bill. The people want less regulations, not more. The way to quit regulations is to quit.

Mr. HALLECK. Of course the gentleman finds himself in a very considerable company of people around here who are as intent as he on doing that.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I doubt it.

Mr. HALLECK. Possibly the gentleman may doubt it but it still is the truth. They want to do away with unnecessary controls, regulations, and directives. Certainly we are moving in that direction. I think the committee has gone over this matter very carefully. I may say to the gentleman from Nebraska—possibly I did not make myself clear—that the Senate proposal may be more restrictive as to time but as to the number of commodities or articles or services to be included under these controls it is much broader than the House bill. Certainly I think the gentleman will agree with the gentleman from Indiana and the other members of the committee, together with the Senate committee. When they get this matter in conference they are not going to extend any control for which there cannot be shown to be an absolute necessity and desirability.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I have one more question I want to ask of someone. What is the termination date that is presently in the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. The termination date provided in the bill on the items under III, which I mentioned in the second part of the statement I made, is December 31, 1947, and on building materials June 30, 1947.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. There is no way for further extension except by an act of Congress? The gentleman does not think that can be done by Executive order?

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not think so.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. The gentleman is not sure about that?

Mr. SPRINGER. I am positive that it cannot be, because we have set out definitely the articles and the length of time which they may be extended.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. DINGELL. May I ask the chairman of the subcommittee this question: When the House conferees come back here with a bill written in conference, we will then have an opportunity finally to reexamine the entire bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. The gentleman is entirely correct.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. How many regulations will they take off as of the 31st of March? How many employees will be released by ending the controls under this bill? What economies will be made?

I am concerned because it is my firm belief that allocations and restrictions in the past has been keeping down construction and retarding reconversion in this country. Business cannot go forward if it must carry an extra load of regulations. I would like to know which titles go out——

Mr. SPRINGER. All of title 1, all of title 2, all of titles 4, 7, and 14 go out.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. What do those titles cover?

Mr. SPRINGER. Title I relates to transportation across to the Pentagon Building and to the Navy Department across the Potomac River. There is no necessity of that because the Interstate Commerce Commission has declined to grant permission to the Capital Transit Co. to continue, and the two transit companies of Virginia are going to handle that problem.

Title No. 2 relates to the acquisition and disposition of property during the war. Certainly there is no necessity of that at this time, and it was so stated before the subcommittee.

Title No. 4 relates to the authority to make purchases by Federal Reserve Banks. That has been covered by other legislation which is permanent in character.

Title No. 5 relates to the navigation and inspection laws, the waiver of which we passed just a week ago on a bill reported by the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries covering that particular item.

Title No. 7 refers to the activities in time of war and is specifically related to activities of members of draft boards and other kindred Government agencies with relation to political activities.

Title No. 14 relates to the utilization of vital war information by various agencies of Government by communicating that information to other agencies of the Government requesting it.

Mr. MILLER of Nebraska. We are making progress in getting rid of controls. The committee is to be complimented—I just hope no attempt is made for further extension when these dates end as intended in this bill—I trust also that personnel and appropriation for all these controls will end promptly.

(Mr. HOBBS asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and include certain articles and quotations.)

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H. R. 1983) was laid on the table.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House insist on its amendments to the bill (S. 931) to extend certain powers of the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, and ask for a conference with the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the gentleman from Michigan? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. MICHENER, SPRINGER, FELLOWS, DEVITT, WALTER, BYRNE of New York, and CRAVENS.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. SHAFER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter to a Member of the other body.

Mr. CHURCH asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

Mrs. SMITH of Maine asked and was given permission to extend her remarks in the RECORD in two instances; one, in connection with the retirement of Col. Frances A. Blanchfield; and to include in the other a brief report of the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. HAND asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

GOOD FARMING—GOOD LIVING

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

Mr. COLE of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to call attention to an article entitled "Good Farming—Good Living" in the April issue of "Country Gentleman. I wish to commend the publisher of Country Gentleman for their excellent judgment in selecting the Scott Sawyers farm located in the Third Congressional District of Missouri, the most fertile farming section of the United States, as the basis of the first of a series of articles to illustrate by actual example what the well-managed farm offers in increasing opportunities for really good living. This series of articles will emphasize the growing realization that the farm is more than a mere food production plant—it is a "place to live" as well.

The Sawyers were selected to represent the Corn Belt farm families because of their "knack of weaving their work and their living together into a most satisfactory, comfortable pattern," according to the magazine's editors.

The family consists of Mr. and Mrs. Sawyers, their four children, Scott, Jr., Carolyn, Jimmy, and Janet, and Mrs. Sawyers' parents, Mr. and Mrs. John L. Tebow. They live on a 220-acre place given over principally to raising cattle, turkeys and pigs.

Scott, Jr., 18, is presently a freshman in agriculture and engineering at the University of Missouri. In 10 years of 4–H Club work, he won a long string of prizes, climaxed by the 1945–46 State championship in the Thomas E. Wilson meat animal project.

In an editorial accompanying the lead article, Robert H. Reed, the magazine's editor, says that "for many years most of the agencies serving agriculture—and we include ourselves—have put a heavy emphasis on means of obtaining better and more profitable farm production."

While a revolution in production has been in progress, however, another and equally important side of farming has had far less recognition he says, adding:

> We miss the point of all this progress in agriculture if we do not see that the end product of good farming is good living. Not good living in any narrow sense, but including a wide range of satisfactions that are distinctive of the American family type of farm.

I heartily recommend as good reading this well-written and interesting article.

FIGHTING COMMUNISM IN GREECE AND TURKEY

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. MATHEWS. Mr. Speaker, in my quest to find out what the people who are going to pay the bill think about the President's plan to combat communism in Greece and Turkey and other places, I asked a hotel clerk last night what he thought about it. He said he thought it was all right if it was done the right way. He said in the hotel business and in hotel advertising there is a right way and a wrong way. But he said, "I would not favor occupational troops." Then, Mr. Speaker, he hesitated and made a remark which I think is very significant. He said, "Honestly, I do not have enough real facts to give an intelligent opinion." Mr. Speaker, is there a Member in this House who could not say amen to that?

I am going to pursue my quest a little further next week and hope to bring you some reports each day.

PRISONERS OF WAR IN EUROPE

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include a letter from Dean Acheson, Acting Secretary of State.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, last month I had occasion to address the House with respect to German war prisoners in Europe, especially in France. I pointed out the condition of slavery to which such prisoners were being subjected. Since that time the American Federation of Labor has complained of the effect that such slavery is having upon labor in our country. I followed up the matter through the Secretary of State, and today I received a letter from Dean Acheson, Acting Secretary of State, with regard to the repatriation of certain prisoners of war in France, Belgium, Luxembourg, Great Britain, Russia, and the Netherlands. While the situation has been tremendously improved, that is, where we have direct control, the actions of Great Britain and particularly Soviet Russia regarding such prisoners still are very unsatisfactory. I intend to take further steps in connection with the entire matter.

The letter and news release from the Acting Secretary of State are placed in the RECORD at this point, and I would appreciate your valuable comments.

The letter and release follow:

MARCH 25, 1947.

The Honorable THOMAS L. OWENS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. OWENS: I refer to your letter of March 3, 1947, requesting information with respect to the status of German prisoners of war in France, The Netherlands, Luxembourg, and Germany and, if it is available, similar information regarding those in England and the Soviet Union. You state that you are particularly interested in knowing when such prisoners of war, especially those originally in United States custody, will be repatriated and enclose a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Wednesday, February 5, containing on pages 804–806 the text of your address on the subject of German prisoners of war.

I have delayed replying to your letter pending the conclusion of discussions at Paris between the American and French representatives concerning the release of German prisoners of war transferred by us to the French for rehabilitation work in that country. An agreement has now been reached for the release from prisoner of war status of these men at the earliest practicable time. As you will see from the enclosed press release dated March 13, the repatriation rate of 12,000 per month which the French initiated on January 1, 1947 will be immediately increased to a minimum of 20,000 per month. As explained in the press release, the French authorities will offer to the prisoners of war a choice between being repatriated to Germany or released from prisoner of war status on the spot to remain in France as voluntary workers. The International Committee of the Red Cross has agreed to associate itself with the program and has been given special status by the French Government with respect to the supervision of the operation and the individual rights of the prisoners of war.

As you are aware, the repatriation operations in Belgium and Luxembourg are much smaller involving approximately 40,000 prisoners of war in Belgium and less than 7,000 in Luxembourg. The Belgian Government has indicated general accord with this Government's request that the repatriation operation be completed by October 1, 1947, and the Luxembourg Government has stated that its repatriation program will be completed well before that date.

In effecting these transfers we did not relinquish our responsibility for any enemy prisoners of war captured by the American forces and assurances were received from the Governments concerned that the terms of the Geneva Prisoners of War Convention would be observed with regard to all German prisoners of war so transferred. Moreover, the installations at which such prisoners of war are held are being visited and inspected by representatives of the International Committee of the Red Cross. This Government now believes, however, that the time has come for these prisoners of war to be released and it is to that end that the steps mentioned above have been taken.

Although information previously given out was to the effect that 10,000 prisoners of war had been transferred by the United States authorities to the Netherlands Government for rehabilitation work, it has recently been determined through a check of the pertinent records that although the American military authorities were prepared to allocate this number to the Netherlands Government, the transfer was never actually made. A copy of the Department's announcement dated March 11 correcting the erroneous statement is enclosed.

The relatively small number of German prisoners of war still under our direct control in the European theater are being released rapidly, the target date for the completion of the operation being July 1.

The British Government, like this Government, is a party to the Geneva Prisoners of War Convention of 1929, which establishes standards of treatment to be accorded captured enemy military personnel and provides for their repatriation. The Soviet Government is not a party to that Convention. Since no transfers of American-captured prisoners of war were made to the British or Soviet Governments for rehabilitation work, no representations have been made to them by this Government regarding the repatriation of German prisoners of war which they hold.

As reported in the press, the situation of German prisoners of war has been discussed at the Council of Foreign Ministers now in session at Moscow. Tass, the official Soviet news agency, reports that the Soviet Government has stated that 890,532 German prisoners of war are in the territory of the Soviet Union and that since Germany's surrender 1,003,974 German prisoners of war have been repatriated to Germany.

According to the most recent information received by the Department, it is estimated that as of the end of March there will be 307,000 German prisoners of war in the United Kingdom, and nearly 87,000 in the Middle East, with the rate of return now about 15,500 monthly from the United Kingdom and 2,500 monthly from the Middle East (to be doubled by July).

Sincerely yours,

DEAN ACHESON,
Acting Secretary.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
March 11, 1947.

(No. 183)

The Department of State wishes to correct an erroneous statement made in the Department's press release No. 868, December 5, 1946, and in subsequent communications to the public concerning this Government's policy with respect to the repatriation of German prisoners of war captured by American forces and subsequently transferred to other governments for rehabilitation labor.

The information previously given out was to the effect that 10,000 such prisoners of war had been transferred to the Netherlands Government. It has now been determined that this information is inaccurate. A check of the pertinent records by the American military authorities reveals that no German prisoners of war were transferred by this Government to the Netherlands Government for rehabilitation work in that country. Although the American military authorities were prepared to allocate 10,000 such prisoners of war to the Netherlands, the transfer was never made.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
March 13, 1947.

(No. 191)

American and French representatives have just concluded a meeting in Paris convened at the request of the United States for the purpose of working out the details of the release and repatriation of German prisoners of war transferred by this Government to the French for rehabilitation labor. As a result of this meeting an agreement has been concluded initiating a program which contemplates the release from prisoner-of-war status of these men at the earliest practicable time. This will be accomplished either by direct repatriation to Germany or by release from prisoner-of-war status in France of those who elect to remain as free workers.

The French authorities, now hold approximately 450,000 German prisoners of war transferred to them by the American authorities and, in addition, according to information supplied by the French, approximately 180,000 captured by their own forces. The French have suggested and we have agreed that for humanitarian and other reasons it would be unfair to give priority to the release and repatriation of American-captured prisoners of war at the expense of the others. Consequently, the program agreed to will be applicable to both categories. A separate accounting will, of course, be made by the French authorities to the American authorities regarding the release and repatriation of prisoners of war captured by our forces.

Under the agreement the repatriation rate of 12,000 per month which the French initiated January 1, 1947 will be immediately increased to a minimum of 20,000 per month. The French have agreed to increase this figure as soon as rail-transport facilities in France permit.

The French authorities will offer to the prisoners of war a choice between being repatriated to Germany or released from prisoner-of-war status on the spot to remain in France as voluntary workers. Those who choose the latter will be released from prisoner-of-war status and will receive work contracts, giving them rights similar to those enjoyed by other foreign workers in France. This alternative to repatriation was agreed to by this Government at the express request of the French Government in consideration of the known need for labor in that country at the present time. In agreeing to this arrangement we insisted, and the French fully concurred, that a satisfactory formula be arrived at to guarantee a free choice to each individual prisoner of war and that before making the choice each be fully informed of the status to be accorded him if he elected to waive repatriation and remain in France as a free worker. Assurances to this effect have been included in the agreement between the two Governments.

The International Committee of the Red Cross has agreed to associate itself with the program and has been accorded special status by the French Government with respect to the supervision of the operation and the protection of the individual rights of the prisoner of war. The willingness of the International Committee of the Red Cross to participate in this program satisfies this Government that a free choice will be guaranteed.

The agreement further provides that the progress of the operation will be closely observed and the two Governments will reexamine the situation periodically, having in mind this Government's desire that the operation be completed by October 1, 1947.

THE TAX BILL

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. DINGELL. Mr. Speaker, I take cognizance of the fact that on the vote in the House this afternoon on the bill H. R. 1, the yeas were 273 and the nays were 137, practically 2 to 1. I am encouraged by this vote to assume that the President will solve the problem by an Executive veto. If and when that comes to pass, I want to say to the House that possible the triumvirate of DINGELL, ENGEL, and GORE will bring in a fair, equitable, and just coalition tax bill, that will do justice to all taxpayers, both in the upper and the lower brackets.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. Under previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

GREECE AND TURKEY

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I see from the newspapers that Mr. Truman has instructed our delegate to the United Nations to explain the actions which the United States proposes to take in regard to Greece and Turkey. I think that it is going to take a lot of explaining—more than a speech—more than a pretty letter—more than pleasant noises and generalities written by some State Department official.

Mr. Speaker, the people of the world are sick of war. They don't want another war, and that is why the American people support the United Nations. Let us get it clear—the American people, whether the State Department likes it or not, support the United Nations. They despise with all their heart anyone and everything that destroys, bypasses, or in any way begins to tear down the one hope that exists in the world for peace—the one instrument through which collective security and collective action against aggressors can be undertaken.

Mr. Speaker, how can anybody fail to recognize that the course of action proposed by the President destroys the very foundations of the United Nations? Every American who owns an automobile knows what a bypass is. Mr. Truman has deliberately bypassed the United Nations. He proposed that we and we alone without consultation undertake to push back aggression throughout the world. His policy which will go down in history as the Truman Doctrine says that we alone are to say who is the aggressor and we alone are to take whatever action is needed. Our armed services are to become an international police force, the agencies of our Government are to replace the agencies of the United Nations.

More than this, Mr. Truman's proposal on Greece and Turkey comes at a time when the United Nations has an investigating commission in Greece. It comes at a time when the Food and Agricultural Organization of the United Nations has already studied the Greek situation for a year, and has turned in an excellent and authoritative report on what is needed. Without consultation, without regard to the fact that the United Nations is already deeply involved in the Greek and near-eastern situation, without regard to the fact that the United Nations adequately handled the situation in Iran, without regard to the fact that every nation in the Middle East represented in the United Nations is directly affected by our decisions in regard to Greece and Turkey, without regard to anything or anybody or to our own commitments to the United Nations to bring before it any act of aggression or any condition existing in the world which threatens the peace, Mr. Truman has deliberately undertaken to replace the United Nations by the armed forces of America, by our economic and political strength.

Pleasant words spoken tomorrow, nicely phrased letters written yesterday will not cover up the hideous fact that the course of action proposed by the President basically destroys the United Nations.

When this Congress votes for the Truman doctrine let us be perfectly clear that by so doing we will be making the choice between one world and a world divided into two armed camps. Let us be perfectly clear that we will have turned our backs upon mankind in the effort to obtain collective security. Let us be clear that we will be establishing a policy which destroys the United Nations.

I for one will not be party to such a crime against mankind. We know without any doubt whatsoever that a policy which establishes two main powers in the world—each pursuing its own power without regard for the other, each engaging in a world-wide economic and military armament race—we know that such a policy can only end in war. The Truman policy is nothing other than an undeclared declaration of war. That policy, if it is pursued, will lead to war.

There is no other policy to oppose the Truman policy than the wholehearted and full support of collective security and collective action against aggression now provided for through the United Nations. In the past, I have voted for American participation and support to the various international organizations for trade, for financial stability, for UNRRA, and so forth. I refuse to vote now for a policy which destroys every act of intelligent good will and enlightened self-interest which the American people have engaged in for the past 4 years. I refuse to stab the United Nations in the back. I refuse to agree that the world inevitably is divided into two armed camps which must engage in atomic warfare.

I cannot but believe that the Truman policy has been dictated by short-sighted bigoted military men whose minds are warped by their constant playing with war plans. We need now those men who can find a way to make the United Nations work—who know how to build the United Nations instead of destroying it—men who can formulate policy which will obtain the support of the entire world.

The best thing that President Truman can do is to recognize that a horrible mistake has been made and that the United States Government should vote emergency relief for the Greek people and turn over the problem of Greece and the Middle East to the one place where it can successfully be handled; namely, the United Nations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MORTON (at the request of Mr. MEADE), for the remainder of the week, on account of illness.

To Mr. KEOGH, until April 11, 1947, on account of official business.

COMMUNISM

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 2 minutes, to revise and extend my remarks and to include as a part thereof a speech I made in Boston last spring warning the country against communism.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the words I uttered against communism in making a speech last spring in Boston were only too true, and events have proven them to be true. I made this speech warning against communism, at which time I referred to Communists in our various Government departments, and, unfortunately, in the United States generally. Nine months afterward the President acted to rid the State Department and other departments of Communists.

Mr. Speaker, the action by the President was late, very late, but better late than never.

My address delivered on April 27, 1946, was as follows:

COMMUNISM IN THE UNITED STATES

(Extension of remarks of Hon. EDITH NOURSE ROGERS, of Massachusetts, in the House of Representatives, Thursday, May 2, 1946)

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I include the following address delivered by me at Boston on April 27, 1946, before the New England Conference of Republican Women:

"From time to time I hear someone ask: 'Well, are there really as many Communists in the United States as claimed, and, if so, are they really so dangerous to our liberties as they are reported to be?'

"These questions are just as vital to our welfare and the welfare of our children, and our children's children as the question:

"'Are there really atom bombs, and are they really so dangerous and destructive as they are reported to be?'

"Our American system of government, our whole system of economy, all we have, our liberties, our religious and political freedom—all are wrapped up in the answer to that question of whether or not there are many Communists in the United States, and whether they are so dangerous as they are reported to be or not.

"I am convinced there are many Communists, grim, fanatical, determined, ruthless, cunning schemers, in the United States, and I believe, further, that they are more dangerous than most persons suppose them to be.

"The time was—and we are still prone to think of Communists and the communistic movement in that light—when Communists were a furtive band of men and women who were without funds, who met secretly in cellars or in garrets, or in dim, smoky, unclean dives and restaurants to plot fanatical and hopeless plans against the Nation. That time has passed, communism in the United States today is a cleverly planned, bold, insolent, well-financed, skillfully managed political and revolutionary movement, reaching out in every direction, sending out propagandists; using the most scientific methods of persuasion over the radio, through the press, through magazines, by means of lectures, and even in a dangerously large section of our pulpit and our schools and colleges.

"There are not dozens, nor hundreds, nor thousands of these trained and fanatical Communists. There are hundreds of thousands of them and although they are fanatical it is with a cool, deep determination that they are going to overthrow our American system of Government, economy, and society. They have their training centers, their schools for agitators, their indoctrination system.

"These Communists are reaching out to try to contaminate the ranks of labor, of the veterans, as well as of the church-going people, the students and their teachers everywhere.

"It is an alarming fact, too, that there are many very cleverly organized and operated Communist front organizations which appear more or less innocent but which are deadly serious in their purpose to wreck our system of government, bring chaos in our economy and reduce our people to the status of slaves of the state—as they are today in Russia. These active full-colored red organizations mean to overthrow our American political, economic, social, and religious system by the ballot boxes if they can, but if they fail in that, they are determined upon bloody revolution to accomplish their ends.

"At the outer edge of this communistic movement are many sincere and innocent, but completely deceived and misled individuals, many of them high in the social scale. Some even are preachers; some are public officials; some are teachers; some are just earnest rank and file citizens who have been persuaded and defrauded into believing that communism will mend all the ills and injustices they see around them and against which they instinctively rebel.

"In this process of attempting to communize this country these alien ideologists have perfected the most remarkably clever techniques. Today communism as politics is 'big politics.' As an infiltrating group movement it is a 'big' movement. These Communists are no longer content to meet in cellars and dives and get out smudgy, gray printed sheets and pamphlets. They issue well-written, well-printed, beautifully typed, cleverly designed literature that would deceive the very elect.

"Now, where do they get the money to do all this?

"First, they have deluded a good many wealthy persons in this country who have provided them with millions of dollars, not realizing what these Communists actually mean to do. Then they have received such recognition in high places that they have become not only respectable, politically, but actually sought after. They have insinuated their henchmen into key places in government. Much patronage, many favors, much control over business is exercised by men and women who have wormed their way into posts of influence, power, and authority in the Government.

"Then, too, since the United States of America—your America and my America—is the richest prize on the face of the globe today, foreign schemers have sent their best brains into this country and have sent over funds to finance this dreadful movement to wreck our American system, take over our country, and reduce us to a condition of slaves to a minority who will call themselves the state if their plans succeed.

"Believe me, if these statements sound incredible, they are nevertheless still true. This Communist movement in America is a game, the greatest history ever saw, for a prize—the control of the riches, the Government, and the people of the greatest nation history ever saw.

"Why do these Communists want to wreck this Nation, our Government, our economy, our society instead of becoming part of it? It is because they are obsessed by a lust for power and riches—not merely a few dollars, not just financial security and an estate—but the riches of a whole state, the riches of an entire nation. Hitler, Mussolini—they are two of the same ilk who were so insatiably lustful for power and riches that they were willing to rule or ruin their own countries, and, having ruled, they did ruin their own countries.

"Let me say to you that the first step toward communism is socialism—the abolition of the right of property, of your right to own your own homes, an automobile, a washing machine, or a radio. The second step is communism—and the third step is fascism. They are all of a piece; they are every one the deadly enemy of our American system of government, of our American system of economy under which the poorest boy or girl may aspire to become rich, of our American system of society, under which, generally speaking, there is more understanding, kindliness, tolerance, and cooperation among the different stratas of society than in any other nation on earth.

"In this ruthless, grim fight that is being waged by these Communists, terminological distortions in our very language have taken place. There are liberals, of course. There are liberals who perhaps disagree with us as to many things about our Government or our economy or our society. But they are willing to attain their aims of reform—or what they may believe to be reforms—by our American process of proposal, disagreement, discussion, and compromise. That is the essence of our system of government under the Constitution. That is the essence of our governmental system of checks and balances. That is the system by which men may most nearly arrive at the exact truth—that system of proposal, disagreement, discussion, and compromise. That system gives due consideration and adequate hearing to the rights of minorities. But the Communists want none of that. They want to sit at the top and issue the orders, and any disagreement or discussion does not lead to compromise under the Communist rule as it is practiced, but to a concentration camp, the noose, or the firing squad before the wall.

"These Communists who want to deceive the people all call themselves liberals. They want to overthrow our Government. They want to wreck our economy. They want to destroy our system of society. But let anyone oppose them or criticize their intentions and objectives and they promptly howl 'reactionaries.' The modern definition of a reactionary is anybody who disagrees with a Communist.

"Now let us see what real liberals and liberalism are, actually:

"The heroic men and women who crossed the stormy ocean in cockleshell boats to find liberty from autocratic oppression and totalitarian tyranny were liberals.

"The signers of the Declaration of Independence were liberals.

"The framers of the Constitution were liberals. They founded the most liberal government ever conceived by man and planted upon the face of this globe.

"On the other hand, totalitarianism and tyranny by an individual or a group at the top is the oldest form of oppression known to man. Yet these Communists want to go back to what they call a dictatorship of the proletariat.

"The fact is no such communism exists in Russia. The effort to operate communism was abandoned years ago in Russia. Today, and for years, Joseph Stalin and his little group of top administrators are, and have been, absolute despots. There is no common equality of citizens except the common term of 'comrade.' Foremen get much more than the rank-and-file workers receive. Faster workers actually get more money per piece in piecework than the slower workers do. In the American Army a lieutenant receives three times the pay of a private. A recent report revealed that in the Russian Army a lieutenant receives 13 times the pay of a private. I am speaking of second lieutenants, of course. To a Russian soldier the possession of a cheap wrist watch is something he will empty his pockets to achieve. You and I know that there was hardly a boy or girl in our armed services who did not have a very accurate wrist watch and thought little about it.

"So instead of the lovely, gentle communism which these agitators in this country paint as a beneficent communism in Russia, concentration camps, oppression, the Ogpu and terrorism cover the land and are a part of the everyday life of those who live behind the iron curtain.

"If communism were working so well in Russia, just exactly why, do you suppose, the Russian rulers keep that iron curtain about Russia? Why would they not rather display to the world the blessings, the accomplishments, the fine results they claim for the communism which these American Government workers preach?

"So then, our forefathers—the founding fathers, who were true liberals—founded upon this continent the most liberal government man ever knew.

"In 150 years under our liberal American system we have achieved the highest living levels, the highest wages, the best working conditions, the greatest production, the most luxuries for the masses, the best system of railroads and highways, the most automobiles, refrigerators, and other material comforts, the greatest degree of religious, political, and social liberty ever achieved by any people in any length of time anywhere on the earth. Why should we let these scheming Communists persuade us to give up all of that to embrace a form of absolutism which inevitably would wreck every one of those advantages?

"The Communists argue that we must change our system of government, economy, and society because it is outmoded. A democracy such as ours cannot wage war or defend itself against the more efficient dictatorships either of fascism or of the proletariat, they assert. Our economy has matured they insist—whatever that may mean—and we must change to a new one. Let's look at the facts about all this and see whether or not there is a shred of truth in these communistic assertions.

"Not only have we achieved all of the wonderful advantages and comforts of life, all the liberties and the privileges which I outlined a moment ago, but we have proved the efficiency of our American system in war. Let me remind you that for 40 years the war lords of Japan were preparing for the struggle they knew they would one day wage against the western world. For 20 years Mussolini drove Italy, boot and spur, getting ready for the war he knew was coming. For 20 years Joseph Stalin drove Russia to prepare for a war he knew would come. For 12 years Hitler and his Nazi thugs drove the enslaved German people day and night getting ready for the war against civilization Hitler knew he would one day wage.

"What of America? In three short years, under our free Government, free industry, free labor, free agriculture, our free people of every religious faith, every political creed, every race and color turned to, overcame that lead of 40 years and 20 years and 12 years and put us on an offensive war basis. What else did we do? We fought two wars—one in the Atlantic and one in the Pacific. The Pacific war we fought lone-handed without any help from any other nation, and at the same time we sent billions piled upon billions of dollars' worth of lend-lease help—gifts—to Britain, Russia, and all other nations fighting on our side. We sent more than $9,000,000,000 worth of arms munitions, machines, material and foodstuffs to Joseph Stalin in Russia. We sent more than $30,000,000,000 of the same kind of lend-lease gift supplies to Britain. And even that is but a small part of the miracle we performed. While we did all that we kept up our own living standards.

"Now what is happening?

"The despised America, the inefficient governmental, economic, and social system these Government-wrecking Communists prate about, scorn, and berate is being asked to lend billions—I should say give—to Britain, to Russia, to France, to China, to all the other countries, at the very same time we are undertaking to carry probably half the burden of feeding a distressed and starving world. That is the kind of government, that is the kind of an efficient economy, that is the kind of an efficient social system these scheming plotters would like to overthrow in order to get their greedy clutches on the riches, the property, the loveliness that is America, in order to become dictators over our people. Whenever you hear anybody talking about the advantages of communism over Americanism, about the advantage of a dictatorship of the proletariat, about the superior efficiency of the Russian system over the American system, you tell him that every fact of history—recent history—of the very things that are happening now in the world—give the lie to all he says to belittle the United States.

"We have the most magnificent, the most efficient, the most progressive, the most liberal, the most scientific system of production, of government, of society, of politics in this whole wide world, and every fact of history in the First and Second World Wars proves it, as do all the peacetime accomplishments we have achieved. We are the most blessed people in the most blessed land on God's footstool.

"Eternal vigilance is still the price of liberty. We must be more vigilant against the wicked, dangerous menace of these Communists. These anarchists would wreck our Nation to produce chaos so they can take over and loot and enslave and rule. It must not be, and we, the citizens, are the ones who must prevent it.

"The heroic men and women who have come back from the wars in which they endured indescribable horrors and trials to defend liberty and free government abroad now are compelled to fight for it at home. They won the war; now they must win the peace—and we must help them.

"You ask, 'What can we women do about all this?'

"We women, the special guardian of religion, which communism brags about, more in peace than in war.

"We vote; we can support candidates who stand for—I mean actually stand for—the continuation of our American system of government, economy, and society.

"We can speak out and speak with authority, knowing we are right, whenever and wherever we hear some Communist, some Communist sympathizers, or some deluded citizen who thinks communism is what it is not, tries to cry down our American system.

"You must speak up, you must defend your democracy whenever the question is raised. If the majority of the citizens do not stand firm in defense of our system, then we will lose that system.

"If ever our American system of freedom is extinguished, the light of the world will truly go out and the hope which lights the hearts of all who love liberty, godliness, and progress will become darkness.

"Communism would stamp out religion. We women must uphold religion. We must stand by our faith for the sake of the world.

"We must stand by America for the sake of the world."

THE HONORABLE CHARLES A. EATON

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, the very distinguished and most able dean of the New Jersey congressional delegation, the chairman of the House Committee on Foreign Affairs, whom we affectionately know as "Doc" EATON, is 79 years old today.

"Doc" was feted in his committee room shortly after the House convened. The host was the friendly gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. FULTON], who, like the Member now addressing you, holds "Doc" as one of his congressional fathers, an inspiration to the younger men of the House. There was a birthday cake with all the "fixin's" and the table piece was a vase holding 79 American Beauty roses; these from the 15 other Members of Congress from New Jersey. A high light of the occasion was a phone ring from the White House. The President had called to extend personally a birthday salute.

Three years ago this day, I felt the urge to speak on the floor about my dean. I phoned "Doc" in his office at the time and asked him how he felt. Without a moment's hesitation he gave me what the boys in the gallery might call "the punch line." Here is what he said, "Gordon, the spirit of '76 is invincible." Today, when I reminded him of this, he beamed and said, "Now I can say that the spirit of '79 is 3 years younger than the spirit of '76!"

I know that all of the good doctor's colleagues in the House join me now in wishing him many years of health and happiness in the service of our country right here in the body he loves so much.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CANFIELD. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. BENDER. The gentleman has referred to Dr. EATON, a former resident of my home city of Cleveland. For many years he served as pastor of the Euclid Avenue Baptist Church, and later, for some 20 years, worked alongside my father at the General Electric Co. I am very fond of the gentleman. When he left Cleveland for New Jersey they had a great civic celebration for Dr. EATON, and at that time he said: "I have never knowingly added to another man's burden." That very well expresses the kind of a man, the kind of a fine Christian character we have in Dr. EATON, and I am so glad the gentleman from New Jersey has risen here to pay this tribute to him.

Mr. CANFIELD. I know that what the gentleman from Ohio has just said is true. May I add this? Dr. EATON has never forgotten Cleveland.

PROGRAM FOR TOMORROW AND NEXT WEEK

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I take this time to say that we had hoped that if the so-called sugar bill had been acted upon in the Senate it might not be necessary for us to meet tomorrow. However, the bill has not been passed so it will be necessary for us to meet tomorrow to dispose of that. So far as I know, that will involve no particular controversy.

Then, with respect to the program for next week, it is my understanding that a deficiency appropriation bill will be reported and will be ready for consideration on Monday. It is expected that general debate on that bill will be had on Monday and that on Tuesday the bill may be read and finally acted upon.

Also it is probable that there will be several conference reports to be considered next week and, of course, those will be taken up at any time during the session. Beyond that, Wednesday and Thursday are undetermined.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield to the gentlewoman from Massachusetts.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand that in the deficiency bill there are a number of appropriations for the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. HALLECK. Well, I am not informed as to the details involved in the deficiency bill. It has not been reported so I do not know.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. But since it is a deficiency bill there is likely to be an appropriation for the Veterans' Administration.

Mr. HALLECK. As to that I am not informed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 566. An act to amend sections 3533 and 3536 of the Revised Statutes with respect to deviations in standard of ingots and weight of silver coins; to the Committee on Banking and Currency.

Mr. LECOMPTE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that that committee did on March 26, 1947, present to the President, for his approval, joint resolutions of the House of the following titles:

H. J. Res. 118. Joint resolution to strengthen the common defense by maintaining an adequate domestic rubber-producing industry; and

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MANSFIELD of Texas asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a letter.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 29 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Friday, March 28, 1947, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

498. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the audit of Home Owners' Loan Corporation (H. Doc. No. 184); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: Committee on Veterans' Affairs. H. R. 1844. A bill to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to grant easements in lands belonging to the United States under his supervision and control, and for other purposes; without amendment (Rept. No. 187). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts: Committee on Veterans' Affairs. H. R. 2368. NOMINATION OF CHAIRMAN AND MEMBERS OF ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I do not intend to make an extended statement at this time, but for the RECORD and in order that no one may be mistaken about the importance of the matter now under consideration, I want to say that I shall not quarrel with the individual opinion of any Member of the Senate in connection with the question of the confirmation of these nominations, but I issue this solemn, and I believe completely true, warning to the Members of the Senate—that action upon these nominations is of the utmost importance, indeed is vital, to the best interests of the United States of America.

I shall not amplify that statement. I am merely saying at this time that whatever we do we should do with reasonable speed, affording opportunity for each Member who has convictions upon this question to express himself. We should proceed with this task, and the nominations of the members of the Atomic Energy Commission should be either confirmed or rejected, in the opinion of the Senate, so that the matter of atomic energy in this field of activity may progress in the interest of this country.

"Senate Resolution 27

"Resolution relative to congressional support for the Merced County stream group flood control project

"Whereas the Merced County stream group flood control project involves the control of a number of relatively small streams, which, at flood season, carry great quantities of water and threaten the destruction of large areas of valuable agricultural land in the geographical heart of the State of California; and

"Whereas the Merced County stream group flood control project has been authorized by Federal and State legislation; and

"Whereas the specific and immediate appropriation of funds by the Congress of the United States for this centrally located project would lend assurance to the people of all parts of the State that the Congress intends to proceed with the more vital flood-control projects in California more quickly than the President's recommended budget would seem to indicate: Now, therefore, be it

"Whereas the specific and immediate appropriation of funds by the Congress of the United States for this centrally located project would lend assurance to the people of all parts of the State that the Congress intends to proceed with the more vital flood-control projects in California more quickly than the President's recommended budget would seem to indicate: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the State of California, That the Governor and the State water resources board are requested vigorously to present to the Congress the need for the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the San Joaquin River levees project; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Congress is hereby requested to make such appropriation and the President of the United States is requested to approve the same; and be it further

THE FEDERAL BUDGET

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received a timely letter from H. W. Steele, of the Steele Oil Co., of Salina, Kans., urging a drastic cut in the Federal budget for the coming year and eliminating many unnecessary bureaus. I heartily approve of the stand taken by Mr. Steele, and ask unanimous consent to have his letter printed in the RECORD, and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter was received, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STEELE OIL CO.,
Salina, Kans., March 7, 1947.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I am writing you regarding the proposed budget for coming fiscal year. I feel very strongly that our budget should be cut drastically, much more than the Senate-proposed $33,000,000,000 budget.

It seems to me that many savings could be effected by paring down many of the unnecessary bureaus which have been built up during the past 14 years of priming the pump and war. Ninety percent of all Federal employees that I have contact with don't start to put out a day's work, and usually there are three men for each job.

I have voted the Republican ticket all my life, and mostly in vain, so I believe since we have finally won a national election, we should show the American people and the world that a democracy can be run in a businesslike manner.

The Republican Party will be betraying the vote of trust given them at the last election if they do not pare Government costs, reduce income taxes, and reduce the Federal debt.

Yours very truly,

H. W. STEELE.

CHANGE OF NAME OF BOULDER DAM TO HOOVER DAM

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I have received a letter from the Honorable Robert Stone, former speaker of the Kansas State House of Representatives, urging the approval of the proposal to change the name of Boulder Dam to Hoover Dam. I ask unanimous consent to have Mr. Stone's letter printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter was received, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TOPEKA, KANS., March 8, 1947.

Senator ARTHUR CAPPER,
Senate Chambers, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I notice H. R. 140 has been approved by the Public Lands Committee and is now pending in the House. It is a resolution to change the name of Boulder Dam to Hoover Dam.

I hope you will give this your wholehearted support because the dam should carry the name of the great engineer who happened at one time to be our President.

Very sincerely yours,

ROBERT STONE.

IMPENDING EXECUTION OF DOV BELA GRUNER—PROTEST FROM KONRAD BERCOVICI

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I am in receipt of a letter from the very noted Konrad Bercovici enclosing a statement, with which I thoroughly agree, regarding the impending execution of Dov Bela Gruner, the Jewish war veteran, in Palestine. I ask unanimous consent that Mr. Bercovici's statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On January 1, 1947, Dov Bela Gruner, a 33-year-old veteran of the British Army, was sentenced to hang by a British military court in Palestine for the alleged participation in an attack on the Ramatan police station April 23, 1946.

The only proof of his participation in that attack was the fact that he refused to explain when and how he had been wounded and also his admission that he belonged to a Hebrew organization of patriots.

On March 25, the British judiciary rejected a plea demanding that an appeal from the sentence be considered.

The rejection of this appeal made by Dov Gruner's lawyers for the setting aside of the sentence imposed upon him by a British Palestine court, is tantamount to legal murder. The reaction of all civilized people against our war ally will affect profoundly the relations between Great Britain and the people of the United States. I submit that it is in the interest of peace that our Government intervene before the execution of the Hebrew patriot whose crime was the refusal to submit to the invaders of his homeland. The whole world is now applauding those of our allies' people who fought against the invader and is condemning those who collaborated with him. George Washington too would have been hanged as a traitor by Great Britain had our revolution failed. The aftermath of Dov Gruner's execution may endanger the prospect of peace in this much embattled world.

Since we are the only country left in the whole world where democracy is not mere lip service, I urge this Congress to protest the execution of Dov Gruner, not so much for the saving of a life, which is precious, but because the execution of this patriot will make Palestine a bloody battleground, which will have repercussions in the entire Middle East with the gravest consequences to our own interests, our security and our peace.

AMENDMENT OF RAILROAD RETIREMENT ACT OF 1937, RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT ACT, AND INTERNAL REVENUE CODE

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a bill, the purpose of which is to amend the Railroad Retirement Act, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code. It is designed to place these laws on a sound and workable basis and to overcome many of the numerous objections which have been raised by employees in the railroad industry and employers in the railroad industry to the many innovations which were contained in the so-called Crosser Act, which was passed in haste and under pressure at the close of the session of the Seventy-ninth Congress.

Many of the features contained in the Crosser amendments, which were so strongly advocated by the former head of the Railroad Retirement Board, were designed among other things to carry out experiments in social security and to enlarge the bureaucracy of the Retirement Board, thus providing thousands of new jobs for Government employees who would be paid out of the money contributed to the retirement fund. An analysis of the complaints indicates that railroad workers want their money spent for retirement benefits for themselves and their families, and are not interested in the hiring of additional Government employees. It also indicates their fear that unwise social experiments might endanger the soundness of their present retirement and unemployment insurance systems. This bill proposes to give them the benefits they desire most, at the lowest possible cost.

I opposed the manner in which the House bill 1362, which carried the Crosser amendments, was jammed through this body at the close of the session last year. On July 25, 1946, in the Senate debate, I said:

When this bill was returned from the subcommittee to the main committee, it contained 17 major changes in the existing railroad-retirement and unemployment-insurance laws, and it had in it 73 less important changes. I ask, how can we expect to have the respect of the people of the Nation if we put a bill of this vast importance through a committee and are willing to enact it into law as it is written, just because we are coming to the close of a session.

This prediction, if I may call it that, has been borne out in the letters of protest which have been sent to my office by hundreds of railroad workers since the bill was signed into law last year. Many railroad employees are asking that the Crosser amendments be repealed in their entirety. Others are asking that they be amended. The general feeling is that the railroad workers, and particularly those among them who have long years of service to their credit, have had their pay-roll deductions increased to pay for a new system of life-insurance annuities for survivors, which they did not seek, and the workers' primary interest, which did lay in a substantial retirement annuity on a sound actuarial basis, received little consideration. Also, many are complaining about the elimination of death-benefit payments which has resulted from the Crosser amendments.

With respect to unemployment insurance, while the employees pay no tax in support of the unemployment insurance fund, they, as well as the carriers, have objected strenuously to the insurance for nonoccupationally incurred sickness and accidents, and the pregnancy and maternity benefits which were added by the Crosser amendments, for they feel these features represent an unwarranted burden on the fund. This bill represents a sincere effort to meet the objections which have been raised to the Crosser amendments and yet to maintain from an actuarial point of view integrity of the funds. It retains the desirable features of the Crosser amendments with certain reasonable modifications. It provides an increased maximum annuity for the employees. The result of these changes will make possible an immediate reduction of one-half of 1 percent and an ultimate reduction of 1 percent in the amount deducted from the employees' pay envelope for retirement purposes.

With respect to the unemployment insurance fund which is entirely maintained by the carriers, a merit system of pay-roll taxation is provided by this bill. This system is a sound and conservative one, similar to that now in effect in 45 of the 51 States and Territories of the United States. This merit system provides that payments into the fund be made on a sliding scale, based upon the amount of money in the unemployment insurance fund. It will avoid, on the one hand, unnecessary assessment of the railroads, while, on the other hand, it will preserve the integrity of the fund, insuring ample reserves to cover all of the demands which may be made upon it under any conditions known or foreseeable at the present time.

I have prepared, for the convenience of the Members of the Senate, a 1-page comparison of this bill with the amendments which were enacted last year, and ask that it be included in the RECORD as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill introduced by the Senator from New Jersey will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the comparison will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 994) to amend the Railroad Retirement Act of 1937, the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act, and subchapter B of chapter 9 of the Internal Revenue Code, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. HAWKES, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

There being no objection, the comparison presented by Mr. HAWKES was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMENDMENT OF VETERANS' PREFERENCE ACT OF 1944

Mr. CAIN. I ask unanimous consent to introduce, out of order, a bill which proposes three amendments to the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944.

These proposed amendments represent the considered opinion of the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States—an opinion with which I most heartily concur. These amendments are as follows:

First. That a veteran should make a qualifying grade on a civil-service examination before his 5 or 10 points are added to the earned rating. Only a very few—approximately 3½ percent—of veterans seeking employment require the extra points to make a passing grade. Although insignificant in its results, the operation of this particular preference has been the basis for much of the unfortunate criticism directed against veterans' preference, which in turn has made enforcement of the act so difficult. The criticism has been raised that the act places a premium on incompetence because the veteran need not make a passing grade. In my opinion, the objection to this particular preference is well-founded, and in the interest of efficiency in government the veteran should be required to obtain a passing grade.

Second. That a veteran must have a disability rating of at least 10 percent before he is entitled to 10-point preference. Under existing law any veteran with a service-connected disability, even though such is noncompensable by the Veterans' Administration, is entitled to a 10-point preference, instead of the 5-point preference accorded other veterans.

The Congress has already established that 10 percent disability is the minimum for which any disability compensation would be payable. This dividing line ought in all fairness be carried over into this act, so that a veteran with 1 percent to and including 9 percent disability would be on a par with veterans—many of whom have long combat service—who have not been rated with such minor disability ratings.

Third. That the veteran must have at least a 30 percent disability, service-connected, before his name automatically moves to the top of the list of eligibles. Under existing law a veteran with any degree of service-connected disability who obtains a minimum earned grade of 60 on an examination is eligible for appointment to a civil service job before another veteran who may have a much higher earned grade. As a result of the operation of this phase of veterans' preference, many veterans with distinguished combat records have been the object of unfortunate employment experiences. The Veterans of Foreign Wars has brought to my attention the case of a decorated veteran with 3 years of combat service. This veteran was a 5-point preference eligible, serving under temporary appointment as a contact representative with the Veterans' Administration. He took an examination for permanent appointment, and received an earned rating of 98—which, with his additional five points, resulted in a final grade of 103. He may be forced to yield his position to another veteran whose earned rating was less than 70 and whose disability was noncompensable by the Veterans' Administration. This amendment would still give the compensable disabled veteran a 10-point preference, but would require at least a 30-percent disability before his name would automatically "float" to the top of the list of eligibles.

I wish to take this occasion to compliment the Veterans of Foreign Wars, who, by proposing these amendments, have indicated an appreciation for the responsibility of their prestige and position which other groups might well emulate.

The Veterans of Foreign Wars cosponsored the Veterans' Preference Act, and have continually carried the fight for compliance with the spirit and letter of that act. The act has been in operation for almost 3 years, and this great overseas veterans' organization has come to doubt the soundness of its contentions in supporting those points which it now intelligently seeks to alter.

I ask unanimous consent to insert in the record a letter I recently received from Omar B. Ketchum, the national legislative director of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, and a copy of the bill I am introducing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill introduced by the Senator from Washington will be received and appropriately referred, and without objection, the bill and letter will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 999) to amend the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944 with respect to preference accorded in Federal employment to disabled veterans, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. CAIN, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Civil Service, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 2 (1) of the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944 (Public Law 359, 78th Cong., 58 Stat. 387) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) those ex-service men and women who have served on active duty in any branch of the armed forces of the United States and have been separated therefrom under honorable conditions and who have established the present existence of a service-connected disability which is compensable under public laws administered by the Veterans' Administration or who are receiving disability retirement benefits by reason of public laws administered by the Veterans' Administration, the War Department, or the Navy Department."

SEC. 2. Section 3 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 3. In all examinations to determine the qualifications of applicants for entrance into the service, 10 points shall be added to the earned ratings of those persons included under sections 2 (1), (2), and (3), and 5 points shall be added to the earned ratings of those persons included under section 2 (4) of this act: Provided, That such points shall be added only to earned ratings which are equal to or greater than the minimum rating for qualification as announced by the Civil Service Commission for the particular examination: Provided further, That in examinations for the positions of guards, elevator operators, messengers, and custodians competition shall be restricted to persons entitled to preference under this act as long as persons entitled to preference are available and during the present war and for a period of 5 years following the termination of the present war as proclaimed by the President or by a concurrent resolution of the Congress for such other positions as may from time to time be determined by the President."

SEC. 3. Section 7 of such act is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. The names of preference eligibles shall be entered on the appropriate registers or lists of eligibles in accordance with their respective augmented ratings, and the name of a preference eligible shall be entered ahead of all others having the same rating: Provided, That, except for positions in the professional and scientific services for which the entrance salary is over $3,000 per annum, the names of all qualified 10-point-preference eligibles whose service-connected disability has been rated by the Veterans' Administration to be 30 percent or more shall be placed at the top of the appropriate civil-service register or employment list, in accordance with their respective augmented ratings."

The letter presented by Mr. CAIN was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

VETERANS OF FOREIGN WARS OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D. C., March 24, 1947.

Senator HARRY P. CAIN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR CAIN: My assistant director, John C. Williamson, has advised me of your recent conversation with him, and of your desire to strengthen the principle of veterans' preference in Federal employment.

Since our cosponsorship of the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944, the National Legislative Service, Veterans of Foreign Wars, has devoted an appreciable part of its activity toward plugging the loopholes of the act and shoring up the various phases which, through half-hearted administrative practices, have become almost empty gestures of preference.

Law making is far from an exact science. The continual enactment of amendatory, clarifying, and perfecting legislation in each Congress attests to an almost axiomatic principle of statutory construction—that only through the operation of a law may one detect its weaknesses and question its purport.

This has been our experience with the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944. On the one hand we have sought to strengthen the act by enlarging on the preference principle, and on the other hand, as in this case, we feel that we must further strengthen this principle by a reconsideration of certain preference factors which act as deterrents to efficiency in government as well as more wholesome employment experiences among veterans themselves.

The national legislative committee, Veterans of Foreign Wars, had this problem under study for some months. On March 7, 1947, at a meeting in Washington, D. C., the committee by an overwhelming majority voted to direct me to seek legislation in the Eightieth Congress which would amend the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944 as follows:

First, that a veteran be required to obtain a passing grade before his 5 or 10 points preference has application.

Second, that before a veteran is eligible for a 10 points preference he must have been rated by the Veterans' Administration with at least 10 percent of service-connected disability.

Third, that before a 10-point preference eligible is placed at the top of the list of eligibles he be rated at least 30-percent disability, service-connected, by the Veterans' Administration. Those veterans with less than 30-percent disability would still be 10-point preference eligibles but would take their place on the list of eligibles in accordance with their augmented ratings.

It is our earnest hope that legislation will shortly be introduced in the Congress incorporating these amendments and that the Senate Committee on Civil Service will bring such a bill up for early hearings.

The interest you have expressed in these proposed amendments is greatly appreciated by this office.

Respectfully yours,
OMAR B. KETCHUM,
Director, National Legislative Service.

AID TO GREECE AND TURKEY—AMENDMENTS

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado submitted sundry amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 938) to provide for assistance to Greece and Turkey, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT ON ECONOMIC SITUATION (S. DOC. NO. 21)

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, in the course of his testimony before the Committee on Education and Labor, Mr. Philip Murray submitted various economic questions, which I then submitted to the Legislative Reference Service of the Library of Congress. Mr. Griffith, the head of that Service, has submitted to our committee a report dealing with the present economic situation. His report is of such interest that I ask unanimous consent that it be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED

The bill (H. R. 1) to reduce individual income-tax payments was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Finance.

LIQUIDATION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE SYSTEM

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 918) to establish an Office of Selective Service Records to liquidate the Selective Service System following the termination of its functions on March 31, 1947, and to preserve and service the Selective Service records, and for other purposes, which were, on page 2, line 13, to strike out "(a)"; on page 2, lines 15 and 16, strike out "Records. (b) Authority" and insert "Records and authority"; on page 2, line 23, strike out all after "tem" down to and including "1947" on page 2, line 25; on page 4, strike out lines 1 to 22, inclusive, and on page 5, strike out lines 1 to 4, inclusive; on page 5, line 5, strike out "(3)" and insert "(2)"; on page 5, line 10, strike out "(4)" and insert "(3)"; on page 5, line 16, strike out "(5)" and insert "(4)"; on page 5, line 17, after the word "employees", insert "(not to exceed 1,200 in number by November 1, 1947)"; on page 5, line 19, after the word "amended", insert ": Provided, That the compensation of such persons shall not be in excess of that provided in said act"; on page 5, line 20, strike out "(6)" and insert "(5)"; on page 7, line 7, after the word "section", insert ", or any person or persons who shall unlawfully obtain, gain access to, or use such records,"; on page 7, line 19, strike out "(a)"; and on page 7, strike out line 22, and on page 8, strike out lines 1 to 6, inclusive.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, for the information of the Senate, I wish to say that the House did not agree to the amendments reported by the Senate Armed Services Committee and adopted by the Senate. It is so important that this new board be established on or before next Tuesday that in talking with members of the committee it seems to be unanimously agreed that there is nothing else for the Senate to do but to concur in the House action, although we feel that the county record boards should be retained in being for the next 3 or 4 months. There is undoubtedly justification for the plan adopted by the House, as there also is for the Senate plan. Our committee, in informal expression, feels it best to advise the Senate to concur in the amendments adopted by the House.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Can the Senator from South Dakota advise us as to the nature of the House amendments?

Mr. GURNEY. The amendments made by the House restored the bill to the form recommended by the President. There will be established in each State one central records office where all State records will be accumulated; and the records will be serviced there. The number of employees will be decreased from the present figure of approximately 7,200 to 1,200. The House has made it mandatory by an amendment that the number of employees in the new board nationally shall be reduced to 1,200 on or before November 1, 1947. I hope that answers the Senator's question.

Mr. President, I now move that the Senate concur in the House amendments, and that the President pro tempore of the Senate be authorized to sign this measure so that it can be sent to the President even though the Senate may not be in session tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. GURNEY].

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. GURNEY. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wish to make a brief comment on the suggestion made by the Senator from South Dakota. I think some objection should be raised, because I do not believe that the amendments of the House are in the interest of national security at this time.

Mr. GURNEY. I am in complete agreement with the Senator; and if there were any chance of properly presenting the case within the next 2 days, I think that would be the course to take.

Mr. MORSE. I know that the Senator from South Dakota is in agreement with me. Nevertheless, I think the record ought to be made perfectly clear, and the responsibility for this action placed where it belongs—not on the Senate, but on the House.

I think this is no time for such a liquidation of the Selective Service System of this country as is contemplated by the action of the House. I think that for the time being we ought to keep our Selective Service System operating on a county basis so far as the records and offices are concerned. I think it should be on a county-wide basis, in order to make it perfectly clear to the world that we will stand ready to defend the peace.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from South Dakota that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the President pro tempore be authorized to sign the bill during the recess of the Senate. Without objection, the order is made.

EXTENSION OF TIME FOR A REPORT BY FORMER COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC LANDS AND SURVEYS

Mr. BUTLER. Mr. President, perhaps out of order, I should like to complete the transaction which I started yesterday on the floor, but was asked by the leader on the minority side to discontinue at the moment. It has to do with the extension of Senate Resolution 77 which was adopted on January 31 last authorizing the extension of time for the completion of the report of a subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Public Lands and Surveys of the Seventy-ninth Congress. They held hearings at San Francisco and perhaps at some other points in the West during the past summer. The shorthand reporter who took the notes was sent to the hospital before he had completed the transcript. On January 31 in order that the report might be completed we asked for and obtained an extension to March 31. The gentleman is still in the hospital, but his helpers are working on the report. We have an investment in this matter, and it will cost no additional money to complete the report.

Day before yesterday, March 26, I submitted Senate Resolution 97 proposing to extend until May 31, 1947, the time for the completion of the report. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Public Lands. I now ask unanimous consent that that committee be discharged from the further consideration of the resolution and that it be immediately considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAIN in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I inquire if there is any controversy about the situation.

Mr. BUTLER. None at all.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Nebraska if this is the matter he referred to yesterday.

Mr. BUTLER. Yes; it is the matter about which the Senator from Kentucky asked me yesterday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Nebraska that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of Senate Resolution 97? The Chair hears none, and the committee is discharged from the further consideration of the resolution.

The Senator from Nebraska now asks unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 97) submitted by Mr. BUTLER on March 26, 1947, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the authority granted to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys under Senate Resolution 315, Seventy-ninth Congress, agreed to July 30, 1946, relating to studies and investigations of matters referred to such committee, as heretofore extended, is hereby further extended to May 31, 1947, for the purpose of allowing additional time in which to make a report to the Congress.

CONFIRMATION OF NOMINATION OF WILLIAM R. McCOMB

Mr. ELLENDER. Mr. President, as in executive session, I call attention to the fact that on the Executive Calendar there is the nomination of Mr. William R. McComb, of Missouri, to be Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, Department of Labor. The nomination was taken up yesterday by the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare and by unanimous consent of the entire committee the nomination was ordered reported favorably. I ask unanimous consent that the nomination be now confirmed.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, am I to understand that the nomination has the approval of all the members of the committee?

Mr. ELLENDER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. There is no controversy about it in any way whatsoever?

Mr. ELLENDER. Absolutely none.

Mr. WHERRY. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will state the nomination.

The Chief Clerk read the nomination of William R. McComb, of Missouri, to be Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, Department of Labor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. ELLENDER. I ask that the President be immediately notified.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

HISTORY OF PROPOSED FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICE LEGISLATION

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, yesterday I had intended to call the attention of the Senate to the fair employment practice bill introduced in the Seventy-ninth Congress.

In the last session the bill to eliminate discrimination on account of race, creed, or color—the fair employment practice bill, S. 101—was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, of which committee I had the honor to serve as chairman.

The complete story of what happened to that legislation is contained in a summary report to the committee which I, as chairman, presented at the end of last year. In that report, which has been printed, I presented an objective and historical account of each measure which our committee considered. Because of the great interest in the history of this legislation, and because of the value it will be to anyone interested, I request that the historical account of the fair employment practice legislation which appeared in my summary report be printed at the close of my remarks.

The summary report points out that 50 witnesses, representing over 100 national organizations, appeared in support of S. 101, and, although the chairman of the subcommittee, the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CHAVEZ], sought testimony in opposition to the bill, no one opposing it requested a hearing.

In view of the wide public demand for legislation to eliminate discrimination in employment, because of the extensive consideration already given to such legislation, and because it is encumbent upon the United States at this time to prove to the world that democracy in the United States really operates for the welfare of all people, regardless of their race, creed, or color, I hope that the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], my successor as chairman of the committee which will be considering Senate bill 984, introduced yesterday by the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], will see to it that the bill is given prompt and speedy consideration. I hope also that when this bill is reported from the committee the Senate will act likewise.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

FAIR EMPLOYMENT PRACTICE ACT

On January 6, 1945, a bill to prohibit discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry was introduced by Mr. CHAVEZ, for himself and six other Senators. The bill, subsequently known as the bill for a Fair Employment Practice Commission, S. 101, was referred to this committee. The measure, with minor changes, was the successor to S. 2048, first introduced in the Seventy-eighth Congress, with bipartisan sponsorship and which, after hearings, was favorably reported by this committee on September 20, 1944.

The bill was designed to eliminate discrimination in all employment relations which fall under the jurisdiction or control of the Federal Government. It forbade discrimination in (a) Federal employment, (b) employment under Government contracts, and (c) employment and activities affecting interstate or foreign commerce which are subject to Federal control in respect to labor relations. It applied equally to employers and to unions, forbidding discrimination by unions against members, employees, or employers.

A board of five members, to be appointed by the President, with Senate ratification, and to be known as the Fair Employment Practice Commission, would be created to administer the act. The Federal courts would be empowered, after appropriate judicial hearings, to enforce cease-and-desist orders found to have been properly issued by the Commission.

Mr. TAFT introduced S. 459, a bill similarly designed to eliminate discrimination in employment because of race, creed, color, national origin, or ancestry. It differed from S. 101 chiefly in that it did not provide for any judicial enforcement or judicial review.

A subcommittee of this committee was appointed by the chairman, Mr. MURRAY, to consider the bill, and hearings were set for 3 days, beginning March 12, 1945.

In the House of Representatives, within a month after the beginning of the Seventy-ninth Congress, 13 separate bills were introduced proposing the creation of a permanent FEPC. Because hearings had been held on almost the identical bill the previous session, the House Labor Committee, to which committee these bills had been referred, reported H. R. 2232 introduced by Mrs. NORTON, of New Jersey, without any further public hearings. The bill was reported on February 20, 1945. The Rules Committee held a series of meetings on House Resolution 146, Mrs. NORTON's request for a rule on the bill. The committee failed to give the bill a rule by a tie vote, 6 to 6. Thereupon, on April 27, 1945, Mrs. NORTON filed a discharge petition (218 signatures required to discharge the Rules Committee from consideration). On December 10, 1945, Mr. GORE, of Tennessee, informed the House that only 157 Members had signed the petition.

Mrs. NORTON then resorted to the parliamentary device, the rule of Calendar Wednesday. On Tuesday, September 25, when the customary request to suspend the next day's Calendar Wednesday was made, she objected. On Wednesday, September 26, however, within 15 minutes after the session began, Mr. WHITTINGTON, of Mississippi, moved the adjournment of the House, and it carried by a vote of 74 to 31, thus ending the calendar and legislative day. Later efforts by Mr. MARCANTONIO, of New York, were similarly unsuccessful.

In the hearings held by the subcommittee of this committee approximately 50 witnesses, representing over 100 national organizations, including major church, labor, educational, welfare, business, and race-relations groups appeared in support of S. 101. Although the chairman, Mr. CHAVEZ, frequently sought testimony in opposition to the bill, no one opposing it requested a hearing. S. 459 was opposed on the grounds that the bill would fail in its purpose because of its lack of enforcement powers.

The bill was reported by the subcommittee to the full committee on May 17, 1945, with a unanimous recommendation for favorable action by the committee. Some members of the committee had requested a week's time in order to see if a compromise bill could be drafted which the whole committee could agree upon. The request was agreed to and on May 24 when no compromise bill appeared possible the committee by a vote of 12 to 6 favorably reported S. 101.

On January 17, 1946, during the Senate morning hour and after the routine morning business had been dispensed with, Mr. CHAVEZ moved that the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 101. Upon a roll-call vote, his motion was carried 49 to 17. Mr. CHAVEZ then began to discuss his bill. Later on, at approximately 3:45 p. m., Mr. MCKELLAR moved the adjournment of the Senate, which motion was adopted by a voice vote.

The following day, when the Senate convened, following the routine prayer of the Chaplain, Mr. BARKLEY, the majority leader, moved that the Journal of the prior day's proceeding be approved without reading. Mr. OVERTON objected and then moved to correct the Journal to include therein the prayer delivered by the Chaplain on the preceding day. The correction of the Journal and the appeal from a ruling of the Chair on a point of order—whether the correction of the Journal or the consideration of S. 101 was the pending business—remained the business before the Senate until February 7, 1946, when Mr. BARKLEY withdrew his appeal from the Chair, the motion to correct the Journal of January 17 was withdrawn, and Mr. BARKLEY moved approval of the Journal, which was approved by unanimous consent. S. 101 then became the unfinished business of the Senate.

A cloture petition with 48 signatures was then filed by Mr. BARKLEY. On Saturday, February 9, the vote on cloture was taken. The vote was 48 to 36, and lacking the necessary two-thirds, the cloture rule was not invoked. Mr. CHAVEZ then moved to displace S. 101 in favor of an appropriation measure. His motion was adopted 72 to 12, and S. 101 was restored to the calendar, where it remained until the Seventy-ninth Congress adjourned.

THE CRISIS IN AMERICAN EDUCATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR HILL

SUSPENSION OF NAVIGATION AND VESSEL INSPECTION LAWS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield to the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside, and that, as in legislative session, the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 69, House bill 1240, and Calendar No. 70, House Joint Resolution 76, the latter measure being a companion measure to the former. House bill 1240 would provide for the suspension of navigation and vessel inspection laws, as applied to vessels operated by the War Department, upon the termination of title V, Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended.

I may say that the majority leader, the Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE] has reported these two maritime measures from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. He is unavoidably absent from the Senate today because of illness, and has asked me to present the bill and the joint resolution to the Senate for immediate consideration.

The two measures are emergent in nature. The present waiver of certain laws regarding vessel inspection and navigation standards would end on March 31, 1947, next Monday, with the expiration of the Second War Powers Act. If these bills are not signed by the President before that day every American flag line vessel now on the oceans, except possibly the liner America, would be sailing in violation of the law; the effect of nonenactment would be to take every American vessel off the ocean.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate immediately proceed to the consideration of the two measures, House bill 1240 and House Joint Resolution 76. I assure the distinguished Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] that all I contemplate doing is to make a brief explanation of what the two measures provide, and if it should appear that there is any controversy over them, and any undue debate ensues, I shall immediately call for the regular order, so that the Senate may resume consideration of the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, on the basis of that assurance, I have no objection.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, I desire to ask a question of the Senator from Nebraska with respect to his request for unanimous consent. Have both measures been unanimously reported?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I shall have to ask a member of the committee to answer that question. The Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] can answer it.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I may say to the Senator from Wyoming that the two measures have been unanimously reported from the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. They are both of an emergency nature. The Senator from Nebraska has explained them briefly. We must waive these navigation inspection laws in order to keep our passenger ships on the seas. The Army is very anxious to have this done because the transportation of troops is involved. There is no American ship now flying the American flag, with the one exception of the liner America—these measures relate to passenger ships—that would come strictly within the rules and regulations. We held a lengthy hearing on the measures. The majority leader is personally very much interested in the matter, and it is something which must be done this week.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, my understanding is that the President in his message on February 3 requested extension of these two war powers.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I should like to propound another question. The extension of these powers was approved at the last session after a favorable recommendation by the Committee on the Judiciary. It is my understanding that no new matter has been inserted in the legislation, and that the measures merely provide for an extension.

Mr. MAGNUSON. For an extension, yes.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I have no objection.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to make a further clarifying statement respecting House bill 1240, which has to do with certain of the remarks made by the distinguished Senator from Wyoming. The majority leader states that the bill gives the Secretary of War authority to waive vessel-inspection laws for those vessels operated by the War Department for the carriage of Army personnel and supplies all over the world. The War Department is operating some 15 such vessels on a bare-boat charter basis from the Maritime Commission. If the waiver authority is not renewed, the War Department will be prevented from bringing personnel home. Its own fleet of vessels, owned by it, are classed as "public vessels" and do not come within the purview of the vessel-inspection laws, but they would be wholly inadequate to take care of the War Department's problems. The waiver proposed by the bill would extend only to the end of the calendar year, December 31, 1947. I take it from that analysis that there is no new grant of power contained in the extension which we ask.

Mr. MAGNUSON. If I may, I should like to say further that in the meantime, of course, the shipowners are doing what they can to withdraw the ships from wartime operations and place them under the navigation and vessel-inspection laws. But with respect to some of them it will require a year to accomplish that.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to consider House bill 1240.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill (H. R. 1240) to provide for the suspension of navigation and vessel-inspection laws, as applied to vessels operated by the War Department, upon the termination of title V, Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WAIVER OF COMPLIANCE WITH VESSEL INSPECTION AND NAVIGATION LAWS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of House Joint Resolution 76.

The joint resolution grants to the Commandant of the Coast Guard the authority to waive such vessel inspection laws as he deems necessary for any American flag vessel. The authority is continued for 1 year, to April 1, 1948. By that time it is expected that the majority of American flag vessels on the seas will conform to all statutory inspection standards.

It should be pointed out that we are not reducing safety standards by these bills. We are merely continuing the status quo so that American vessels may continue to sail. The standards are being constantly improved, but it has been impossible to meet the rigid high American standards, the highest in the world, with war-built vessels constructed hurriedly during the war.

The legislation is approved by all Government departments and by all shippers, as well as by the maritime unions. The President specifically requested their enactment in a message February 3.

I will say that both measures were passed by the House more than 2 weeks ago, and were reported to the Senate in exactly the form as passed by the House.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 76) authorizing the Commandant of the United States Coast Guard to waive compliance with the navigation and vessel-inspection laws administered by the Coast Guard, was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. WHERRY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President pro tempore be authorized to sign the two maritime measures, House bill 1240 and House Joint Resolution 76, during the recess of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION—NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of David E. Lilienthal to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is, Will the Senate advise and consent to the nomination of David E. Lilienthal to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission?

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, in the committee which considered the nomination of David E. Lilienthal to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission, I voted against the nomination. I welcome this opportunity to discuss with the Senate the reasons why I voted against Mr. Lilienthal. To that end it is my purpose to introduce for the consideration of the Senate evidence which is not in the printed record but is nontheless fact. The Senate is entitled to every available bit of information. No Senator should cast his vote with any doubt in his mind as to whether or not he is doing the right thing for his country. When there is any doubt as to the qualifications of appointees they should not be approved. This is too important a place to fill with one who does not have the complete confidence of the Senate as well as of the people of our country.

Frankly, I wanted to vote with the President for the President's appointee. I listened to the testimony for weeks hoping that I could finally do so. I have been in an executive office, and I appreciate the responsibility that rests upon an executive to choose men for important places. If this were an appointment of a member of the official family of the President, I would go much further than I am willing to go in confirming the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission.

In the Atomic Energy Act Congress has definitely laid down the policy, fixed the authority, and created a joint committee of the House and Senate to constantly keep in touch with the operations of this Commission. This Commission is essentially an arm of the Congress, the legislative branch, and in our consent we have a responsibility rising almost to the level of the original appointing authority. I wish these appointments might have been such as to receive the unanimous and prompt approval of the Senate. We had an instance of such an appointment when General Marshall's name was recently submitted to the Senate. His nomination as Secretary of State received unanimous support and acclaim in Congress as well as on the part of the public. This responsibility is so great that there ought to be the same general confidence on the part of the Senate and the people of our country that has been expressed in General Marshall as Secretary of State. But Mr. Lilienthal has been a controversial figure wherever he has held public office, from Wisconsin to Tennessee, and thence to Washington. Many trust him; many do not.

The issue before the Senate is not whether Mr. Lilienthal is a Communist. If the President of the United States should send to the Senate for confirmation the nomination of a Communist as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, the President himself ought to be tried. But it is very difficult to ascertain Mr. Lilienthal's political philosophy, from our record or from his record. He testified that hs is not a Democrat, a Republican, nor a Communist. He says he is an independent and a liberal. Those terms permit a variety of interpretations and being self-proclaimed they help very little in our consideration of the propriety of this appointment.

The record does show that Mr. Lilienthal was a sponsor of the Southern Conference on Human Welfare. That is a perfectly laudable name and implies a very noble motive back of the organization. One can readily understand how Mr. Lilienthal would be induced to sponsor such an organization if he did not know about it and did not care to look into it. But Mr. Lilienthal was in a very important place. He was the head of TVA. His name had been broadcast to the country. He should have investigated and should have known that this was a Communist-front organization, not interested in human welfare but in carrying out the party line. An able administrator in his position would have made such an investigation before permitting the use of his name as a sponsor.

For weeks I have tried to separate the truth from the propaganda in this case. It has been difficult. There has been much confusing propaganda regarding Mr. Lilienthal and the power interests. I received many letters prior to the committee vote, and some since, charging that this is a fight between the Power Trust and Mr. Lilienthal, who, according to the letters, stood for the people. From 6 years' association with Public Utilities Commission of Ohio, I have some knowledge of the power and utility interests. I was contacted by the representative of one of the large power companies. He came to Columbus and took a couple of hours of my time one Sunday morning a short time ago attempting to prove to me that it was to the vital interest of the Republican Party to confirm the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal. This was the only utility man who talked to me on this matter at any time, during the hearing or since.

Likewise, I received many letters from scientists throughout the country asking me to vote for Mr. Lilienthal. It was difficult to understand the extreme interest in Mr. Lilienthal on the part of this group until there came to my attention since the hearing the following memorandum, which may account for many of the letters which I have received, and which, no doubt, many other Senators have received.

This announcement was on the letterhead of the Federation of American Scientists, 1749 L Street NW., Washington, D. C. It is dated February 21, 1947, which was during the hearings. The memorandum is addressed to member associations, from W. A. Higinbotham. I presume Mr. Higinbotham is the secretary, vice president, or a director of the association. This is what he said to members of the association:

> This situation about the confirmation of Mr. Lilienthal looks better at present than it has for some time. I think we can take a great deal of credit for the effect of our efforts on his behalf. Other organizations and the press of the country have done a splendid job. It is hoped that the committee hearings will end this week and that the nomination will go to the Senate some time next week.
> Our latest information is that at the moment the vote would be approximately 54 to 41 for Lilienthal. Obviously this is too close for comfort since you can never hope for anywhere near full attendance in the Senate. We cannot relax our efforts until the vote is taken.
> There are some Senators who have not yet committed themselves either way and in their case it might be well to continue exerting what pressure we can in the form of letters and wires. They are: MILLIKIN, BALDWIN, RUSSELL, COOPER, SALTONSTALL, LODGE, FERGUSON, BALL, THYE, EASTLAND, IVES, LANGER, YOUNG, BRICKER, CORDON, MARTIN, MAYBANK, MURRAY, WATKINS, CAIN, REVERCOMB, WILEY, and MCCARTHY.

That is the end of the important part of the circular. Mr. President, my investigation has revealed that neither this association nor Mr. Higinbotham has registered under the Lobbying Act.

But the real question before the Senate is the competence of David Lilienthal as an administrator. Ordinarily that question is resolved by a study of a man's record. This country's economic system, in spite of what some few may desire, remains a capitalistic profit-and-loss system. In such an economic order Mr. Lilienthal has never operated. He is not a business man. He so testified. He never managed a business and made it work, nor has he operated in government where he was answerable to the taxpayers whose money he handled. He is a lawyer transformed, as he said, into an administrator. For 6 weeks I have tried to determine what he meant and now he qualifies under his own test. Remember, Mr. Lilienthal's whole experience from which we can judge is as a Government-kept man, spending the money of the taxpayers. Upon that basis a guide to determine Mr. Lilienthal's ability may be determined by applying these tests, which I have attempted to apply.

First. Can he efficiently, successfully, and economically handle this atomic energy project?

Second. Does he possess the desire and ability to work harmoniously with the Congress and Government Departments?

Third. Does he have the desire and ability to choose capable and loyal personnel to carry out the will of our people expressed in law?

In the first place, spending other people's money does not make a great administrator. Spending $150,000 for publicity may make a popular one, but not a good one. In public office, as so many of us know, it is easy to spend money and very difficult to save it. During the whole of the first year that I held the office of governor of my State there was only one man who came to my office asking me not to spend money. Every other one, every other group, every other delegation wanted public money. So the test of an administrator, in my judgment, is not in the spending of money, or the amount that can be spent, but the effectiveness with which it is spent, and the saving of the taxpayers' dollars which is accomplished in essential operations. The record shows that in the TVA there were projects ranging from building dams to generating power, from manufacturing fertilizers to the curing of hams. Nine million dollars worth of fertilizer was sold in one year in competition with private industry, and $2,000,000 was given away at TVA under Mr. Lilienthal as administrator.

A farmer from my home State appeared in my office a few weeks ago. He supported Mr. Lilienthal. He was a TVA experimental farmer. In consideration for the fertilizer which was given him he kept books and reported his results to the TVA. For a long time before TVA was ever thought of the farmers in my State were using fertilizer and keeping records of the results.

So with unlimited funds, with very little control over expenditures—and we had very little control over them, as Congress well knows—and things to give away to make people feel good, one can with proper publicity make himself well known and perhaps, in certain places, well liked, but certainly it is not a test of a great or even a good administrator.

The second test is whether or not the appointee can, and will, work willingly and thoroughly in accord with the Congress. I do not have to call to the attention of this body this fact—because too many have been here throughout the years when they have had association with the TVA and Mr. Lilienthal—that there have been constant irritations between at least a portion of the Congress and Mr. Lilienthal over his operation of the TVA. In the agricultural experiment work TVA did not cooperate with the Department of Agriculture, which was equipped and qualified to carry on such work, but chose to work outside the authority and direction of that important executive department. The record shows that Mr. Lilienthal was unwilling or unable to work with the colleagues chosen by the President in TVA. It is important to note that none of them appeared to testify for him in this matter. The record is replete with his difficulties with Dr. A. E. Morgan as Chairman of TVA.

We might have hoped that in this new and grave responsibility, Mr. Lilienthal would take a different attitude. As I shall later indicate, the record shows that he is carrying into this job the same practices that characterized his inability to work with Congress and his associates in TVA. So by this second test he falls far short of being a great or even a good administrator.

In the third place, a test of an administrator is his ability to choose proper men to work with him. In my judgment this is the most important test.

What was Mr. Lilienthal's record at TVA? I bring to the attention of the Senate, Mr. Clapp. He already has been disapproved by a committee of the Senate. That committee has voted against the confirmation of Mr. Clapp on about the same record as we had before our committee and upon the proof that Mr. Clapp is a mere shadow of Mr. Lilienthal, expressing his ideas and carrying out his programs.

We do know from the record also that there were communistic activities in the TVA. Some admitted before the committee Communist membership. Others admitted attending meetings where Communist matters were discussed. Mr. Lilienthal testified that he did not know about it. A good administrator would have known about it and would have put an end to such activities immediately.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Is the Senator aware of the fact that the investigation of the Tennessee Valley Authority in 1938 and 1939, in which 6,100 pages of testimony were taken, as the Senator, I am sure, knows, involved a most thorough examination of all of the activities of TVA, and that there was not a single mention before that congressional committee by any witness of any communistic activity in the Tennessee Valley Authority?

Mr. BRICKER. But there is plenty of mention of it in this record, and I am speaking of this record.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, when the Senator says there is plenty of it in this record, I wish to know to what he refers and to which witnesses he refers.

Mr. BRICKER. Several witnesses admitted it. Williams admitted it and Hart admitted it, others admitted attending meetings where Communist activities were discussed.

Mr. McMAHON. Is it not a fact that former Representative Starnes, who a short time ago conducted an investigation of Communists, found, after thorough investigation, three clerks who admitted membership in the Communist Party—three clerks among 18,000 employees? Is not that the extent of the Communist activity in the TVA, I ask the Senator?

Mr. BRICKER. I think the testimony in these hearings was that as many as 54 people were either associated with Communist activities or were members of organizations in which Communist activities were paramount.

Mr. McMAHON. I think the Senator will find that in the whole set-up there were, not 56 or 54 members of the Communist Party, but 3 Communists who attended labor meetings at which 54 persons were present—which is quite a different thing from having 54 members of the Communist Party.

At any rate, the Dies committee—which I think can fairly be said to have been not inactive in seeking to bring to light evidence of Communist activities—after its investigation reported that there were three persons—messengers, I believe, or low-paid clerks—who had been members of the Communist Party. I say to the Senator that if he wishes to be fair, I think he will admit that in the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad or the B. & O. Railroad or the United States Steel Corp., or any other large corporation, there is likely to be a much greater percentage of such employees than in the TVA.

Mr. BRICKER. In such organizations there may be both Communists and fellow travelers; and the number of Communists in the TVA can be multiplied many times, in arriving at the number of those who might be considered fellow travelers. I was governor of my State, and I know that other Members of the Senate have been governors of their States. I can speak for my own State, as I know they can speak for theirs. Among all the thousands of employees of the State of Ohio, when I was governor, if there had been a Communist among them and if there had been Communist meetings held anywhere or if there had been any subversive-organization meetings held anywhere, I would have known about it, and any State employees who might have been involved would have been dismissed immediately, as they should have been dismissed from the TVA organization.

One young man who was actively connected with many left-wing organizations came before us and testified to the fact.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. It is my understanding—and I should like to ask the Senator if my recollection is correct—that the investigation made by the Dies committee did not cover all employees of the TVA, but covered only those at Knoxville, Tenn., who constituted only a small fraction of the total number of TVA employees. I further understand that the number of fellow travelers and Communists who were found by that committee to be employed in the TVA were only those who centered around the Knoxville territory.

Mr. BRICKER. I am glad to have that correction made.

Mr. OVERTON. It is frequently stated that only 9 or 10 or 12 Communists were found out of 54,000 employees, or some such number, when, as a matter of fact, the investigation was confined to only a very small portion of the TVA.

Mr. BRICKER. I do not know the extent of the Dies committee investigation. I have not read it, and I was not a Member of Congress at that time. In making up my mind concerning this matter, I have not relied in any way on the testimony developed in that investigation, but I have done so solely upon the record made in this case.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. BRICKER. I am happy to yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Is not the Senator from Ohio aware that Mr. Starnes, in testifying before our committee, stated that there was not a single scintilla of evidence or a single imputation which could fairly be drawn from their investigation that David E. Lilienthal was a Communist?

Mr. BRICKER. I have said that.

Mr. McMAHON. Or a fellow traveler or in any way tainted with communism?

Mr. BRICKER. I have said that already in my presentation.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Does the record show that Mr. Lilienthal, while connected with the TVA, took any vigorous action intended to discourage or stamp out communistic activities within that agency?

Mr. BRICKER. The record shows that he took no such action, and he admitted he did nothing about it.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I am glad to yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Then it is interesting to speculate as to what would be the reaction on the part of Mr. Lilienthal, if he were confirmed for this position, concerning the recent order of the Chief Executive of the United States designed to purge all public agencies of Communists and communistic activities. That would place a great burden upon any person holding the responsible position which Mr. Lilienthal has been nominated to hold as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. BRICKER. The Senator is exactly correct; and it also places a great burden on the Senate. A little later I shall follow up further in that regard.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I do not wish continually to interrupt the Senator from Ohio, but I think the record should be kept straight. I wish to inform the Senator from Idaho that the Atomic Energy Act contains a mandatory provision requiring that in the case of the Atomic Energy Commission, unlike any other authority or agency or department of the Federal Government, there shall be an FBI investigation of all personnel before they are finally placed on the rolls of that organization. Of course, there was no such provision of law, no funds were appropriated by the Congress, and no authority was granted the FBI to make such investigations of Government employees generally throughout the Government, in all governmental departments and agencies.

Mr. BRICKER. I am glad to have the Senator's suggestion, because it falls directly in with what I shall say later on that point.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. What does the record show regarding whether the FBI has made an investigation of the Chairman and members appointed to the Atomic Energy Commission and also all of its employees?

Mr. BRICKER. I shall come to that matter a little later if the Senator will permit me to do so.

Mr. FERGUSON. Very well.

Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. What does the record show about the 45 persons whose names were sent to the TVA in 1941, to be investigated as to their subversive activities? Is the Senator familiar with that?

Mr. BRICKER. What I have been reciting here is all the information I have. Does the Senator refer to some part of the Dies investigation?

Mr. FERGUSON. The employees' names were turned over by another agency and were sent to the TVA. Does the Senator know what was done by the TVA?

Mr. BRICKER. I admit I am not familiar with that.

Mr. FERGUSON. The Senator from Ohio is not familiar with it?

Mr. BRICKER. No.

Mr. FERGUSON. That was not put in the record?

Mr. BRICKER. No; not while I was there.

One of the young men, however, who was actively connected with left-wing organizations—and he testified before the committee—although not admitting that he was a Communist or connected with Communists, was promoted successively, until at the present time he holds a position, in one of the housing agencies of the Government, paying him $8,200 a year. We do know from the record that there is serious doubt as to the motive back of the dismissal of one, Mr. Smith, in the TVA, who opposed Communist activities. He had been promoted also until the time when the radicals took after him and he was dismissed. This certainly should have come to the attention of Mr. Lilienthal.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield there?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator has referred to the fact that Mr. Smith was dismissed. I suppose the Senator refers to Mr. James L. Smith.

Mr. BRICKER. He is the man.

Mr. HILL. Does not the record show that at the time when Mr. Smith was discharged, he had a hearing which lasted for 7 days, and a number of volumes of testimony were taken, and not in one line or word of the testimony was there any mention, directly or indirectly, to the effect that Mr. Smith's discharge occurred because of any Communist prejudice or Communist activities? Furthermore, is it not true that it was not until after question was raised about the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal to the Atomic Energy Commission that Mr. Smith ever said anything about Communists?

Mr. BRICKER. The record is replete with his testimony as to the Communists being after him and as to what differences they had had with him, and that they were the ones who were carrying on the prosecution and had the testimony taken.

Mr. HILL. Yes. But the Senator did not answer my question. The record shows that Mr. Smith testified before the Atomic Energy Committee that the Communist influence was responsible for his being discharged. But I asked the Senator whether it is a fact that in the hearings, which consumed 7 days, and in which volumes of testimony were taken on the question of whether Mr. Smith should be discharged, there is not a word or line of testimony from Mr. Smith or from anyone else about any Communist activities.

Mr. BRICKER. I am not relying upon that; I am relying upon the statement made before the committee.

Mr. HILL. I understand the Senator is relying on the record before the committee, but would not the better record be the record made in 1939, at the time Mr. Smith was discharged? In other words, before Mr. Smith was discharged in 1939, there was a hearing to determine whether or not he should be discharged. The hearing consumed 7 days, comprising volume after volume of testimony, and in not one line or word in that testimony was any reference made to communistic activities. Will the Senator answer my question?

Mr. BRICKER. I have answered the question. I am relying upon the record made before our committee, and there is testimony in that record about it. I have not reviewed the other record. We are not trying Mr. Smith here, we are trying Mr. Lilienthal, who testified in this hearing that he did not know anything about that case. I am speaking to his record as an administrator.

Mr. HILL. The Senator is exactly right, the issue here is as to Mr. Lilienthal. But the Senator from Ohio is citing testimony from a witness, Mr. Smith. The witness, therefore, is subject to impeachment. The Senate has a right to know how much credence, how much confidence, it should place in this witness, James L. Smith, whose testimony the Senator is now citing. That is why I refer to the fact that in all the 7 days of hearings before Mr. Smith was discharged, on the question whether he should be discharged or should be continued in service, there was not one word from Smith or any other witness about any communistic activities.

Mr. BRICKER. I am not quoting Mr. Smith.

Mr. HILL. I go further and say that in 1938 or 1939 the same James L. Smith testified before the special investigating committee of which the late Senator Donahey of Ohio was chairman, a joint committee of the House and Senate, investigating complaints about the TVA, and not one word of his testimony before that committee makes any mention of any communistic activities, or anything of the kind.

Mr. BRICKER. The Senator will note what I have said. I have not quoted from Mr. Smith's testimony, but, for the purposes of this record and in arriving at my determination to vote against Mr. Lilienthal, I have cited the fact that Mr. Smith had been a loyal employee, that he was discharged when the radicals took after him, and that Mr. Lilienthal testified he knew nothing about the case.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. All I want to say is that the Senator is right; that in 1947 Mr. Smith did make that statement before the Senator's committee on atomic energy, but in 1939, when there were hearings to determine whether or not Mr. Smith should be discharged and just before he was discharged—and he had a good lawyer, by the way, representing him at the hearing—not one word was said about any communistic activities or about the fact that the Communists were trying to have Mr. Smith discharged.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. HAWKES. I understand perfectly what the Senator from Ohio is talking about. He is discussing the record that was before his committee, the record with which he is familiar.

I should like to leave this thought with the Senator: There have been millions of men who have been discharged in the United States who did not know at the time why they were discharged; and it is very conceivable that this man Smith, at the time of the first hearing, did not know the sinister efforts being made against him by communistic influences in the TVA. Communists do not always openly announce their purposes or objectives. When Mr. Smith found out about it he had a perfect right to bring it to the forefront and put it before the committee of which the Senator from Ohio is a member.

Mr. BRICKER. The Senator is entirely correct. I have not read the record to which he refers, but I do know of many instances of men having been railroaded out of their jobs in the Federal Government because someone set out to "get them," and the Federal Civil Service Commission gave them very little protection.

Mr. OVERTON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. OVERTON. It developed during the hearing before the Public Works Committee of the Senate that Smith's attorney, whom the Senator from Alabama described as a very able attorney, was an attorney of the TVA, selected by the TVA to represent Smith. That attorney was not an attorney of Smith's own choice.

The charges were brought by the UPWA—United Public Workers of America—which was recognized then, and is recognized now, as a frontal organization for Communist activities. That organization was formed in the TVA with the consent of TVA to compel Smith to confer with them from time to time. They disagreed with Smith about this and about that, I think intentionally, and they preferred the charges, and when the charges were preferred TVA selected the attorney for Smith, and it was TVA prosecuting Smith and TVA defending Smith. Of course, there was very little evidence brought out favorable to Smith.

Mr. BRICKER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield a moment further?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. HILL. I think that if the Senator from Louisiana had read the record of the 7 days' hearings—I do not know that he did not read it, he certainly was not required to read it——

Mr. OVERTON. I heard the evidence before the committee.

Mr. HILL. I think that if the Senator from Louisiana had read those 7 days' hearings of testimony from Mr. Smith, he could reach but one conclusion, and that would be that Mr. Smith had an absolutely fair, impartial consideration of his case.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, many of the so-called Communists and radicals in the valley were adolescents enthusiastically working in the field, but somebody higher up was working at the job, agitating it, and promoting the activities. In my judgment, that inspiration was within the TVA itself. Such activities might not be serious in the TVA, but they would be very serious in the Atomic Energy set-up. Moreover, employees of the TVA were engaged in activities outside of their duties which would bring discredit to the record of the administration of that Authority. There was testimony that the employees of the TVA were involved in agitating a strike, involved in labor organization disputes within the valley, involved with Guild difficulties with the newspapers of the community. So in the test of choosing men to work with him, which is a very important matter, Mr. Lilienthal does not measure up to a great or even a good administrator.

And now what is Mr. Lilienthal's record since assuming the responsibilities of Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission? That is a most important question.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. McMAHON. Before the Senator proceeds to another aspect of the subject, he is not unaware of the fact, of course, that some of the most prominent businessmen from the Tennessee Valley came before the committee and testified as to the high esteem in which Lilienthal is held in the valley. Of course, the Senator is aware of that.

Mr. BRICKER. I have heard the testimony, and I have tried to analyze it. Practically all of them have had favors of some kind from the TVA under Mr. Lilienthal's administration, but more significant than that is the fact that not one of those with whom he had been associated in TVA, in the administration of that Authority, came here to testify for Mr. Lilienthal, with the exception of Dr. A. E. Morgan, who testified against him.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. HILL. Did the Senator hear the testimony of Mr. Schlemmer?

Mr. BRICKER. Yes; not only that, but I rode downtown in a taxicab with him that day after his testimony.

Mr. HILL. He is the head of a large woolen mill in Chattanooga, one of the largest in the South, and has worked with Mr. Lilienthal on TVA. Of course, the employees of TVA did not come here and testify. If they had, some would have said, "He just brought these men up here."

Mr. BRICKER. I said "associates," not "employees."

Mr. HILL. Mr. Schlemmer had worked with him. He is not with the TVA now. He is an independent businessman, who is operating a great mill at Chattanooga.

Mr. BRICKER. I think the testimony was, if I am not mistaken, that he was buying power from Mr. Lilienthal, and had very fine relations with him.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator should undertake to exclude everybody who is getting power from the TVA, there would be very few left to testify.

Mr. BRICKER. In the valley, that is.

Mr. HILL. In the valley, of course. The TVA serves everybody, from the humblest citizen to the greatest industrial plant.

Mr. BRICKER. That is exactly true of the operations of the TVA in the valley.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. BRICKER. Has the Senator a question to ask?

Mr. HILL. I was interested in the statement by the Senator that Mr. Lilienthal had not cooperated with the Department of Agriculture, and I was wondering whether there was testimony given, in sum and substance, to that effect, and whether that was one of the indictments.

Mr. BRICKER. Yes; but his experimental work in the TVA was exclusive of the authority of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will yield further, does he not realize that in doing that Mr. Lilienthal was doing exactly what Congress directed him to do, and that that has been one of the great things about the TVA. Instead of operating, as the Senator would term it, or as most of us term it, as a bureaucracy spreading out from Washington, all over the country, and trying to run everything from Washington, the TVA sought to get maximum cooperation and maximum use out of the local authorities within the valley. That is essentially why the farm organizations and other units so strongly favor Mr. Lilienthal.

Mr. BRICKER. It was also supported by Federal appropriations.

Let me proceed now, Mr. President, to the question of the record, since Mr. Lilienthal has assumed responsibility as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. At the end of the hearings, we finally received a report on the employees which had thus far been chosen by Mr. Lilienthal and his associates. It seems from the record that his associates had very little to do with the choosing. These records were certainly such as to challenge the interest, consideration, and thorough investigation by the committee. So at that meeting when we received this information, I moved first, that the committee employ competent counsel to make a thorough and intelligent investigation of these employees so that we might report it to the Senate. At the desire of the committee to vote and to report out these nominations that was turned down. Second, I asked that the personnel records of the Commission itself be put into the record before the Senate. That request was turned down on the ground that they were secret files. Finally, I asked that a complete analysis be made of those employees, especially where there might be some question as to their character, efficiency, or loyalty and that such analysis be included in the report of the committee to the Senate. That analysis was made but I do not think it is in the report. In order that it may be available to everyone I want to read to the Senate a memorandum, which is an analysis of the records of employees of the Atomic Energy Commission who had been chosen under Mr. Lilienthal's direction.

MARCH 10, 1947.

Memorandum to Senator BOURKE B. HICKENLOOPER.

Subject: Review of Atomic Energy Commission security files.

A careful review was made of certain of the security files on a few of the key employeess in the Washington headquarters of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, before he proceeds further with the reading?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I understood, in connection with the question asked by the Senator from Connecticut, that the law required that the FBI should make an investigation of all employees of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. BRICKER. That is the law, yes. That was enacted by the last session of Congress.

Mr. FERGUSON. Am I to understand now that the record shows that the FBI investigated only some of the employees of the Commission, and that the list presented is only a partial list of the employees?

Mr. BRICKER. That is all I have here.

Mr. FERGUSON. Can the Senator from Ohio state whether or not the record shows that the FBI ever investigated the members of the Commission? It is a rule, for instance in the Judiciary Committee, for us to ask the FBI and the Justice Department to investigate the record of individuals appointed to be judges of United States courts. The FBI makes the investigation and submits the report to the Justice Department, and the report is available to the Committee on the Judiciary. I assume that the members who were appointed to the Atomic Commission are somewhat like judicial officers. They hold high position. Was there or was there not an investigation made of the members of the Commission, either before they were named or after they were named?

Mr. BRICKER. If the Senator please, as soon as I finish with the matter I am now discussing, I shall make a complete statement on that point:

A careful review was made of certain of the security files on a few of the key employees in the Washington headquarters of the Atomic Energy Commission. A total of 23 files was reviewed, and out of this number, derogatory information of a significant nature was developed in 5 cases.

A brief summary—

And this is not mine—

A brief summary of the derogatory information in these cases is listed below:

I am reading from that summary.

1. John Lancaster Burling, age 34, married, attorney, member of the Atomic Energy Commission legal staff. As a member of the United States Department of Justice, Office of Alien Enemy Control Unit from 1941 to 1946, Burling is reported to have given to an unauthorized individual information from Government files concerning an enemy alien. The file contains no further information concerning this incident.

I want to say, Mr. President, that anyone who would give out secret files of any department of the Government, important or unimportant, has no business on the legal staff of the Atomic Energy Commission.

2. Herbert S. Marks, age 39, divorced, general counsel of the Atomic Energy Commission, previously employed in a legal capacity at TVA and Bonneville from 1935 to 1940. Associated Gas & Electric Corp., New York City, 1940–41. War Production Board, 1941–45. Department of State (special assistant to Secretary), 1945–46. The record discloses that the applicant, Herbert S. Marks, is a strong advocate of state socialism. His integrity has been questioned by a number of people interviewed. He is said to have followed a policy of expediency in handling his work. He is believed by many to be completely a self-server. He has spoken in the defense of a number of left-wing individuals and groups. He is, or has been, a member of the Lawyers Guild and of the United Federal Workers. He was refused—

Hear me!—

He was refused a commission in the Navy because he "did not possess the requisite qualifications for appointment" (wording taken from a letter from Navy Bureau of Personnel to Marks).

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. As a matter of fact, does not the record show that there was no information as to whether the disqualification was because of his lack of ability to pass the physical requirements of the Navy or for some other reasons?

Mr. BRICKER. The Senator may remember that at the hearing I asked that that particular point be investigated. The record was sent back and a further check was made, and the record as it stands here now was confirmed. So there is no evidence any place that the disqualification was of a physical character, but rather that Marks was rejected because he was not qualified by reason of his left-wing associations, and I have read to the Senate the recital that was made in the record.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Unless the Senator has some additional information than was disclosed to the committee, there is nothing on the record submitted to the committee that would indicate whether he was rejected because he did not pass the physical test, did not have the physical qualifications required by the Navy, or for some other reason.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Is the able Senator from Ohio able to tell the Senate why the Navy files were not placed in the record, and why an investigation was not made to ascertain whether or not the cause was a physical defect or a mental defect?

Mr. BRICKER. I asked for that information, and, so far as I know, the investigation was made, and the action taken was based entirely upon the record, of which this is a review. Has the Senator from California read that record?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Yes.

Mr. BRICKER. Completely?

Mr. KNOWLAND. That which was submitted to the Senate.

Mr. BRICKER. Has the Senator read only the survey, or has he read the complete record?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have read the survey.

Mr. BRICKER. I have read the complete record, and there is nothing in it anywhere to indicate that any physical defect prevented Mr. Marks receiving a commission. I think the remainder of the review, or synopsis, rather, will clarify that in the Senator's mind.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. Is it not true that the remarkable course was taken by the friends of Mr. Lilienthal of presenting character witnesses as to Mr. Marks, who was not at all on trial before the committee? Were not several character witnesses for Herman S. Marks produced, and did they not testify in order to make a showing for him, and was that not done because it was realized that something was wrong with him?

Mr. BRICKER. I did not know at the time the reason why they were produced, but that might be the reason.

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. I ask the Senator if it is not true that the record discloses that Mr. Marks resigned from the Lawyers Guild at the time of the split in that organization, when those who did not want to go along with what some believed were Communist tendencies and leanings resigned from the organization at the same time, if I am not mistaken, that Justice Robert Jackson resigned?

Is it not further true, I will ask the Senator, that the so-called character testimonials which were introduced in the record came only after a savage attack was made upon Marks' character? In view of the attacks which had been made on Marks' character, I am sure the Senator from Tennessee would not suggest that it was improper that he should call in, or try to have called in on his behalf individuals who could testify as to his real character.

I will ask the Senator further if among those who testified to Mr. Marks' character were not Mr. Dean Acheson, the Acting Secretary of State; Mr. Philip D. Reed, of General Electric; Mr. Donald Nelson, former Chairman of WPB; and a gentleman associated with the Detroit Electric Co. who worked with Mr. Marks under fire in London? The Senator from Ohio certainly remembers that character testimony.

Mr. BRICKER. I do not remember the testimony as suggested here. I remember witnesses came before the committee and testified for Mr. Marks, as did John Lord O'Brian also.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. I am interested in the remarks just made by the Senator, or rather the portion of his prepared statement from which he read concerning the reasons why Mr. Marks was refused a commission in the Navy, or admission into the Navy. Which was it?

Mr. BRICKER. He was refused a commission in the Navy upon his application for a commission.

Mr. STEWART. What was the basis for the refusal? Will the Senator state that again?

Mr. BRICKER. He was refused a commission in the Navy because he—and I quote from the Navy files—"did not possess the requisite qualifications for appointment." In parentheses appear the words "wording taken from a letter from Navy Bureau of Personnel to Marks."

Mr. STEWART. The question asked by the Senator from California would suggest that perhaps his lack of qualification was due to some physical defect. It seems to me that is an important point. Why can it not be ascertained whether or not the difficulty was physical or whether it was something else?

Mr. BRICKER. It may be well to have that done. I asked that the record be sent back for further investigation to determine that point, and the record came back with the same statement in it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Along that line, on page 317 of the record appears the testimony of Col. Walker L. Cisler, Chief Engineer of Power Plants, Detroit Edison Co., who testified under oath that during the war he had served overseas and then later was transferred to the European theater of operations where he became chief of the public utilities section of the supreme headquarters, Allied Expeditionary Forces, as a member of General Eisenhower's staff. That is what Colonel Cisler testified, speaking of Mr. Marks:

> And I could give you instances of where these men, Mr. Marks among them, were right up where the firing was going on. And I recall particularly in the Netherlands we were trying to get power back so that coal mining could be resumed, because we realized the importance of getting that coal mining going.
> And the Germans had destroyed 80 percent of the power-generating facilities before they left. All that had to be repaired.
>
> During that period, Mr. Marks was with me. He traveled with me in a jeep and in a command car. He slept with me, and he ate with me. And I think I know the man. There is no question in my mind. He is a 100-percent American. He is in no sense a Communist nor does he have any communistic ideas. I think he is a man of sterling quality, a man of great loyalty to our form of government.

Mr. BRICKER. I thank the Senator. I appreciate his contribution.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me so I may ask a question of the Senator from California?

Mr. BRICKER. Yes.

Mr. STEWART. Did the Senator indicate a while ago that he had knowledge that Marks is unqualified physically?

Mr. KNOWLAND. No.

Mr. STEWART. I should like to know about that. It is a matter which to me seems important.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I merely raised the point based on the record I had seen and on the information which had been given the committee, whether the Senator from Ohio perhaps had information which we did not have and which was never produced in the record itself which would show that Marks had been rejected either for one or the other reasons. The wording that was used in the report could have been used had Marks been rejected because of lack of physical qualifications.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BRICKER. Let me ask a question of the Senator from California before I yield. A commission was refused Marks, was it not, on the ground that he did not possess the requisite qualifications for appointment?

Mr. KNOWLAND. That is correct. I think that reason could apply to either requisite physical qualifications or these other qualifications. I am not arguing that point with the Senator.

Mr. BRICKER. I have read many of the letters in this connection, and I believe that if the disqualification were physical the letters would have detailed what it was. The Senator may remember that I expressly asked that that matter be checked as well as one other point I shall refer to a little later on. The record was returned to the department, a further check was made, and there was no change in the language.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further so I may pursue the inquiry I was making?

Mr. BRICKER. I will yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. In a matter of this sort I do not think anything should be left simply to guess. We are asked to pass upon the qualifications of the men who are appointed as members of the Atomic Energy Commission, and we are in a way, in performing that function, acting as a jury. I never thought it was wise to leave matters to a jury to guess about. If the application of Marks for a commission in the Navy was turned down by the United States Navy because of communistic tendencies and he was not fit to receive a commission in the United States Navy, then, so far as I am concerned, he is unfit for any other Government employment. I should like to know the facts about that matter.

Mr. BRICKER. Perhaps the remainder of the statement with regard to Mr. Marks will give the Senator more light.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. Let me read the remainder of the statement. I think it will answer, in part, the question asked by the Senator from Tennessee.

I continue to read from the Rhodes report:

> The Navy Bureau of Personnel file further indicates that Marks "has a tendency to become allied and associated with radical actions and organizations. It has not been established that he is a radical himself, but the over-all impression is that his intelligence, energy, and enthusiasm have at times placed him in a position where his ethics and integrity have been criticized."

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. As I understand, that information comes from the Navy.

Mr. BRICKER. It is from the Navy personnel files.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. HILL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CAIN in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The evidence is in this very record that Mr. Marks attended Communist meetings in Tennessee at or near the TVA. I read from page 240 of the hearings:

> Senator McKELLAR. Now, I will ask you if Mrs. Elizabeth Winston Todd in this same Dies committee investigation did not testify to attending meetings with Frank D. Alexander, Melvin Siegel—

Incidentally, he has just been appointed on the Atomic Energy Commission, too—

> Herbert S. Marks, Nelson Travis Barr, Mr. Niehoff—

And various others. This evidence shows that he attended Communist meetings at Knoxville, Tenn.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. HILL. Of course, we do not know who made this investigation for the Navy. We do not know with whom the investigator talked. We do not know the source of his information, or upon what he based his report. We do not have the details as to who wrote the language in the Navy report. However, there is a gentleman whom I think all of us know, at least by reputation. I refer to Mr. John Lord O'Brian, of New York City. I think it would be the unanimous opinion of Members of the Senate that there is perhaps not an abler lawyer, a more estimable gentleman, and a finer American than John Lord O'Brian. As we all know, he is what is called a regular Republican. I suppose he has been a Republican all his life. Several years ago he was the Republican nominee for United States Senator from the State of New York. It seems to me that there could not be a better witness.

Mr. BRICKER. Does the Senator mean to imply that being a regular Republican is a matter of commendation or of criticism?

Mr. HILL. In the opinion of many, regularity is a virtue.

Mr. O'Brian testified before the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. I shall not read all his testimony, because I do not wish to delay the Senator's speech. However, he stated that he met Mr. Marks in the winter of 1934–35, when he was special counsel for the Tennessee Valley Authority. He related that he was in contact with Mr. Marks from the winter of 1934 and 1935 to the early spring of 1939. He said:

I worked on briefs, worked in conferences, conferred with witnesses, did all of the work incident to that type of case. Mr. Marks was there practically all that time. I finished that work in the early spring of 1939.

He gives further details about his work with Mr. Marks, and states that when he came here to be general counsel for the War Production Board the first person he sent for, the first man he brought into his organization, was Mr. Marks. Mr. O'Brian stated:

The first appointment I made when I came there, in addition to the lawyers that were already there—there were five or six lawyers there at that time—was Mr. Marks; because of his character and his ability, I sent for him. He was the first person I sent for. He was at that time one of the chief counsel for the receivers or trustees of the Associated Gas & Electric Co. of New York. The trustees had been appointed by the court. First he was reluctant to come, because he was receiving a slightly larger salary where he was. His wife was very ill. She died shortly thereafter. And he did not want to break up his home. But he accepted the appointment.

Mr. O'Brian then told about the work which Mr. Marks did as his assistant in the War Production Board. Perhaps the most difficult problem he had was the problem of power. He speaks of the long-standing conflict between what he called public power and private power, and how Mr. Marks headed the Power Division for months; and even when he was not the head of it he did most of the work for the division.

Mr. O'Brian further stated:

Personally I have always thought that of all the work done by the War Production Board, there was no single division which made a greater contribution to the war than the Power Division, because electric energy turned out to be the lifeblood of war production.

Mr. O'Brian told what Mr. Marks did in that Division. Finally he said:

But I know this man intimately. And any suggestion that he is a Communist or has communistic tendencies, or has subversive tendencies, is just sheer nonsense.

Now, I say that with a full understanding of what I am saying.

He is a man who, from what I have read in the papers, one would think was much like Chief Justice Vinson. Marks is a self-made lawyer. He has never been in politics. I don't think he has ever made a political speech in his life. He is an earnest, hard-working lawyer of extraordinary ability, and a very fine man, and has a rather shy personal character.

I submit to the Senator that in view of John Lord O'Brian's intimate knowledge of and association with Mr. Marks, not for a few weeks or months, but over a period of years, there could not be a better or more credible witness than this very great and able and distinguished man, John Lord O'Brian.

Mr. BRICKER. There has been no criticism of Mr. Marks' legal ability, so far as I know.

Mr. HILL. No; but——

Mr. BRICKER. Let me finish my statement. There has been no criticism of his legal ability. I have not tried to make any. John Lord O'Brian did testify for him. John Lord O'Brian is an excellent lawyer. I in no way reflect upon him or his judgment. He has related his contacts with Mr. Marks. John Lord O'Brian thought so much of him that he asked for his deferment from the draft in order that he might help him carry on his work. During the time he was doing such work for Mr. John Lord O'Brian, no doubt he felt exactly as he testified.

Mr. HILL. The Senator does not deny what he said, that it was sheer nonsense—

Mr. BRICKER. But it is not sheer nonsense when the United States Navy turns down an applicant for a commission because he is not qualified, and because he has been associated with leftist organizations. That is not sheer nonsense.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I will yield for a question, but not for the Senator to read the record further.

Mr. HILL. This man who has known him intimately and worked with him through the years says it is sheer nonsense to say or imply that he has any communistic tendencies.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. I think it is the responsibility of Members of this body to determine whether the assurance on the part of one individual attorney, whether he be from New York City or elsewhere, should be taken in lieu of the statement and recommendations of the Navy Department. So far as I am concerned, I should like more enlightenment on that score, so that we may know whether this man's appointment as chief counsel was either approved or recommended by Mr. Lilienthal.

Mr. BRICKER. It was recommended by Mr. Lilienthal, and he was brought to the Atomic Energy Commission by Mr. Lilienthal from TVA.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Then apparently, Mr. Lilienthal has completely disregarded the statement submitted by the Navy Department.

Mr. BRICKER. Evidently so.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. Before yielding to the Senator from Iowa, let me state that I asked at the hearing that a more complete investigation be made of all these appointees about whom there was any question, and that an attorney be chosen to make such complete investigation, in order that the Senate might have the truth and all the truth.

I now yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I ask the Senator to yield to me to make a correction. I know that the Senator is sincere in what he says. I merely wish to keep the record straight. Mr. Marks was employed by the TVA prior to the war.

Mr. BRICKER. From 1935 to 1940.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. He came to the Atomic Energy Commission from the State Department.

Mr. BRICKER. I did not mean to imply that he was brought there directly; but he was in TVA. I want the record to be completely accurate. It must be remembered that Mr. Lilienthal brought Mr. Marks into TVA in the first instance.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. There is no question about that.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. KEM. Is there anything in the record indicating that Mr. Marks was at any time suffering from a physical disability?

Mr. BRICKER. I know of nothing.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. Is there not some way in which the Senate can obtain the information from the Navy? I should like to know the actual facts. If they trailed him, as they might have done, and found that he went to places where he probably should not have gone and associated with people with whom he should not have associated I should like to know it. I think the Senate is entitled to know it. This man is chief counsel of one of the most important commissions ever created, and this body is called upon to consider the nominations of its members. I should like to know about it.

Mr. BRICKER. I agree that the Senate should know.

Mr. STEWART. I am not satisfied with the testimony which has been read here concerning Mr. Marks. I want to know what the Navy meant by its report.

Mr. BRICKER. I asked that the Senate might be advised about it.

Mr. STEWART. Is there any way in which the Senate can obtain that information?

Mr. BRICKER. That is up to the membership of the Senate. I shall make a motion to that effect at the end of my presentation.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator has been very kind and his yielding has been very helpful in clarifying the subject. I thank the Senator for his generosity in yielding. I am sure the Senator knows a most eminent citizen of his own State, a gentleman for whom I am sure he has the highest regard, a regard which I assure the Senator I share. I regret that the senior Senator from Ohio is not present on the floor of the Senate, probably having another engagment, because I should like to have him listen for just a moment to the estimate of the newly elected head of the Federation of Churches of Christ in America, Mr. Charles P. Taft. In a telegram to the committee on the subject of Mr. Marks, Mr. Taft said:

I had occasion to work extremely closely for 3 months almost daily with Herbert Marks, general counsel, Atomic Energy Commission, under circumstances which gave me full opportunity to know his loyalty to the United States and his economic views. Any such charges as have been made against him during the hearings on the confirmation of members of the Commission are without foundation and truly outrageous. Such baseless attacks on a person like Marks, whose ability would command high position in practice of our profession but who desires to give his life to the public service, are unpatriotic and seriously damaging to the progress of the United States. Glad to testify if heavy schedule during next 2 weeks would permit.

CHARLES P. TAFT.

Mr. BRICKER. I have a high regard for Mr. Taft. But he did not listen to the testimony; he does not know the facts which I have brought before the Senate; he knew nothing of the record except by personal contact with Marks in an official position. The telegram may be more persuasive with the senior Senator from Ohio than it is with the junior Senator.

The third man I wish to bring to the attention of the Senate is Mr. Richard O. Niehoff. I read further from the Rhodes report:

3. Richard O. Niehoff, age 39, married, employed as training specialist by TVA from December 3, 1935 to June 5, 1942. OPA and National Housing Agencies 1942–1946. State Department for a short period late in 1946. Training specialist for the Atomic Energy Commission. Niehoff, according to information contained in the security files of the Atomic Energy Commission, attended Communist meetings in the Knoxville area while employed at TVA. It appears that if these were not Communist Party meetings they were attended by Communists, and at these, Communist affairs were discussed.

4. James Thomas Ramey, age 32, married, member of the Tennessee Bar Association. Employed 1941–47 by TVA, first as an assistant to the public manager, later as senior attorney. According to a report in the Atomic Energy Commission security files, Ramey, in making application for a passport on or about April 20, 1937, crossed out the words "and defend" on the application and inserted in longhand following the words "United States" this statement: "and will so far as my conscience will allow, defend it." The report also discloses that as a student at Columbia University Law School, he became involved in an argument over the administration of the moot court, and during this caused to be printed inflammatory matter concerning the dean of the school. When called before the dean, Ramey admitted the statements were untrue. It was also reliably reported that while in the TVA legal department Ramey urged that certain evidence, which by the preponderant weight of authority was inadmissible, be brought to the attention of the court through some accidental extrajudicial method.

After this testimony was brought before the committee in executive session I asked if he might be a member of some religious faith which was, as a matter of principle and conscience, opposed to the taking of an oath to defend the Constitution of the United States. So far as I know, that record was sent back also; it is my understanding that it was sent back for the purpose of a check upon that question. But this is the record as it is now before the Atomic Energy Commission in its security files, and as it was presented to the committee which investigated these appointments.

I continue reading from the Rhodes report:

5. Joseph Volpe, age 33, married, member of the New Jersey Bar, present position deputy general counsel of Atomic Energy Commission. During the war Volpe served on the staff of Gen. L. R. Groves in the Manhattan project. In this position he was investigated, cleared for access to top secret information. It is to be noted that a thorough check and investigation of his background by the FBI failed to disclose any derogatory information concerning Volpe. However, as a result of investigation it was discovered that Volpe's brother, Edward, a New York garment worker, in 1944 applied for and was accepted in the membership of the Yonkers branch of the Tri-County Communist Political Association, 45 Warburton Avenue, Yonkers, N. Y., an affiliate of the Communist Party, United States of America.

I do not claim that Mr. Volpe was in any way responsible for his brother or for his brother's association with the Communist Party. There is nothing in the record which would damage Mr. Volpe's record. The only thing that caused concern was that although these records came to the Atomic Energy Commission on the 13th day of February, as I remember or the 15th day of February, they were not brought to the attention of the Commission, according to our information, until the 4th or 5th day of March. Perhaps by reason of poor administration somewhere in that establishment the Atomic Energy Commission failed to obtain the information as to its own appointees.

After a report on these records, I stated to the committee in executive session, with no member of the Commission present and with no employee of the committee present, that I intended to vote against Mr. Lilienthal's confirmation, and stated my reasons for it very definitely. I did that on the ground that here is positive proof that Mr. Lilienthal is carrying out in the Atomic Energy Commission the same kind of program that he instituted and permitted to be carried out in the TVA. Two of the employees, at least, to whom I have just referred, were personally brought by Mr. Lilienthal from the TVA. Here is proof positive that the appointee of the President tends toward the left, wants around him employees who are radically inclined, or else he pays no attention to such matters as I have just brought to the attention of the Senate.

Mr. President, please remember that that executive meeting took place on Friday. On Saturday morning I was called at my home in Columbus, Ohio, by a representative of a press association who gave almost a verbatim report of what I had said in the executive session of the committee. On Sunday, the next day, an article appeared in a newspaper giving practically what I have related here to you. But it was not until Monday that we voted, and not until after that that this information was made public by me.

I want also to bring to the attention of the Senate the personnel set-up that has been instituted thus far under Mr. Lilienthal, as Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission. The Atomic Energy Act provides for certain positions at certain salaries. Those positions have been filled. The law further provides that—

In the performance of its functions the Commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Commission. Such officers and employees shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and their compensation fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, except that to the extent the Commission deems such action necessary to the discharge of its responsibilities, personnel may be employed and their compensation fixed without regard to such laws.

Meaning the civil-service laws and the Classification Act.

I believe that provision is perfectly clear—that the Atomic Energy Commission was to effect an employment and salary scale within the range of all other Government operations as defined by the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, which provides a top limit of $10,000, except for the unusual and unforeseen position which might from time to time have to be filled. But what set-up has the Atomic Energy Commission created?

The following positions have been created and excepted from the Federal Classification Act:

First. Herbert S. Marks, general counsel, salary $14,000.

Second. Comptroller—now in process of selection—salary $14,000.

Third. Edwin E. Huddleson, deputy general counsel, AEC grade 17, initial salary $12,000.

Mr. President, they have not followed the civil-service classification, but they have set up an Atomic Energy Classification for their employees.

Fourth. Joseph Volpe, Deputy General Counsel, AEC grade 17, initial salary $12,000.

Fifth. G. Lyle Belsley, Director of Organization and Personnel, AEC grade 17, initial salary $12,000.

Sixth. Paul W. Ager, Director, Office of Budget, AEC grade 17, initial salary $12,000—effective February 10, 1947.

Seventh. W. J. Williams. Deputy General Manager for Field Operations, AEC grade 17, initial salary $12,000.

Eighth. John A. Derry, Assistant to General Manager, AEC grade 16, initial salary $10,000.

Ninth. Richard O. Niehoff, Assistant to General Manager, AEC grade 16, initial salary $10,000.

Tenth. Deputy general managers (in process) AEC grade 17, initial salary $12,000. I do not know how many deputy general managers they intend to appoint.

Eleventh. Other directors of offices and key technical positions at AEC grades 16 and 17.

All this, Mr. President, is under this new Atomic Energy Commission set-up, without regard to the civil-service laws or the salary schedules of the other departments of the Government.

Furthermore, Mr. President, the Commission has generously provided that all those in so-called AEC grades 16 and 17 will be granted a $1,000 increase in each of the next 2 years. Does further evidence have to be introduced that Mr. Lilienthal cannot live within the framework of established Government practice? Mr. President, the general counsel and comptroller of the Atomic Energy Commission, in violation of the spirit and in my judgment the letter of the law, are now being paid more than the Solicitor General of the United States and more than the Comptroller General of the United States.

There were many other positions ranging from $9,700 down to $3,773 under the Atomic Energy Commission grade. There were likewise 16 part-time consultants employed at $40 per diem. This shows that the Chairman appointed by the President has a peculiar capacity for spending money and disregarding the ordinary standards set up by this Congress. In the face of such facts, how can Mr. Lilienthal be claimed to be a great or even a good administrator?

Moreover, the chairman of the Senate committee requested of the President a report on the appointees to the Commission and the General Manager. I read that letter and the President's reply:

FEBRUARY 25, 1947.

Hon. HARRY S. TRUMAN,
President of the United States,
The White House, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy is approaching the close of its hearings and investigation upon the matter of qualifications of your appointees to the Atomic Energy Commission and the General Manager thereof. The committee is anxious to complete its work in order that a report to the Senate can be made in this most important matter at the earliest possible moment.

While the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 specifically authorized the joint committee to utilize the service, information, facilities, and personnel of the departments and establishments of Government, the Senate section, sitting as such, does not seem to possess this authority and the Members of the Senate section believe that justifiable criticism can be directed if we do not exhaust all reasonable avenues for the securing of information upon which to base our final recommendation.

Because these are Presidential appointments the committee feels this matter should be taken up with you directly and primarily. The committee is also of the opinion that we will be asked on the floor of the Senate whether or not we have secured all available information.

The importance of these appointments being great, the committee feels obligated to respectfully request authority from you to any investigating agencies of the executive or administrative branches of Government to put into the hands of the committee all information possessed by any such agency or branch bearing upon each of the appointees to the Commission and the General Manager thereof. The committee members further feel that it will be most helpful if you can see fit to make available to the committee such information and reports upon these appointees as may be possessed by you.

Among the agencies of Government from which the committee would desire information are, the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Army and Navy Intelligence Departments, the Intelligence Section of the Manhattan District, and such other departments and agencies as might have available information.

The appointees to the Commission, of course, are Mr. David E. Lilienthal, Chairman; Dr. Robert F. Bacher; Mr. Sumner T. Pike; Mr. William W. Waymack; Mr. Lewis L. Strauss; Mr. Carroll L. Wilson, General Manager.

The committee desires that I express our appreciation to you for your cooperation in this matter, and again I state that this matter is being respectfully submitted to you, rather than being taken up by the committee directly with the agencies involved.

Because the committee feels the urgency of taking final action at the earliest possible moment, this letter is being delivered to you by hand, with the hope that your action in connection herewith may be had at the earliest possible moment.

I have the honor to remain,
Most respectfully yours,
B. B. HICKENLOOPER,
Chairman, Senate Section,
Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

That letter was answered on the 1st day of March 1947 by the President, as follows:

MARCH 1, 1947.

Hon. B. B. HICKENLOOPER,
Chairman, Senate Section,
Joint Committee on Atomic Energy,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR HICKENLOOPER: I have your letter of February 25, in which you advise that the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy submits the request that I authorize the investigating agencies of the executive branch of the Government to present to the committee all information possessed by any such agency bearing upon each of the appointees to the Atomic Energy Commission and the General Manager of such Commission.

It has long been the established policy that all such investigative reports are confidential documents of the executive department of the Government and that congressional or public access to them would not be in the public interest. I believe that it would be unwise to change this established policy and to set a precedent that would seriously prejudice the future usefulness of these investigating agencies.

For your information, be advised that the records of the investigating agencies of the executive branch of the Government were checked at the time the appointees in question were named to the Commission.

No derogatory information was contained in any report. Before answering your letter of February 25, I have had a current check made of the records of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, the Army and Navy Intelligence Departments and the intelligence section of the Manhattan District, and I wish to advise you that no derogatory information with reference to any of the appointees to the Commission, or with reference to the general manager of the Commission is contained in the files of these agencies.

Very sincerely yours,
HARRY S. TRUMAN.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I take it from the letter of the President that he merely indicates that the files of the FBI and the other files do not show anything derogatory to any of the members. Does the Senator know whether or not that indicates that the FBI ever made an investigation, or is the reference merely to their regular, normal files of clippings and things which may be mailed to them?

Mr. BRICKER. The letter was written, I understand, on the basis of what was before these various boards at the time. No investigation was made. I say advisedly, and I think on authority, that no investigation was made of any member of this Commission when he was appointed. No investigation has been made since that time of any member of the Commission, or of the general manager, and no investigation was requested by the President of the United States.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The question undoubtedly will recur again during the debate, so I feel I should clear it up.

Immediately following this letter I took the trouble to make inquiry, and I can assure the Senator that it is a fact that the FBI has never made an investigation of any member of the Commission or the general manager. I do not say that as affecting either side of this argument, but in the interest of having the facts on this issue, which we might as well establish at this time.

Mr. BRICKER. I think the truth of the matter is what all of us are trying to determine.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so that I may ask the Senator from Iowa a question?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator find in the law that the joint committee, if it desired to hold a joint session, could have the FBI make an investigation?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Without doubt the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy has full authority—I have forgotten the exact language—to utilize the services, facilities, personnel, and equipment of all departments and agencies of the Government, which would include the FBI, in my opinion, in matters coming strictly within the jurisdiction of the joint committee. This was not the joint committee acting. This was a committee of the Senate, but, also, in my opinion—and I defer to others who are more familiar with the practice than I—the Senate section of the joint committee is a committee of the Senate, and did not have the authority to command the services of the FBI in an investigation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Will the Senator yield for a further question of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Does the Senator from Iowa agree that the law provides that the joint committee could use the FBI to investigate the manager or any member of the Commission or any employee of the Commission?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Without the slightest doubt.

Mr. FERGUSON. I thank the Senator.

Mr. BRICKER. In order to bring to the attention of the Senate the attitude of the Chief Executive, the President's letter said:

> It has long been the established policy that all such investigative reports are confidential documents of the executive department of the Government and that congressional or public access to them would not be in the public interest.

It might require legislation.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. STEWART. In view of the statement made by the able chairman of the Senate committee, I wish to ask whether or not any effort was made to have the FBI investigate any of the members of the Commission.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Is the Senator directing the question to me?

Mr. STEWART. Yes; as chairman of the committee.

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I can say to the Senator from Tennessee that the committee authorized and directed, and I carried out the authorization and direction, that I get in touch with the FBI to request an investigation, if we were authorized to have one. The FBI—and I agreed—said they had no authority to conduct such an investigation, under the circumstances. These were Presidential appointments, and while the atomic-energy law requires that all employees of the Commission itself be investigated by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, that does not apply to the appointees to the Commission.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator means those who are employed by the Commission?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. That is correct. Therefore, when we encountered that prohibition of law, or custom, or whatever the situation is, as affecting these files as Executive files, we then took up the matter, and I wrote the letter to the President which was quoted a moment ago by the Senator from Ohio. Because they were Presidential appointees, and we took it up directly with him, with the request that this information be furnished us.

Mr. STEWART. The Senator knows that it is customary to have FBI investigations of men who are nominated for Federal judgeships and who have to be confirmed by this body. Is there some provision in the law creating this commission which prohibits such an investigation?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, if the Senator from Ohio will yield for an answer——

Mr. BRICKER. I yield further.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. It is my understanding that the investigations of Federal judges and United States attorneys——

Mr. STEWART. They are likewise Presidential appointments.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Coming, as they do, under the Department of Justice, the Department of Justice itself is charged with the responsibility of making the investigations. The Federal Bureau of Investigation is an arm of the Department of Justice, and the Department of Justice, which in turn is charged with the responsibility for the qualifications of such appointees, uses in turn its subordinate department in order to inform itself, and in turn makes the recommendations to the Judiciary Committee. Outside of that, unless specifically directed, they take the position that they have no authority to conduct investigations for anyone except the Attorney General and the President, or as specifically directed by law.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield so that I may ask a question of the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRICKER. I yield.

Mr. KEM. It has been suggested that Mr. Marks may have been suffering from a physical disability at the time he was refused a commission in the Navy. I should like to ask the Senator if his committee investigated as to whether Mr. Marks was under a physical disability at that time.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Ohio has accurately stated the procedure we followed. We had access eventually to the information files of the Atomic Energy Commission, which contained the report to which the Senator from Ohio referred, and the report did not clarify the reason. We sent back the report for further check, and a check consisting of several pages was added to the report. By that time the hearing was fairly well at the end, and the language of the original report was not altered, changed, or amplified, as a matter of fact.

Mr. KEM. Was Mr. Marks before the committee as a witness?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. Marks was not before the committee as a witness. It must be borne in mind that the name of Mr. Marks was not before the Senate for confirmation.

Mr. KEM. Was there any reason why he should not be called as a witness?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. None whatever.

Mr. KEM. Was there any reason why he could not be asked, "Were you under a physical disability at the time you were refused a commission in the United States Navy?"

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. There was no reason whatever.

Mr. STEWART. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one more observation?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I should like to suggest that the question of personnel, I think, in the minds of most of the members of the committee, is largely a matter of administrative policy and is not necessarily fundamental in connection with the matter of confirmation of appointees to a commission. I think the Senator from Ohio perhaps places a little different interpretation upon certain qualities and qualifications than other members of the committee do, and perhaps he ascribes greater importance to that aspect of the matter than do the other members of the committee. But Mr. Marks was not before the committee for confirmation. He is an administrative or an executive employee, depending on his duties with the Commission.

Mr. KEM. As chairman of the committee, does the Senator from Iowa want the Senate to understand that there is no reason to believe that the rejection may have been on the ground of a physical disability?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, I would be totally unfair either to those who support Mr. Marks or those who oppose him, if I drew any conclusions other than the conclusions that any Member can draw from the language contained in the record.

Mr. KEM. There is nothing on that point in the record?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I do not assume that the report conclusively says that he was unfit because of his social or broad political beliefs, nor do I assume that he was unfit because of physical disability. I can only rely on the printed statement in the record. I would have to make up my conclusions from that, and they are not clear.

Mr. KEM. I regret the Senator from Iowa cannot enlighten the Senate further.

Mr. STEWART and Mr. FERGUSON addressed the chair.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I yield first to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. STEWART. I understand Mr. Marks has been employed as chief counsel for the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. BRICKER. That is right.

Mr. STEWART. Is it the Senator's understanding, then, that a correct interpretation of the law requires that Mr. Marks be investigated and reported on as an employee?

Mr. BRICKER. That is my understanding.

Mr. STEWART. As well as any one of the employees?

Mr. BRICKER. He is one of the employees.

Mr. STEWART. Has that been done?

Mr. BRICKER. It has been done for the Atomic Energy Commission by the FBI.

Mr. STEWART. Is the report available to the committee and to the Senate?

Mr. BRICKER. I cannot say; but a brief synopsis of the report was read by me a moment ago.

Mr. STEWART. That is the source of the Senator's information about the action by the Navy?

Mr. BRICKER. That is correct. That is only a portion of it.

Mr. President, I have just read the President's letter to the chairman of the Atomic Energy Committee. The President, no doubt, felt that there was nothing derogatory in the record of these men, otherwise it would have been a crime to appoint them, and he would not have done it. But in this important responsibility the Senate should not be required to rely upon the judgment of the President. Before we vote, we should have available to us these records in order that we can decide for ourselves if they contain any derogatory information. I am advised, as I said a moment ago, that no investigation has been made by the Department of Justice, the FBI, or any other department of the Government of the members of this Commission or the General Manager, and that the President did not ask for any such investigation. Such an investigation, I submit, should be made and this committee and the Senate should know the facts. The partial information that we have succeeded in getting—that which I have referred to regarding the employees hired by the Commission—came to us at the very end of the deliberations. Fragmentary as it is, that information not only reflects upon the ability of Mr. Lilienthal as an administrator but, in my judgment, proves his utter incompetence to build about him an organization to protect the interests of the American people in this vital field of atomic energy. One who was turned down by the Navy, one who qualified his oath of allegiance to his country, and others with leftist leanings reflecting upon their integrity and their loyalty to the country certainly and undoubtedly ought to be sufficient to convince the Senate of the necessity of denying confirmation to Mr. Lilienthal.

Here is a project that represents an investment of the American people of over $2,000,000,000. It does not belong to the scientists, it does not belong to the Army, it does not belong to the administration, it does not belong to the left-wingers, it does not belong to any group of our people, but it does belong to the whole people of America, and it should never be put in the hands of doubtful persons. Before my vote in the committee, I received hundreds of letters. They were divided about evenly for and against Mr. Lilienthal. Since my vote in the committee I have received 322 letters and telegrams approving my action, and only 46 disapproving it. There is great doubt in the minds of the American people as to the competence of Mr. Lilienthal. I know there are grave doubts in the minds of many Senators. I likewise feel that there are but few on the floor of this Senate who would in the first instance have chosen Mr. Lilienthal for this vitally important place.

This is our last chance to clean up this organization. The Senate cannot police the job. We cannot fire the employees already chosen or hereafter to be chosen by Mr. Lilienthal and his associates. I am not voting against Mr. Lilienthal as an individual. I like him personally, but I do doubt his ability to do the job in the interest of the American people. He is not by any fair or true test a great or even a good administrator. I am voting for America, for my people, their safety and their security, and, it may be, for the betterment of the whole wide world. If we fail here, the results may be terrible; but if this job is properly done, the world may well have reason to acclaim our patriotism and our courage.

So, Mr. President, I desire to submit a motion. I move—

First. That the nominations of David E. Lilienthal, Robert F. Bacher, Sumner T. Pike, Lewis L. Strauss, and William W. Waymack to be Commissioners of the Atomic Energy Commission, and the nomination of Carroll L. Wilson to be General Manager of such Commission, be recommitted to the Senate members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy for their further consideration; and Second. That the Senate members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy be authorized and directed to investigate the records of all officers and employees heretofore appointed by the Atomic Energy Commission, and to hold such hearings as may be necessary, with a view to ascertaining whether such Commission has acted in an improper or incompetent manner in the exercise of its powers of appointment; and Third. That the Senate members of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy request the Federal Bureau of Investigation to make a thorough investigation of each Commissioner of the Atomic Energy Commission and of the General Manager of such Commission, and to make a full and complete report concerning the results of such investigation to such Senate Members.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to recommit with instructions.

Mr. KNOWLAND and Mr. FERGUSON addressed the Chair.

Mr. BRICKER. I yield first to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. A parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Is the motion of the Senator from Ohio debatable?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is debatable, and it is in order.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, I yield the floor at this time.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] to recommit with instructions to the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy the nominations of members of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, early in March of this year I appeared before the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and informed the members about a certain Government corporation which I had been investigating. I told them that some of the facts I had obtained at that time pointed the finger of suspicion at one of the individuals whose name was before that committee for consideration. Unfortunately, at that time most of my report was based on suspicion only and for that reason I requested them to keep my report off the record. Perhaps this will explain why there is no mention of my report in the book on Senators' desks, but today I have on my desk a certified copy of the original charter of this corporation and also other certified facts and statements regarding the operations in the Tennessee Valley during the past 14 years.

Recently I showed a copy of the charter of this Government corporation, the TVA, to several Senators and asked them to assist in the investigation and render an opinion as to its legality. Yesterday the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] expressed his opinion as to the legality of this corporation, which can be found in the RECORD. Before presenting a copy of the charter for the RECORD, there are a few important facts to which I should like to call attention.

This corporation was so unusual that Auditor T. Coleman Andrews of the General Accounting Office in his audit report to Hon. Lindsay C. Warren, Comptroller of the United States, dated May 1, 1946, thought it necessary to include this statement:

> No act of Congress, Executive order, or Federal statute specifically authorized the creation of this corporation.

He further stated in his report that the ownership of the stock of this corporation by the United States Treasury was not consistent with any other cases. This corporation has often been referred to as a little farm project in the Tennessee Valley.

Mr. President, I wish to inform Members of this body just what kind of a little farm project this particular corporation is. First, the name of the corporation is the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc., the charter of which is recorded in book, Miscellaneous J, page 175, at the office of the secretary of state in Nashville, Tenn., under date of January 24, 1934. This particular corporation was organized, not by little Tennessee Valley farmers, as has been claimed, but by three men, namely, Arthur E. Morgan, Harcourt A. Morgan, and David E. Lilienthal. Mr. President, these men are not farmers; they are rather prominent employees of the Government.

In the organization of this corporation these men issued 100 shares of capital stock valued at $1,000, not in their own names, but in the name of the United States Government, but they retained unto themselves all the powers of administering the affairs and funds of the corporation, and it is expressly stated in the corporation's charter that the United States Government itself was owner of the stock in name only and would not even have the customary voting privileges.

Mr. President, perhaps under the circumstances it is just as well that the United States Government did not have any powers over this corporation, because I am informed that Members of Congress did not even know about the corporation until several years after it had been organized and in operation. In fact, I am informed that even yet they are unable to find in the record any act of Congress or Executive decree authorizing the creation of the corporation.

I wish to refer to some of the powers these men have under the charter of the corporation. Section 5 states that the minimum amount of capital with which the corporation shall commence business is $1,000. Section 7 states that the corporation is to have perpetual existence. Section 4 of the charter states that the stock of the corporation is to be subscribed for by the incorporators but is to be issued and held in the name of the United States of America. I invite attention to this statement contained in section 4:

> All rights and privileges of stockholders whatsoever, including voting rights, are to be exercised on behalf of the United States by the Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Section 9 further states that the number of the directors of the corporation shall be three, but that the directors need not be stockholders of the corporation. Election of the directors need not be by ballot. The directors shall have the power without the assent or vote of the stockholders to make or alter bylaws of the corporation.

We have a situation in which three men organized a perpetual Government corporation without the knowledge or consent of either Congress or the executive branch of the Government and conferred upon themselves the powers of czars, leaving the Government with only the financial responsibility.

Mr. President, we find under section 3 that the general nature and objectives of the business to be transacted and carried on by this corporation are as follows: To conduct and carry on the business of producing, raising, manufacturing, buying, selling, and dealing in farm products, livestock, goods, wares, and merchandise of every class and description; to lend or advance money; to guarantee the obligations or to endorse the notes of individuals, firms, corporations, or others with or without collateral or security of any kind whatsoever. Also included is the power to acquire by purchase, to hold, sell, or otherwise deal in stocks, bonds, or any other obligation or security of any corporation or corporations; to apply for, obtain, register, purchase, lease, own, use, sell, assign, or otherwise use or dispose of any copyrights, trade-marks, trade names, brands, labels, patent rights, letters patent of the United States or of any other country or government.

Mr. President, permit me to call your attention to the fact that under this charter these men have the power to trade, buy, or sell patents with any country in the world. That does not even except the atomic bomb.

In looking over the financial statements of this corporation I find that on March 12, 1934, it received Federal funds in the amount of $300,000. So far as I have been able to determine, the only consideration which the Federal Government received in return for this unauthorized $300,000 grant was a certificate for 100 shares of common stock, valued at $1,000, in a corporation which they did not even know existed.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should prefer not to yield until I complete this presentation. Then I shall be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. HILL. The Senator does not desire to yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not at this time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Delaware declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, in the event that that $300,000 should prove insufficient for the operations of this world-wide corporation we find, under section 3, paragraph D, that those men conferred upon themselves the power to borow money, to make and issue notes, bonds, debentures, obligations, and evidence of indebtedness of all kinds without any limit as to the amount—thousands, millions, or billions of dollars—all in the name of a corporation of the United States Government, which Congress did not know even existed. It is not my intention to attempt to rule on the legality of this corporation; but I cannot conceive how any man or group of men could be so presumptious as even to think that they had the moral right to confer upon themselves such great powers—powers which exceed even those conferred upon the President of the United States by the Constitution.

Apparently the incorporators of this corporation have explained all of this with the simple statement that the corporation was created during the depression era for the purpose of administering relief; but the mere fact that they created the corporation with unlimited, world-wide powers, and extended the life of the corporation in perpetuity, absolutely refutes that explanation.

Mr. President, I am not charging those men with ever having used those broad powers, nor can I say that they did not use them. The period between 1934 and 1945 seems to be a closed book, and one which so far it has been difficult to open. The only facts I have recently been able to obtain about the operation of this unusual Government corporation are as follows:

First. On March 12, 1934, the corporation received $300,000 of Federal funds without any authorization by Congress.

Second. In 1936 David Lilienthal and Harcourt A. Morgan exercised their powers under the charter to appoint two men on the board to act for them.

Third. David Lilienthal admits that he and his associates in organizing this corporation were acting in their capacities as individual citizens, and not in their capacity as Directors of the TVA.

Fourth. The Tennessee Valley Authority did make contributions to this corporation in the form of supplies, and also some of the personnel of this new corporation were on the pay roll of the TVA.

Fifth. In a letter written by T. Coleman Andrews to the Honorable Lindsay C. Warren, Comptroller General of the United States, under date of May 1, 1946, he pointed out that David Lilienthal and his associates had entered into an agreement on July 12, 1935, with the Land O' the Sky Mutual Association, Inc., a corporation of the State of North Carolina, whereby the said Land O' the Sky Co. would act as the disbursing and collecting agency of the TVAC.

Sixth. Moreover, in the same letter, Mr. Andrews told Mr. Warren that David Lilienthal and Mr. H. A. Morgan had appointed two substitutes to take their places on the board. Mr. Andrews further cautioned Mr. Warren that the new directors of this Government corporation, the TVAC, have not held a directors' meeting since February 20, 1941, and that all of the records of the corporation and all of the activities of the corporation have been under the supervision of the Land O' the Sky Co., who in turn have appointed a certain Mr. John E. Barr and conferred upon him the power to operate this Government corporation.

Seventh. There is known to be one note dated June 1, 1942, in the amount of $3,000, bearing interest at the rate of 2 percent, which John E. Barr, acting as manager for the TVAC, has loaned to the Land O' the Sky Co., and that note was unpaid as of Jnue 30, 1945. Mr. Barr is the manager of both the Government corporation and the Land O' the Sky Co. which received the loan.

Eighth. There is a so-called Mountain Valley Cooperative, Inc. (address and sponsors unknown at this time), and the TVAC owns 4,000 shares of their stock, valued at $20,000.

It is known that the TVAC has made a gift to this corporation, in which it owns stock, in the amount of $7,000, apparently in cash. We also find that this corporation is still operating and is now recognized as a corporation of the United States Government. Yet under the charter of the corporation the Congress has no control over this illegitimate offspring, and so far the Congress has not officially recognized it.

I also understand that John E. Barr has had complete control of that corporation ever since 1941. I sincerely doubt that there is any man in the United States except John E. Barr who actually knows all that has happened within that corporation since that time.

Mr. President, for a few moments I should like to examine a part of the record of the TVA itself, to see what has been going on within that organization.

After the incorporators of the TVAC—the new corporation—had excused their irregularities by claiming they were a relief agency sponsoring and financing the organization of cooperatives in the Tennessee Valley area, and then when I found in the 1946 Annual Report of the TVA a note stating that there were also operating in the area 175 cooperative organizations which were sponsored by the TVA itself, I became more than interested. Therefore, I began an investigation. I not only find that 175 corporations were formed in that area during the past 14 years, but I also find that the TVA itself with Government funds has subsidized those cooperatives to an extent as follows:

1942	$1,202,442.44
1943	1,472,767.26
1945	1,740,296.00
1946	2,066,511.00

Mr. President, I am sorry that those are all the figures I have been able to obtain in that connection. I do not know what happened in the other years. But those contributions were made by the TVA to those cooperatives, in the form of free merchandise, without any expense at all. I am not charging that the TVAC itself received any part of those contributions, since I have no proof. In fact, in a letter dated March 7, 1947, addressed to the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], and signed by David Lilienthal, he denied receiving any assistance. I quote from that letter:

> No funds were at any time advanced to it by congressional appropriation or by TVA.

But I also find that that statement is contradicted by a statement in a letter signed by Gordon Clapp, general manager of the TVA, and the man scheduled to take David Lilienthal's place on the Board. I now quote from Gordon Clapp's letter:

> The TVA did cooperate and assist in the objectives by making limited office supplies available to the TVAC and designating certain of TVA personnel to carry on the administrative functions of that corporation.

Mr. President, from that contradiction Senators can draw their own conclusions.

The officials of the TVA have tried to picture those organizations as being composed of groups of farmers engaged in reclamation projects in the Tennessee Valley. I have on my desk a certified copy of the charter of incorporation of one of those corporations, namely, the Norris Cooperative Society, Inc. I shall read a few sections from that charter to show what kind of cooperative organizations the Government has been sponsoring in that area with those millions of dollars. I read, first, a portion of the charter showing the type of business the cooperative was to engage in, or was engaged in:

> (b) To produce, manufacture, buy, sell, store, handle, process, transport, distribute, deliver, and/or generally deal in and with farm machinery, implements of husbandry, building materials, household goods, dry goods, clothing, groceries, meats, foodstuffs, milk, cream, and all dairy products, farm products and supplies, fuels of all kinds, gasoline, oils, greases, lubricants, and all manner of petroleum products, tires, tubes, and all automobile and motor-vehicle supplies and accessories, and commodities, produce, goods, wares, and merchandise and articles of commerce of whatsoever name, nature, character, or description; to conduct a general merchandising and mercantile business without limitation as to classes or products of merchandise; to grease, wash, repair, and otherwise service automobiles and motor vehicles and to perform and render other services to and for the owners of motor vehicles.

Mr. President, it is claimed that that organization was operating in the Tennessee Valley, but I find that the scope of operations of the organization was set forth in the charter as follows:

> To associate itself with other consumers' cooperative societies throughout the State, the United States, and foreign countries for purposes of mutual aid; to advance the consumers' cooperative movement as a system of business.

Further in the charter of incorporation we find the following, in section (i):

> The business or purpose of the society is from time to time to do any one or more of the acts and things hereinabove set forth and to have one or more offices to carry on all or any of its operations and business, and, without restriction or limit as to amount, to purchase or otherwise acquire, hold, own, mortgage, deal in, sell, convey, or otherwise dispose of real and personal property of every class and description, or rights or interests therein, in any of the States, Districts, Territories, colonies, or dependencies of the United States, and in any and all foreign countries.

Mr. President, as has been pointed out, the TVA officials have claimed that those cooperatives are composed of small farmers in the Tennessee Valley. I hold in my hand a list of the names of the incorporators of the Norris Cooperative Society, Inc. I shall read the names at this time. By the way, I wish to say that everyone of the incorporators is working for the United States Government. Thus, we find that we are not subsidizing small farmers in the Tennessee Valley, for the incorporators are Government employees. I now read their names:

R. G. Crossno, a creamery manager, drawing $2,000 a year from the Tennessee Valley Authority; J. W. Bradner, Jr., drawing $5,200 a year; R. L. Kidd, drawing $2,000 a year; Marie White, $4,000 a year; W. E. Lee, $1.25 an hour; Robert Brandau, $1,620 a year; L. W. Arthur, $2,600 a year; L. Bolling, $1,800 a year; and J. D. Williams, $3,200 a year.

Mr. President, there is not a farmer in the group.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at this point?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Can the Senator from Delaware advise us how many persons are required in order to incorporate a corporation in Tennessee? It would be interesting, in connection with the point now before us, to see whether they were acting merely as incorporators. I am very much impressed by the long list of names which has been read. Apparently, in incorporating that organization—under the laws of Tennessee, I assume—more incorporators than were necessary were used. Let me inquire whether the corporation is chartered under the laws of Tennessee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That corporation is chartered under the laws of the State of Tennessee, and the record of it is filed in the office of the Secretary of State of Tennessee, in Charter Book, Miscellaneous M, page 121, under date of May 7, 1935. I hold in my hand a certified copy of the charter.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let me say to the Senator that if more than the minimum number of incorporators was used, that would tend to remove from our minds the idea that what are known as dummy incorporators were used. If more than the minimum number of incorporators were used, that would seem to indicate that the incorporators were actual incorporators, and not, in fact, dummy incorporators.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question which may help to answer the query of the able Senator from West Virginia?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. First let me inquire the date of incorporation of the organization.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was incorporated on May 7, 1935.

Mr. FERGUSON. I may say for the record then, if the Senator will further yield, that in 1934, when the Tennessee Valley Cooperatives Association was formed—the organization about which the Senator first spoke—only three persons signed the articles of incorporation—indicating that in 1934 three were sufficient to incorporate.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I should like to say, following the remark of the able Senator from Michigan, that if only three were necessary to incorporate at the time of the creation of this corporation, then the use of a great number of names would show that they were in fact incorporators and real actors in the creation of the corporation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thank the Senator. I have here a certified copy of another of these cooperatives that were formed, named the Knoxville Cooperative Association, Inc. I shall not take the time of the Senate to read from this charter, but I will state that this group planned to engage in practically the same industries as those covered by the Norris Cooperative, and they have extended their authority to do business in any and all foreign countries. I shall read a list of the names of the incorporators of this particular corporation. I wish to say first that with one exception every single man listed as an incorporator is an employee of the United States Government.

By the way, a copy of this charter of the Knoxville Cooperative Association, Inc., is recorded in Book Miscellaneous M, page 125, under the date of May 8, 1935: Ned H. Sanford, $6,800; Paul T. David, $4,000; Bernard Frank, $4,500; L. Lancaster, $3,300; Howard P. Emerson,

$2,600; Cecil E. Pierce, $4,000; Laverne Burchfield, $2,600; William C. Bowen, $4,000; and Edward Thornhill, unknown, who apparently is not on the pay roll. In 1936, in an amendment, we find Bernard Frank, drawing $5,200, added his name to the charter, and Howard P. Emerson, engineer, drawing $3,200. Every man but one was on the pay roll of the United States Government.

Mr. President, during the course of my investigations I began to think that perhaps I was selecting the worst of the corporations out of a total of 175, so I went back to page 42 of the annual report of the TVA.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KEM in the chair). Does the Senator from Delaware yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should rather not yield at this time.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I should like to ask a question about the Knoxville Cooperative.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should prefer before yielding to place all this information in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On page 42 of the annual report of the TVA we find the Southwestern Virginia Cooperative Association, of Lebanon, Va., listed as a typical example of the cooperatives which they have sponsored. The report shows that TVA sold to this particular corporation 1,450 tons of fertilizer, and had assisted them in obtaining credit for $100,000. On page 42 of the report it is also shown that this corporation was capitalized at $10,000.

Here are some facts regarding this typical example which they did not reveal in their report. It is true that the TVA sold this corporation 1,450 tons of fertilizer, but I have concrete proof here that they also gave them free of charge 3,050 tons, with a market valuation in excess of $85,000, about which they did not tell us. I also find that the loan, instead of being $100,000, was $175,000, at an interest rate of 2½ percent.

Here we have a corporation capitalized at $10,000, and during 1946, the first year of business following their organization, the Government loaned them $175,000, and also gave them free of charge $85,000 worth of material for distribution to their customers.

It has been suggested that Congress should by law abolish the TVAC as a Government corporation; but I am not sure that we can do that. How can Congress abolish a Government corporation which so far the Congress has never created or authorized? I think the proper procedure in this case is for us by appropriate resolution to ask the Department of Justice to take action immediately to have the charter of this corporation revoked, and at the same time to institute proceeding to collect every dollar of the taxpayers' money, plus all interest charges, that has been wasted by these men in our name, and without our consent or authorization. It is time that we serve notice on all Government officials that they are going to be held accountable to the people for their actions. The old slogan that "The King can do no wrong" is dead, and we are not going to revive it again in the American form of government.

Mr. President, this is merely a part of the record of David Lilienthal, this great business executive, but if this is a fair sample of his ability and skill in management, then I shudder to think what we will find when we investigate the Tennessee Valley Authority, a corporation into which the Government of the United States has poured more than $700,000,000 during the past 14 years, and from which we have never yet had an accounting.

The Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission will have within his jurisdiction power to control the destiny of the civilization of the world. Such power must of necessity be entrusted only to those whose personal ambitions are without any shadow of doubt submerged in a consuming desire to serve and preserve civilization and our own constitutional form of government.

Mr. Lilienthal is a man whose entire life has been dedicated to the procurement of more and more power, and to accomplish this ambition he has defied all the laws of our land by helping to create a Government corporation and conferring upon himself and his associates unlimited powers, in perpetuity, and for the purpose of administering these powers he has secured $300,000, or perhaps even more of the taxpayers' money without seeking any authorization of Congress.

I think Mr. Lilienthal's philosophy is best described in these, his own, words:

> This Government, and every government, is and must be a government of men and not of laws.

Therefore, Mr. President, I cannot and will not join in voting to confirm the nomination of such a man to a position where he will hold in his hands the power of preservation or destruction of the entire world.

In conclusion, I ask unanimous consent to have included at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, a copy of the charter of the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc.

There being no objection, the charter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Witness our hands this 23d day of January 1934.

ARTHUR E. MORGAN,

DAVID E. LILIENTHAL.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to my colleague.

Mr. BUCK. Is the Senator able to tell us from his investigation what became of the profits these corporations made?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I cannot say what became of the profits of the corporations. Of course, we all know they are nontaxable, and, as cooperative organizations, they do not have to file any accounting with any department of the Government. That is provided in the law under which cooperatives are organized, and apparently that is the reason why they use the cooperative name. That is merely a thought; I cannot prove it.

Mr. BUCK. Does the Senator assume that such profits as there were were returned to the buyers in the form of dividends?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am suspicious of that, but I have no proof.

Mr. President, I have concluded from my investigation of the TVA and the activities of these corporations that David E. Lilienthal's fundamental conception of government is socialistic.

We have had pictured to us and we have had the Tennessee Valley Authority described to us as a corporation engaged in the production of power for the good of the Nation. They admit being in the fertilizer business. I have a list of 14 different businesses in which the TVA itself is engaged, in addition to power and fertilizer.

First, the TVA is manufacturing in its own plants, or having other plants manufacture, under their patents, the following: First, trailer threshers. I might say that we exported 500 of those from their plants last year. Hay driers, overhead sprinkling systems, refrigeration, both commercial freezers and lockers, seed distributors, lime spreaders, feed grinders, for extracting tannin from oak slabs. They are now constructing a distillation unit at Muscle Shoals for the manufacture of cedarwood oil, plastics from walnut shells, fodder yeast from wood, laminated flooring, prefabricated houses, and last but not least, kitchen flour mills.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio to recommit with instructions.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have yielded the floor.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I will say that I requested the Senator to yield earlier, but he said he would yield at the conclusion of his remarks, only.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. HILL. The Senator referred to a $300,000 check which the TVAC cooperative had received. Would the Senator state where the $300,000 came from?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was told that the $300,000 came from the FERA. I was also told that the check was made payable to the State of Tennessee, and endorsed over to this corporation. Later I was informed that that was not a true statement, so I went to the office, or had made a call to the office, of Lindsay Warren, the Comptroller General of the United States, and asked for a certified copy of the check. I asked for a certified copy of that check in order to find out how this money was given to this corporation. As had happened in several other cases of records, it seems that this check has become lost. I was told that possibly it was down in Louisiana, but, thus far, they have been unable to locate it. I do not know how the check was written. I only know that it had been claimed by both sides that it was written. I cannot understand why there is not somewhere in the department a record of that check, from which it could be seen who received the check and who cashed it.

Mr. HILL. The Senator referred to other checks having been lost. Will the Senator please state to what checks he refers?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not say other checks. I referred to other records.

Mr. HILL. To what other records does the Senator refer?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not care to go into that at this time, but we do not think that all the records have been furnished. Some may have been included in diaries, for instance.

Mr. HILL. I understood the Senator said some other checks or other records were lost. I want to know what other checks or what other records were lost. That is what I was referring to.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was referring to the $300,000 check. If the Senator from Alabama can assist me to obtain further information about this check, I shall be glad to have him do so.

Mr. HILL. I can assist the Senator by giving him the facts in this case, if he wants to get the facts.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I made it plain.

Mr. HILL. Did the Senator state that the application for this money was made by the Relief Administration of the State of Tennessee, under the Governor of Tennessee?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not state anything about how it was made, or by whom it was received, except that I said it was paid.

Mr. HILL. It was paid?

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield first to the Senator from Alabama, and I will later yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. HILL. The Senator realizes of course that this $300,000 was relief money, does he not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps I could answer that best by asking the Senator from Alabama a question.

Mr. HILL. I should be glad to answer a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Senator know about the $300,000 check before I mentioned it?

Mr. HILL. Oh, I knew about it when it came out in the testimony before the Public Works Committee, and I also knew about it from some past testimony with reference to the TVA. If the Senator will yield to me, I shall be glad to tell him what the situation was. The $300,000 was paid in January 1934 by the Federal Relief Administration here in Washington, through the State relief administration, in the State of Tennessee; application for the money having been made by the State of Tennessee Relief Administration to the Governor of the State of Tennessee.

The Senator will recall that the Federal Relief Administration was the relief agency that was used prior to WPA. That money, $300,000, was sent down there and, instead of using it in the form of doles, simply to give people money, that they might not starve, that they might have some food and some of the necessities of life, they proceeded to organize cooperative associations and to use the money to encourage the farmers by helping them plant their crops, setting up canneries for the canning of huckleberries and blueberries, which grow rather luxuriantly in that section, and of vegetables and truck crops of different kinds. The situation was very desperate. There was perhaps no other section of the country in which the farm people were in such desperate economic condition, in which there were so many of them without the means of livelihood. In fact, the situation was so desperate in many sections in that area that farmers and their families were forced to wear old fertilizer sacks as clothing to keep from going naked. So, instead of doling out this money, what they did was to set up cooperative associations, as I have said, to encourage the farmers to plant and to bring in their crops, to can their goods after they were brought in, and to distribute them. That is the story about this cooperative association.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I shall yield to the Senator in a moment. I should like to point out that this cooperative was not a relief agency, regardless of what may be said. It was not a relief agency, because it is still in operation. If it was a relief agency, why were the funds administered in the way described by the Senator? They were used to finance cooperatives who were not farmers. These men are not farmers. They are not wearing fertilizer sacks. They are drawing from $2,000 to $5,000 from the Federal pay roll. They are not in need of relief. There is absolutely no reason why the taxpayers of the United States should subsidize them to the extent of millions of dollars, through these cooperatives. I cannot say that they are all similar to the one I have been discussing, but I do say that the Senator does not know that they are not.

Mr. REVERCOMB and Mr. HILL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield first to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I thank the Senator. I am very much interested in the statement by the Senator from Alabama as to the purpose of this organization. I have here in my hand a certificate of incorporation issued by the State of Tennessee to the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, and I understand the Senator from Alabama to say that that was organized for the purpose of helping people by means of small cooperatives, in a time when relief was needed. If that be so, why did the directors of the Tennessee Valley Corporation organize this cooperative? Why did not those persons, the farmers or the people in their respective localities, organize the corporation? That is the first question. Why did the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority including Mr. Lilienthal, do it? The three of them organized this corporation for relief. I understand the money went to Tennesee; why did not local people who were interested in the relief organizations form the cooperatives? Will the Senator answer that?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I will say to the Senator in that connection that there was a desire on the part of Dr. A. E. Morgan and Mr. Lilienthal, working with the State FERA organization, the State relief organization, to help those farmers, or to try to help them get on their feet; which they did.

As the Senator has indicated, those cooperatives are in existence today and are operating without any Federal funds. They received the $300,000. That money enabled them to do the very thing they had sought to do, which was to lift the people out of their desperate condition, and also make provision for the future, which they have done.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. REVERCOMB addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware still has the floor. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield first to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, so much of a derogatory nature is being said about the State of Tennessee, that if the Senator will permit me I should like to say——

Mr. WILLIAMS. After the Senator from West Virginia has concluded I shall be glad to yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like to have the privilege of having something to say in defense of Tennessee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield later to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let me finish. The point I am aiming at is this: What authority did Mr. Lilienthal, as a Director of the Tennessee Valley Authority, have to organize a corporation of this kind? I think that has a very pertinent bearing upon the question before the Senate. I want to be advised upon that subject.

The character of Mr. Lilienthal is certainly of importance in connection with our consideration of his nomination to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission. As a member of the Tennessee Valley Authority did Mr. Lilienthal have legal authority to organize the corporation in question?

Mr. HILL. He certainly had authority under section 22 of the Tennessee Valley Authority Act to do the very thing he did. I will say to the Senator that the leading man in the organization and the leading man in this work of relief was not Mr. Lilienthal, but was Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, as the letter from the counsel of the TVA clearly shows.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let us not go off on the subject of Dr. Morgan. We are talking about Mr. Lilienthal.

Mr. HILL. The other day when the junior Senator from Michigan discussed this matter it seemed to be believed that the decision had been made by Mr. Lilienthal, whereas the record shows that the leader, the main guide of this organization, was Dr. A. E. Morgan rather than Mr. Lilienthal.

If the Senator will bear with me in that connection I should like to read a copy of the letter from Mr. W. A. Sutherland, the general solicitor of the TVA, addressed to Dr. A. E. Morgan, Chairman of the Tennessee Valley Authority, Knoxville, Tenn., under date of January 18, 1934. The Senator will recall that the cooperative organization was formed on January 25, 1934. The Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] read most of this letter, but I read the closing paragraph, as follows:

Since the matter is not to be handled by the Tennessee Valley Authority as such, the matter does not properly come before the directors' meeting of the Tennessee Valley Authority; but since you—are committing Dr. H. A. Morgan, and Mr. Lilienthal, I suppose you will want their approval of the plan before the letters are sent.

That is Dr. A. E. Morgan—

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, I think we are digressing. The point I am getting at, and I want information on it, is this: I want to know why Mr. Lilienthal, as a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, organized the cooperative corporation, and under what authority of law he did so.

Mr. HILL. I will say to the Senator that he and Dr. Arthur E. Morgan and Dr. H. A. Morgan did not organize it as directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority. They organized it as individuals. But the work they carried on with that cooperative organization, and which the Tennessee Valley Authority carried on with it, is clearly authorized in section 22 of the TVA Act.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let us see if he did not organize it as a director of the Tennessee Valley Authority. I read from the articles of incorporation:

The stock of the corporation is to be subscribed for by the incorporators and is to be issued and held in the name of the United States of America. All the rights and privileges of stockholders whatsoever, including voting rights, are to be exercised on behalf of the United States by the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority, acting severally, or by such person or persons as the said directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority shall appoint as their agent or agents to the same extent as if they were the actual owners thereof.

Let me ask: Can it be doubted for a moment under that language, that Mr. Lilienthal, whose name was signed as an incorporator, was not acting for the Tennessee Valley Authority when he said that only the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority could be directors of this new corporation; either they or their agents; and when they took the stock of the new corporation in the name of the United States of America and appointed their own agents as directors? Does the Senator then say that the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority were not acting in their positions as directors of the TVA?

Mr. HILL. No; but I say, Mr. President——

Mr. REVERCOMB. Let me finish. Were they not acting as directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority when in signing the articles of incorporation of the cooperative they limited those who could hold directorships in the new corporation to the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority?

Mr. HILL. I refer to the letter that the General Solicitor wrote to Dr. A. E. Morgan:

You will note—

And this is written by the man who drew up this charter—

You will note that I have provided that the corporation is to be formed by the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority and not by the Tennessee Valley Authority itself. I do not believe the Tennessee Valley Authority is authorized under the act creating it to organize other corporations or to hold the stock thereof.

At best, the right is certainly very doubtful. It would be just as easy for the directors to organize the corporation and hold the stock in trust for the United States or to take the stock in the name of the United States, as we have done with the Electric Home and Farm Authority, Inc.

That is exactly what the lawyer who drew up the charter said, and that is exactly what he advised Dr. Morgan after he had drawn it up.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I think the certificate of incorporation from which I have just read, and which has been made a part of the RECORD, will speak for itself. There can be no question that when this new corporation was organized by Mr. Lilienthal and the other two members of the directorate of the Tennessee Valley Authority, they specifically provided in the articles of incorporation that only the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority could be directors of this newly organized corporation. Either they or their agents had to be the directors of the new corporation.

They had the sole power of selecting the directors. There were no stockholders. There were no beneficiaries. There were no people in need who could elect directors of this corporation. The directors of the new corporation either had to be the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority or their selected agents. That provision is expressly placed in the articles of incorporation, and that limitation is placed upon it.

In my opinion, this provision is germane to the question of the appointment of Mr. Lilienthal to the Atomic Energy Commission to this extent. If Mr. Lilienthal is a man who, when given authority, will go beyond that authority, will act without authorization of law, will step beyond his authority and organize another corporation without legal authority to do so, and organize it and place the power in the directorate on which he is serving, or in his agents, I have grave doubt that we should want to place a man of that kind in charge of the Atomic Energy Commission, or make him a member of that Commission, or to have control of atomic energy. I am disturbed by that feature, because if Mr. Lilienthal did such a thing in the Tennessee Valley Authority, would he step beyond the law as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission? Those are the questions which arise in my mind on the subject. That is the reason I have discussed the articles of incorporation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to read at this point one paragraph for the RECORD. I read from the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933, section 2, paragraph 8, as follows:

No member of the said board shall during his continuance in office be engaged in any other business, but each member shall devote himself to the work of the corporation.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I promised I would yield to the Senator from Tennessee after the Senator from West Virginia had concluded.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I want to say that I do not recognize the right of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] to state facts concerning the conditions which existed in Tennessee in 1934. I happened to be a candidate for reelection in 1934, and canvassed the entire State, and I say that whoever told the Senator from Alabama that there were people in Tennessee wearing cotton sacks or other kind of sacks for clothes and were starving there, told him an untruth. I know the Senator from Alabama was not in the State then and did not see the conditions for himself. He does not know them personally. Whoever told him that told him an untruth.

Mr. President, I should like to say one thing further——

Mr. HILL. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. We listened to the Senator a while ago, and he would not be interrupted.

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator from Tennessee——

Mr. McKELLAR. Just a moment.

I went all over the State. As I stated, we had hard times in Tennessee, just as there were hard times all over the country. They were no worse and no better. We did not have any such times as have been described. I know personally that the statement which has been made is incorrect.

This corporation never made known to me what it was trying to do. It never made known to the people of Tennessee what it was going to do. It did not give to the people of Tennessee any of the $300,000 which it obtained from some other agency of the Government, whether it was the FERA or some other organization. No benefit and no relief came to the people of Tennessee from the use of the money. I understand that the corporation, dealing for itself, lost the entire $300,000 in those hard times. That is my information from Tennessee. I cannot vouch for that statement, but that is the best information I was able to get, after I learned for the first time about the corporation.

I keep up pretty well with the affairs of my State. I think I am fairly well known down there, and have been for a long time. I was well known at that particular time. The first time I ever heard of this corporation was when the distinguished Senator from Delaware found out about it and made the facts known to me. The corporation was a scheme for certain individuals to make money, and it seems that they lost money instead of making it.

I agree with the Senator from Delaware in everything he has said about entrusting one of the greatest offices of all time to a man who would conduct it as he has been conducting certain affairs in the locality wholly without authority. He organized a corporation which permitted him to do anything under God's sun. I cannot understand why the Senate should undertake to confirm the nomination of a man like that to such an office. I cannot understand how any Senator—even the Senator from Alabama, whom I have known for a long time, and who seems to be prejudiced in Mr. Lilienthal's favor—can vote for a man of that kind, who has conducted the office of Director of the Tennessee Valley Authority in the way in which he has conducted it, bringing no return to the people of the United States or to the Government of the United States. In a slick manner, behind other people's backs, he organized a corporation, not in the open light of day, but in a backhanded way.

It is not really a corporation. If I correctly remember the laws of Tennessee, I am quite sure that more than three individuals are required to organize a corporation. The application is on record, but I doubt if it was a legal corporation.

I thank the Senator from Delaware for yielding.

Mr. FERGUSON and Mr. HILL addressed the chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield first to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I gave the question of this corporation as much attention as I could, based upon the public records. The corporation was created, and then the mystery started.

Mr. McKELLAR. Exactly.

Mr. FERGUSON. The General Accounting Office was unable to look into it and make proper reports on it. We have very little evidence on the subject. The able Senator from West Virginia [Mr. REVERCOMB] raised the question of the motive. I think we ought to go into the motive behind the creation of the corporation by those three men.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Mr. President, will the Senator yield in order that I may ask the Senator from Michigan a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Not only should we inquire into the motive, but there is a very unusual provision in the certificate of incorporation that only the directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority may be directors of the corporation, and that they may appoint the directors. The directors are not elected in the usual way. If that activity is unlawful, and if Mr. Lilienthal engaged in it, the question is, Would he do the same thing as a member of the Atomic Energy Commission?

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order that I may answer the question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I believe I can give an adequate answer to the Senator's question.

These three men started under the Tennessee Valley Authority. They wanted to carry on some propaganda so they could control the lives and business of the people of Tennessee and the surrounding States. They found that in the opinion of their counsel they could not do so under the Tennessee Valley Authority, so they used the subterfuge of a corporation, acting in such a way, as the Senator from West Virginia has suggested, that no one else could operate the corporation. They wanted to distribute $300,000 of the taxpayers' money. They wanted to control every dollar, so that anyone in that valley who wanted any benefit from the cooperative would have to go to those three men and say, "Won't you please give me some of the Federal money?" I can read between the lines. If any man down there had said, "I will not be dominated by you," he would not have received one dollar of the taxpayers' money.

Mr. President, I think we should look into the charter, just as the able Senator from West Virginia did. There was a motive behind it. The motive was clear. Those three men wanted to dominate the lives of the people in that valley, and they wanted to do it with the taxpayers' money. They have done it. No wonder they can bring farmers and businessmen here to testify.

I should like to see a real investigation. I should like to see these nominations recommitted. I should like to hear from a representative of the Navy as to why the Navy will not approve Mr. Marks for even an ensign's commission in the United States Navy. We have had no explanation as to why there has not been a thorough examination of this subject. These five names are not in the record which the able Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] read. Why are they not in the record? Because the committee did not go down into the depths to ascertain the facts as to those men. The time has come when the Senate and the people of America ought to know all the facts. I think the able Senator from Delaware has done a fine job for the Senate in digging into this subject. This may be a small matter. I cannot find reference to it in the printed hearings.

Mr. McKELLAR. It is not there.

Mr. FERGUSON. Why not?

Mr. McKELLAR. That is one of the reasons why the nominations ought to be recommitted.

Mr. FERGUSON. It appeared to the committee that this question had no bearing on the issue. I think it has a great bearing.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me in order to keep the record straight?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The Senator from Michigan has asked a few questions.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to have the answers.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. The Senator from Delaware gave the answer a moment ago. He stated that he submitted this question to the committee in executive session because he did not have the facts, and he asked the committee to keep the subject in executive session.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like to ask the able Senator from Iowa why the Senator from Delaware was making this investigation when it was called to the attention of the committee. Why did not the committee go into the facts? The able Senator from Delaware could not find the facts. He is not a member of the committee. He took the question up with the committee. Why did not the committee investigate?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me so that I may reply to the question of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. This matter apparently did not come to the knowledge of the Senator from Delaware, and certainly not to the knowledge of the committee, until the committee had practically completed its investigation. It was nebulous at that time. The Senator from Delaware did not at that time have the exhaustive information which he now possesses. Frankly, it appeared to the committee as having no particular bearing on the question of confirmation, and there was no evidence presented that indicated that it would have any bearing on that question. It is a matter which occurred a number of years ago. Inquiry was made and there was a complete lack of any suggestion that Lilienthal received one nickel out of the corporation or that he profited from it in any way. I submit to the Senator from Michigan and to the Senator from Delaware that there was no fact disclosed in connection with this corporation which cast any shadow of doubt upon the integrity, the honesty, the ability, or the intentions of Lilienthal, and we disregarded it for that reason.

Mr. REVERCOMB and Mr. FERGUSON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield first to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Of course I am glad to have the statement of the Senator from Iowa, who is chairman of the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. I do not know how much evidence was before the committee, but, as he has said, this information came at the end of the hearing.

I wish to put this question to the able Senator at this time: If the facts now disclosed to the Senate show that Mr. Lilienthal acted without legal authority, acted beyond the law, or in violation of the law, as a director, would it not be germane to inquire whether he might not do the same thing on the Atomic Energy Commission?

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. If that question is addressed to me, will the Senator from Delaware yield to me so that I may answer it?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield to the Senator from Iowa in a moment; but before I yield I should like to say that I do not think that at any point in my remarks I have criticized the Senate section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy. As stated at the beginning of my statement, I appeared before that committee and presented suspicions on my part. I felt that I should tell the committee about them. I am not criticizing the committee for not accepting those suspicions. The committee knew full well that I would make accusations only if I obtained the facts, and I waited until I did obtain them. I believe that if at that time I had had all the facts which I have presented this afternoon, the committee's decision might have been different. I am not criticizing the committee now. I want that statement in the RECORD. The committee treated this matter exactly in accordance with my request that I meet with them in executive session and not in a public hearing. I did not want to be in the position of condemning anyone until I had all the facts and proof. Today I have incorporated in the RECORD a copy of the charter. I did not have a copy of it at that time. I think the Senator from Iowa will admit that.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I thank the Senator from Delaware. That is my recollection of the situation, and I am sure it is the recollection of the committee.

To answer the question of the Senator from West Virginia, I will say to him that if I were convinced that Mr. Lilienthal had done anything illegal in this transaction, I would take a completely different attitude. But I submit to the Senator from West Virginia that there still is not one scintilla of evidence in the record that Lilienthal did anything illegal. A corporation was organized under the laws of the State of Tennessee, and it has never before been attacked. Its charter was duly and properly issued to men who were capable of forming a corporation. That authority has never been questioned. There is not the slightest evidence that one dollar of money was converted to the personal or selfish use or interest of Mr. Lilienthal. Prosecution has never been attempted or suggested. There has never been any evidence in the entire record that any violation of law was involved. If there has been such a violation, I ask the Senator from Delaware, who has spent a great deal of time on the matter, to point out such violation. It would have some bearing on my thinking.

I will further say to the Senator from West Virginia that I may not agree with the philosophy of Mr. Lilienthal in his activities in the State of Tennessee; I may not think that I would act similarly if I were in the same circumstances; but I do say that I am not necessarily the arbiter of my brother's mind. I dare say there are many philosophies, ideas, and programs as to which the distinguished Senator from West Virginia and I would be in disagreement, although I think we are generally in agreement.

Mr. REVERCOMB. There are not many disagreements between us.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Not many. I may say further to the Senator from West Virginia that if we agreed on every single thing and every single philosophy I would think the Senator was crazy or I was crazy. I know the Senator is not crazy.

Mr. REVERCOMB. I thank the Senator.

Apparently I have not made myself clear to the able Senator from Iowa. It is not a question of dishonesty or the taking of money. No one is charging that. The point I make is that if Mr. Lilienthal, as a director of the Tennessee Valley Authority, would constitute himself and certain associates the directors of the corporation referred to, when the law declares that he must devote his time entirely to the TVA and there is no authority of law for him to incorporate a company such as those whose articles of incorporation have been read here—if Mr. Lilienthal, as director of the TVA, feels himself beyond the law in that regard, may he not feel himself beyond the law as a director of the Atomic Energy Commission and step beyond the regulations and laws which Congress enacts? There is no question of dishonesty as to money.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield so that I may answer that question? I do not wish to trespass on his time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I say to the Senator from West Virginia that upon the premise he has stated I agree with him unequivocally. If Mr. Lilienthal had the idea that he is beyond or above the law or has any desire to overstep the law intentionally and to arrogate to himself powers that are not given to him, I would vote against him. But there is no such evidence in the record, and I do not so believe.

Mr. REVERCOMB. Will the Senator answer this question, in view of the statement which he has just made? Where is the legal authority under which Mr. Lilienthal acted in organizing this corporation? Is there such authority?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Quoting the words of Mr. Lindsay Warren—I do not have the exact quotation, but I think I can quote them almost exactly——

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I may be able to tell him where the quotation is to be found. It is in the budget.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Warren says that no act of Congress or Executive order or Presidential decree has ever been issued authorizing the creation of this agency.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. It was authorized under the laws of Tennessee. It was never claimed to be a Government organization.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The mere fact that this agency was organized under the laws of Tennessee by three men who acted in their capacity as individuals is sufficient. I do not know what greater proof the Senator wants that this man might try to usurp power not reposed in him. If David Lilienthal and the other two men had the right under the laws of Tennessee to organize a corporation and confer upon themselves the power to issue notes in the name of a United States corporation to the amount of millions of dollars if they wanted to, what is there to prevent any one of them from forming many more such corporations?

Mr. FERGUSON and Mr. McMAHON addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield first to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, no one has charged Mr. Lilienthal in this case with attempting to take dollars and cents. It is not a question of whether the law of Tennessee permits that corporation to be incorporated. In effect, the real owner of the stock was the United States of America. The United States of America, in effect, formed that corporation. Under the laws of trust, there is no question but that the title to the stock was in the United States. Those men were acting as only trustees of that stock.

The question then is, Under what authority of the United States could that corporation be incorporated, and in that connection, under what authority could the United States be put in as the owner of the stock?

Mr. Warren has said, as shown at page 997 of the present budget—and he there is speaking about the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc.:

> No act of Congress or Executive order or Federal statute specificially authorized the creation of the Tennessee Valley Associated Cooperatives, Inc.

There we have it, in plain language. I should like to ask any Member of the Senate to point out the authority for incorporating that organization and putting the stock in the name of the corporation.

But, Mr. President, we must look further. The other day I said on this floor, and I now repeat, that that was a subterfuge; and the point is, in a case of this kind and of this importance, can we trust a man who would stoop to subterfuges?

Mr. President, I come back to this point: When the General Accounting Office, the accounting firm whose arms are the arms of the Congress, went down there to look into the matter, it was told by the Tennessee Valley Authority—Mr.

Lilienthal, "You cannot audit the books of this corporation." Why? Because they said, "No money of the United States ever went into it."

Mr. President, even the amount paid for the stock—the $1,000—came out of the $300,000 belonging to the United States. Was that a charity? Was that $1,000, which was taken from the taxpayer's money, a charity, one of the charities that we hear so much about? No, Mr. President; that money was taken from the funds and was used to buy the stock, and was put back into the Treasury. Nevertheless, when the General Accounting Office attempted to audit the books of that corporation, they said to the General Accounting Office, "You cannot audit, because the Government does not own anything in this corporation." Yet, Mr. President, the Government owned the $1,000, which was the cost of the stock of the three stockholders. Why could not the General Accounting Office audit? Simply because Mr. Lilienthal did not want anyone to look into it. He wishes to be all-powerful. He wants to control.

The result of that situation was that from 1934 until 2 years ago the Senate was unable to have an examination made of the books of the TVA. I should like to have everyone read carefully what the Senator from Vermont yesterday put into the RECORD in regard to how the books of that corporation were kept up to as late as 1945. Here we are in March of 1947, and we find that the books of the corporation have been audited only up to June 30, 1945, even after the able Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD] has been fighting upon this floor to try to obtain an audit of the books of the corporation. Then we find that we can, finally, obtain an audit. I wish every Senator to read it and then say, after reading it, whether the man at the head of that corporation is the kind of man whom we want to be over the entire atomic-bomb program.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to permit me to ask a question of the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield for a question.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Does the General Accounting Office keep away from a corporation which it thinks may be a Government corporation merely because someone in that corporation says, "No, go away; this is not a Government corporation"? Is that the yardstick according to which the General Accounting Office proceeds? Surely the General Accounting Office must have agreed that the corporation was not one which it should audit.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think I can answer that question. The General Accounting Office never knew about the existence of that corporation until after the passage of the Byrd-Butler bill in 1945, I believe. That is why I say that that period is a closed book, and we do not know what happened.

As the Senator from Michigan has pointed out, it has been very difficult to obtain information in connection with this matter. I desire to read from the record of the hearings on the nomination of Gordon Clapp, before the Committee on Public Works. At that time we tried to obtain from Mr. Clapp information about the 3,050 tons of fertilizer which had been given to the Southwest Virginia Cooperative, free of charge. I read now from page 192 of those hearings:

> Therefore, the 1,450 tons of TVA concentrated phosphate referred to on page 42 of the annual report is not a gift, they pay us for it.
>
> Senator WILLIAMS. Might I ask you why you separated that 1,450 tons and called it an experiment and later you called 6,800 tons as being sold? You sold both lots, or did you give one lot?
> Mr. CLAPP. No; we sold both lots.

We were trying to obtain information in regard to the 3,050 tons of fertilizer. If Senators will read the record which was made then, they will find that he consistently denied, all during that day, that he gave that fertilizer. He maintained that he sold both lots of fertilizer. On page 253 of the record of the hearings, when Mr. Clapp was being interrogated on the same question, the following appears:

> Senator WILLIAMS. Last Tuesday I asked you the question whether or not the TVA gave free of charge to this particular cooperative the 1,450 tons of fertilizer mentioned in that report, and at that time your answer was "No."
>
> Do you want to change your answer to that?
>
> Mr. CLAPP. No; I don't want to change my answer.
>
> Senator WILLIAMS. All right.
>
> Well, this is another question: Did you or did you not give to this Southwest Virginia Cooperative, free of charge, except as they paid transportation, an amount of fertilizer of 1,450 tons, or more, approximately, during that year? I would ike to have a "Yes" or "No" answer on that.
>
> Mr. CLAPP. I will be glad to look into it, Senator.
>
> Senator WILLIAMS. You have answered once that you did not give that, and you said that you knew what you were talking about. And I am asking you now: Did you or did you not give it?
>
> Mr. CLAPP. Senator, the sentence that is in the annual report, which you have referred to——
>
> The CHAIRMAN. I think, Mr. Clapp, the question is quite clear, and you can give a "Yes" or "No" answer. Then, if you want to make an explanation, you may do so.
>
> The question addressed to you is one of whether or not you did give that amount of fertilizer to that cooperative, less costs of transportation.
>
> Senator WILLIAMS. That is right; that or more.
>
> The CHAIRMAN. Did you or did you not do that?
>
> Mr. CLAPP. Mr. Chairman, the only way I can answer the question is to say that the 1,450 tons of TVA concentrated superphosphate referred to on page 42 of the annual report was not given to the cooperative.
>
> Senator WILLIAMS. The question I will repeat over again; we will not speak of that 1,450 tons: Did you or did you not give this Southwest Virginia Cooperative free of charge, except for the transportation charges that were paid by them, an amount of fertilizer of approximately 1,450 tons or more?
>
> Now, you should be able to answer that question. You knew what you were talking about the other day, or at least you said you did.
> Mr. CLAPP. Senator, I would not be at all surprised if we turned over some fertilizer to them for test demonstration purposes, on which they paid only the freight. It may have been 1,450 tons. I don't know. It may have been considerably more than that; it might be less. That is a different kind of financial arrangement between the TVA and the cooperatives.

Mr. President, it was not possible to get any information at all from Mr. Clapp. He continually denied having given anything, and only admitted it after being confronted with the concrete evidence that they had given 3,050 tons. Then he admitted knowing it all the time. I think Senators will bear me out that it appears somewhere in the record that his only explanation of the evasion was that I never asked him the exact amount. He said the amount I mentioned was not the 3,050 tons. In other words, if I had mentioned 3,049 or 3,051 we never would have gotten the information. I had to get the information from Lebanon, Va.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, will the Senator finally yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I finally yield.

Mr. HILL. I thank the Senator. The Senator from Tennessee spoke of my prejudices. Mr. President, I would not speak of the prejudice of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator just takes it from what Mr. Lilienthal has had the newspapers publish about me.

Mr. HILL. No, Mr. President; I would not say anything about the Senator's prejudices.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am not prejudiced in favor of rascals, anyway.

Mr. HILL. I am saying, Mr. President, that I would not say anything about the Senator.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. HILL. I would not say anything about the Senator's prejudices. I would not consume the time of the Senator from Delaware to argue with the Senator about what the conditions were during the days of the depression in 1933, 1934, and 1935. Every Member of the Senate and people throughout the country remember those days. They remember how desperate conditions were. They remember the poverty and misery that existed among the millions of our people and how it was necessary for the Federal Government to reach into the Treasury and pour out hundreds of millions of dollars to keep people in this country from starving.

Mr. President, as I said earlier, the $300,000 that went into this cooperative about which we have been talking, was relief money from the FERA. Just as during the war we sought to have every Government agency do everything it could to aid in the great effort to bring the full force of America's might and strength against the enemy, so during the days of the depression we sought to use every Government agency to the limit of its capacity to help meet the depression.

These men on the Board of the TVA went into this thing seeking to be helpful, seeking to bring relief to people who were in distress, and to carry out what at that time was the policy and the program of the Government of the United States. The truth is, they did the job so well in the beginning that instead of losing the whole $300,000, which might well have been spent or lost entirely, the Bureau of the Budget message for the fiscal year 1948, on page 998, shows that only $117,314 has to be charged up as relief, has to be charged up as spent and gone. The rest of that $300,000 is operating through this cooperative today, through capital investment.

The record also shows that it was Dr. Arthur E. Morgan, the then Chairman of the TVA, in 1934, who fathered this proposition, who was the leader and the guiding spirit in it. It was his baby, so to speak. In those early days of the TVA, in 1934, the TVA did not have the same system it has now, with a general manager. It divided its responsibilities into three separate divisions, and one of the three members of the Board was put over each one of the three divisions.

This matter came under Dr. Morgan's division, and it was primarily and basically Dr. Arthur E. Morgan's responsibility.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I now interrupt the Senator from Alabama for just one observation. There is nothing in the record anywhere that shows that Dr. Morgan was responsible for it, any more than David Lilienthal or any other man.

Mr. HILL. I called the Senator's attention to the letter from the lawyer.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not speaking of the letter from the lawyer, I am speaking of the record. I should also like to point out to the Senator from Alabama—as he said, we are not living in the past—that last year $2,066,511, was given by TVA to these cooperatives. I do not know how many of them were Government employees, or who received it, but I have no record that any farmer received any portion of it. Perhaps farmers did. They may have received the whole of it, but it is not in the record.

Mr. HILL. If the Senator will go into it, he will find the farmers got the benefit of it. He will find it went as relief money to help the farmers in that area, and that they were the beneficiaries of the money.

I previously called the Senator's attention to the letter from the general solicitor of the TVA, Mr. W. A. Sullivan, addressed to Dr. Arthur E. Morgan on January 18, 1934, in which he makes it definitely clear that Dr. Arthur E. Morgan was the leading spirit, that he was the guiding hand, in this matter.

Not only was he the guiding hand in the beginning, but in March 1946 Mr. Lilienthal and Dr. Harcourt Morgan got off the board of directors of this cooperative. Dr. Arthur E. Morgan was on the board, and, insofar as the record shows, Dr. Arthur E. Morgan stayed on the board of the cooperative up to the time he left the TVA, and, so far as the records show, he is still on the board. Certainly he had not left the board at the time he left the TVA. Mr. Lilienthal got off in 1936. Dr. Arthur E. Morgan remained. This is an interesting matter about this cooperative.

The very able and distinguished junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. FERGUSON] made a slashing attack against Mr. Lilienthal day before yesterday. Knowing how thorough and conscientious and able he is, I am sure that before he made that attack he applied himself to the records. I can see him now as he burned the midnight oil going through the records. His distinguished colleague, the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] sat as a member of the Atomic Energy Committee. He sat there with the other eight members of that Committee day after day, week after week, listening to the testimony, hearing what the witnesses had to say, observing their demeanor on the stand, their attitude, weighing their evidence, hearing the evidence, considering the evidence. After the distinguished senior Senator from Michigan spent all those weeks, sincerely, conscientiously, and devotedly listening to that testimony and weighing it, the committee came to the Senate with a report of 8 to 1 in favor of Mr. Lilienthal.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I like to be courteous to the Senator from Alabama——

Mr. HILL. As I understand, the Senator is through with his speech anyway. I am not delaying him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I have a little more to say.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has the floor.

Mr. HILL. I hope the Senator will let me conclude. The Senator must remember that I had to stand here about an hour before I had a chance to say anything. I shall try to be as brief as I can. This is an important matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. HILL. So I am sure that, in view of the report, adopted by a vote of 8 to 1, by this committee, that sat for weeks, listening to the testimony, watching the witnesses, examining them, and sifting their statements, before the distinguished junior Senator would find himself in opposition to the great Senator from Michigan——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HILL. I think the Senator should let me finish, because I have been very patient.

Mr. McKELLAR. I think the Senator from Alabama should yield.

Mr. HILL. The Senator accused me of prejudice, and I think I should have an opportunity to reply; but I have had to stand here for some time. I will finish my statement, and then I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Delaware has the floor. It is not a question of whether the Senator from Alabama will yield or not; it is for the Senator from Delaware to yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Delaware did yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I think the Senator from Delaware has been very lenient.

Mr. McKELLAR. He certainly has been.

Mr. WHERRY. He has been very courteous to the distinguished Senator from Alabama, so that I think if the Senator from Tennessee asks him to yield, the Senator from Alabama has no right to farm the time out on the floor of the Senate, and if he continues to do so, I shall ask for the regular order and restore the Senator from Delaware to the floor, and the Senator from Tennessee may ask any questions he wants to ask in his own time.

Mr. McKELLAR and Mr. HILL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Delaware yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will yield 2 minutes.

Mr. HILL. Two minutes? It is unusual for a Senator to be limited to 2 minutes. That is very hard. Anyway, Mr. President, if I must conclude in 2 minutes——

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Alabama wants considerably more time, I shall be glad to yield the floor in a few minutes.

Mr. HILL. Mr. President, I merely want to say, I am sure that the junior Senator from Michigan must have combed this record, and all the other records available to him, with a fine-toothed comb. Oh, I can see him now, as he went through these records, to ascertain what they contained.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. HILL. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President——

Mr. HILL. I yield, if I may.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator from Delaware tried to yield to me.

Mr. HILL. The Senator from Delaware has yielded to me, and I cannot yield. If the Senator will let me have 1 minute more, I shall be through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware has the floor. Does he yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. HILL. Will the Senator yield to me just a minute, and then I shall be through?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to conclude my remarks.

Mr. HILL. Will not the Senator yield me just 1 minute, to enable me to finish what I was saying?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; in a minute I shall yield the floor.

Mr. HILL. I ask for just 1 minute, that is all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Delaware.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator from Delaware yield?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. The able Senator from Alabama has indicated that there shall be no disagreement——

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a point of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. If the rule is going to be enforced, let us enforce it and let us not have any more speeches in the time of the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Michigan can ask the Senator to yield for a question.

Mr. FERGUSON. I have asked.

Mr. WHERRY. That is what the Senator asked for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands the Senator from Delaware has yielded to the Senator from Michigan for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I want to preface the question with a remark.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. HATCH. If the rules of the Senate are to be strictly enforced, may a Senator preface a question with a remark? Is it not the rule of the Senate simply that a Senator may yield for a question in the form of a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair rules that if the rules are to be strictly enforced, the Senator having the floor can yield for a question only, and the question should be stated directly.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I will have to surrender the floor. The able Senator from Alabama made an address, but did not ask a question. I shall take the floor a little later.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, to finish my remarks, I would like to advance to 1946 with just a slight reference to the report of the corporation. I want to read, first, section 5 of the TVA Act, paragraph (m), which says:

> No products of the Corporation shall be sold for use outside of the United States, its Territories, and possessions, except to the United States Government for the use of its Army and Navy or to its allies in case of war.

If I am not in error, we were not at war last year, and yet in the report I find that 9,000 tons of superphosphate was exported to the Netherlands; an undisclosed amount of the 153,000 tons of fertilizer which was produced in the ammonium nitrate plant was exported under lend-lease; 480 tons of munitions-grade crystal was exported from the same plant.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In a moment or two I will yield the floor.

Further, we find that 10,000 tons of ammonium nitrate was shipped to Italy; 5,000 tons was shipped to the Netherlands. I am not saying that that is not authorized, but I will read again section 5, paragraph (m), of the TVA Act:

> No products of the corporation shall be sold for use outside of the United States, its Territories, and possessions, except to the United States Government, for the use of its Army and Navy or to its allies in case of war.

Much has been said on the floor about the profits shown by the TVA during the past few years. I obtained a record from the TVA showing the appropriations which had been received from Congress by this Corporation, but here is another appropriation indirectly of more than $10,000,000, which is not disclosed by this record; that is, in their files. I read:

> Under an agreement executed in December 1940, the War Department advanced $10,228,000 to TVA to cover the cost of constructing a synthetic-ammonia plant at Wilson Dam, Ala., and rehabilitating portions of nitrate plant No. 2 for the manufacture of ammonium nitrate. The plants were operated for the account of the War Department until June 30, 1943, at which time the agreement was terminated and the plants turned over to TVA. Since that date these plants have been used primarily for the production of fertilizers, but, because of the uncertainty of their ultimate value to TVA, they have not been recorded in the fixed-asset accounts.

Again I find:

> Two nitrate plants, two villages, and other plant and equipment at Muscle Shoals have been recorded on the books at nominal amounts because of their negligible worth to TVA's operations.

Mr. President, in conclusion I only want to say that I cannot see how in the interest of national defense this body can confirm the nomination of a man at whom the finger of suspicion points as strongly as it does against David E. Lilienthal. I do not claim that I have pointed out any case where any laws have been directly violated; I am not an attorney; nor do I claim to express a legal opinion; that is for the Department of Justice; but I do say we have a case where three individuals have conferred upon themselves powers greater than those exercised by the President of the United States, under the Constitution. I cannot conceive of any man doing that, and I will not support any man who feels that he has the moral right to do it.

In conclusion, I repeat, that from my study of the record of the activities of David E. Lilienthal, I believe his basic philosophy is more than tinged with socialism and dictatorship.

Senators, do not take my word wholly for it. Let Mr. Lilienthal speak his true philosophy of government in his own words. I quote him:

> This Government, and every government, is and must be a government of men and not of laws.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were signed by the President pro tempore:

> H. R. 1240. An act to provide for the suspension of navigation and vessel-inspection laws, as applied to vessels operated by the War Department, upon the termination of title V, Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended; and
> H. J. Res. 76. Joint resolution authorizing the commandant of the United States Coast Guard to waive compliance with the navigation and vessel-inspection laws administered by the Coast Guard.

THE LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I rise at this time for the purpose of propounding inquiry of the acting majority leader as to what the program will be for the remainder of the afternoon, and, primarily, whether or not the Senate will meet tomorrow to continue to discuss the question of confirming the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, we intend this afternoon to continue the debate on the pending question, which is the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal. If the debate progresses satisfactorily I believe it is the intention to recess in executive session from today until Monday so that when it reconvenes next Monday the Senate will have before it automatically the question of the Lilienthal nomination.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of the statement made by the able Senator from Nebraska I take it that any Senator who desires to leave at this time for the week end may do so without any question in his mind as to whether there will be a vote taken on the pending question tomorrow.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; I think Senators can have that assurance.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Illinois yield for a comment on the particular subject now under discussion?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I may say that the acting majority leader has evolved a program which he believes will operate with greater efficiency than would some other program. I shall not try to oppose it too vigorously, but I express my hope that the Senate will meet this evening, and that it may be in session tomorrow, so that debate on the Lilienthal nomination may be continued, because as I said to the Senate today at the time of convening, I am convinced in my own mind beyond all question of doubt that the vital and almost controlling interest of the United States demands that this question be settled one way or the other with the greatest possible expedition. It is a matter which is beyond the individual convenience of Members of the Senate. It rises far above whether any Senator—and this is no criticism of the Senator from Illinois—whether any Senator wants to go away for the week end or not. In my opinion it goes beyond the question of all private convenience of the Members of the Senate. I can only register my hope, and my insistence, if you please, so far as my one voice is concerned, that the Senate proceed with this matter even though it be arduous work, and continue with it at all possible times and at all reasonable and available hours until it is brought to a finality one way or the other.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I appreciate what the distinguished Senator from Iowa has said concerning the importance of continuing the debate on the pending nomination and the desirability of concluding action on the question at the earliest possible time. I think I fully realize the importance of having action on the subject concluded with some dispatch, whether it means the confirmation of the nominees or not.

My only query, Mr. President, was with respect to what the majority was going to do, because after all the majority control this situation, and they can either decide to have a session of the Senate tomorrow or to dispense with a session of the Senate tomorrow. So far as the Senator from Illinois is concerned, I certainly have no objection to a night session tonight if the majority desire to have one. I shall have no objection if the majority desire to have a session of the Senate tomorrow, at which the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal will be discussed.

Certain Members on this side of the aisle requested me to propound the inquiry in order to ascertain what the majority were going to do so they could make their plans accordingly. If the majority do not propose to have a session of the Senate tomorrow, then some Senators on this side of the aisle perhaps expect to leave for the week end. If the majority expect to have a session of the Senate tomorrow, the Senators will be present. It is up to the majority whether the Senate shall have a session tonight or tomorrow. So far as I am concerned, it will be perfectly satisfactory to me if such sessions are held. I certainly appreciate the seriousness of the situation, and I thoroughly agree with my friend the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. I thank the Senator. I cannot permit this occasion to pass without registering my thorough-going approval of what has been said by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER], the distinguished chairman of the Senate section of the committee. It is perhaps because we of the committee have lived with this problem now for some 18 months that we are so firm in our belief that it is absolutely necessary, in the interest of the safety of the United States, that the Senate conclude this matter and conclude it speedily.

Our Government has announced a new diplomatic policy to support democracy in Greece and Turkey, and that proposition is being considered now before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. Mr. President, I say that I have a deep conviction that that is a matter of the highest importance. But certainly it is no more important, if even as important, as seeing to it that we proceed quickly with the business in hand. We are not proceeding with it as quickly as we should proceed. We cannot get ahead with it until we settle the question of the confirmation of the members of the Atomic Energy Commission, which will then be able to offer employment to the kind of scientists who lead the universities and who, when they know there is a settled policy and who is going to conduct it, will push this program ahead. I say that every day we delay the confirmation of these nominations we trifle with the safety of the country and tamper with the destiny of the world.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. MORSE. I wanted to make an inquiry respecting the program of the Senate, because I think the Senator from Illinois is quite right in trying to reach an understanding now as to what we are going to do the remainder of the day as well as tomorrow. I do not think the Senator from Illinois should be in a position of excusing Members from his side of the aisle any more than Members on this side of the aisle should excuse other Members on this side from attendance on the Senate. If there is a possibility of a vote being had tonight on any phase of the Lilienthal matter, I think the Senator from Illinois ought to have a definite understanding as to what is going to happen during the remainder of the day as well as tomorrow.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, I concur in what the Senator from Oregon has said. The reason I propounded the inquiry was in order that we might reach a definite understanding as to what the program would be for the remainder of the afternoon and evening, and certainly whether the Senate will meet tomorrow. Certain Senators have spoken to me about the program, and wanted to know what it would be. That is why I asked the able Senator from Nebraska what the program was to be.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have already answered the Senator's inquiry. I stated that we would continue to discuss the nomination today and do the very best we could in forwarding the matter now pending before the Senate. Of course, it was to be expected that we would have a few statements by Senators who are always anxious to hold the Senate in session at night. Some who would stress the great emergency that exists are the very ones who have asked for vacation periods within the next few days. I will say that more Senators on the other side of the aisle have asked me whether there would be a session tonight and tomorrow, and expressed the hope that there would not be, than have Senators on this side of the aisle.

We are trying to do the best we can to expedite this matter. I believe we have done well so far. The policy committee has set a pace which, if we keep up with it, will dispose of the work that is in process. I am merely the acting majority leader. Personally, I should like to have the Senate stay in session every minute possible, and continue in session tonight as late as we did last night. If Senators wish night sessions, that is all right with me. The chairman of the policy committee is present, and I shall ask him to explain what he proposes with respect to tomorrow, and also next week.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not think the Senate does its best work if it is forced to hold too many or too long sessions. I think that if we meet every day from 12 until 6 for 5 days a week, we need the remainder of the time to do the other kind of work Senators have to do, unless there is a real emergency in a particular case when we can finish consideration of a bill, as we did last night by sitting until after 7:30. The Lilienthal nomination is now before us. So far as I now know nothing else will interrupt consideration of that nomination. The distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] has informed me that the Foreign Relations Committee desires to take up the matter of the Greek and Turkish loan on Monday, April 7. We therefore have all of next week to discuss the Lilienthal nomination. So far as I know nothing has developed to indicate that there is anything in the nature of a filibuster going on or an effort to delay, or anything but the desire on the part of Senators to make their statements as they wish to make them. Should it appear that there is likely to be some delay that would tend to carry it over until Monday of the following week, I should say that by the time we reach Wednesday we ought to meet Wednesday night and Thursday night. I hope we may avoid a session on Good Friday by such night sessions, if necessary. But if we cannot finish the Lilienthal matter by Thursday night, I think we shall have to meet Friday and Saturday of next week, notwithstanding the fact that we are so close to Easter. Our desire is to finish consideration of the Lilienthal nomination, but I see no reason why it should not be finished in the regular time of the Senate on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday, if we can proceed without interruption. We now have it before us for full-time discussion.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. McMAHON. Of course it is spilled milk, or water over the dam, but I think the Senator might agree with me that it is too bad that this nomination was reported on March 10, and that we did not begin to discuss it until March 24. During the intervening two weeks we took the time to dispose of the Presidential tenure bill, which certainly did not have any particular urgency behind it. Certainly the portal-to-portal legislation could have waited until we got this vitally important matter out of the way.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator will remember that that bill was already the unfinished business of the Senate. The portal-to-portal bill was also here before the nomination. Unfortunately, as is so frequently the case, they took longer than we expected. But I think the Senate has worked as diligently as I have ever seen it work, and we have disposed of business as rapidly as possible.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I should like to ask the Senator his opinion as to whether we can reach a vote this evening on the motion to recommit.

Mr. TAFT. My impression is that it ought not to be voted upon until the whole subject is debated. It is open to debate. I expect to make a speech on the Lilienthal nomination, and I should like to make it while this motion is pending. I see no reason why there should be a vote on the motion to recommit until the whole subject has been discussed by the Senate. That is my personal opinion. I am not speaking from the standpoint of party policy. I am only stating my own opinion. Personally, I would object to voting until I have an opportunity to speak on the Lilienthal nomination.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I can see very many sound reasons for delaying a vote on the motion to recommit until Senators have had an opportunity to discuss the question and canvass the field. I asked the question merely to learn what the Senator thought, and to try to ascertain the anticipated program with regard to that motion.

Mr. TAFT. I believe that the sooner we cease discussing the program, which I think is clear, the sooner we can get on with the business in hand.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The Senator spoke about the possibility of holding a session Friday and Saturday of next week, in the event we do not finish consideration of the pending business by Thursday night. I think that would interfere with the plans of certain Senators on this side of the aisle who are anticipating making Jefferson day speeches. I believe the Republicans recently made Lincoln Day speeches. We were very kind and considerate of Senators on the other side, and permitted Republican Senators to go over the country and spread the doctrine of Lincoln. We would like to have the opportunity to reciprocate by spreading a little Jeffersonian doctrine on Friday and Saturday. I think most of the banquets will be on Saturday night. If there is a possibility of holding a meeting on either Saturday, we would much prefer to hold it tomorrow.

Mr. TAFT. I see no reason why we should not finish the Lilienthal matter in 4 days next week, including two night sessions. I think the possibility of a Friday session might hasten the procedure next week. That is the only reason I suggested it. We certainly ought not to interfere with the education of the people which is contemplated by the minority leader and his friends.

Mr. LUCAS. I hope we can conclude by Thursday night, so that Senators may get away. Speaking for myself, any Jeffersonian speech I may make will have to wait a year if the Lilienthal nomination is not disposed of.

DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, as in legislative session, for the present consideration of House joint resolution 159, which is a joint resolution to provide for certain deficiencies in appropriations for existing departments. Before the request is acted upon, let me say that I believe that with a moment's explanation I can satisfy the Senate that action on the joint resolution will require only a few minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be stated by title for the information of the Senate.

The LEGISLATIVE CLERK. A joint resolution (H. J. Res. 159) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire?

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I ask the Senator from New Hampshire if the bill was unanimously favorably reported from the Committee on Appropriations?

Mr. BRIDGES. It was.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, this is a simple joint resolution to provide deficiency funds to take care of the increased salaries which the Congress voted for the various departments of government last year. It does not apply to all the departments of Government. It applies to all of them as to which there is no question. The remaining departments, as to which there may be some question, will be taken care of in a later measure.

The principal items are in the Post Office Department, the Veterans' Administration, the Judiciary, the Federal Works Agency, the District of Columbia, the legislative branch, and various independent agencies. I do not believe that Senators will find anything in the joint resolution except provision for the deficiency in carrying out the act of Congress which provided for the pay increases last year. The House checked the items very thoroughly, and we have checked them. I can see no reason for delaying action. Unless we do our part the March 31 pay roll cannot be met.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendments to be proposed, the question is on the third reading and passage of the joint resolution.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 159) was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION—NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of David E. Lilienthal to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I do not believe that any problem has ever come before the Senate which is more important than is the confirmation of the nominations of the members of the Atomic Energy Commission. I wish to say that my distinguished colleague the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BRICKER] was a very regular attendant at all the meetings of the committee. He examined the facts, as the rest of us endeavored to do, in the hearings which extended over a period of 6 weeks. During that entire time the members of the committee held almost daily sessions, at which they had an opportunity to examine witnesses and listen to the evidence. To date there have been presented to the Senate substantially no facts which were not brought to the attention of the nine members of the Senate Section of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I ask the Senator if he is willing to yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum. The Senator is a member of the committee, and has been present throughout the hearings; and I consider that what he has to say is most important.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The absence of a quorum has been suggested. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hatch	Murray
Ball	Hawkes	Myers
Barkley	Hayden	O'Conor
Brewster	Hickenlooper	O'Daniel
Bricker	Hill	O'Mahoney
Bridges	Hoey	Overton
Brooks	Holland	Pepper
Buck	Jenner	Reed
Bushfield	Johnson, Colo.	Revercomb
Butler	Johnston, S. C.	Robertson, Va.
Byrd	Kem	Russell
Cain	Kilgore	Saltonstall
Capehart	Knowland	Smith
Capper	Langer	Sparkman
Chavez	Lodge	Stewart
Connally	Lucas	Taft
Cooper	McCarthy	Taylor
Cordon	McClellan	Thomas, Okla.
Donnell	McFarland	Thomas, Utah
Downey	McGrath	Thye
Dworshak	McKellar	Tobey
Ecton	McMahon	Umstead
Ellender	Magnuson	Vandenberg
Ferguson	Malone	Watkins
Flanders	Martin	Wherry
Fulbright	Maybank	Wiley
George	Millikin	Williams
Green	Moore	Wilson
Gurney	Morse	Young

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, as I pointed out, to date there has been presented to the Senate of the United States no substantial evidence in addition to what had been presented to the Senate section of the Atomic Energy Joint Committee. That committee, consisting of five members of the majority and four members of the minority, after hearing the facts, by a vote of 8 to 1 voted to report favorably on the question of confirmation of the nomination of David E. Lilienthal to be Chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. President, it has been rightfully said that the Government and the people of the United States have a vast interest in the field of atomic power. Not only have they expended over $2,000,000,000 in the development of this vast new force; but in our hands, I firmly believe, we hold the future of civilization. Through the use of atomic power we can either benefit mankind or we can destroy civilization as we know it. The sands of time are running out.

About a year ago, Mr. President, as a member of the War Investigating Committee, I had the opportunity of seeing Nagasaki, where the second atomic bomb had been dropped. During the period of the war I had seen a great deal of destruction in England, France, and Germany; but I say to you that I had never seen such destruction as that which had taken place at Nagasaki. The entire community looked as if it had been put through a coffee grinder and the remainder scattered over the landscape.

So, Mr. President, we have a tremendous responsibility. I believe that the Senate and the House of Representatives recognized that we were dealing with a new force and a new power, the like of which mankind had never known before, and that consequently we had to deal with it in a different way than we had ever dealt with any other great problem facing our Nation at any other time in our history. So, the Congress passed the Atomic Energy Control Act.

There are some persons who have a great fear—and quite correctly so—of expanding Government ownership and control. Yet, the Senate, by unanimous vote, as I recall, recognizing that we had let out of the bottle a genie which never in our lifetime or that of our children will it be possible to get back into the bottle, recognized that the field of atomic power would, of necessity, have to be handled by the Government, and by Government alone.

I desire to call attention to some of the language contained in the Atomic Energy Control Act. I read now from page 1 of Public Law 585:

> A program for Government control of production, ownership, and use of fissionable material to assure the common defense and security and to insure the broadest possible exploitation of the fields.

A little later in the same Atomic Energy Act, we find the following, on page 5:

> Ownership of production facilities: The Commission, as agent and on behalf of the United States, shall be the exclusive owner of all facilities for the production of fissionable materials, other than the facilities which (a) are useful in the conduct of research and development activities in the field specified in section 3; and (b) do not in the opinion of the Commission have a potential production rate adequate to enable the operator of such facilities to produce within a reasonable period of time a sufficient quantity of fissionable material to produce an atomic bomb or any other atomic weapon.

So, Mr. President, the act itself, as passed unanimously by this body, recognizes that in the very nature of things the Government itself must be the controlling agency in this field.

Mr. President, ample safeguards are provided. The Commission cannot surrender the so-called secrets of atomic energy to any other nation on the face of the earth without first having the specific approval of the Congress of the United States. I quote from section 8, on page 11, of the Atomic Energy Act. It specifically states as follows:

> Definitions: As used in this act, the term "international arrangement" shall mean any treaty approved by the Senate or international agreement hereafter approved by the Congress during the time such treaty or agreement may be in full force and effect.

Mr. President, it so happens that Mr. Lilienthal has perhaps had as much background in the field of atomic power as any nonscientific man has had. He was a member of the committee which drafted the so-called Lilienthal-Acheson report which furnished the foundation for the proposal by Mr. Baruch, our representative to the United Nations, for the so-called Baruch plan for the international control of atomic energy.

We must constantly keep in mind the fact that this is no secret which we as a people can lock in a safe-deposit box and then feel secure. This is something which we have developed, but which, if given time and industrial capacity and the necessary resources, other nations can develop. The only thing we have now that the other powers do not have is an element of time. It may be 2 years, it may be 5 years, or it may be 10 years; but it is almost as certain as the fact that we sit here or stand here on the floor of the United States Senate, that somewhere in between those limitations, other nations will have developed atomic energy. Unless we are able during that period of time to provide an adequate type of international control over atomic energy, then neither we nor our children nor our children's children will ever spend a tranquil night. In the atomic age in which we live the Pearl Harbor of the future will not be an attack upon a few sitting-duck warships in a distant Pacific harbor, but a simultaneous rocket, guided-missile atomic attack upon every communications center and every industrial center in the United States, on the same day, and perhaps at the same instant.

That is the type of power and force with which we deal here, and, as my able colleague, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. HICKENLOOPER] has pointed out, this matter is so important not only to the American people, but to civilization itself, that we dare not postpone a decision on the question.

Mr. President, when we recognize that here we have a power which cannot be kept permanently a secret, we must of course understand why some type of international control is necessary. Our representative, Mr. Baruch, presented a plan to the United Nations which has, of course, not yet been accepted.

I wish to say to the Members of the Senate that, insofar as I am concerned, unless we can establish adequate safeguards; unless we can have a system of international inspection and control with no loopholes in it; unless we can make sure that the Commission, having found a violation, can bring the full weight of the United Nations, which we hope by that time will have an adequate military force at its disposal, against the aggressor nations—and certainly we will never have that assurance as long as the veto exists, in its present form, in the United Nations organization—until and unless we have those adequate safeguards, I am unalterably opposed to the surrender of the secrets of atomic energy to any other nation on the face of the earth.

As President Cleveland once said, a condition, and not a theory, confronts us. Other nations do have information. I do not know how many Senators have had the opportunity to see the report of the Canadian Royal Commission. If you have not had a chance to read it and study it, I wish every Member of the Senate would do so.

As long ago as March 28, 1945—and I quote, from page 447 of the Canadian Royal Commission report—a message went from spies in Canada to the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics. This is what the message said:

> Badeau informs me that most secret work at present is on nuclear physics (bombardment of radio-active substances to produce energy). This is more hush-hush than radar and is being carried on at the University of Montreal and at McMaster University at Hamilton. Badeau thinks that Government purchasing of radium-producing plant is connected with this research.

Mind you, Mr. President, this was in March 1945.

I sat through a number of sessions of the Senate section of the joint committee when the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR] told how, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate, he had been let in on this very top-secret information, and what was going on at Oak Ridge in the development of atomic power. As far as most Government officials in this country were concerned, as far as most of the American people were concerned, they did not know of this activity until the first bomb dropped on Hiroshima. But in this message it is shown that Soviet agents were on the 28th of March 1945, familiar with certain activities.

Then a few pages later I find this very disturbing information. I quote from page 450. This is what is said in paragraph 2, another message which was passed between espionage agents:

> Alec handed over to us a platinum with 162 micrograms of uranium 233 in the form of oxide in a thin lamina. We have had no news about the mail.

So that at least one other power has some samples of uranium.

This development of atomic power is of tremendous and vital importance to us. If I had had any remote idea that any of the members of the Atomic Energy Commission proposed by the President of the United States were Communists, were Communist sympathizers, or were fellow travelers I would not for an instant have voted in the committee, nor would I, in the Senate of the United States, vote for the confirmation of any such person But after listening to the testimony, after examining the witnesses for a period of 5 or 6 weeks, I wish to say to the Senator that in good conscience I could not have voted in any other way than to confirm the Presidential nominees.

Mr. SALTONSTALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield, or would he prefer not to yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I prefer to continue.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, this situation, of course, should cause the Senate of the United States to examine the facts. Men may honestly differ in committees or on the floor of the Senate, but I say that in my opinion there is not one iota of evidence presented to the Senate section of the Atomic Energy Committee which directly or indirectly made out that Mr. Lilienthal, or any of the other nominees of the President of the United States, was a Communist, a Communist sympathizer, or a fellow traveler in any degree.

A great deal of evidence did come before the committee from reputable witnesses relative to the ability and the integrity of the various officials. I desire to read just a few bits of the testimony into the RECORD at this point.

Mr. Baruch, who, as I have pointed out heretofore, was a representative of this Government in dealing with this vital subject in the United Nations organization, said this:

Mr. Lilienthal I have known for some time, and I think he is a well-qualified man. He is a man of prodigious energy, of driving force. I think sometimes that in his conception of his duty he drives exceedingly hard; and sometimes he perhaps makes enemies or creates misunderstandings.

Then take the evidence of Mr. Owen D. Young.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. BRICKER. I think there were introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD some newspaper editorials or reports, at least statements by columnists, that Mr. Baruch had privately said that he was not favorably inclined toward Mr. Lilienthal, and did not recommend him. I am not stating that as my own statement, because I do not know. I did read that in the newspapers, and I think it is in the RECORD. Does the Senator know anything about it?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I will say categorically to the Senator from Ohio that Mr. Baruch made no such statement in the executive session of the Senate section of the Atomic Energy Committee. I was there when Mr. Baruch was before the committee, and there was no indication, directly or indirectly, that he felt any differently in executive session from the way he had testified in the public session.

Mr. BRICKER. I was at both those sessions also, and I agree with the distinguished Senator exactly, but I was referring to what has been said in the press and has been introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I have never talked to Mr. Baruch about it. I am wondering if the Senator has any information along that line.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have no information along that line.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield to the Senator from Connecticut.

Mr. McMAHON. The Senator from California has been kind enough to yield to me, and I can enlighten the Senator from Ohio on that very subject. I anticipated, when I saw that the Senator from Tennessee was putting into the RECORD a series of ten articles from the pen of one Frank Waldrop—

Mr. BRICKER. Those are the ones I think I saw in the RECORD.

Mr. McMAHON. Originally they appeared serially in the Times-Herald. He made the statement that Baruch had stated one thing publicly, another thing on the quiet, and that he was making statements contrary to what he told us. I wrote Mr. Baruch a letter, in which I pointed this out to him, and said to him, "Now, of course, I know it is ridiculous, but nevertheless, since it has been put in the RECORD by the Senator from Tennessee, I think your answer ought to be in the record."

Mr. Baruch answered me, and I placed his reply in the record, in which he said, "Of course, it is absurd; I have not said anything privately but what I said publicly."

Mr. BRICKER. I did not see the letter.

Mr. McMAHON. That is the answer. I thank the Senator.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I now take the telegram from Mr. Owen D. Young, which is in the record, at page 795. This is what Mr. Young has to say:

Because of my interest in public utilities, I became acquainted with David Lilienthal nearly 20 years ago. I regarded him as an adversary, and so naturally watched him with a critical eye. Because of my interest in the international problems of this Nation, I have also watched Lilienthal's work in the atomic field.

As a result, I wish to say that he is a man of clear vision, of executive ability, of firmness and unquestionable loyalty, and in a unique position to serve effectively in the position for which the President has nominated him.

I wish to say to the Senators present that throughout this entire record, as they will find if they will take the trouble to read it, is testimony of men of the caliber of Mr. Young, Mr. Baruch, and a whole host of others, who testify substantially the same way.

I also desire to point out that one of the charges made against Mr. Lilienthal in particular is due to the fact that when he was Chairman of the TVA there was some communistic activity in that organization. I do not condone such activity in that or any other organization, but I wish to point out in all fairness, that the testimony shows that at that time, as I recall, there were from 15,000 to 18,000 employees in the TVA. During that period of time the so-called Dies Committee on Un-American Activities went there to make an investigation. There appeared before us in person to testify Mr. Joe Starnes, a former Member of the House of Representatives, who was chairman of the subcommittee which made the investigation. He appeared before us, and at this point in the RECORD I wish to read some of the testimony:

The most optimistic reports of the party's activities in that area were filed by Mr. Ted Wellman, the secretary of the party for the State.

That is, the State of Tennessee.

In 1937 he said there were 55 Communists in the Knox County area—

Now, listen to this—that seven of them were employed by the TVA.

Mind you, just seven of them found by the Committee on Un-American Activities in an organization of from 15,000 to 18,000 people!

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I should like at this point to ask the able Senator from California if there was anything in the record, or if anything was called to the attention of the committee, indicating that there were 45 names of people alleged to be left wingers or of that type, ever sent to the Board of Directors of the TVA? Has the Senator any knowledge as to the 45 names that were sent and as to whether or not only one of those names was ever investigated, and that that person was not removed from the list, and so far as known, the other 44 were not investigated? Is there such knowledge?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I have no such knowledge, so I cannot answer the Senator's question from first-hand information.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I decline to yield at this time.

I am glad the Senator from Michigan asked that question, for the reason that one witness who appeared before our committee took the position that if a finger of suspicion were pointed at anyone he should automatically be eliminated from consideration. On the day on which that witness so testified I raised the point that that was a very dangerous doctrine for us to agree to or to follow in this country. I need only state that the finger of suspicion can be pointed by any anonymous person at any one of the 96 Members of the Senate of the United States, or at any reputable person in the United States, and if, because the finger of suspicion has been pointed by anonymous people, or otherwise, a person is for that reason to be condemned, then we have gone a long way down the road to abandoning our normal concept of fair play and American constitutional government.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. Apparently the Senator misunderstood the Senator from Michigan. This was not an anonymous communication. This was a communication from the Department of Justice of the United States of America. I used the term "another agency." This was not merely someone's imagination. This was sent to them for investigation.

Mr. KNOWLAND. The Senator from Michigan may have some additional information that the Senator from California does not have.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me on that point?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I believe—and the Senator from Michigan may correct me if I am wrong—I believe what the Senator from Michigan is referring to is an allegation that the Department of Justice at one time sent the names of 45 persons to the Board of Directors of TVA, under the allegation, not necessarily by the Department of Justice, but under the suspicion that the 45 persons were violators of the Hatch Act. I do not believe the allegation went to the question of communistic tendencies, or anything of that sort. That is my understanding of the incident to which the Senator was referring.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. I see the able Senator from New Mexico [Mr. HATCH] in the Chamber, and I would like to ask him the date of the Hatch Act in relation to subversive activities.

Mr. HATCH. I would like to answer the question of the Senator. I believe the provision as to such activities was in the second bill which as passed, if my recollection is correct, in 1939 or 1940; it was about then. I have not looked at it lately.

Mr. FERGUSON. I would also like to ask the able Senator from New Mexico whether that act does not require that such names be sent in for investigation.

Mr. HATCH. No; it does not. All it does is to require that any person in the Federal Government who is affiliated with any organization which seeks the overthrow of our form of government be discharged, and that no appropriation be made to pay for his services.

Mr. FERGUSON. That is correct. Will the Senator from California yield for one moment on that point?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. FERGUSON. This was in July 1941, so it would be in compliance with the Hatch Act that those names were sent in.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a comment?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. HICKENLOOPER. I may say to the Senator from Michigan that I was under a misconception with respect to the allegation in question. I was under the impression that the violations of the Hatch Act alleged against these 45 individuals consisted of what we might call pernicious political activities. I am at a loss on that point. I can add nothing to the discussion of it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I feel quite sure that the Senator from Iowa is correct, because most of the charges respecting violation of the Hatch Act relate to pernicious political activity. There are many sections of the act, including the ones relating to subversive activities, which have never been mentioned. But I think the Senator from Iowa is absolutely correct in his statement.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President——

Mr. KNOWLAND. I do not mean to be discourteous to my good friend, the Senator from Michigan, but I should like to move on.

Mr. FERGUSON. If I may have just a moment to make the RECORD clear, I should like to say that these charges were made under the subversive section of the act.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield to the Senator from Alabama, and then I must decline to yield further.

Mr. SPARKMAN. I call attention to the fact that the investigation by the Dies committee was made in the summer of 1940, and Mr. Starnes testified that at that time an affidavit with respect to subversive activities was not required. Furthermore, so far as that matter is concerned here is a direct quotation from Mr. Starnes, if I may be permitted to read it. It is found on page 220 of the hearings before the Committee on Public Works of the Senate of the nomination of Gordon R. Clapp to be a member of the Board of Directors of the Tennessee Valley Authority. Mr. Starnes testified similarly in the Lilienthal hearing, but I happen to have the testimony of Mr. Starnes in the Clapp hearing before me. I quote from Mr. Starnes as follows:

> We found very little communism, or evidence of communism, in the Knox County area. According to the report of a Communist organizer, Kenneth Malcolm by name, who was not a native, only 55 members of the Communist Party were claimed by him in the Knox County area and only 7 were employed by TVA as of September 1, 1937. This information was contained in his report to the southern conference of the Communist Party in Chattanooga on September 11 and 12, 1937. He said there were only 55 in the entire area, 33 in the city of Knoxville, 15 over at Mascot, and 5, I believe it was, in Norris, and 2 in Maryville.
> * * * * *
> A few underlings were found who did have at one time membership in the party. The Communist organizer himself, Mr. Malcolm, stated there were only 7 members in the TVA, 4 men and 3 women.

If the Senator will yield further I should like to say that the distinguished Senator from Michigan in his remarks the other day stated that when this matter was called to Mr. Lilienthal's attention he did absolutely nothing about it. As a matter of fact the record very clearly shows that Mr. Gordon Clapp, I believe it was, submitted the matter to the Board of Directors, and the Board of Directors authorized him to submit it to the Dies committee. Mr. Clapp wrote a long letter telling exactly what had been done and what the TVA proposed to do, and Mr. Starnes testified in the Clapp hearing, and, I believe, in the Lilienthal hearing, that the Dies committee was satisfied with what had been done.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I should prefer not to at this time.

Mr. HATCH. I wanted to put something in the RECORD in answer to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Very well; I yield.

Mr. HATCH. The first Hatch Act was passed in August 1939. That act, I am quite sure, if my recollection does not fail me, did not include the paragraph to which the Senator refers. I think that was in the second act, which I believe was passed in 1940. At any rate, between now and the time the debate closes I shall look up the exact dates and place them in the RECORD.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, as I pointed out before, and as the testimony by Mr. Starnes showed, there were but seven members of the Communist Party found in the TVA, and the able junior Senator from Alabama has pointed out that the Board did take action on those cases.

I wish to say to the Senate that I believe that if the situation existing in industrial establishments of all kinds, under the American system of free enterprise were carefully checked, establishments having perhaps half as many or perhaps a tenth as many employees as did the TVA, there might be found similar cells of seven Communist members.

As I pointed out before, I do not minimize the situation. I do not say it should be overlooked. I believe that any organization which finds activity of that kind going on should take prompt action, just as the President of the United States recently has indicated that Government departments should take action to clean out activity of that kind, regardless of how small the cell might be.

Mr. BRICKER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I must decline to yield at this time. But I do not believe that on that basis, when out of 18,000 or 15,000 employees there were found only seven who were Communists, Mr. Lilienthal should be disqualified for this position. It seems to me that we should examine the record of the man. It is not necessary to see eye to eye with an individual in all his thinking, economic or political, to recognize the fact that the man has tremendous ability and, I believe, deep patriotism. If there were any specific charge that he was disloyal to the Government of the United States, that he was disloyal to the Constitution of the United States, that would be an entirely different situation. To the best of my knowledge no such charge has ever been made. He has been charged with being arbitrary, of doing certain things in the TVA which certain Members of the Senate take, to borrow a British expression, a rather dim view of. But I want to point out the fact that what Mr. Lilienthal did in the TVA was within the laws passed by the Congress of the United States.

There has been much discussion about this situation on the floor of the Senate, but I wish to read several paragraphs from the Tennessee Valley Authority Act. First, to get the general scope and the general philosophy behind it, I read from the act as follows:

> That for the purpose of maintaining and operating the properties now owned by the United States in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals, Ala., in the interest of the national defense and for agricultural and industrial development, and to improve navigation in the Tennessee River and to control the destructive flood waters in the Tennessee River and Mississippi River Basins, there is hereby created a body corporate by the name of the Tennessee Valley Authority (hereinafter referred to as the Corporation). The board of directors first appointed shall be deemed the incorporators, and the incorporation shall be held to have been effected from the date of the first meeting of the board. This act may be cited as the Tennessee Valley Authority Act of 1933.

Let us see some of the powers given by the Congress of the United States by statutes passed by both Houses of the Congress and signed by the President of the United States in the normal constitutional American way of enacting legislation under our system of government. We have heard criticism that he has not followed the civil-service rules as applied to the rest of the Government. But what does the act itself say. Let me read from the act, section 3:

The Board—

Speaking now of the TVA Board—

The board shall without regard to the provisions of civil-service laws applicable to officers and employees of the United States, appoint such managers, assistant managers, officers, employees, attorneys, and agents, as are necessary for the transaction of its business, fix their compensation, define their duties, require bonds of such of them as the board may designate, and provide a system of organization to fix responsibility and promote efficiency. Any appointee of the board may be removed in the discretion of the board. No regular officer or employee of the corporation shall receive a salary in excess of that received by the members of the board.

So the Congress of the United States itself gave to the TVA Board the power which some Members of Congress now question that it should have. Mr. Lilienthal was administering an act which Congress passed. If anyone has any doubts—and there may well be reasonable doubts as to whether any Government corporation should be free from civil-service laws—then under our constitutional representative system of government it is the obligation of the Congress, or of any Member who so believes, to attempt to change the law. We should not blame the man who was administering the law passed by the Congress.

I should like to read another section of the act. There has been some criticism of the fact that certain fertilizers were delivered free of charge. Let us read from the act itself. I read from page 4, paragraph (e):

(e) Under the authority of this act the board may make donations or sales of the product of the plant or plants operated by it to be fairly and equitably distributed through the agency of county demonstration agents, agricultural colleges, or otherwise as the board may direct, for experimentation, education, and introduction of the use of such products in cooperation with practical farmers so as to obtain information as to the value, effect, and best methods of their use.

For a number of years I had heard a great deal about the TVA. I had read considerable about the TVA, but I had never had the opportunity of seeing the TVA in operation. Last November I happened to be in Washington. I went to the Tennessee Valley at my own expense. I decided I would have a look at the TVA.

I spent approximately a week down there, meeting and talking with employees of the TVA organization, and going into various communities in Alabama and Tennessee and holding discussion with farmers, businessmen, chambers of commerce, and ordinary citizens and workers to get their ideas as to how the project was operating.

There has been some misconception that this was a vast experiment in state socialism, that it was trying to control the local government, that it was trying to supplant the American system of free enterprise with some kind of state socialism. I wanted to see for myself whether that was true. As I say, I talked with persons in all walks of life, and I returned from that trip convinced that, far from being an effort at state socialism, or an attempt to foist a different system upon an unwilling locality or unwilling American citizens in private enterprise, this was the greatest stimulus to private enterprise, to small business, and to those who believe in the American system that this country has perhaps ever had.

I went into some of the communities which had suffered greatly from an economic point of view. I talked with persons who when the TVA had first been proposed, had been vigorously against it. Almost without exception the citizens with whom I came in contact in the Tennessee Valley said that this had been a great boon to private enterprise; that communities which had been almost destitute had come back to life; that new flour mills, factories, and various other industries had come in, and that the people were going to work in new jobs.

This investment of capital was not placed in those localities by the TVA or any governmental agency. Far from it. It was American capital, free enterprise capital, capital raised in the localities, or from outside the localities, by people who recognized the fact that there in the Tennessee Valley was an opportunity to make an investment in the future of America.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. I rise to remark that the Senator is making a very important address. Very few Senators are present to listen to him. I do not wish to suggest the absence of a quorum. I am wondering if we could not take a recess until Monday, when other Senators could hear him. A moment ago I spoke with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], who understands the situation. I ask him for his assistance. Does not the Senator from Nebraska feel that something could be done?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I agree with the observation of the distinguished Senator from New Mexico. This is a very important speech, and Senators should all hear it.

Not more than an hour ago I announced that we would continue in session this evening to see what progress we could make. I did not announce the exact hour when we expected to take a recess. I spoke to the able Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] and asked him if he would rather speak tonight or wait until Monday. He said he would like to finish tonight. So I had made up my mind that we would continue in session until the conclusion of his speech this evening. I have told many Members of the Senate that when that time arrived we would take a recess until Monday.

Mr. HATCH. I feared that that was the exact situation. Senators on both sides of the aisle have been told that nothing further will be done this evening, and they have gone to their respective homes and are missing the very fine and able address which the Senator from California is making. I do not wish to suggest the absence of a quorum, because I do not know whether there would be any more Senators present at the conclusion of a quorum call than there are now. What does the Senator from Nebraska suggest?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I should like to continue in session until 6 o'clock. At that time if the distinguished Senator from California wishes to suspend, I shall be glad to move a recess until Monday, and he can complete his address at that time.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, it is now nearly 6 o'clock. I am sure the Senator from California is modest, and would probably say "No; I will go ahead and finish tonight." But why not take a recess now, and let the Senator from California resume his speech on Monday?

Mr. WHERRY. I am not in a position to make a deal with the Senator from California. I had hoped that we might remain in session until 6 o'clock. Only a short time ago, when the Senator from New Mexico was not present, I was told by Members on the other side of the aisle that they wished to continue in session until a late hour. They wished to have night sessions and sessions on Saturday so as to complete consideration of the unfinished executive business. Now, within less than an hour, we have an unusual request to take a recess at this time.

I agree with the Senator from New Mexico that the Senator from California is making an important speech. All Senators ought to hear it. However, it was the acting minority leader who forced me to say what we expected to do. I have an idea that if I had not been forced to state the program we would have continued in session this evening. Senators would have remained in their seats, and we would not have the trouble we are now experiencing. That is the difficulty we always experience when we make an announcement at half past four in the afternoon as to what the plan is.

Would the Senator from California like to complete his speech now, or would he prefer to continue on Monday?

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, I am perfectly agreeable to finishing now. I am not sure that I would have a larger audience on Monday than I have now. I am perfectly willing to continue.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish the RECORD to show that I should like to comply with the distinguished Senator's request. I agree with every word he has said.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. HATCH. Would the Senator be willing to resume his speech on Monday, so that the Senate may take a recess at this time? If there is any question as to responsibility on the part of the acting majority leader, I will say for the RECORD that at the request of the minority leader I am acting in his place, and I will take full responsibility for requesting a recess at this time in order that the Senator from California may be heard at a later date.

Mr. WHERRY. I wish to cooperate with Senators who are interested in the confirmation of the nomination of Mr. Lilienthal, and if it is agreeable to the distinguished Senator from California I shall move in a few moments a recess until Monday. There is some other business to be taken up at this time.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE—ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Farrell, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 159) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in certain appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, and for other purposes, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, Senate bill 931, to extend certain powers of the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, is now in conference. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] be appointed additional conferees on the part of the Senate.

AMENDMENTS TO SENATE RULES

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. BROOKS. I ask unanimous consent to present for immediate consideration four resolutions which were unanimously approved by the Committee on Rules and Administration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator may proceed.

Mr. BROOKS. From the Committee on Rules and Administration, I report an original resolution, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 100) reported by Mr. BROOKS from the Committee on Rules and Administration, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate Resolution 77, relating to payments from the contingent fund of the Senate in connection with inquiries and investigations, agreed to June 28, 1945, be, and the same is hereby, amended by striking out, where they occur in said resolution, the words "Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate" and in lieu thereof inserting the words "Committee on Rules and Administration."

PRINTING OF ADDITIONAL COPIES OF HEARINGS ON LABOR RELATIONS PROGRAM

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Resolution 93, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the resolution (S. Res. 93), submitted by Mr. TAFT on March 12, 1947, was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That in accordance with paragraph 3 of section 2 of the Printing Act, approved March 1, 1907, the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to have printed for its use 1,000 additional copies of the hearings held before said committee during the Eightieth Congress on bills and joint resolutions relative to the labor relations program.

PRINTING AND DISTRIBUTION OF CERTAIN MATTER RELATING TO CONGRESSIONAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, from the Committee on Rules and Administration I report favorably, without amendment, Senate Joint Resolution 89, and ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 89) to provide for the printing and distribution of certain matter relating to congressional activities, authorized by section 221 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946 to be included in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That section 221 of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended, is amended by inserting "(a)" after the section number, and by adding at the end of such section a new subsection as follows:

"(b) The Public Printer is authorized and directed under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, to print separately from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and to make available for sale to the public at a price sufficient to reimburse the expense of such printing, the matter authorized under subsection (a) to be printed or incorporated in the daily RECORD. The money derived from such sales shall be paid into the Treasury and shall be accounted for in the annual report of the Public Printer."

ATOMIC ENERGY COMMISSION—NOMINATION OF DAVID E. LILIENTHAL

The Senate resumed the consideration of the nomination of David E. Lilienthal to be a member of the Atomic Energy Commission.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I shall be glad to yield to the Senator in order to place something in the RECORD or to make an explanation, but I do not wish to lose the floor.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator will not lose the floor.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator from California yield for a moment?

Mr. KNOWLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate reconvenes on Monday, the distinguished Senator from California may have the floor in executive session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I think the Senator was in the process of making one of the best-reasoned speeches I have heard on the floor of the Senate in this session of Congress, and I wish to give him my very sincere commendation for the contribution which I think he is making to the Lilienthal case. I hope that at the opening of the session on Monday, when the Senator takes the floor again, he will summarize for the benefit of the Senate the major points which he has made in his speech, because I think he will find that if the other Members of the Senate take the time really to grasp the implications of his speech it will have a good effect on the Senate.

Mr. KNOWLAND. I thank the Senator.

CONSERVATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF RESOURCES OF THE PACIFIC NORTHWEST

Mr. MORSE. I wish to take only a minute or two to call attention to a very serious situation which exists in the Pacific Northwest, about which I shall have much to say as the Eightieth Congress progresses. I refer to the development of the power resources of the Pacific Northwest; to the reclamation program, soil conservation, and the flood-control program; to the whole question of preserving national wealth and supporting projects which will create new national wealth, which will provide employment, with resulting tax dollars, without which we cannot reduce the enormous national debt which is threatening the stability of our country.

I am very much concerned about actions which are being taken on the House side in regard to appropriations, as those actions affect the job which ought to be done of providing for wealth-creating projects, for which increased appropriations are required. So far as my record in the Eightieth Congress is concerned, I intend to serve notice from my side of the Senate as to the type of action which is being taken on the House side with relation to wealth-creating developments in the Pacific Northwest. I want the people of the Pacific Northwest to know at all times where the responsibility rests for this action. I feel that as a result of the action taken in the Eightieth Congress, great projects which are needed for the development of that section of the country, and, for that matter, for the benefit of the economy of the entire Nation, are being thwarted.

The responsibility in the last analysis must rest upon the majority party in the Eightieth Congress, which happens to be the Republican Party. I want the people of the Pacific Northwest to know that as the campaign of 1948 starts, because if my party becomes responsible for stifling and preventing the development of needed and wealth-producing projects, then it is not entitled to the votes of the people of the Northwest in the 1948 campaign; and, in my judgment, it will not win the campaign in 1948 without the votes of the Northwest.

I shall put the economic welfare of my country at all times above any political advantage to my party. By so doing I shall serve my party best, because if it has to learn the hard way, if it has to learn that once the American people begin to realize the effect of that program on the economy of this country it cannot go forward with the type of fiscal policy which I think the House is giving every indication that it intends to follow, I want to help to bring that realization about.

I hope that my party will come to its senses and appreciate the necessity of going forward with these wealth-creating projects and understand the importance of separating in the national budget items which concern the administration of government, with regard to which I think we can make drastic cuts and great economies, and should make them, and avoid making cuts in appropriations for such important projects as McNary Dam, Foster Creek, Hungry Horse, and the reclamation projects in Washington and Oregon and the Pacific Northwest in their totality, including the flood-control program in the Willamette Valley.

Mr. President, I say that if my party cannot see the importance of going forward with those projects, then it does not deserve the votes of the people of Washington and Oregon in the 1948 campaign. In that campaign I shall not hesitate to place the responsibility for any loss that is suffered by that section of the country because of the fiscal policies of the Republican Party in the Eightieth Congress.

So, Mr. President, I now introduce into the RECORD, as a part of my remarks, resolutions adopted by the Council of the City of Portland, Oreg., in regard to the need for the development of greater power resources in that section of the country in order to meet the great industrial needs of the Pacific Northwest. I ask to have the resolutions printed at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATE OF OREGON,
COUNTY OF MULTNOMAH,
City of Portland, ss:

I, Will E. Gibson, auditor of the city of Portland, do hereby certify that I have compared the following copy of Resolution 23191, urging the Eightieth Congress of the United States to approve appropriations sufficient to construct additional electric power projects on the Columbia River and its tributaries with a generating capacity, by November 1, 1949, of 318,000 kilowatts over and above the 745,000 kilowatts of generating units now on order, and with a generating capacity of 1,565,000 kilowatts by November 1, 1953, and to make these necessary appropriations available, as rapidly as possible, to the Corps of United States Army engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation, to the end that generators sufficient to supply 1,565,000 kilowatts of power by 1953 may be constructed, with the original thereof, and that the same is a full, true, and correct transcript of such original Resolution 23191 and of the whole thereof as the same appears on file and of record in my office, and in my care and custody.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and the seal of the city of Portland affixed this 21st day of March 1947.

[SEAL] WILL E. GIBSON,
Auditor of the City of Portland.
By ELBERT G. ROFF,
Deputy.

"Resolution 23191

"Whereas additional multiple-purpose projects must be constructed on the Columbia River and its tributaries to maintain future supplies of electric power sufficient to maintain continued industrial, agricultural, and utility development in the Pacific Northwest; and

"Whereas the Federal Government, through congressional action, has assumed responsibility for the construction of such projects and existing generating capacity in the Northwest has already been fully utilized and present transmission lines of the Bonneville Power Administration are already approaching conditions of full load so that additional power cannot be delivered to load centers on these transmission lines; and

"Whereas the construction of adequate power generating and transmission facilities is necessary to a strong regional economy and to the further development of the State of Oregon, and particularly to the industrial growth of the city of Portland, Oreg., and the area adjacent thereto; and

"Whereas new Federal generating capacity in the amount of 318,000 kilowatts over and above the 745,000 kilowatts of generating units now on order will be required between now and November 1, 1949, to meet the present critical power supply problem and 1,565,000 kilowatts will be required to meet anticipated needs by November 1, 1953; and

"Whereas transmission line materials and equipment are still critically short in supply and an additional transmission line is needed to serve the heavy and immediate load of electric power required to meet the steadily increasing power demands of the Portland metropolitan area and Willamette Valley: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Council of the City of Portland, Oreg., That the Eightieth Congress of the United States be urged to approve appropriations sufficient to construct additional electric power projects on the Columbia River and its tributaries with a generating capacity, by November 1, 1949, of 318,000 kilowatts over and above the 745,000 kilowatts of generating units now on order, and with a generating capacity of 1,565,000 kilowatts by November 1, 1953, and to make these necessary appropriations available as rapidly as possible to the Corps of United States Army engineers and the Bureau of Reclamation, to the end that generators sufficient to supply 1,565,000 kilowatts of power by 1953 may be constructed; and be it further

"Resolved, That the request of the Bonneville Power Administration now pending before the Appropriations Committee of the House of Representatives for appropriations for backbone transmission facilities be made available to the Bonneville Power Administration on an annual and continuing basis which will be adequate to enable it to provide a means for the delivery of the necessary additional power to load centers in the region; and be it further

"Resolved, That in view of the public-agency preference of the Bonneville Act, the planning and subsequent appropriations for generation and backbone transmission of Federal power be based on careful engineering and commercial studies of the present and future needs of the Northwest region and that each regional load center in this region be provided with needed power facilities by the Federal agencies regardless of the ownership of the power-distributing agencies having the responsibility for providing service to the public in the regional load centers; and be it further

"Resolved, That the transmission line materials and equipment needed to construct the proposed 230-kilovolt line between Bonneville and Troutdale, which line is necessary to serve the steadily increasing power demands of the Portland metropolitan area and the Willamette Valley, be given priority and the 1948 appropriation be augmented so as to enable this transmission line to be constructed and in service not later than December of 1949; and be it further

"Resolved, That certified copies of this resolution be sent to the Honorable JOHN TABER, chairman, House Appropriations Committee; the Honorable ROBERT F. JONES, chairman, House Appropriations Subcommittee of the Interior Department; Senator GUY CORDON; Senator WAYNE MORSE; and Hon. HOMER D. ANGELL.

"Adopted by the council March 20, 1947.

"WILL GIBSON,
"Auditor of the City of Portland."

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, before my friends in the House of Representatives proceed as we understand they intend to proceed—at least, judging from the reports appearing in the press—to take action regarding this feature of the Federal budget, I hope they will stop, look, and listen to the people of the Northwest and to their need for these projects.

Mr. President, I also submit, and ask unanimous consent to have printed at this point in the RECORD as a part of my remarks, resolutions on the same problem, which have been adopted by the Central Labor Council of the city of Portland, Oreg., and vicinity.

There being no objection, the resolutions were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CENTRAL LABOR COUNCIL OF PORTLAND AND VICINITY,
Portland, Oreg., March 4, 1947.

Hon. WAYNE MORSE,
United States Senator,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR MORSE: The following resolution, which is self-explanatory, was adopted by unanimous vote of the Central Labor Council, of Portland, Oreg., at the last regular meeting held February 24, 1947:

"Whereas the critical power shortage in the Pacific Northwest requires the construction of additional transmission lines to areas, the power supply of which is dangerous deficient; and

"Whereas the continued operation and maintenance of the Federal transmission system under the jurisdiction of the Bonneville Power Administration is an absolute necessity if the power loads of the Northwest are to be met; and

"Whereas the continued industrial, agricultural, and economic development of the Pacific Northwest is dependent to a large degree upon the availability of an adequate supply of low-cost hydroelectric power at points where power is needed; and

"Whereas a determined effort is being made in various quarters to force an increase of the wholesale rate of $17.50 per kilowatt-year now charged by the Bonneville Power Administration, in spite of the fact that it has been fully demonstrated that the project will pay all costs at the present $17.50 rate with many millions surplus to the Government besides: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That the Central Labor Council does hereby go on record as favoring the appropriation of funds for the Bonneville Power Administration, Corps of Engineers, and the Bureau of Reclamation in amounts sufficient to permit operation and maintenance of existing Federal generating plants and transmission system, the development of new generation and the extension of the transmission system so as not to retard the economic growth of the Pacific Northwest and the creation of new opportunities and new jobs; and be it further

"Resolved, That we earnestly protest any increase in the present Bonneville wholesale rates since such increase would deprive the Northwest of the only natural advantage it now enjoys to at least partially compensate for the discriminating freight rates and other disadvantages it suffers; and be it further

"Resolved, That this resolution be sent to President Harry Truman, the Oregon delegation in the United States Congress, American Federation of Labor, Building and Construction Trades Department, State Federation of Labor urging their endorsement and support."

Sincerely,

GUST ANDERSON,
Secretary.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I close this part of my remarks by saying again that in the 1948 campaign I wish to be in the position I was in during the 1946 campaign, when I went before the voters in a number of the States of the Union and told them that in my judgment if they really wanted to have sound economy stability of the United States, if they really wanted to have sound economy in Government, insofar as eliminating wasteful expenditures from the administrative side of Government was concerned, then they should put Republicans in the Congress of the United States. In the 1948 campaign I wish to be in a position to make the same arguments to the voters. But I serve notice on my party today that if they go forward with the type of fiscal policy which I think is emanating from the House of Representatives—at least, insofar as I am able to judge from the reports appearing in the press—I will not hesitate in 1948 to point out that what my party should do is turn out of office those Republicans who are guilty of supporting that type of fiscal policy.

Mr. President, I return for a moment to my previous remarks, so as to make my position perfectly clear, because I do not wish it to be misunderstood. I wish it clearly understood that in the 1948 campaign I shall be fighting for the Republican Party; but in that campaign I will not hold any brief for any Republican who seeks to thwart the development of these great wealth-creating projects which I think are so vital to the West and, being vital to the West, are also vital to the economic stability of the entire Nation.

GALLUP POLL ON THE PRESIDENT'S PLAN FOR AID

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, first let me say that I endorse the statements which have just been made by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE]; and at an early date, when more time is available, I shall wish to comment on that subject myself.

Mr. President, I was interested to read this morning's Gallup poll report on public reactions to the President's proposals for Greece and Turkey. A careful reading of the poll reveals some interesting facts regarding the attitudes of the American public, and it is worth our attention.

The outstanding fact which emerges, of course, is that the public has not yet had sufficient information to enable it to form a consistent opinion. Thus, while a small majority of those polled favor the President's plan for aid to Greece and Turkey, it is clear that they do so for humanitarian purposes, and that they strongly oppose those features of it which involve military intervention or smack of imperialism.

While it is clear that they are willing to make personal sacrifices to aid those who have suffered from the war's devastation, it is equally clear that they would favor giving such aid through the agency of the United Nations.

These are exactly the sentiments which impelled the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] and myself to introduce a substitute resolution which, while making full aid immediately available, would call upon the United Nations to set up an organization immediately to handle and distribute this aid on a humanitarian basis.

I should like to point out that this poll was taken immediately after the President's speech, when only one side of the argument had been presented, and before the public had ample time to reflect on its implications.

Mr. President, I therefore ask unanimous consent to have the Gallup poll to which I have referred printed in entirety in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the poll was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE GALLUP POLL—56 PERCENT SUPPORT TRUMAN PLAN FOR GREEK AID

(By George Gallup, director, American Institute of Public Opinion)

PRINCETON, N. J., March 27.—The first complete national survey of public opinion on aid to Greece shows that President Truman's program has substantial backing from the American people.

Their view is shown in the following vote among people who have heard or read about the issue of aid to Greece:

"Do you approve or disapprove of the bill asking for $250,000,000 to aid Greece?"

Aid to Greece

	Percent
Yes	56
No	32
No opinion	12

On the proposed $150,000,000 aid to Turkey the poll finds the following vote:

Aid to Turkey

	Percent
Yes	49
No	36
No opinion	15

In short, aid to Greece is favored by nearly 2 to 1 and aid to Turkey by about 1½ to 1, at this stage of developments on the issue. Further debate and discussion may alter sentiment.

In probing opinion the Institute covered many aspects of the issue, using a multiple-question technique. A comprehensive ballot was used in the interviewing of voters, their opinions being drawn out by a series of questions dealing with the Greek and Turkish problems.

FINDINGS ARE LISTED

Among the significant findings were the following:

1. Mr. Truman's speech to Congress asking for $400,000,000 to help Greece and Turkey made a great impression on the American people. More than three out of every four so far say they have heard or read about his speech.

2. While approving Mr. Truman's general policy, the majority express regret that the problem of Greece was not put up to the United Nations in the beginning.

Most voters recognize the reasons why the United Nations was bypassed, but they have faith in the United Nations and under ideal circumstances would have preferred the United Nations to handle the controversy.

3. The majority of Americans are not afraid that the proposed stand in Greece and Turkey will lead to war.

On the contrary, the general feeling is that a strong stand which shows Russia that we are not bluffing will, in the long run, improve the chances of a European peace settlement.

AGAINST APPEASEMENT

The viewpoint of the majority is well expressed in the comments of a Philadelphia office manager, one of thousands of voters questioned in the poll. His statement sums up the typical attitude as follows:

"If we let Russia get away with her aggressive policy she'll start reaching out for more and more and then we're bound to have a war on our hands. Dictators never know when to stop if you appease them.

"I think that putting our foot down now at the risk of war is more likely to bring lasting peace than giving in to the Russians."

4. The people are being fairly hard-headed in their attitude toward money for Greece and Turkey. They're willing to see aid given, but they want American experts sent over to supervise the uses to which the money will be put.

The administration's plan to send such experts is approved by a vote of approximately 8-to-1.

5. The country is anxious, however, to avoid military involvement of any kind in Greece.

This is shown when voters were asked whether they favor sending American military advisers to train the Greek and Turkish armies. The replies were an overwhelming "no."

Early this week Acting Secretary of State Dean Acheson told the Senate Foreign Relations Committee that the United States would send no troops to Greece.

NOT AN ISOLATED INCIDENT

6. There is a very widespread feeling that the so-called Truman doctrine will have to apply to other nations if they get themselves in the same fix as Greece.

In short, the public seems aware that our stepping into Greece may prove anything but an isolated incident, and that we might have to repeat the process in other nations where free government is considered threatened.

7. The only major point on which the public does not seem to be clear is whether the Governments of Greece and Turkey truly have the backing of a majority in those countries.

More than half say they don't know whether the Turkish Government is backed by the people, and about 4 in every 10 say they don't know whether the present Greek Government has the support of a majority of Greeks.

Those Americans who venture an opinion are inclined to think the Grecian and Turkish Governments are supported by a majority of citizens. But the poll clearly indicates that a very large section of the American public is looking to the State Department and other sources for more light on the question.

8. Eighteen months after the ending of World War II the country continues to be anti-isolationist in its sentiments.

When asked whether we should take a strong stand in Europe, the voters indicate a 2 to 1 preference for a positive role across the Atlantic.

SUMMARY OF ANSWERS

Following is a summary of the survey questions and answers in addition to those given in the beginning of this report. The institute is continuing its study of public opinion on the Greece-Turkey issue and will continue its reports at periodic intervals until the issue is settled by a vote of Congress.

"What do you think are the chief reasons for helping Greece and Turkey?"

Principal reasons given by voters: (1) To check communism and stop Russia; (2) Greece is starving, needs food, needs help; (3) to strengthen America's position and keep peace.

"Can you tell me what are the chief reasons against helping Greece and Turkey?"

Principal reasons given: (1) It might lead to war; (2) it would cost too much; we can't afford it; (3) we might forfeit all possibility of Russia's friendship.

"Would you favor sending American civilian experts over to Greece to help supervise the uses to which this money will be put?"

	Percent

The same question was asked concerning Turkey, with virtually the same results—77 percent in favor, 17 percent opposed, and 6 percent no opinion.

"Would you favor sending them to train the Turkish Army?"

"Why do you think this problem was not turned over to the United Nations to handle?"

Principal reasons given by voters: (1) The UN is too slow, speed is needed here; (2) the UN is not equipped to handle the problem, not ready to meet such issues, has no money to spend and no police force; (3) Russia would use her veto to prevent any action on Greece.

However, 56 percent indicated disapproval of bypassing the UN completely, while 25 percent approved and 19 percent gave no opinion.

"Do you think that lending money to aid Greece and Turkey is or is not likely to get us into war?"

TERMINATION OF WAR POWERS AND CONTROLS UNDER SECOND WAR POWERS ACT—CONFERENCE REPORT (H. DOC. 25)

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I submit a conference report on the bill (S. 931) to extend certain powers of the President under title III of the Second War Powers Act, and ask unanimous consent that it be printed and lie on the table.

There being no objection, the conference report was received, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 931) to extend certain powers of the President under Title III of the Second War Powers Act, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respectives Houses as follows: That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendment insert the following:

"That this Act shall be cited as the 'First Decontrol Act of 1947.'

"SEC. 2. That the Congress hereby declares that it is vital to a free economy and full production in the United States that all emergency controls and war powers under the Second War Powers Act be removed except in certain limited instances.

"The Congress further declares that in each such limited instance the authority for such emergency controls and war powers should not be exercised by the grant of broad, general war powers but should be granted by restrictive, specific legislation.

"SEC. 3. For the purpose of liquidating existing emergency controls and war powers and for the purpose of affording further opportunity for the appropriate committees of the Congress to consider specific legislation granting restricted authority in limited instances, Title XV, section 1501, of the Second War Powers Act, 1942, approved March 27, 1942, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 1501. Except as otherwise provided by statute enacted during the first session of the Eightieth Congress on or before the date this section as amended takes effect, Titles I, II, III, IV, V, VII, and XIV of this Act and the amendments to existing law made by such titles shall remain in force only until March 31, 1947, except that such Title III, and the amendments to existing law made by such title, shall remain in force until June 30, 1947, for the following purposes: (a) Allocations of cinchona bark and cinchona alkaloids, manila (abaca) fiber and cordage, agave fiber and cordage, tin and tin products, antimony and streptomycin; (b) allocations limited to control of production for export of tractors; (c) allocations of the use of transportation equipment and facilities by rail carriers; (d) allocations of materials or facilities for export which are required to expand the production in foreign countries of materials critically needed in the United States; (e) allocations of materials or facilities which are certified by the Secretaries of State and Commerce as necessary to meet international commitments: Provided, That any materials or facilities which were not being allocated on March 24, 1947, shall not be allocated hereafter under the provisions of such Title III: Provided further, That the two Houses of Congress by concurrent resolution or the President may designate an earlier time for the termination of any power of allocation under such title: Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be construed to continue beyond March 31, 1947, any authority to allocate sugar, rubber, or the derivatives thereof. After the amendments made by any such title cease to be in force, any provisions of law amended thereby (except subsection (a) of section 2 of the Act entitled "An Act to expedite national defense, and for other purposes", approved June 28, 1940, as amended by the Act of May 31, 1941) shall be in full force and effect as though this Act had not been enacted.'"

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Great and marvelous are Thy works, Lord God. Let Thy work appear unto Thy servants and Thy glory unto their children. We most humbly acknowledge our sins; forgive us and teach us that every renunciation brings us nearer to upright and courageous living. The years gone by are ours by inheritance; the fruits of the future depend upon our decisions. Lay Thy hand upon us that the welfare of our country may be held in the folds of every conscience, and lead us to carry our obligation to the altar of the Lord. O inspire this Congress ever to safeguard the rights of our citizens, until the waste places of our land shall blossom as the rose. In all our intricate relationships unite us in a fellowship of cooperation for the common good, exercising courtesy, restraint, and honor. ROME, N. Y., AIR BASE

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, it has come to me on reliable information today that the Rome, N. Y., air base and depot is to be put in the inactivated class. On the basis of dozens and dozens of protests that I have received from people in my district due to the economic importance of this great air terminal in the central part of New York State, I protest and protest loudly to the War Department against such action. This is one of the most important air terminal points in central New York State. Although it is not in my district, the people of my district have gained a great deal of benefit from it. I think it is an economic tragedy or calamity, if you want to put it that way, to have this great depot put in the inactivated class. A large part of upstate New York depends upon this base for air communication with the rest of the country. Let us hope the War Department will find ways and means to keep the Rome airport open.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. MEADE of Kentucky asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a statement on the Centralia mine disaster, together with an editorial appearing in today's Washington Post.

Mr. MORRISON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include extraneous material.

UNITED STATES SHIPS IN EUROPE ON LEND-LEASE

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, since the Greek problem has become the burning question of the hour, there have been extremely interesting developments.

Today we are attracted by a newspaper headline: "1,700 United States ships still in Europe on lend-lease." The item states that Russia holds 577 of these vessels. She has returned none of the ships she borrowed from the United States Navy, and further:

> The lend-lease ships figure importantly in Navy plans for aiding the anti-Russian bloc in Europe. The Navy already has sold to Turkey eight surplus minesweepers loaned to England and six minesweepers and other vessels to Greece.

Thus the administration in the operation of its complex foreign policy has loaned 577 ships to be used in the service of the communistic states and sold 14 to Greece and Turkey, who, we are told, are in a death struggle defending themselves against communism.

Considering the history of our Government for the past 14 years and the administration's acceptance and adoption of totalitarian ideals as manifested through their planned and controlled economy, it appears that their distribution of ships gives a true picture of their basic and fundamental devotion to totalitarian practices—577 for, 14 against.

NOBODY CHECKS GOVERNMENT PHYSICAL PROPERTY

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. WEICHEL. Mr. Speaker, hearings before the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries developed the fact that no independent agency or auditor of the Government makes a regular, periodic, or any other check whatsoever as to the physical property purchased by the Government.

After any agency, bureau, or department once secures physical property, no one in the Government or in the name of the Government, not even the Comptroller General, is authorized to check, examine, investigate, or otherwise periodically find out if any such agency, bureau, or department of the Government actually has the physical property in its possession, whether it is given away, destroyed, or otherwise in control of the Government.

There is no check of the physical property of any kind whatsoever, so that any agency, bureau, or department without fear of detection or exposure, can give away, destroy or embezzle physical property belonging to the United States Government; no one has authority in law or otherwise to examine into the physical property transactions of any agency, bureau, or department. In other words there is no check, examination, or investigation of the physical inventories, if any, of the billions of dollars of physical property purchased with the taxpayers' money.

This probably supports the various statements in the newspapers with reference to the waste and destruction of the physical property of the various departments of the Government. I have heard that the Navy deliberately took to sea a deck load of brand new shoes, had them soaked with water and then ordered them destroyed; that the Army destroyed untold thousands of dollars worth of athletic equipment which could have been very well used by the poor youngsters of this country; and that the Ordnance Department gave away hundreds of millions of dollars worth of machinery.

I do not believe that the agencies, bureaus, and departments should have the absolute discretion of giving away, destroying, and passing on the embezzling of physical property, for there is no check of its operation.

I believe the people are entitled to a periodic check and inventory of the use of physical property, the same as the money transactions, as to whether the agency has the property, gave it away or permitted it to be embezzled.

I am including herewith a resolution whereby there will be a periodic audit and examination by the Comptroller General of the physical property now in the hands of the agencies, bureaus, and departments of the Government:

Be it enacted, etc., That the General Accounting Office, under the direction of the Comptroller General, shall receive and examine inventories of property furnished as of June 30 for each fiscal year beginning in the year 1939 and thereafter, by every department, agency, and independent establishment of the United States, and by every corporation owned or controlled by the United States. Such inventories shall contain the following information: (a) The value of all property acquired or disposed of during the fiscal year; (b) the value of all property on hand as of June 30 with an allowance for depreciation of such property; and (c) such other information as the Comptroller General shall direct.

SEC. 2. The Comptroller General shall investigate (a) any matter relating to the acquisition or disposition of property by any department, agency, or independent establishment of the United States, and by every corporation owned or controlled by the United States, and (b) any other matter required to be stated in an inventory.

SEC. 3. The Comptroller General shall make a report to Congress at the beginning of each regular session relative to matters examined or investigated by him as provided in sections 1 and 2 with such recommendations for legislation as he shall deem advisable.

SEC. 4. The Comptroller General is authorized to use officers and employees under his jurisdiction for the performance of the duties provided in this act and to appoint and fix the compensation of such additional accountants, investigators, attorneys, officers, and employees as may be necessary without regard to the civil-service laws or the Classification Act of 1923, as amended.

VETERANS' HOSPITALS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks, and to include two newspaper articles.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I have here two newspaper articles which I will insert in the RECORD at the end of my remarks, and which I hope the Members will read tomorrow morning. One is from the Seminole Producer, of Seminole, Okla., and is entitled "Veteran Care Is War Emergency."

The other is from the Washington Times-Herald of today, and is entitled "Move By TABER Blocks Contracts on Vet Hospitals."

The article from the Oklahoma newspaper tells of the deplorable conditions in veterans' hospitals in Oklahoma. It states that hospital beds, nurses, and doctors are not available in sufficient numbers to furnish even the emergency cases hospital and medical care; that there are waiting lists and that a man cannot even get on the waiting list unless he is an emergency case.

As a member of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs I have grilled General Bradley, General Hawley, and the other "sacred cows" over there. They tell me there is no serious congestion to the point where emergency cases cannot be taken care of; but let me tell you what happened in my State just recently. A veteran tried on March 18, 1947, to get in the veterans' hospital at Muskogee, Okla., as an emergency case. The doctors examined him and said he was not an emergency case, and he was put on a waiting list. The veteran died 2 days later on March 20, 1947.

Now we find by the article in the Times-Herald that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], chairman of the Appropriations Committee, has ordered a 2-week's delay in awarding contracts to build veterans' hospitals. We are going to have more deaths of the nature I have referred to. Once more you are going to find that the boys who fought on world-wide battlefronts come home to die on "the battlefields of Republican economy," and Veterans' Administration bungling and red tape.

The newspaper articles follow, and to them I invite your careful attention:

[From the Seminole (Okla.) Producer of March 24, 1947]

VETERAN CARE IS WAR EMERGENCY

The war may be over for the average citizen, but it is not over for many thousands of Oklahoma veterans who cannot find hospital beds in the State when they become ill or incapacitated. That condition exists in Oklahoma, according to Dr. D. H. Miller, manager and chief medical officer of the largest veterans' hospital in Oklahoma, at Muskogee.

Hospital beds, nurses, and doctors are not available in sufficient numbers to furnish even the emergency cases hospital and medical care. Those veterans who have not pursued their "claims" through the miles of "red tape" of the Veterans' Administration and secured a decision from that Federal Bureau that they have a physical or mental disability due to wartime service are not to be admitted, according to the latest announcement, except "in cases of life or death."

That "life or death" decision is a difficult one to make. The veteran who was denied admission on March 18 because he was not a "life and death case," but who died on March 20, gives some idea about how difficult it is to make these decisions.

Oklahoma should have additional hospital beds for veterans. More nurses and doctors are sorely needed. These same professions are in demand in almost every community of the State, and private practice offers a much greater inducement than the initiative-killing positions in the antiquated civil service which supplies the personnel for the Veterans' Administration.

Physical facilities are recognized as a problem also. Everyone recognizes that even without the months delay always prevalent when the Government attempts to build a hospital, the job could not be done in time to meet the present emergency, due to shortage of materials and the labor situation in the construction field.

These are all recognized factors which result in no beds for the men and women who fought the Nation's battles. The condition exists, and the responsible officials of Government know all the facts. They do not, however, come up with any practical solution. Their plea that they are planning for new hospitals to be completed some years hence, does not save the life of a single veteran.

These disabled and sick veterans are just as much a part of the recent war as they were when in uniform. This is one of the war's problems, even though the shooting has ceased. Why cannot our Government apply some of the same methods to caring for these veterans which they applied when the Nation went to war without sufficient manpower or sufficient physical facilities?

It was a patriotic duty to serve either as a gun-toting enlisted man, a nurse, or a doctor during those war days. The recognition due a citizen who was fulfilling a patriotic duty was accorded those who answered the Nation's call. Why cannot that be done now, to meet this phase of our unfinished war?

A fine physical plant exists at McAlester, owned by the State. It is not in use. Medical officers of the Army, detailed to duty there, and Army nurses, detailed there, could take care of many hundreds. Borden Army hospital at Chickasha is closed. It could handle several hundred.

Called to duty, the doctors and nurses would respond. "Swivel chair doctors" by the dozens could be assigned from useless branch offices of the Veterans' Administration. Yes, it could be done with some of the same abilities demonstrated during the war being applied now. We doubt the ability of the present Veterans' Administration brass hats to do it, but it should be done.

[From the Washington (D. C.) Times-Herald of March 28, 1947]

MOVE BY TABER BLOCKS CONTRACTS ON VET HOSPITALS

Ordering a moratorium on the issuing of new contracts, Representative TABER (Republican), of New York, yesterday forced the Veterans' Administration to hold up its Nation-wide hospital program, the Times-Herald learned last night.

The chairman of the House Appropriations Committee made his demand for the contract-letting holiday directly to General Bradley, Veterans' Administrator, according to high Government sources.

BIDS HELD UP TO APRIL 8

Bradley agreed not to accept any bids until April 8 as a favor to the man who controls the purse strings on Capitol Hill, it was learned. Directly affected are two new hospitals for which contracts were to be okayed next week, and for which funds already have been appropriated.

Chairman TABER is reported to have ordered the 2-week moratorium to investigate excessive spending in the hospital program. He could not be reached for comment last night.

Representative ROGERS (Republican), of Massachusetts, chairman of the House Veterans' Affairs Committee, said she had heard rumors of TABER's action, but had not been informed of it officially.

PLEDGES INVESTIGATION

"I can say only that anything which holds up beds for ill veterans is a serious situation," the Congresswoman asserted. "I am planning to look into the matter thoroughly."

Reached at his home in Fort Myer last night, General Bradley said he accepted the responsibility for ordering that no contracts be issued until April 8, but added that he did so at the specific request of the Appropriations chairman.

"I have a mandate from Congress to go ahead with the hospital program," he said, "and construction that is under way already is not affected by Representative TABER's request. However, when he asked that no new bids be accepted for 2 weeks, I agreed."

From several sources it was learned that Bradley did not have to acquiesce to TABER's demands, but that he probably did so in order not to offend the Appropriations Committee head.

HOSPITALS BADLY NEEDED

Seriousness of holding up the hospital program—even for a day—was brought into sharp focus last night when it was learned that 3,500 veterans are now awaiting admittance to Veterans' Administration hospitals, and that the Army has 7,000 men in its hospitals that it wishes to discharge into veterans' institutions.

VA authorities have pointed out that the hospital load will increase 20 percent in 5 years and 40 percent in 10 years.

The building program is under supervision of Brig. Gen. John Stewart Bragdon, Director of the Military Construction Division, Office of the Chief of Engineers.

TAX REDUCTION AND THE BUDGET

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday, the House passed the Knutson bill. It has been estimated by tax experts that this will cost the Government $5,700,000,000.

To avoid deficit spending in peacetime it thereby becomes urgent, more so than ever before, to now cut the budget.

Of the budget remaining for consideration 80 percent are allocations for the Army, Navy, and veterans.

The $64 question is, How can the majority leadership cut this budget without seriously cutting the military and naval budgets? If the Republican leadership do cut the military budget, they will be running counter to the wishes of the American people. The most recent Gallup polls shows that 60 percent of the people who were asked about it do not favor cutting the military budget. They are more concerned about the problems of peace than they are about reduction of taxes at the immediate time.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Florida has expired.

Under the previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] is recognized for 10 minutes.

AID TO GREECE AND TURKEY

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, it is evident that the people back home are deeply disturbed by the administration's plan to aid Greece and Turkey as a means of blocking the expansion of communism. There is universal sympathy for the suffering which the Greek people are enduring. Our country has not forgotten the heroic defense which the Greek nation presented to the invading armies of Fascist Italy in the war years. Nor are we unmindful of the fact that the sad plight of the Greek people is the direct result of events completely beyond their control.

What disturbs the American people is the effort of our Government to direct our natural sympathies toward these innocent victims of the war to the establishment of a new policy of blockade. Our folks are deeply concerned over the effort to substitute our own Nation for Great Britain as the principal actor in the drama whose plot is the blocking of the Soviet Union's drive toward the west. There is no disposition whatever to sanction the Communist method of economic imperialism in Europe. We do not for a moment accept the Soviet Union's policy of exploiting famine and poverty as the means by which Mr. Stalin and Mr. Molotov expect to communize their neighbors.

But we are vitally interested in the formulation of America's policies, in meeting the issues of our generation. What direction are these policies taking? What are the principles underlying our conduct and determining the role we shall play?

I believe that the White House program is a reaffirmation of the nineteenth century belief in power politics. It is a refinement of the policy first adopted after the Treaty of Versailles in 1919 designed to encircle Russia and establish a "Cordon Sanitaire" around the Soviet Union. It is a program which points to a new policy of interventionism in Europe as a corollary to our Monroe Doctrine in South America.

Let there be no mistake about the far-reaching implications of this plan. Once we have taken the historic step of sending financial aid, military experts, and loans to Greece and Turkey, we shall be irrevocably committed to a course of action from which it will be impossible to withdraw. More and larger demands will follow. Greater needs will arise throughout the many areas of friction in the world. To be sure, we shall reserve the right to consider each problem on its own merits, but unless we develop a strong and consistent program—a program which we are prepared to back to the limit—the net result will inevitably be a lowering of American prestige and influence and the direct increase of Soviet pressure everywhere.

Let us not lose sight of this fundamental consideration. Unless we do the whole job of blocking Communist expansion and do it alone, we shall defeat the entire purpose of this program. Instead of checking the Soviet Union's rising influence, we run the risk of enhancing it enormously.

The question for Americans to consider is this: Are the probabilities of success in this new undertaking high enough to justify the risk? Are we prepared to pour endless sums of money into Greece, Turkey, and such other areas of the world as may be stimulated by our new policy to require our aid? Are we ready to send military missions overseas in the approved European fashion, recognizing that military missions have historically been followed all too frequently by military forces?

Do we have any alternatives worthy of serious examination? Are there any techniques which offer the prospect of changing the bankrupt methods of power politics, encirclement, and secret alliances? Must we go on muddling through world affairs, repeating in every generation the same ghastly errors of our predecessors?

If we are sincere in the beliefs we so constantly express, there is a new policy and a new organ which represents that policy. We ourselves have been the most instrumental Nation in the world in shaping the instrument of this new policy. The United Nations is new to be sure. But military missions and secret treaties are old. We have everything to gain by using the new agencies available to us.

The representative of our State Department has told the Nation that this is a matter which requires emergency handling. It cannot be delayed. Greece needs immediate financial assistance. Does this tragic dilemma concern no other country in the world than our own? Most certainly it does. It concerns the entire comity of nations. The peace of the world may be jeopardized by the tragedy unfolding there. Every country on earth should be interested in this situation.

I believe that the proper procedure in the present case is something far different from the Government proposal. We should go directly to the United Nations and urge action there. We should present the question of armed insurrection by a minority of the Greek people to the Security Council. We should urge the United Nations to ask for a joint contribution by all the nations of the earth to alleviate Greek suffering. If there are no other countries which can make such a contribution, our Government should then consider the advisability of making it directly to the United Nations instead of to Greece. Let all the countries represented in this global organization underwrite the enterprise. Let them join with us in this humanitarian effort. If the Greek people are restored to solvency, they will purchase the food they need. They will strengthen their own government, and they will manage to solve the internal problem of their military security for themselves.

This is the pattern for an orderly world. It is a policy of world cooperation rather than of intervention. It removes Uncle Sam from the suspicion of attempting world-wide penetration. Food today is international politics. We must not be guilty of utilizing it as a weapon unless we are ready to fight.

I believe that the people of our country expect a new departure in the conduct of our foreign affairs. We are tired unto the death of the Yaltas and the Teherans and the Potsdams through which the world has passed. For the first time in human history, let the nations resolve to deal the cards above the conference table. If we are to extend aid to Greece, let us do it through the United Nations, by the United Nations, for the United Nations. Turkey is not starving. Its 1,000,000 soldiers, the equivalent of an American Army of 7,000,000, are well fed.

Here in America we have major responsibilities to our own people. We have not yet solved our problems. Let us put them in order before we start solving the problems of the whole world.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman please tell the House of what possible value the United Nations could be in the solution of the problem to which the gentleman addresses himself, so long as Russia holds the veto power?

Mr. BENDER. I will be glad to answer the gentleman's question. The United Nations was effective in the controversy involving Iran. It was 100 percent successful in that problem, in spite of Russia's action, in spite of her disposition not to be friendly or cooperative. The United Nations worked in that instance. What in the world are we subscribing to the United Nations for unless we propose to use that Organization as the instrument in these world controversies?

The Committee on Foreign Relations is considering two propositions. One proposition provides for $350,000,000 to feed the people in Poland, Austria, Hungary, Greece, China, and Italy. On the other hand, they are considering the Truman proposition to implement Greece and Turkey to the extent of $400,000,000. It is proposed that we help the satellite countries of Russia. If we are going to fight communism, if we are going to make a frontal attack, then why feed her satellites?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. BENDER. Why should we use this vehicle to implement Russia? If we mean to get tough with Russia, why can we not be honest with ourselves and do this directly.

Mr. PRESTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. PRESTON. The gentleman was wondering whether or not it was worth while to take the risk to go into Greece and Turkey with this relief. Will the gentleman answer this question? In the early thirties, when Japan moved into Manchuria, and later on when Mussolini went into Ethiopia, and then when Hitler went into the Rhineland, and the democratic nations sat by and did nothing, how then can we sit back and repeat this time what we did last time?

Mr. BENDER. The democratic nations implemented Japan and Germany. Why, we were shipping material into Japan just a few months before Pearl Harbor, not only scrap iron, but we were sending lathes from my home city of Cleveland, Ohio, to Japan. We were implementing Germany as well. We did not boycott Germany and say, "We are going to stop doing business with you, Mr. Hitler." We were doing business with Hitler long after he became Mr. Big.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GROSS. I noticed in the headlines a moment ago that Russia has offered to lend England money. It looks like we might as well come home if that kind of procedure is going on.

Mr. BENDER. Frankly, we have billions of dollars of equipment all over the world that is available to the satellite countries of Russia. Some Russia is buying herself with American dollars.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. BENDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. REED of New York. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. REED of New York. There is no reason why Russia should not buy with American dollars. We have turned over all our engraving apparatus to them so that they can turn out our dollars over there.

Mr. BENDER. There is no question about that. You cannot quite understand this crazy, dizzy foreign policy of ours. On the one hand we give them aid, implement and feed them, and on the other we want to fight communism. Overnight everybody in America gets excited about communism. When the Republicans a year or two ago were talking about Communists in the American Government, nobody was excited, but all of a sudden everybody in the administration is all in a dither about the Communists.

Mr. SMATHERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMATHERS. The gentleman is not saying he is not in favor of fighting communism?

Mr. BENDER. I have been saying that right along. I am against communism and have been opposed to it all the time. But if we are going to oppose communism let us oppose it directly. Let us do it by not doing business with Russia and her satellite countries, by not implementing Russia and making Russia strong. Mr. Roosevelt turned over Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and Austria, and all these other satellite countries to Russia. They were turned over at Potsdam, at Yalta, at Tehran. These countries were turned over to Russia by the United States Government and by the British Government.

Mr. SMATHERS. Does the gentleman think that Russia is trying to take over Greece today?

Mr. BENDER. I do not know what Russia is trying to do. I am not a part of their government. But I do know this, that whatever there is in Europe that she has we gave her, we handed it over to her on a silver platter.

Mr. SMATHERS. I wish the gentleman would answer my question. Is it not a fact that from the information we have it appears that Russia is trying to move into Greece?

Mr. BENDER. I do not know about that. The gentleman is better informed about that than I am.

Mr. SMATHERS. The gentleman says he is willing to fight communism. Would not that be the first place to fight it?

Mr. BENDER. No. The first place to fight it is right in our own country. The second place is the State Department. The third place to fight it is in all the satellite countries and in Russia.

What do they say about Greece? There are two or three thousand bandits there raising Ned with the Greek Government and this venal monarch of theirs. It is a set-up that is not popular with the people, this fake election they put on in Greece, this Government that the people do not want. By sustaining that Government we are not doing any good. If they cannot cope with two or three thousand burglars who are operating in Greece, then we have no business going over there and supporting that kind of government.

Mr. SMATHERS. Will the gentleman admit that the election which took place in Greece was supervised by 637 foreign correspondents from all over the world, and it was certified by them to be as democratic and free an election as it was possible to get?

Mr. BENDER. Since when did foreign correspondence supervise an election? That is a new one on me. I never heard of that before. My impression about the Greek election is that the Greek election was corrupt. It was a phoney election, and the Greek people protested.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BENDER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Will the gentleman learn, if he can, from the Members on the other side who seem to be interested in this, whether or not it is their policy that we supervise the elections in these countries, and that if in these countries the ruling power, whether a monarch or whatever it may be, seems inclined to embrace communism, we go in there and tell them what kind of government they shall have? Will the gentleman find out from them?

Mr. BENDER. Is it not amazing that in Poland we permitted the Russian government to get away with the kind of election they conducted over there, yet on the other hand we are talking about this Grecian situation? Is not Poland as important as Greece? Are not the people there as important to us as the Greeks? Are not the Chinese as important to us as the Greeks? We withdraw from China, and we say to the Communists, "Go ahead, this is your happy hunting ground." There are 400,000,000 Chinese, whereas there are only 4,000,000 or 5,000,000 Greeks.

Mr. HOFFMAN. What about Finland?

Mr. BENDER. Yes, what about Finland, the only country in the world that ever paid its debt to the United States of America. We permit the Russian bear to go in there and just take over, and we say nothing about it at all. In fact, we put blinders on so we cannot see what is going on.

In my remarks last week, I suggested that our President at the behest of the British Government is developing an American policy which fits the needs of a collapsing British Empire. There are several ways of expressing this—we might say that the British have decided to transfer all of their liabilities throughout the world to us and keep the assets for themselves. Another way of expressing the same thing is this—wherever the British have been maintaining a hopeless economic and political situation, they are now asking us to come in and underwrite their mistakes. Still another way of expressing the same thing in financial terms, is this—our President and the British are asking us to pour billions of dollars of taxpayers' money down every international rat hole from Singapore to Constantinople.

Greece today with its corrupt and venal monarchy—Turkey with its military dictatorship, are liabilities to the British—they have cost the British hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars. Greece, in particular, represents a British mistake—a mistake because they have insisted on restoring a Greek monarch who does not have the support of the Greek people. It was also a mistake, Mr. Speaker, because many of the people around the Greek monarch are completely corrupt. The British have discovered that neither the hundreds of millions of dollars nor the flood of UNRRA relief succeeded in achieving a real change for the better in the economic life of the country. The present government is reported to have fattened its own pocket, protecting its own interests, speculating in the black market, and in general making a killing out of the present situation there. Its finances are described as being in complete disorder. Its officials have made no effort to curb the disastrous inflation now rampant in the country. They refuse to share the governmental power with run-of-the-mine, middle-of-the-road political figures; they maintain concentration camps, and general democratic civil liberties exist only on paper.

Mr. Speaker, this is what I call an international rat hole. No matter how much money we pour into such a government, it will do no good because the basic nature of the government itself is corrupt. No matter how much technical advice we furnish, it will do no good because the will to create a democratic government in Greece does not exist in the hearts and minds of the people who decide the policies for this reactionary Greek monarchy. There is no way, Mr. Speaker, for us any more than there was for the British to create a stable political situation in Greece so long as the present monarch is maintained in that nation.

So then, Mr. Speaker, the British are attempting, in my opinion, to give us a half billion dollars a year liability—the accumulated result of their errors in policy. Do we want it? Do we need it? Can we justify it?

Another such endless quagmire is the present Turkish Government which has existed as a venal dictatorship for the past 20 years. The rulers of this Government held a gun to our heads in the recent war. They sold to the Germans; they forced us to pay excessive prices for raw materials; they constantly threatened us with assistance to our enemies; they took several hundreds of millions of dollars of the American taxpayers' money because they thought it was smart business, and now with a million men under arms, they sit there in Turkey, expecting the American taxpayers to pay with hundreds of millions of dollars every year just to keep them sitting there in happy, little, military dictator-run camp. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, what assurance does our State Department have that after we pay hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars to the Turkish Army, because that is exactly what our State Department proposes to do—what assurance does our State Department have that the present Turkish military leaders will not sell out to the Russians, if and when the Russians get into a position to outbid us, or if a real conflict were to develop between us? Does anybody really believe that in the event of a Soviet-American war that Turkey would stand up for 1 week? Would the Turks stand and fight under their present leadership? I do not think so. I believe they will sell; I believe that in every single situation, the present Turkish Government will look out for its own hide. And in the meantime, it will sell to anybody who will pay the most money. Mr. Speaker, if we begin buying up every international threat, we will have entered a new period in international politics. It will be a period dominated by international blackmail.

Mr. Speaker, does it make sense that whenever anybody stands up anywhere and screams that he is against communism, therefore, automatically we should place him on the pay roll of the American taxpayer at whatever price he says is necessary to keep him screaming?

In short, does our Government intend in this new global policy to hire every dictator or king everywhere throughout the world who will scream "Stop communism!" Mr. Speaker, does it make sense for the British to make our decisions for us, to transfer their liabilities to us? Does it make sense for us to assume every mistake the British have made throughout the world? Does it make sense for us to put on the pay roll of the American Government everywhere in the world any old monarch or miscellaneous political adventurer who says, "Let's all of us boys get together and yell about communism for Uncle Sam at a price?"

If it makes sense to our State Department, I think the time is at hand to change the Department. It does not make sense to the American people.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has again expired.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Lait, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill and joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H. R. 1240. An act to provide for the suspension of navigation and vessel inspection laws, as applied to vessels operated by the War Department, upon the termination of title V, Second War Powers Act, 1942, as amended; and

H. J. Res. 76. Joint resolution authorizing the Commandant of the United States Coast Guard to waive compliance with the navigation and vessel-inspections laws administered by the Coast Guard.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. McDONOUGH asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of freight rates in California.

Mr. JOHNSON of California asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

DEMOCRACY VERSUS COMMUNISM

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, it is well in a great representative body such as this that we have an expression of views such as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BENDER] has made and that we have an exchange of views.

One factor contributing to the success of the democratic institutions of government is that in disagreement we respect the views of one another and the right of each other to entertain his or her views.

In taking the floor and characterizing unkindly or sarcastically the views of others, one makes very little contribution toward arriving at what is the right thing to do. My friend from Ohio says he is against communism. I would rather state my position as being that I believe in what my country stands for. I am pro-American, and being pro-American that means I am against any ideology or any institutions which would destroy—or is so aimed—the dignity and the personality of the individual.

My friend says that he is against communism. Yet, he makes a speech which I am not going to characterize because that would not be right, but the effect of his speech would be that we would isolate ourselves from the rest of the world, even if it were contrary to our national interests. I know that he does not mean that. If we follow his argument, however, the result would be the same as if he did mean it.

My views, broadly speaking, on this question have been expressed heretofore on the floor of the House. Twelve years ago I recognized that some day there would be a challenge against the way of life I believe in and another. My way of life has its origin in belief in God. I start with that. That is the basis of our civilization, and every thought I entertain is predicated upon that. The same applies to all of us who believe in God without regard to their religious convictions, whether they are a Catholic or a member of the various Protestant creeds or Jewish. They all believe in one God. The inevitable result of that belief is that the dignity and personality of the individual must always be uppermost in our minds.

That belief is the great truth that forms the firm foundation of the government we believe in. It is all centered around the dignity of the individual and the preservation of that dignity to the fullest measure possible.

Twelve years ago I was chairman of a committee. We recommended legislation against subversive activities and those engaging in them here. The only legislation which has passed this Congress in many years was recommended by the special committee of which I had the honor then to be chairman. One of the most important bills was the Foreign Agents Registration Act, about which you read so much today. I think that has been an effective piece of legislation in meeting subversive activities in America.

We have seen this challenge coming and we have seen country after country taken over. It is very easy to criticize why this was not done or why that was not done. Many of the things to which the gentleman referred were things about which I entertained somewhat similar doubts in my own mind. But we have to view the situation in the light of the world today and in the light of what is best for the national interests of the United States of America.

I am concerned with the national interest of my own country. As I view it, knowing of the things that do happen when the will of the people in certain countries cannot be expressed and a small minority takes over, with the result that the people become disheartened and tired of fighting for the principles of right and justice, finally the government is taken over by a minority. Then we have seen what ruthlessness follows, illustrated by the case of Yugoslavia which I referred to on July 27 of last year on the floor of the House and again in a speech I made on January 23 of this year, when I said that the Soviet Union was using its ideology to challenge the way of life we believe in, as well as it being a part of its military efforts to encircle America.

Now, I believe that to be a fact. Are we going to sit back and do nothing, or are we going to do something to try to prevent this encircling movement? That is the question. On that question, of course, men may honestly disagree. This is not a party matter. Let me say here that the gentleman from Ohio expressed his own views, and I know that he was not expressing his views as a Republican, but his own honest views as entertained by himself. It may be that between now and when the bill comes up circumstances will develop that may cause the gentleman to change his mind. Knowing the gentleman as I do, if such does happen, I know he would be actuated by what he considers the best interest, the national interest of America.

As I see it, there is a calculated risk if we do something; but there certainly is a calculated risk if we do nothing. The question is, Which is the greater calculated risk? That, as I see it, is the problem which addresses itself to the conscience and the judgment of each Member of the Congress.

The people expect us to know more about this problem than they do, and they are justified, because we are here as their Representatives from the various congressional districts throughout the country. They expect us to know more and they expect us to vote our judgment and our conscience, having always in mind the national interest of the United States of America.

We know that Greece with 7,500,000 people is a pivotal spot in the world today. There is a lot in what the gentleman had to say about China, but our country is not letting China down, our country is interested over there, and it is a national interest. I agree with the gentleman about China, not only for America of today, but because I am looking ahead several generations from now when we shall be dead and gone. I want friendship between the people of China and the people of America to extend to future generations. We, by our actions in the next few years to come, can crystallize and cement it so that Americans for generations to come will be the beneficiaries of our wise actions.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. I appreciate what the gentleman is saying. I should like to ask the gentleman's opinion on this matter which is involved in this whole question: The crisis in Greece came about as a result of Britain's informing us that she was withdrawing her support of the existing government. Is not that true? That is not my question, it is merely a preface to it.

Mr. McCORMACK. I do not think that brought the crisis; it brought the necessity for immediate action on our part.

Mr. McDONOUGH. All right. Then, whatever we may do to aid the Greek Government to establish a stabilized government in that country, we do to stop the spread of communism, but we also do something that will aid the British lifeline.

Mr. McCORMACK. I will go along with the gentleman in his first observation, but I cannot concede his last statement. I will go along with the gentleman in the first portion of his statement, although I probably would have expressed it somewhat differently.

Mr. McDONOUGH. My question is: If the crisis in Greece is of such importance to the democracies of the world, why should not Great Britain aid us in establishing stable conditions in Greece instead of asking us to do it alone?

Mr. McCORMACK. I am unable to answer that question; and yet, it is a proper question for anyone to entertain. I cannot answer it except to say that the evidence we have so far as I know is that Britain is unable to carry on her commitments. Now, with Britain withdrawing, the question is: What is the proper thing for us to do for our own national interest?

I think it is unwise for our country to remain inactive and by default allow nation after nation to be taken over by a vigorous communistic minority to be followed by the people's being subjected to ruthless force and then ultimately to be taken within the orbit—I will say this frankly—within the orbit of the Soviet Union.

The country that controls the Mediterranean controls Europe, and the country that controls Europe controls Africa and is a very dominating influence in Asia. I recognize the right of others to believe differently, but what is in our own national interest? Can we sit back and see Europe succumb country by country? Is that in the national interest of the United States? We know what happens, we know what has happened in the various countries over there. Let us assume that a month from now we pick up the papers and find that a small group has taken over Greece. Let us be frank with each other. We know that the Soviet Union directly or indirectly is working in there. In Albania, in Yugoslavia, probably in Rumania, certain elements are working, but back of that is the force and power and spirit of the Soviet Union. Suppose we wake up some day in the near future and find that Greece has been taken over by the Communists. Would we feel that that was for the national interest of our country? Other things are involved if Greece is taken over, a lot of other things. It is the pipe line to the Middle East, then to the Far East; it is the pipe line right down through that part of the world.

Mr. Speaker, suppose 2 or 3 months from now we find Italy has been taken over by the same group. How would we feel? Would we think that would be in the national interest of our country? Suppose, then, we woke up and found 2 or 3 months later that France has been taken over by the minority group. Then, of course, where would Belgium and Denmark be? We know that Sweden, Denmark, and Norway are now under pressure. There is a demand for islands up there. They are under economic pressure. Sweden is under economic pressure. We know that. We know that the Communists in the coalition government in Belgium have withdrawn from the cabinet so they can attack the government in Belgium in the open. What does that mean? Yes; we are vitally interested in China, too, not only because of our affection for the people of China, although we cannot be interested alone because of affection or sentiment, we are vitally interested, as I see it, because the national interest of our country prompts it.

Mr. MANASCO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama.

Mr. MANASCO. Do we not also have a selfish interest in keeping communism from the other countries of the world because unless we have a free world we cannot sell American goods. The manufacturers, the farmers, the American farmers and laborers, cannot do business in a Communist-dominated country. Is it not, therefore, to our selfish interest to take steps to prevent the spread of communism?

Mr. McCORMACK. Yes; that is correct, but there is something bigger, too. There is a moral objective. There is something over and beyond material things, although some of them are very important. There is something we have had for 2,000 years or longer.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. The gentleman who raised the question of the United Nations raises a proper one. I came to this Chamber today not intending to make any remarks. I heard the gentleman from Ohio make his remarks. I am glad he has made his remarks because it is only through discussion that we arrive at a judgment; it is only through discussion we can arrive at the truth where truth is involved or where judgment in reference to a matter of policy concerning the national interest is involved.

Mr. BELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. BELL. May I ask about this situation: I notice a headline in the morning paper that Stalin has offered a loan to Great Britain. Suppose that Great Britain were to accept that loan and join the ideological group that Stalin represents, would that have a bearing on the question of the Greek loan from America, in the opinion of the gentleman?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, if England accepted the loan and joined that ideological group, it would certainly have a serious repercussion throughout the world. I do not know anything about the loan. All I know is what I see in the papers. Whether it is a tactical move by Stalin for world politics or not, I do not know; but if England were to accept the loan, and by reason of that come within the orbit of the Soviet Union, it would have serious repercussions throughout the world and certainly it would be a matter of grave concern to the people of the United States. Now, that is my opinion.

Mr. HENDRICKS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. HENDRICKS. A good many of our prominent citizens have suggested this problem be taken before the UN. May I ask the gentleman what he thinks Russia would do about the veto if we should take that question to the UN?

Mr. McCORMACK. I will come to that.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. CRAWFORD. There are two points with respect to the British position.

Mr. McCORMACK. I am trying to speak from the broader angle, and I know my friend has interpreted my statement in that way. I think out of this there is an opportunity for an awful lot of good to come. I do not know whether I will make any contribution or not, but I am attempting to, following the remarks made by the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. CRAWFORD. The gentleman is making a constructive contribution. I think there is a complete answer to the question raised by our friend on this side with respect to Britain's ability at this moment, an official answer, in the 1947 economic survey issued by the Prime Minister to the people of Britain. I think that is a complete answer to Britain's inability to pay and also a complete warning to the people of the United States that unless Britain receives additional substantial credit from the United States Britain must necessarily accept credit from Russia or from some other country. There is no escape from it, because Great Britain's 1947 program calls for certain accomplishments. Three months have passed, and they have not even started on those accomplishments, and in the absence of those accomplishments the $3,750,000,000 loan extended to Britain by the United States will have failed to suffice, and it is our next move to meet the situation.

Mr. McCORMACK. I thank the gentleman for his contribution, coming from one of the best versed Members of the Congress.

Now, coming to the United Nations. That is a very pertinent question; a very relevant thought. The United Nations, of course, is not even in its infant stage. This is a situation where we have been requested by the Greek Government and the Turkish Government to act. We have been requested to act in connection with the internal affairs of those Governments. The United Nations does not have the money, it does not have the equipment, and it does not have an international police force. It is doubtful whether it has the authority to go into the internal affairs of a country, as such, for the purpose of trying to stabilize it.

Furthermore, this question, if presented to the United Nations, would come before the Security Council, and already, on either 9 or 10 occasions, the representative of the Soviet Union has exercised the veto power. Furthermore, we only had that situation arise a few days ago when the question of the Albanian sinking of a British ship came before the Security Council, and the Council voted 7 to 2 to take some kind of action in connection with that sinking. And who was it that vetoed it? It was the representative of the Soviet Union. Of course, the purpose of communism in its international aspect and its march onward is to try and create uncertainty and confusion and chaos wherever it can among the peoples of a nation that are not directly or indirectly under its domination or control.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has again expired.

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. McCORMACK. One nation, for instance, can resist here and there and then the Soviet Union will probe elsewhere. It and its satellites play upon uncertainty and do all they can to create uncertainty and fear into chaos with the minority then stepping in to wrest the control of government. The Soviet Union, with its international ideology of "Red fascism," is challenging our way of life, and spreading itself wherever it can. It wins by default of the strong democratic nations doing nothing. Now, the question is, can we continue to sit on the side lines and see this done to country after country?

I respect the right of any member who forms an opinion the other way, but my opinion is that we have to take action. The result of this action will help other people, but the motive for the action, as far as I am concerned, is that the national interest of the United States prompts it and requires it.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. VURSELL. Would it not have put the United States and the United Nations in a better position, granting that they might have failed, had they joined with Great Britain and taken this matter first to the United Nations, so that they would not have put the power of propaganda into the hands of the officials of Russia, as we have done, with which they can inflame the minds of the people that we are an imperialistic nation, that we are encircling them, and make them believe that probably we intend to invade their country? Can anyone say that with the power of the peace-loving nations, if it had been taken to UNO, it would have failed?

Mr. McCORMACK. I cannot agree with the gentleman on that, because no matter what we would have done the Soviet Union would not have been satisfied from the angle of propaganda. If they did not have one thing, they would have another to say about us. Furthermore, we are stepping in there because England is unable to carry on. Furthermore, if we had stepped in with England, then I am inclined to think that many of my friends in this House would have accused our Government of being dominated by British foreign policy, so far as any effort on our part is concerned.

My purpose in taking the floor today is to welcome the opportunity to reply to, and to also welcome the remarks of the gentleman from Ohio. Let us have more of this, and let us have a discussion on both sides, without unnecessary charges and recriminations, but on the broad plane of what is best for the national interest of the United States of America. As I view it, the national interest of our country, today and tomorrow, calls for the issue being joined, such as President Truman, in no unmistakable words and manner, joined it in his historic message to this body and to the Senate only a few weeks ago.

AMERICAN FOREIGN POLICY

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 15 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think we can all agree with the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. McCORMACK] that it is time for us to make up our minds as to whether we intend to become involved in the Greek situation. I think the gentleman from Massachusetts would be the last one to say that we should make up our minds and enter upon a change of foreign policy which may involve us in perpetual warfare without knowing what we intend to do, how far we intend to go. The gentleman says he is pro-American. Of course he is pro-American; so are the rest of us pro-American. The only place we differ, I take it, is as to how we should proceed to best serve the country to which we owe allegiance.

Let me ask this of the gentleman. He believes in the Atlantic Charter, does he not, in carrying the four freedoms to the uttermost corners of the world? I ask for an answer. The gentleman is here. Did he believe in that principle?

Mr. McCORMACK. What is the gentleman's question? He asks the broad question?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I ask the gentleman the broad question whether he believes in the Atlantic Charter and in particular that portion of it which outlined our duty to carry the four freedoms to the uttermost corners of the world.

Mr. McCORMACK. All of us agree on that. Everybody agrees on that.

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is all I want.

Mr. McCORMACK. May I say to the gentleman that I was not by implication impugning the motives of anyone. I said my approach is pro-American rather than anti-Communist.

Mr. HOFFMAN. The gentleman has answered my question, and I thank him.

Mr. McCORMACK. Any time the gentleman asks me to yield I yield, and I do not make any smart answer, either.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Nobody was questioning anyone's motive. What I said was that the gentleman said he was pro-American. I believe him. All I was saying was that the rest of us are pro-American, too; we just differ as to our methods of expressing our desires.

The gentleman answered my question and said that he believed in the principle enunciated in the Atlantic Charter that we were to carry and maintain the four freedoms throughout the world. Then he went on to state that he believed—and I think we all do—in Christianity, and that he was opposed, and I think we all are, to communism. But if the people of Russia want to believe in communism, if the people of India want their form of religion, and the people of a dozen other countries in the world each have their form of religion, how under the Atlantic Charter, I ask you, can we justify ourselves in taking our dollars, our munitions of war, our armed forces, going into those countries and saying, for example, to Russia or Greece or India or China, that they must become Christians, that they must accept our political philosophy? Is that consistent? Is it consistent if we say, as we have said over the years to every nation in Europe and everywhere else except in the Western Hemisphere, that we will tolerate none of their interference with South America or Mexico, but we will cross the sea and stop Russia or any other nation at a designated boundary line? Is it consistent then for us to send our dollars and our armies across the seas to tell Russia or some other country what form of government it shall have?

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Very briefly.

Mr. VURSELL. I want to ask the gentleman a question that I think is fundamental, that is at the base of all of this. In view of the fact that France has fought two world wars and wrecked herself financially, and that England has fought two world wars and wrecked herself financially, even though we want to do what the President would like to have us do, can we do it and finance it without wrecking this country?

Mr. HOFFMAN. That is a very pertinent question. As far as I know, no one from the moment of the President's message down to the present time has ever stopped either to count the cost or even to give the people of our land an estimate of what the cost of the proposed policy in dollars and munitions of war, in materials, and in men may be.

Mr. GRANGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. GRANGER. I think that is the very heart of the whole thing. If somebody could come up with the answer as to how much it is going to cost and where it is going to lead, I think some of us then could make up our minds on what we want to do about it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thank the gentleman. To my mind he states the point accurately.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOFFMAN. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. Should we not have full particulars as to how much it is going to cost before we embark upon this uncharted journey?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Yes; that is what I understood the gentleman from Utah [Mr. GRANGER] to be suggesting; especially do we want to know the cost in suffering and cost in lives, possibly an estimate of the number of veterans and the number of dependents of veterans of World War III, and an estimate of how many billions or trillions of dollars would be required to be raised by this country to keep those veterans and their dependents from want and to, as we call it, rehabilitate them.

Mr. KNUTSON. I am reminded of an incident that is recorded in the history of Washington. A former President and his friends way back in the early days of the Republic were sauntering along the bank of the old Chesapeake & Ohio Canal. They had been imbibing a little. One of them slipped into the canal, and the President reached down and tried to pull him out. He could not do it and finally said, "If I cannot pull you out, at least I can get in there and join you."

Mr. HOFFMAN. I thank the gentleman. My fear is that we may get in, and with those we seek to aid drown in the sea of want and famine and disease that follows war.

Sometimes I wonder whether in this particular issue we are intellectually honest with ourselves. This thing of communism is nothing new in this country nor to this Congress.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MCCORMACK] years ago served on a committee which did a most admirable job in exposing and rooting out the Communists who were in this country. We knew we had them then.

During the 12 short years I have been here, until the time the statement recently made by the administration was given us, nothing was said by those in authority about exposing or eradicating communism or ousting Communists. This has been mentioned here before by me. But we recall how the First Lady of the land went with the Communists and lent them support when they were ordered to appear before the Dies committee. We remember she entertained them at the White House. We remember how the Dies committee attempted over the years to expose and get Communists out of America and out of the Government and how for 10 years, or perhaps more accurately ever since that committee was created until the time Martin Dies left this Chamber, he was fought on every step of the road. Now, they come along and say, "Yes, our country is going to be overwhelmed by the Communists if we do not help Greece."

When Russia went into Finland, did we help Finland? Did we do anything to help the Finns from being forced to accept and live under communism? To pay tribute to Russia?

As the gentleman from Ohio said, what about Poland and those other countries which Russia took over—some of them with the aid we gave her?

Then, I will come to this question; and this is a practical question. The gentleman says: Do something. Do what? And where? And how much? How many dollars? How many men? How far are we to travel? Under the argument of the gentleman, being Christians and believing in Christianity, are we going to send our forces everywhere in the world to fight every nation which does not believe as we do and which does not accept our theories of government? That gets us back to what—to being an aggressor nation, a nation determined to destroy the choice of other people to live under the form of government they want to live under.

That policy is the opposite of the one set out in the Atlantic Charter; of the reasons given for fighting World War II. If we are to fight another world-wide war let the people know the objectives, in what countries we are to decide who shall be ruler and what is the form of government we are to prescribe. If Communist Russia's $25,000,000 loan to socialize England brings a communistic England, are we to make war on Britain to oust the Communists? Where, once started, are we to stop?

DEMOCRACY VERSUS COMMUNISM

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. MORRIS. Mr. Speaker, I have the highest regard, respect, and admiration for the gentleman from Massachusetts. Not only do I have such high regard, respect, and admiration for him, but in the short while I have been here I have learned to have a deep affection for him, and so far, I believe we have agreed on most every matter that has come before this House. But I cannot agree with him on this question of Greece and Turkey.

I believe the gentleman from Ohio is much more nearly correct than the gentleman from Massachusetts. I have not had time to analyze in my mind all of what the gentleman from Ohio has said, but I agree with the substance of what he has said.

I am not fully convinced at this time, as to all the details of the President's proposal, and I will hold my mind open to receive further light and information, because I do want to be right, regardless of what happens to me, on this most important matter.

At this time, however, I believe as firmly as I ever believed anything in my life, that to follow the President of the United States, fully, on his request, would be an absolute departure from, and a violation of, the spirit, and very probably the letter itself, of the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. In addition I am persuaded that to follow his request would be a violation of the spirit and letter of the Monroe Doctrine. It has been said in the press and over the radio that it would be an extension of the Monroe Doctrine. I do not see how you can so extend the Monroe Doctrine without breaking it. I think it would be, not an extension, but a violation of the Monroe Doctrine; and unless I can see further light I cannot and will not go along with the program because I believe that it is a step toward war and I believe we are about to junk the United Nations as we did the League of Nations; and I am opposed to it unless I can see further light.

In my judgment we can and we will stop Russia, or any nation or any group of nations that might come against us, by force; but Mr. Speaker, we cannot, by force, stop communism nor any false religious or political belief in the minds of people. The use of force will only spread it. We can use force to stop any physical enemy that might come against us, but we cannot stop beliefs in the minds or hearts of men by force. No one is more opposed to communism than I am. My whole background in life will show that. In my opinion the only way to stop communism is to make democracy work well in this country. If we do that, we will stop communism in its tracks.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORRIS. I yield.

Mr. KNUTSON. The gentleman is making a very fine statement and one with which I agree thoroughly. Does not the gentleman believe that if we impoverish ourselves at home by spreading largesse all over the world we will in effect open the door to communism in this country and be taken over ultimately?

Mr. MORRIS. I thank the gentleman for his remarks and observations, and I agree with him fully.

Can we not realize that our old-age pension system is in a deplorable condition and our school system is all but breaking down, that our public debt is almost too heavy for us to bear? Unless we watch our step, we are going to ruin ourselves at home, Mr. Speaker; and if we do, communism will take the world.

THE COPPER SITUATION

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 3 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAWFORD. Mr. Speaker, the other day this House approved a bill that had to do with removing the excise tax on copper. We did not have too much debate on that bill, but it has been established that the Federal Government has disposed of most of its copper stock pile consisting of about 600,000 tons.

Where do we find ourselves today? Right flat on our pants with one of the most terrible copper shortages in the history of the world.

What can you do in carrying on an international program such as has been discussed here this afternoon without copper? What can you do with respect to carrying on a national program to say nothing about the international operations in which we are engaged without a substantial supply of copper?

I think the House did the proper thing the other day.

I attended some hearings in the other body this morning and picked up some additional information.

We cannot work too fast on this copper proposition. There are some reasons why there is a shortage of copper today and the American people are entitled to be told by the Congress of the United States why the present inadequate supply of copper for our industry exists with three copper producing companies practically controlling over 80 percent of the product. We now hold the hot spot on copper. How can industries carry on their fabrications? What is going to happen to the automobile industry in Michigan and other States? What is going to happen to the General Electric Co., Allis-Chalmers, and all the others who produce industrial supplies carrying great quantities of copper to be shipped to the other parts of the world and to our own people here in the United States? That is the question with which this Congress has not yet dealt.

It will be well for the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of this House to pay some attention to the 600-page report which has just been released in the last few days by the Federal Trade Commission pointing out some of the troubles in the copper kettle of this country today. We can well afford to have that committee take action and take action promptly in connection with the facts pointed out in the Federal Trade Commission report so that the Congress can thus answer to the people of this country why there is an inadequate supply of copper today with which to carry on our industries and why the Federal Government's supply of copper has been reduced from about 600,000 tons down to about 55,000 tons in the Federal Government's effort to supply those fabricators of copper a few tons to operate in competition with the big three that controls about 80 percent or more.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HOLIFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Tuesday next after disposition of matters on the Speaker's desk and at the conclusion of any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 30 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

VETERANS' HOSPITALS

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, I dislike very much to break into the continuity of the discussion on the Greek and Turkey situation, but I do want to continue some of the remarks I started a while ago when I spoke under the 1-minute rule on the veterans' hospital situation. For the benefit of some of you who came in late, I pointed out and inserted in the RECORD two newspaper articles, one of them from the Seminole Producer, Seminole, Okla., telling about the crowded situation that we have in the veterans' hospitals in Oklahoma and pointing out that as a member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee I have talked to General Bradley of the Veterans' Administration and Major General Hawley, the medical director, many times, giving them statistics from the American Legion's State service officer and the Veterans of Foreign Wars' State service officer, showing that in Oklahoma we have something like 677 cases awaiting hospitalization. Their answer always is that there are no emergency cases turned away.

Recently the entire Oklahoma delegation called on Major General Hawley and discussed this situation with him in an effort to get opened up the McAlester Hospital, the Bordon Hospital at Chickasha and the hospital at Norman which belonged to the Army and Navy. We did not get anywhere. This article I am inserting tells about an Oklahoma veteran from Gore, Okla., who went to the Muskogee veterans' hospital seeking admission. They said he was not an emergency case. The only reason I doubt that is that he died 2 days later. They did tell us the morning the entire Oklahoma delegation called on them that they were going to construct a new hospital in Oklahoma City. I picked up the noon paper today, the Times-Herald of Washington, D. C., and there I note an article that the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER], chairman of the Appropriations Committee, had contacted General Bradley and prevailed upon him to delay the awarding of any contracts for veterans' hospitals for a period of 2 or 3 weeks on the ground there were some excessive expenditures or something of that nature in the contracts.

Mr. Speaker, a period of 2 weeks may seem unimportant to many of us, including the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and General Bradley, but, certainly to the parents of this boy who died down there on March 20 it would be pretty hard to explain.

For the life of me, when the Congress has awarded money which will enable General Bradley to go ahead and award contracts, I cannot see why, just to save a few lousy dollars, we delay this thing for 2 or 3 weeks when down in Oklahoma and all through the Nation we have these veterans waiting to get into the hospitals. Before we start talking about Greece and Turkey and those other places, let us take care of the veterans who fought in the last war. We have down in Oklahoma 677 on the waiting list. If General Bradley gets sick he can go out to the Army hospital at Fort Myer but what about the 677 in Oklahoma and the 3,500 throughout the Nation; they have nowhere to go unless the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] and General Bradley cease frustrating the hospital-construction program. I say to you, before we start anything else, let us do something about veterans' hospitalization in this country. You know you cannot tell the veterans in Oklahoma and the Nation on the waiting list that we will have a hospital for them in 2 years from now when down in McAlester, Chickasha, and at Norman, Okla., we have these Army and Navy hospitals lying idle.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from West Virginia.

Mr. ELLIS. Did I understand the gentleman to say there were three unused hospitals in Oklahoma?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes; two naval hospitals and one Army hospital, sir, which could be utilized. It is the feeling of the Oklahoma congressional delegation these could be used for veterans, at least temporarily, until they can get their new program started, and they are not going to be started unless the gentleman from New York and General Bradley realize the seriousness of the situation and start building hospitals.

Mr. ELLIS. Would not that be a worth-while effort?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. It would be. The trouble is that when you go down and talk to Major General Hawley and General Bradley they quote statistics showing that there is no waiting list. The only thing that we can do, the only thing the Members of the Oklahoma congressional delegation can do, is to cite statistics which are furnished by State service officers of the American Legion and the Veterans of Foreign Wars, showing that there are cases and they are emergency cases. I just know the sense of this Congress well enough to know that something will be done about this.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. I yield to no man in my insistence that the disabled of World War II be cared for, but I want to be fair to General Bradley. Is it not true that under the law General Bradley or the Veterans' Administration cannot build for the needs of the so-called non-service-connected cases? They tell me further that there is no delay in getting the veteran hospitalized if he has a service-connected disability.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I will say this to the gentleman from Connecticut, that they tell us the same thing. The only answer is that many of these cases are service-connected, surely this veteran who died 2 days after being refused admittance was an emergency case.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. They are service-connected?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. Yes. I do not know what you are going to do when you go over there to the Veterans' Administration and get statistics, when they tell you that these cases are not service-connected and that they are not emergency cases, when right here in this newspaper was the case of an emergency case veteran that they said was not an emergency case, who died 2 days later. He is bound to have been an emergency case.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut. That is what I wanted to know, whether the disability was service-connected.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I am so informed.

Mr. STIGLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. STIGLER. I want to congratulate the gentleman on making such a timely statement informing the Members of the House with reference to the hospital program in Oklahoma. I am just wondering whether the gentleman knows that recently an order was issued by the medical officer in charge of the Veterans' Hospital at Muskogee, calling upon all medical officers not to call him and ask for the admission of any veteran who was not service-connected and not an emergency case. That order was recently issued.

Mr. JOHNSON of Oklahoma. I did not know about that, but I thank the gentleman for his contribution.

As I stated in my speech earlier today Mr. Speaker, I feel very deeply about this matter. I, for one, do not feel that General Bradley is any sacred cow. When incidents occur such as the one I have related, as a member of the Veterans' Affairs Committee I am going to call them to his attention and ask that he do something about it. I cannot see why the hospital construction program should be delayed for even 1 day, and I predict that unless some of these Army and Navy hospitals are utilized temporarily and the construction program pushed with all possible speed, we will learn of other incidents such as this one and we will discover that the boys who fought on the world-wide battlefronts come home to die on the battlefields of Republican economy and Veterans' Administration bungling and red tape.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HARLESS of Arizona asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the New York Times.

TAX LEGISLATION

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, yesterday we passed a bill which will give substantial relief to the overburdened taxpayers of this country and increase their take-home pay. I am sure they will appreciate this legislation, representing as it does a reversal of a trend. I hope we shall be able to cut governmental expenses further so that additional relief may be extended.

Although I voted for this bill, my position in this House is well known to the Members. I am still of the opinion that we have not yet sufficiently recognized the need of the lower-income groups in which I include not only those with net incomes up to $1,400, after exemptions, who have justifiably received special consideration in the bill just passed, but also those between that figure and up to $5,000 or even $10,000. None of us enjoys the day our income tax falls due, but it cannot, in all fairness, it seems to me, be called a real hardship to pay even the existing high taxes for those above the $10,000 mark, in the sense that they are required to deny themselves some of the real necessities of life in order to help pay the expenses of running the Government.

Entertaining as I do the firm conviction that in our overhauling of the entire tax structure which I trust may be undertaken at an early date, we should give further thought and favorable consideration to additional tax relief for those who need it most, I have today introduced a bill entitled "A bill to provide for additional tax deductions from the gross income."

The purpose of this measure is to permit of five additional deductions for what seem to me to be necessary living expenses. This bill would amend section 23 of the Internal Revenue Code in two respects and would add three new subsections.

In the first place, under existing law, a person is permitted to deduct medical or dental expenses which have been incurred during the taxable year, only when they exceed 5 percent of gross income. That is all right for us here in this body, or for anyone who has an income such that the incurrence of unusual medical expenses, while a tough break, is not actually going to work a true financial hardship. The place where this provision pinches is, let us say, with the $2,000 a year fellow, who is not permitted to deduct such expenses except those above $100, or the $5,000 a year white-collar man who can only deduct his expenses above $250. These people really feel the pinch acutely when a long sickness strikes, or a major operation becomes a matter of life or death.

My bill would provide for an amendment to section 23 (x) of the Internal Revenue Code so that all such necessary medical and dental expenses would be deductible for income-tax purposes in the case of a man with an adjusted gross income under $2,000; all such expenses over 1 percent if his gross income is between $2,001 and $4,000; all such expenses over 2 percent if his gross income is between $4,001 and $6,000; all such expenses over 3 percent if his gross income is between $6,001 and $8,000; all such expenses over 4 percent if his gross income is between $8,001 and $10,000; and, as under the present law, all such expenses over 5 percent if his gross income is over $10,000.

This bill, it strikes me, simply gives effect to the increasing ability of a man to meet heavy and unusual medical expenses as his income increases and is a recognition of the further fact that the lower income groups suffer an unfair discrimination under the existing law, which takes no cognizance of financial ability to meet the cost of medical and dental care.

Secondly, under the present law, interest paid on obligations is, of course, a deductible expense. This is all right for the man who goes to the bank and borrows money, agreeing to pay a certain interest on his note. The trouble is that the little fellow who often cannot get credit at a bank, but who so frequently buys an automobile, a refrigerator, a cook stove, or his household furniture on time, and is, in fact, paying interest on the purchase price is not allowed to deduct that interest because it is said to be unascertainable or not distinguishable. He buys a car on time and agrees to pay for it out of his wages weekly or monthly. Part of the cost of that car is interest, and sometimes abnormally high interest, on the amount of his original obligation. Yet when the tax agent comes along he strikes out of his income-tax return and refuses to allow as a deduction any item for interest. This bill would define the word "interest" as it is used in section 23 (b) of the Internal Revenue Code, so as to include either 6 percent of the purchase price, or the interest designated, whichever is greater, on installment purchases.

Again the essential purpose of this bill is only to bring the lower income groups into line with those in the higher brackets who already have the advantage of such a deduction.

Thirdly, a new subsection is added to permit as a deduction all necessary expenses of transportation to and from work. A man, by working, increases his ability to pay income tax and thereby add to the Government revenue. It seems to me only fair that the bus fare or street car fare, which is an absolute necessity to take him to and from his work or to take the girl who works in an office to and from her job, should be a deductible expense item. A business executive can deduct expenses which he incurs for lavish entertainment in order to increase his business. I do not object to that, because undoubtedly the result of it is to enable him to do more business, thereby adding to his income and resulting in higher taxes for him and greater revenue for the Government. But it does seem to me that the cost of getting to and from his job is just as truly a part of a man's or woman's necessary expenses, as some of the deductions which are already allowed.

Fourthly, in these times there are many cases where both husband and wife are working. This becomes even more necessary in times of high prices. It is often highly desirable because the wife has some special skill, such as a nurse's training, or secretarial background which can make a real contribution to our economy. The trouble is that she may have to hire someone to do her housework while she is on the job, or if she has children she may have to pay someone to stay with the children. It seems to me that it is only fair and would be a desirable thing from every point of view if she could deduct these necessary expenses in computing her income tax.

Finally, my bill would provide that a person who is required to take special instruction or training in connection with his work could deduct such expenses in computing his tax. This would apply particularly to young professional people like teachers, doctors, accountants, nurses, clergymen, and the like. By taking such courses, these taxpayers enable themselves to earn more money and pay more taxes. It would be helpful to our economy generally, as well as a great boon to them to permit them to take such a deduction.

It is my earnest hope that this bill will have favorable consideration before the Committee on Ways and Means and before this House.

TAMING WILD HORSES

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arkansas?

There was no objection.

Mr. TRIMBLE. Mr. Speaker, 15 years ago, a great "Arkansawyer," Tom Shiras, the editor of a country newspaper in our district, stood at a point in the rugged Ozark Mountains and looked down upon the winding White River below him and made this remark: "A million horses are running wild down there." Tom Shiras was right; and, while he died in the early part of this year, he lived long enough to see part of those horses tamed. He loved northwest Arkansas. I wish he could have lived to see his dream fully realized.

Studies and surveys, made by the Army engineers, have proved that a million horsepower of hydroelectric energy is economically feasible in that majestic river. The tragedy of it is that most of those million horses are still running wild. However, due to the inspired work of men in the Congress, and to the untiring efforts of the people of the watershed of the great White River Basin, we are now at the threshold of a new day. A day when those wild horses will not only be tamed but they will be harnessed and put to work.

There are millions of other horses, still untamed and unharnessed, running wild down the Arkansas, the Red, the Ouachita, the Brazos, the Guadalupe, the Canadian, the Verdigris, the Cimarron, the Neosho, and many other streams in the Southwest. I am sure that the people in these river valleys, like the people who live in our own district, have been working for years to encourage the Federal Government to tame these wild horses and put them to work for progress.

The people have seen these uncontrolled streams year after year carry away the top soil from the farms; a soil which constitutes their line of defense against poverty and distress. You and I have seen the fertility of our soil decrease year by year. It is axiomatic that the welfare of our people is limited by the productivity of the soil. With the loss of our soil goes our hope. Thousands of our farms have literally floated down our streams and more are following. To be sure, this soil has gone, and is going, down stream to our neighbors in the plains below, where it is not particularly needed. In thus going down stream, it has filled and clogged the beds of the rivers to hamstring navigation and to cause devastating floods which inevitably result in distress, famine, and disease. Indeed, there is great loss in the displacement of soil fertility, in river commerce, and in human welfare. Such waste and suffering in our country are matters of common knowledge.

The people in the hills of northwest Arkansas have joined hands with their neighbors in the valleys; and for 15 years have been fighting side by side for dams, power plants, transmission lines, and other public works which are necessary to make these rivers a blessing instead of a curse. The people in your districts, where they are confronted with the same problems, doubtless have likewise been at work.

The people in the district which I represent have cooperated wholeheartedly with the Corps of Engineers and with all public and private agencies that could aid them. They have appeared at public hearings and have testified to their willingness to have their bottom lands submerged by the reservoirs, if they could, in turn, get: First, flood control for their neighbors below; second, power at reasonable rates for their farms and industry; third, the benefit of the recreational facilities such development would afford; and, fourth, the advantage of the tourist trade which would come with each development. They have cooperated with the private utility companies, and for years have urged them to make these developments.

However, because the local utility companies were more scared than hurt, the cooperation on the part of the companies has not always been what it should have been. They believed that the building of the dams would be to their disadvantage. And all too often, they went into the valleys and tried to persuade the people against power dams by telling them that if power dams were built above them the water would be held at high head levels for power purposes, and that when the rains came the reservoirs would be full and water would be spilled down on the farms; that they would be worse off than before. They told the people in the hills sometimes that if power dams were built that water levels would vary so greatly that the reservoirs would be ruined for recreational purposes. They sometimes told the sportsmen that the fluctuating water level would destroy all of the fish and wild life; and that the building of the dams would ruin the fishing streams in our section.

Fortunately, our people were a little stubborn and plowed a straight row ahead toward the goal of getting these dams built. Some dams have been built; and to show that the utility companies were more scared than hurt, floods are being controlled, recreational facilities are being improved, and the fishing and other recreational activities are better than ever; and, to top it all, the utility companies are making more money than they ever made before—a proof of the fact that whatever develops the country helps everybody in it.

Another thing I would like to mention, which shows that the utility companies were just scared, was their attitude on rural electrification. Anybody in our district who tried it knows that before the rural-electrification law was passed that the utility companies most generally would not run lines out into the country from the towns which they served, on the theory that it would not pay. I had that personal experience myself; and I know of my neighbors who had the same experience. We did not press the companies for such service. We thought they knew their business; and, if it did not pay, we certainly did not want them to lose money. What distressed us, however, was that when rural electrification finally became a fact, and the Federal Government provided funds to lend to the farmers of the country to build rural electrification lines for themselves, the utility companies, thinking they would be hurt, got busy and built "cream" lines. That is, they picked out the finest territory and built lines and began to serve. The farmers organized their own little co-ops in other sections and asked the local utility companies to give them wholesale rates so that they could serve themselves; but the utility companies, not recognizing the general advantage of this type of service, refused to do it. The Rural Electrification Administration, of course, would not loan the funds to the farmers unless they could get a reasonable wholesale rate. The money lent to the local co-ops had to be repaid to the Government with interest; and, of course, if a co-op had to pay too high for its power, it could not make enough profit to repay the loan.

This situation obtained for some years. The local utility companies, still too short-sighted to see the business advantages, devised a plan which they called the 75–25 or Arkansas plan. This proposal was that if the Rural Electrification Administration would turn the money which was allocated for loan to Arkansas co-ops over to the utility companies, they, in turn, would build the rural lines, tie them on to their own system, collect the bills, and keep 75 percent of the gross receipts and give the Government the 25 percent remaining. Of course, the farmers in our section rejected this proposition as being noncompetitive and leaving them impaled on the same old hook.

In 1937, through the efforts of the State utility commission, which had been appointed in 1936, the utility companies were required to file wholesale rates. Still blind to the advantages of free competitive enterprise, the utility companies offered an unthinkable 18 mill wholesale rate. The State utility commission refused to accept that rate, and the companies finally reduced the rate to 10 mills. Later, when an effort was made through the Tennessee Valley Authority to get power across into Arkansas, the rate was reduced to 8 mills. Later, when the Southwest Power Administration was created, they reduced the rate to 6 mills, and just recently the rate has been reduced to 5½ mills to match the Southwest Power Administration rate. In these reductions in rates is the proof of the advantage of free competitive enterprise.

Still insisting that competition is a disadvantage, the utility companies do not want the people to tie together the dams which are being built in the streams of the Southwest. They think that to integrate these dams will limit their opportunity to serve the people. But, to show that their real interest has not and will not suffer, the utility companies are making more money than they ever made in the history of their service—indeed, making so much money that they can refund 1 month's light bill out of 12, thereby relieving their own tax burden at the same time. Surely, the little competition afforded by the Southwest Power Administration is and will be only to the general advantage of all concerned. It certainly could not hurt for this reason: At one of the dams in my district, which is representative, the utility companies pay 2.8 mills per kilowatt-hour for the power generated there. In 1945, they sold it through their system right back to the people at these prices: farmers, 46 mills per kilowatt-hour; homes inside city limits, 39 mills per kilowatt-hour; stores, 30 mills per kilowatt-hour; small industries, 18 mills per kilowatt-hour; and both large and small industries on the average, 11 mills per kilowatt-hour.

Now, back to our river projects: As I said, the people in my district believe that we are on the threshold of a new day. The Norfork Dam located on the North Fork of White River in our district is completed. It has created one of the most beautiful lakes in the country, and many thousands of people visit it each year. The dam has a power plant with one unit of 35,000 kilowatt capacity which produced 221,000,000 kilowatt-hours of electric energy last year. This plant has room for three more 35,000 kilowatt units. The second unit will be installed next year. Less than 35 miles away is the site of the great Bull Shoals project which will, when completed, add 600,000,000 kilowatt-hours annually.

In the Southwest area, 3 projects have already been completed; 5 more are ready to be started; and 22 others are either authorized or recommended for future construction. All of these projects are to be built and operated by the Corps of Engineers of the United States Army. These developments belong to the people, and the power generated will be marketed by the people. I feel certain that future study will establish many more such projects needed to completely harness our streams.

Now that our people are beginning to see the fruits of their labor and of their money, which they have invested in these dams, the private utility companies have come forward with an offer to buy the advantage of the power developments. They have seen the error they made when they argued against the dams in the first place and are now for them. They have seen the advantage of rural electrification, and they are now for rural electrification. However, still insisting on the general advantage of business without competition, the utility companies have entered into an agreement among themselves to purchase the power that will be generated by all of these dams and resell it to the very same people who own it—and at rates based upon what the traffic will bear.

Our people, I am certain, want a free competitive enterprise system. They want the public utilities to prosper and make a fine profit, but I am convinced that they are unwilling to permit a group of utility companies to have control over the power generated by these dams. I am certain the people want all these dams to be tied together under an organization to market this power, supplying it to the utility companies, if they want it and need it for distribution at reasonable rates; to the co-ops if they need it for distribution at reasonable rates; to anybody else who needs it for distribution at reasonable rates. This is just plain, simple competition furnished by the owners of the dams, namely, the people themselves.

Competition for the utility companies, such as that supplied by the river projects under the Southwest Power Administration, not only makes power available at more reasonable rates but also makes power available for a wider range of uses in larger and larger areas. Actually, it affords the private utility companies an opportunity to extend their services far beyond what they originally considered would pay a return on the investment so that they may prosper as the people prosper. Within the last few years, while the utility companies have been reducing their rates under the influence of competition, the distribution of power has been greatly extended both as to particular use and as to the geographical area served. But even so, not more than 50 percent—I would say not over 25 percent—of the potential for service is being supplied in my section of Arkansas; and I am satisfied that the same condition obtains in every other part of the State. Thus it is evident that the utility companies need have no fear that the river projects under the Southwest Power Administration will displace them. Rather these projects make it possible and profitable for them to extend their services to still larger and larger sections. As a matter of fact, there is a shortage of power; and it will require the services of all concerned to supply the need.

Section 5 of the Flood Control Act of 1944 places the responsibility of marketing all the surplus power from projects developed by the War Department in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior. For our section, the Secretary has delegated that responsibility to the Southwest Power Administration. Last year, the Congress appropriated $7,500,000 to that administration for construction purposes. Provision was made to construct and acquire a high-voltage transmission line to interconnect the three completed dams, Norfork, Pensacola, and Dennison; and also for construction of some feeder lines to carry certain power to communities where power was not available. These facilities are now under construction and will be completed as rapidly as possible. When this appropriation was asked for, again the 12 large private utilities in the area, still unwilling to accept the opportunity to extend their services under competition, came to Washington and fought the appropriation, as they had formerly fought the dams and have fought the Rural Electrification Administration.

This year, the Southwest Power Administration has reduced its budget request and is asking only for essentials for continuance of its services. The appropriation requested is $3,725,000. These funds will provide three substations on the lines now being built. They will also provide for some additional feeder lines in areas which are not now served. They will provide for general plans and general equipment necessary to maintain lines already under construction.

And again, the power companies offer resistance to this effort to establish free competitive enterprise for public service. Their general arguments are the same. None of the lines which the Southwest Power Administration is now building or proposes to build will in any way duplicate the lines of private companies or take any of their business away from them as I understand the picture. The Southwest Power Administration has done its utmost to cooperate fully with the private companies, yet nine of the companies propose now to take over the contracts of the Southwest Power Administration and purchase all the power of the existing dams in the area. As the Tulsa Tribune said in an editorial of February 24, 1947:

> This offer is a campaign to grind up the Southwest Power Administration and feed it as hamburger meat to the private utilities.

The same paper in an editorial on March 1, 1947, says:

> There is no need for public ownership of an enterprise in which rates and prices are regulated by competition. That is socialism; but it is not socialism for a people to control an essential need of which there can be but one source of supply.

The fact is that the utility companies now recognize that the Southwest Power Administration is a real success, because the people have achieved the advantages of free competitive enterprise. They speak of interference with free enterprise, but they never speak of free competitive enterprise. It appears that they just do not want competition, which is very inconsistent in the American system, to say the least. Could it be that while the "wild horses" in the rivers are being tamed, the utility companies also need to be tamed?

It is my considered judgment that the power projects under the Southwest Power Administration offer only advantages to the people, including the private power companies. I know that the people I represent want the Federal Government to build the dams and to tie them together with a high-voltage grid system with necessary feeder lines to take this power to the people and at rates that are reasonable and at least competitive. We believe that such a policy will encourage the private companies to continue to grow and prosper. The program of the Federal Government will supplement the power of the private companies and aid in the rapid development of our region. Our region abounds in an abundant supply of cheap fuel in the form of gas, oil, and coal. Private companies will have developed steam-generating plants using these cheap fuels. The Government will develop hydroelectric plants, it being unreasonable to expect the private utility companies to build all the dams necessary to harness all the potential power along these streams. A proper balance and coordination of the hydro and the steam plants will produce the cheapest power and extend its uses to every farm home and to the smallest industry.

The Government's program could materially aid private companies by supplying them capacity for peaking purposes. Private companies could aid the Government by selling them energy to firm up its capacities in the hydro plants. Teamwork could produce the best results in our region; and teamwork is what we are desirous of obtaining. Plain, simple, unadulterated justice and fairness to both the people as a whole and to the utility companies is all that we ask, in order that progress can lift up her head, and ultimately return to the people the money that they have invested in all these projects, at the same time retaining the advantages of these projects for posterity.

Yes; we are taming wild horses—the wild horses running down our streams.

Horses, which, when harnessed, will furnish heat and light to homes and power for industries all over northwest Arkansas, over the great Southwest, and throughout the whole country according to the need, and at rates that can be afforded. These horses belong to the people and when they are harnessed they should and must work side by side with free competitive enterprise—a system that made this country what it is, and will keep it strong and vibrant.
